

REFERENCE

Library

Memphis State College

Class

Book

R780.3 P917 n2

MSU LIBRARIES

3 2109 00094 4323

WITHDRAWN

THE
NEW ENCYCLOPEDIA OF
MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
NEW YORK • BOSTON • CHICAGO • DALLAS
ATLANTA • SAN FRANCISCO

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED
LONDON • BOMBAY • CALCUTTA
MELBOURNE

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY OF CANADA, LIMITED
TORONTO

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2024

THE ORGAN AT SAINT-MACLOU, ROUEN

THE NEW ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

EDITED BY

WALDO SELDEN PRATT

HARTFORD SEMINARY FOUNDATION

MUSICAL EDITOR OF THE CENTURY DICTIONARY, EDITOR OF THE AMERICAN SUPPLEMENT TO GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, AUTHOR OF A HISTORY OF MUSIC, ETC.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION

New York

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

1929

PRINTED IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

COPYRIGHT, 1924,
By THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

All rights reserved, including the right of reproduction in whole or in part in any form.

---

Set up and electrotyped. Published January, 1924. Reprinted
November, 1924.

New and Revised Edition. Published September, 1929.

PREFACE

original proposal for this work, as outlined by the publishers to the editor whom they had selected, was to make a one-volume abridgment of the six volumes of the well-known 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians', including the 'American Supplement' that was added in 1920. To this plan, however, there were many obvious objections, so that it was early abandoned in favor of what was believed to have promise of much greater permanent utility.

The conclusion reached was to draft an entirely fresh work of more inclusive character, aiming to combine as far as possible the essential values of the several lines of dictionary-making in the musical field which have hitherto been developed without being fully related to each other. This conclusion seemed the more inevitable because of the increase in the literature since 1904-10, when the revised edition of the original 'Grove's Dictionary' was issued. Since 1910, for example, no less than four editions of Riemann's monumental 'Musik-Lexikon' have appeared, the latest of which (1922) is so recent that its richness of information and suggestion has as yet not been utilized in any similar work in English.

It was evident that a comprehensive book of reference in a single volume of about a thousand pages was unpractical unless designed and executed with unusual care and system. The plan actually adopted involves some points that require statement in advance. It was decided to distribute the material in three distinct divisions, each with its own alphabet and each followed by an appendix giving additional data in shape for easy consultation. The first of these divisions deals rapidly with the forms and terms of musical art in both a descriptive and a historical way, followed by a survey of the vast field of bibliography as concerns the principal topics. The second division gives the essential biographical and statistical facts about some 7500 musicians of all countries who have been active during the past two hundred years, followed by a classified summary of the work of about 1000 others before the year 1700. The third division presents succinctly a large body of facts about the organizations and institutions in over two hundred cities and towns throughout the musical world, including some information not before thus gathered together, followed by a chronological list of operas and oratorios that have been produced in these and other places since 1900.

The decision to limit the detailed biographies to the period since 1700 was made with reluctance. Yet only thus could the book be made in any sense international or could emphasis be thrown, as was desired, upon musicians now living or who were at least born within the 19th century. Experiment showed that the main facts, with many complete lists of works, could be given without the use of perplexing abbreviations and yet including more than twice as many names as are found in the original volumes of the Grove series—more, indeed, than are usually included in such dictionaries in English. In such a plan, of course, there can be nothing to match the elaborate monographs on certain great composers that have given high distinction to dictionaries like those of Grove or Mendel. The light emphasis upon persons prior to 1700 is also a distinct loss, though it is likely that those wishing to explore this earlier part of music-history will naturally turn to a fuller record than any one-volume book can hope to give. As to the extent to which it has been practicable to make the present volume both international and modern in its scope attention may be called to the statistical summaries inserted on the final page of the book.

The division that deals with terms and general articles has been made as full as seemed judicious in proportion to the size of the book as a whole. The limitation of space forbade the insertion of musical quotations and much other illustrative matter. No attempt is made to include the vast array of technical terms in several languages, except where transfers of usage demand a note on the international synonyms. Brevity has been secured at several points by massing together a multitude of small items in a single comprehensive statement, as, for example, in the case of the multifarious terms relating to performance. But pains is taken to define all the forms and varieties of musical expression and to describe a large number of instruments, including many outside the circle of advanced culture. Instrumental topics are made clearer by means of inserted illustrations. Throughout this division, as in that of the biographies, signs are added to show what subjects and persons are treated by articles in the Grove series.

The third division, relating to places and the enterprises associated with them, is in the nature of things somewhat of an experiment. Only slight efforts in this direction have been made in dictionaries hitherto. What might be called musical geography is as yet a feebly developed subject, though an immense amount of critical research has been expended upon the musical history of certain particular places and countries. In the space here available and in the time that could fairly be apportioned to this section of the total work it was impracticable to go much beyond bare enumerations and statistics. Yet even these will be found to exceed in range anything now readily accessible and to be full of suggestion for more adequate treatment in some future volume.

Similar remarks might be made about the summaries of facts in the three Appendices. All of these have been freshly compiled on a broader scale than anything elsewhere at hand in such form and have been brought down to date as far as possible. Throughout the entire work, indeed, it will be seen that facts are entered not only to the year 1923, but often to within a short period before actual publication.

It is wholly impossible to make due acknowledgment of all the sources whence material has been drawn. The system used included a fairly exhaustive survey of many great dictionaries, including especially those of Grove, Riemann, Baker and Eitner, and the constant use of a long list of histories, biographies and special treatises or periodicals. The editor has sought to be faithful, judicious and systematic in the exercise of his functions as collator, rearranger and explicator. But he is well aware how futile it is for any editor to hope to be either omniscient or impeccable in this or any other great field of lexicography. Happily, in carrying out the general plan and in giving it clear and tasteful typographical presentation he has been given the amplest and most sympathetic support from both the publishers and the printers. He has also had invaluable assistance from various friends, particularly from Mr. Charles N. Boyd of Pittsburgh, who volunteered to read the greater part of the proof.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
PART I    DEFINITIONS AND DESCRIPTIONS.....	3
APPENDIX A    BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTES.....	169
PART II    BIOGRAPHIES.....	181
APPENDIX B    PERSONS BEFORE 1700.....	877
PART III    PLACES, INSTITUTIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS.....	901
APPENDIX C    OPERAS AND ORATORIOS SINCE 1900.....	961
VARIOUS ADDITIONAL DEATH-DATES .....	968

PART I
DEFINITIONS AND DESCRIPTIONS

---

APPENDIX A
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

The topics here presented include various general statements and historical summaries, notes upon forms and styles of composition and upon many technical points in theory and practice, and accounts of a large number of instruments and their parts. 'Terms of Performance' and 'Organ-Stops' are collected under those titles, usually without being included in the general alphabet. Considerations of space preclude extensive citation of authorities or the illustrations in musical notation that might be desired. But comprehensive bibliographies are given in Appendix A, and topics that are treated with more or less fullness in Grove's "Dictionary" are marked 'G.' or 'A.' ("American Supplement").

Very few abbreviations are used and these, it is hoped, will be self-explanatory.

A

A. The alphabetic symbol and name for a certain tone or note, and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation and Pitch. G.

Standard A is a tone of reference whose vibration-number is 435, first proposed in 1859 and now in general use.

In many terms of performance, a is the Italian preposition for at, with, in, etc. (as a tempo, a cappella). As an abbreviation, A stands for alto and a for arco.

Abbreviations, in written or printed music, are mainly of three classes: (a) initials or short letter-groups (as f for forte, dim. for diminuendo); (b) numerals in place of words (as in time-signatures, in thorough-bass, etc.); and (c) graphic symbols belonging to the various systems of notation; see Notation. G.

Absolute Music. A term much used since about 1850 for music that is not connected by means of a title, motto, text or description with definite mental conceptions, whether pictorial, historical, fanciful or moral, but depends for its value and effect solely on its tonal material, form and procedure; opposed to program-music of every kind. Such music is necessarily instrumental. Also called abstract or pure music. G.

Absolute Pitch. The pitch of a tone when regarded or defined physically or acoustically (so as to be stated in terms of vibration per second) or when referred to a standard thus established; opposed to relative pitch. See Pitch and Acoustics.

What is called 'the sense of absolute pitch' is the power of determining by ear the pitch of tones with more or less precision. This power is often inborn (sometimes in those who are not specially musical), but it is also susceptible of cultivation. It is common among highly-trained musicians, especially orchestral players and conductors.

Academy. A term, derived from the famous meeting-place of Plato and his disciples near Athens, that has been variously used for musical organizations, institutions, edifices, etc. G.

These include:

(a) Social clubs for the promotion of practical music. Such clubs began to be extremely numerous in Italy in the 15th century (including many not devoted to musical interests), often under all sorts of fanciful names. They were often important, not only as means for developing technical expertness in singing and the use of instruments, but as steps toward the idea of the public concert and toward permanent institutions of a scientific or pedagogical character. A noted example in England was the Academy of Ancient Music, started about 1710.

(b) More dignified and learned associations for promoting musical culture, having a membership somewhat limited to those of demonstrated ability, maintaining periodic discussions and proceedings that are often gathered into publications, and generally offering honors, medals or prizes for achievement in composition or research. A famous example is the Accademia dei Filarmonici in Bologna, founded in 1675. Many national Academies (as those of Paris, Berlin, London, Stockholm, etc.) belong to this class, though not usually devoted wholly or even primarily to musical interests.

(c) Institutions of education, often growing directly out of the above, such as are otherwise known as conservatories or music-schools. Noted examples are the Royal Academy of Music in London (founded in 1822), the Königliche Akademie der Tonkunst in Munich

(founded in 1846), the Philadelphia Academy of Music (founded in 1870), etc. The Accademia di S. Cecilia in Rome is an instance of an organization exercising varied functions, including those of a learned society, those of a promoter of formal education through its music-school and those of a patron of operatic and other performances at the Augusteo.

(d) Organizations for the giving of operas and concerts. The official title of the Paris Opéra, for example, is the Académie Royale de Musique. In Germany choral societies commonly bear the name of Singakademie. The association formed in 1720 in London with Handel as composer and conductor was the Royal Academy of Music.

(e) A building devoted to opera or concerts, as the Paris Académie (Grand Opera House), the Academy of Music in New York, Philadelphia, etc.

(f) Occasionally, the title of a printed collection of music.

A Cappella. As a direction, either marking that which is to be sung 'after the fashion of a cappella or choir,' that is, without accompaniment, or, if accompanied, with the instruments merely doubling the voices. Hence descriptive terms like a cappella music and a cappella style, unaccompanied choral music, usually polyphonic, especially such as was characteristic of the 16th century in Italy, southern Germany and England; often called the Palestrina style. An a cappella choir or chorus is one formed for the cultivation of unaccompanied singing. G.

Accent. Stress or emphasis upon a beat, tone or note, especially the greater intensity by which one beat or tone is distinguished from others in its neighborhood. In recitative and some other dramatic declamation, as in Gregorian cantillation, the vocal accent is derived almost wholly from the words, so that it is literary rather than musical. But in modern music generally graduated and recurrent accents supply a primary element in construction, serving to gather or nucleate the fundamental time-units into small, similar groups which in turn may be united into units of a higher order. It is through the regular recurrence of accents that the progress of the musical development is made orderly and intelligible. See Measure and Rhythm. G.

Thus a measure is a group of beats or pulses held together and dominated by an accent, the place of which in notation is indicated by a bar. In a given piece or movement the type of measure adopted at first is usually maintained throughout and is indicated by the rhythmic signature. If the number of beats in each group is small, a single, primary accent is sufficient, but if they be four or more, this is often supplemented by secondary accents. The real measures may or may not begin with the primary accent, though in notation and in time-keeping they are habitually so considered. In performance the actual accents recur at uniform intervals of time throughout, unless some special effect in melody or expression calls for deviation. Hence the distinction between regular or grammatical accents and those that are irregular, rhetorical, aesthetic or pathetic. In cases where the primary or even a secondary accent is transferred to a beat ordinarily unaccented, the effect is called syncopation. Much of what is called expression consists of the dexterous proportional treatment of accents. Written music seldom indicates with fullness or precision the accidental procedure that a skillful performer instinctively adopts. In part-music of every kind the rhetorical accents may not coincide in the several parts, but the grammatical accents fall strictly together.

The essential character of an accent varies. On a percussive instrument, like the piano, the characteristic stress is hammer-like or initial (strong at the outset). On the organ the more characteristic stress is thorough or sustained. But with the voice and many solo-instruments the stress may be also median, swelled or pressing (if strong in the middle) or terminal or explosive (if strong at the end). In all performance the management of the type of accent, as well as the placing of it, constitutes one of the subtlest devices of artistic effect.

The name accent is also used for certain harpsichord-effects; see Embellishments.

Accentus. In Gregorian music, a melodic figure or inflection at the end of a phrase in a monotoned text. G.

The chief varieties are the immutable (simply extending the monotone), the medial (falling a minor third), the grave (falling a fifth), the acute (falling a third on the penult and returning), the moderate (rising a-tone on the penult and returning), the interrogative (falling on the penult and antepenult and returning) and the final (falling tone by tone through a fourth). A particular inflection is also more or less regularly used in the midst of phrases in reciting certain texts.

The term is also used collectively for those parts of the service that are recited by the priest; opposed to concentus (by the choir).

Accessory. Of a tone or note, same as auxiliary (q. v.). In organ-making, a mechanical part of the action, like a coupler, the tremulant, etc., controlled by a knob or lever as are the speaking-stops; an accessory stop. All such mechanisms are often called the accessories.

Acciaccatura. See Embellishments. G.

Accidental. See Notation. G.

Accompaniment. In general, a subsidiary or supporting part in a composition, proceeding at the same time with whatever is principal. If necessary to the intended effect, it is called obligato, but if it may be omitted, ad libitum. The term is most used for the instrumental basis or background for a vocal or instrumental solo, or for a chorus, especially when set for a keyboard-instrument (like the piano or the organ) or for an instrumental ensemble (like an orchestra). But it may be extended to other combinations, as in a lyric piano-piece to whatever supports the chief melody or in a part-song to all others than the chief voice-part. So in a quartet-concerto the orchestra may be spoken of as accompanying the quartet. G.

The technical problems of accompaniment first became urgent about 1600, especially because then the organ began to be used with ecclesiastical song in something more than note-for-note duplication, because an effective tonal substructure was becoming imperative for the developing recitative and arioso in the infant opera and oratorio, and because purely instrumental forms with a predominating melody were beginning to be devised.

For a long time after 1600 accompaniments were habitually indicated by means of a bass-part and a system of numerals for the intended harmony, the actual treatment being left to the player's skill and ingenuity; see Basso Continuo or Thoroughbass. This skeleton system continued in use far into the 18th century, even after composers had begun to draft accompaniments in full.

With the profuse expansion of the opera in the later 17th and the 18th centuries many conventional types of accompaniment became common, such as rhythmically repeated chords, broken chords, arpeggios, etc.

Arias were customarily divided into phrases that were separated by ritornelli, as well as prefaced by instrumental preludes and followed by codas. Recitatives were divided into those with a slight chordal support (secco) or with a developed accompaniment (stromentato). Though composers like Handel often gave their arias strong individuality by varied and telling accompaniments, it was not till late in the 18th century, when dramatic music escaped from its traditional routine and when the best ingenuity began to experiment with the small, but intense form of the song and the ballad, that accompaniments began to exhibit their full artistic possibilities. In this advance many factors co-operated, including the signal improvements in writing for the piano and for the orchestra. Every leading composer contributed something to accompaniment-literature. In the Wagnerian theory of the opera, finally, the accompaniment became supreme, since in it and through it is established the pervasive atmosphere of sentiment in which the entire lyric expression and action take place.

Additional accompaniments are those added to an existing work by another than the composer. Such accompaniments are necessary or desirable in the case of older works in which the instrumental parts are not fully written out (especially when indicated only by a basso continuo) or where the original scoring is not well adapted to modern usage or conditions. The method must vary greatly according to circumstances. Famous examples are Mozart's rescoring of Handel's Messiah and other works, Franz's versions of Bach's St. Matthew Passion, Magnificat and several cantatas, etc.

Accordatura. In stringed instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, the regular or usual series of pitches to which the strings are tuned; opposed to scordatura.

Accordeur. A set of tuning-forks giving the tones of the tempered scale, used as an aid to tuning.

Accordion. A portable free-reed instrument, invented in 1829 by Damian of Vienna. The reeds are mounted in two wooden blocks, with small finger-keys or studs for each hand, and between the blocks is a collapsible bellows, worked by the player's arms. By varying the pressure the intensity of the tone may be graduated. Each key controls two reeds, one sounded by compression, the other by suction. The small varieties are mere toys, but the large ones have considerable value. Compare the concertina and the mouth-harmonica. G.

Acoustics. That branch of the science of physics which deals with the phenomena of sound. The occasion of the sensation of hearing is ordinarily the impact on the ear of vibrations that are conveyed to it by the air. The ear reports these to the mind in terms of noise and tone just as the eye reports other vibrations in terms of light and color. The distinction between noise and tone is not absolute, but in general tone is sound whose vibrations are periodic and somewhat sustained, while noise arises from irregular, confused or spasmodic vibrations. G.

The vibrations of solids (the vocal cords or the strings of a violin or piano) are swinging or pendular motions. Those of the air are successive condensations and rarefactions. Within the ear both forms of vibration occur, the first in the ear-drum and its chain of bones, the second in the liquid of the labyrinth in which the terminals of the auditory nerve are immersed. The sensation of tone occurs only when the rate of vibration is more than 30–35 per second.

In analyzing a given vibration a distinction is made between nodes (points relatively at rest) and loops (points relatively in motion or agitation).

Musical Acoustics is that part of the larger science which deals with sound-phenomena as employed in the practical art of music. It confines itself almost wholly to the study of tones and tone-production, the latter being effected through various materials, natural or artificial, having the property of elasticity. The topics in this field that call for emphasis here are (1) the essential characteristics of tones, by which they are defined and classified for artistic purposes, (2) the special systems of tones that music uses in forming melody and harmony, and (3) various points about tone-producing agencies (instruments), including the factor of resonance.

(1) Tones may be compared (a) in pitch, (b) in quality or timbre, (c) in loudness and (d) in duration. When assembled in music they have the general aspects of 'tune' and 'time,' the former involving features of pitch and quality, the latter those of loudness (accent) and duration (metric units and patterns).

(a) Pitch depends on the frequency or rate of the tone-producing vibrations. If the rate is relatively quick, the tone is acute or 'high,' but if relatively slow, the tone is grave or 'low.' Any given tone can be designated by its vibration-number (the number of vibrations per second required to produce it) or by some technical name or description that connects it with the customary nomenclature of musical theory. In the latter case the pitch is defined by stating what is its acoustical relation to an accepted tone of reference or system of tones. Such relation is expressed either by the ratio between the vibration-numbers of the tones in question or by naming the 'interval' by which the ear regards them as 'separated.'

The use of terms of space, like 'interval' or 'distance,' as well as 'high' and 'low,' is obviously metaphorical. Tones have no location except as represented by notes on a page or keys on a keyboard.

Common tones of reference are 'middle C' (theoretically 256 or 264 vibrations per sec.) and 'standard A' (435 vibrations, by international agreement).

The pitch-range or compass of the human voice (men and women) extends from about 40 to 2000 vibrations (including extreme cases). Ordinary chorus-music ranges from about 80 to 875 (low E to high A). The orchestra ranges from about 35 to over 4500 (double-bass to piccolo), which is also approximately the range of the piano and the organ.

Many remarkable cases of voices of wide range have occurred in the history of operatic singing. To these is now added that of an Austrian man who has command of a range of five octaves and a third ( $f_3 - a^2$ ).

The interval (or relation) between tones having the same vibration-numbers is called that of the unison or prime (1:1 or 1/1). Such tones tend to blend into complete unity. If two tones have vibration-numbers in the ratio of 1:2 or 2/1, the interval between them is called that of the octave. Such tones seem to the ear repetitions or replicates, differing in plane or register rather than in character. Hence in classifying intervals it is usual to take only those less than an octave, since all larger ones can be reduced to these.

Within an octave the number of possible tones is theoretically infinite. But practical music undertakes to use at any one time only certain sets of tones having definite relations with each other. Such a set of tones, arranged in order of pitch, is called a scale. The total schedule of selected tones is called a system. See Scale and also under (2) below.

(b) Quality, Timbre or Tone-Color depends on the form of the tone-producing vibrations. Tones are rarely produced by simple or typical vibrations—those which, when plotted, have a uniform contour (what is called a curve of sines). The general motion to and fro is periodic, but the details within the period are usually highly complex, and this complexity persists in tones of a given character. Analysis shows that the complexity results from compounding or superimposing two or more simple vibrations. This is confirmed by the fact that a tone that the ear at first accepts as a unit can often be resolved into two or more component tones, and also by the fact that a tone of a given character can be synthetically produced by uniting two or more simple ones.

Hence arises the theory that differences of quality are due to varying unions of partial-tones (also called, less happily, overtones or harmonics). The differences depend on what partials are included and in what relative intensity or loudness. It appears, further, that the partials are regularly taken from a series whose vibration-numbers are proportional to the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, etc. (i. e., with any fundamental tone, 1, may be grouped its octave, 2, its second and third octave, 4, 8, and certain other tones, 3, 5, 6, 7, etc.). The first eight partials are most important, but the character of many tones is due to the presence of higher partials.

(c) Loudness, Intensity or Force depends on the amplitude of the tone-producing vibrations and this in turn on the degree of energy in the force producing them. There is no practical way of defining the contrasts and gradations of force used in music except by such loose terms as forte and piano, crescendo and diminuendo, etc. Yet it is evident that relative loudness plays a large part in the complex artistic device of rhythm, which is common to both music, verse and dancing. In music, tones in succession are gathered into groups by means of accent or stress (relatively great loudness), and that which gives effect to nuances is largely a skillful distribution of different intensities.

(d) Duration is properly not a characteristic of tone, but one of its accidents. Yet in music both the absolute and the relative time occupied by tones is critically significant, since music is a time-art (like dancing and versification) and not a space-art (like sculpture and drawing). The tempo or pace of performance depends on the absolute duration adopted for the time-units in construction, and many effects are produced by studied gradations or contrasts in this absolute rapidity. Furthermore, the order and intelligibility of composition are conditioned upon the disposition of tones in somewhat regular plans of relative duration (various units being known as beats or pulses, measures, phrases, sections and the like), which together make up meter.

There is no consensus of usage as to the terms rhythm and meter. One reason is that the schemes on which music is constructed usually present an intricate blend of intensity- and duration-elements. Relative accent and relative quantity are used together as an organizing and vitalizing agency. Yet the two are not identical. Each may be regarded by itself. At first sight modern music appears to rest on schemes of accents rather than of quantities (more or less in contrast with what we know of ancient music). But even in modern music accentual patterns are quantitative because built on equal beats and measures, and the balance and flow of all the larger factors (themes, motifs, etc.) are strongly quantitative because depending on the interplay of longer and shorter tones. So it has become the habit to use the term rhythm for the total scheme of accents and quantities, often with more reference to the latter than the former. Yet there might be utility in limiting rhythm, rhythmics and rhythmical more generally to matters of relative loudness, and meter, metrics and metrical more to matters of relative duration. See Meter and Rhythm.

(2) The connection between tones as objective phenomena and the subjective experience of music as an art is made through the recognition of tone-relationship. The way in which this principle has been used has varied much at different periods and among various races. Yet some use of it is always and everywhere requisite to the practice of music as an art.

In general, the simpler the numerical ratio between the vibration-numbers of two tones the closer is their tone-relation. Aside from the relation of the unison (1:1), the simplest ratio is 1:2 (that of the octave) and to this follow 2:3, 3:4, 3:5, 4:5, 5:6 and 5:8—all of which are accepted in modern music as consonances or *concord*s. Ratios containing 7, 9 or any higher number (except when reducible to simpler forms) are counted as dissonances or *discord*s. In the formation of both melody and harmony consonances supply the element of relative completeness or finality, dissonances that of incompleteness or transition. The interplay of the two elements is necessary for both interest and strength in composition.

The relation expressed by the ratio 4 : 7 is anomalous in that it is harmonious to the ear, but not definitely included in the modern system. It doubtless often occurs in unaccompanied part-singing and string-music.

For both melodic and harmonic purposes modern music assumes one or more tone-series or scale. The most important is that whose general formula is technically known as the major diatonic scale. This has gradually become primary in artistic usage because, in its ideal form, its tones are united by a high degree of consonance and at the same time offer convenient and somewhat varied consecutive steps. The most perfect 3-tone consonance is the triad 1-3-5 and precisely the same triad occurs in 4-6-8 and 5-7-9 (or 2). The tones 5 and 4 are the nearest relatives of 1 and each serves as the root or generator of a triad like the one belonging to 1. In consequence, even 7, which is the least directly related to 1, becomes a relative in the second degree. Parallel reasoning may be applied to the several forms of the minor scale as used in modern music. Through the combination of major and minor scales, and still more through the practice of modulation (the shifting of the tone-center from 1 to some other tone and then basing a new scale on that tone), chromatic scales of twelve tones to the octave appear. In such cases many of the tones are related to 1 only in a third or fourth degree. Yet the mind comes to feel the relationship and to use it artistically. Since chromatic scales are made up of tones somewhat equally spaced and since the maintenance of pure intonation in modulatory processes is difficult and instrumentally almost impossible, the compromise scale of equal temperament has secured wide acceptance. Here the mind comes to interpret a variety of interval-effects as, so to speak, symbolic of what they are not exactly and to accept them as representing what they only approximate. See Interval, Scale and Temperament.

1-2-3-4-5-6-7-8

The following table gives in order of pitch the tones within the octave that belong to the major and minor scales, the upward and downward chromatic scales, and also the equally-tempered scale. The ratio following the serial number is that of the tone to the starting-tone. The last two columns indicate the letter-names and the vibration-numbers assuming that the octave begins with middle C (= 264).

1	1/1	Unison or prime	C	264
1#	25/24	Augmented prime	C#	275
1# = 2b		1 tempered semitone	C# = Db	279.7
2b	16/15	Minor second	Db	281.6
2	10/9	Major second (small)	D	293.3
2		2 tempered semitones	D	296.3
2	9/8	Major second (large)	D	297
2#	75/64	Augmented second	D#	309.4
2# = 3b		3 tempered semitones	D# = Eb	313.9
3b	6/5	Minor third	Eb	316.8
3	5/4	Major third	E	330
3		4 tempered semitones	E	332.6
4	4/3	Perfect fourth	F	352
4		5 tempered semitones	F	352.4
4#	25/18	Augmented fourth	F#	366.7
4#	45/32			371.3
4# = 5b		6 tempered semitones	F# = Gb	373.3
5b	64/45	Diminished fifth	Gb	375.5
5	36/25			380.2
5		7 tempered semitones	G	395.6
5	3/2	Perfect fifth	G	396
5#	25/16	Augmented fifth	G#	412.5
5# = 6b		8 tempered semitones	G# = Ab	419.1
6b	8/5	Minor sixth	Ab	422.4
6	5/3	Major sixth	A	440
6		9 tempered semitones	A	443.9
6#	125/72	Augmented sixth	A#	458.3
6#	225/128			464.1
7b	7/4	Minor seventh	Bb	462
7b	16/9	" (small)	Bb	469.3
6# = 7b		10 tempered semitones	A# = Bb	470.4
7b	9/5	Minor seventh (large)	Bb	475.2
7	15/8	Major seventh	B	495
7		11 tempered semitones	B	498.4
8	2/1	Perfect octave	C	528

See diagram under Scale.

(3) No adequate statement is here practicable of the acoustical principles involved in making musical instruments. But certain fundamental points may be noted.

Tone-producing vibrations are mostly those induced (a) in stretched strings or cords, (b) in flat tongues or reeds, fixed at one end, (c) in confined portions of air. The first is illustrated in the violin (sounded by friction), the guitar (sounded by plucking) and the piano (sounded by striking); the second by the oboe and clarinet, the reed-organ, certain stops in the pipe-organ ('the reeds'), and also, though not so obviously, by the human voice and by most of the 'brass' in an orchestra or military band; and the third by most of the stops of a pipe-organ (the 'flue-stops'). Other types are stretched membranes (as in drums of all kinds), solids of varied shape (as in bells), etc.

(a) A stretched string, when displaced by any impulse, tends to vibrate both as a whole and in its aliquot parts, so as to yield a fundamental tone and several upper partials. The pitch varies with the string's mass, length and tension, a heavy, long or loose string giving a relatively low tone, and vice versa. A stringed instrument is said to have fixed intonation when each string yields but one tone (as in the piano), but free intonation when a single string can be made to yield more than one tone by 'stopping' (shortening its effective length) by the finger or similar agency (as in the violin, lute, harp, etc.). The quality or timbre of the tone is influenced by the nature of the string itself, the nature of the sounding-agent (whether bow, finger, plectrum or hammer), by the place on the string where the latter agency comes to bear and especially by the general structure of the instrument with reference to resonance (see below), since all these factors affect the number and balance of the upper partials. All instruments that are played with a bow have the advantage that the tone can be not only prolonged at will but varied in force and character while continued.

(b) In reed-instruments the vibratile element is a solid strip or flap of some elastic material (wood, metal, a fold of flesh, etc.). Except in a limited way (especially in organ-pipes and the voice) pitch and quality are not so much determined by the reed itself as by the body of air contained in whatever tube or other cavity which is immediately connected with the reed and its setting. This class of instruments, therefore, merges acoustically with the next.

The voice, as a reed-instrument, has the signal peculiarity of having a vibratile element that is highly variable as to mass, length and tension, the vocal cords being membranous folds or flaps subject to much muscular manipulation. In this case both pitch and part of quality are fixed by the reed, though quality is greatly modified by the form of adjacent cavities.

(c) In wind-instruments like the flute and the organ (flue-stops) the vibratile element is a condensed stream of air directed against a sharp edge in such way that the stream is set into vibration (in and out as respects the edge). The pitch and quality of the resulting tone are fixed by the pipe or tube with which the sounding-orifice is connected, pitch depending on the effective length of the pipe or tube and quality on the material, shape and proportions of the latter. Wind-instruments sounded by means of a conical or cupped mouthpiece (like horns and trumpets) are properly reed-instruments, since the initial vibration occurs in the player's lip, but their acoustical action is on the whole similar to pure wind-instruments except that the tones actually used are not the fundamental of the tube, but upper partials of that tone.

All wind-instruments, like bow-instruments, yield tones that can be prolonged and varied while continued. Most of them are actuated by the breath, though some (pipe- and reed-organs, accordions, etc.) by air artificially stored under compression.

All important instruments make use of the principle of resonance. This is the induced or sympathetic vibration of solids and of limited bodies of air in response to tone-producing vibrations in their neighborhood. This secondary vibration blends with the primary, broadens its sonority, perhaps modifies its pitch as well as its quality, and becomes the generator of the final tones sent out to the hearer.

In some instruments there are specific resonators for individual tones (see Marimba), but in most cases the resonator is general, adapted to seize and ennoble many different tones, singly or in combination. Thus the violin-body, with the air which it contains, serves as resonator for the entire tonal scope of the instrument. Thus the soundboard of the piano acts still more astonishingly in conjunction with the strings. Thus in the voice the cavities of the pharynx, mouth, nose and head, as well as the cavity of the chest, are adjustable resonators for the tones produced in the larynx. See Resonance, Soundboard, etc.

Act. One of the major parts into which, for both artistic and practical reasons, a dramatic work, like an opera or operetta, is divided. Short works have but one act or at most two, while longer ones have from three to five. Each act is usually somewhat divided into scenes, but the pauses between the latter are brief and incidental, while those between acts often allow room for an intermezzo, entr'acte, act-tune, ballet or other divertissement—even (in the early days of the opera buffa) for a secondary play, intercalated with the drama proper. See Opera. G.

Action. In keyboard-instruments, the general term for the entire mechanism whereby the muscular acts of the performer are translated into motions and adjustments within the instrument so as to cause the desired tone-production. The term is also sometimes extended to the mechanical appliances of instruments without a keyboard (like the harp, those of the wood-wind group, etc.). G.

In the piano the action includes the complex system of levers, weights, springs and checks which the key operates in forcing the hammer against the string—a system that is now marvelously strong, rapid, sensitive and noiseless. Differences in the type of piano are suggested by prefixing grand, upright or square. Varieties of general design are marked by prefixing English, Viennese, French, etc., or the maker's name. An action that allows duplicating the stroke without fully releasing the key (and dropping the damper) is called repeating.

In the organ there is a separate action for every keyboard, each called by the latter's name (great-action, swell-action, pedal-action). The mechanism by which the stops are manipulated is the stop-action or piston-action. The character of the transmitting-mechanism is shown by prefixes (tracker-action, pneumatic or electric action).

With reference to operation any keyboard-action may be easy or hard, prompt or slow, quiet or noisy, responsive, etc.

Act-Tune. See Entr'acte and Incidental Music. G.

Acute. In acoustics, denoting a pitch or tone with relatively quick vibrations; high; opposed to grave or low. G.

Ad libitum. In a concerted passage or piece, an indication that a part for a voice or instrument is suggested, but not absolutely required for the intended effect, so that it may or may not be used at discretion; opposed to obligato. Also the part itself that is thus suggested. G.

Adagio. An indication of slow tempo; see Terms of Performance. Also a work or movement in such tempo and usually in a dignified or pathetic style. The diminutive adagietto means either in a tempo rather faster than adagio or a short adagio. G.

Adaptation. See Arrangement.

Æolian Attachment. A set of harmonium-reeds inserted in a piano, with a bellows operated by a special pedal.

Æolian Harp. A mechanical device in which moving air produces tonal effects from a set of stretched strings. It usually consists of a board carrying several light gut-strings (supported on bridges), rather loosely strung and tuned in unison. When set in an air-current the upper partials of the strings are called out with shifting effects of weird melody and harmony. G.

Æolian Mode. See Mode and Gregorian Music. G.

Æsthetics, Musical. A term not as yet accurately defined in ordinary usage, though its general meaning is fairly clear. Properly, it is the science of music on its psychical side and considered mainly as a receptive experience rather than as a form of action. While acoustics regards the physical phenomena of tones in their relations, combinations and means of production, and while the several branches of 'theory' regard the principles and processes involved in making or composing music, musical æsthetics regards the phenomena of appreciation, delight and interpretation as provoked by the impact of music upon the human spirit. It seeks to analyze the ways in which tone-forms affect and impress the hearer's mental faculties—this being the receptive side of music-psychology, correlative to the creative side. It further considers music comparatively as one of the major fine arts, not only defining its similarities and differences in relation to them, but examining in detail the specific operations of the judgment as to 'beauty' and 'taste' as they arise in the presence of musical objects. It naturally takes up various problems in the interpretation or valuation of musical experiences—as to whether and in what sense they can be said to convey 'meaning' and 'message,' as to the scope and effectiveness of music as 'suggestion' (pictorial, dramatic, fanciful or otherwise), as to music's power to effect significant emotional or volitional changes in the recipient, etc. It is evident that every general theory of fine art, to be adequate, must include an intelligent and sympathetic discussion of musical art. It is also evident that any comprehensive survey of the fields of psychology and of philosophy cannot well afford to overlook the singularly varied and vivid data of musical experience. Hence references to aspects of musical æsthetics have been common in philosophical writings of the German school since the time of Herder.

Ævia (a bastard word made up of the vowels of the word 'alleluia'). In Gregorian music, a name or indication of an Alleluia, or its musical setting, used as an acclamation or response. G.

After-Note. See Nachschlag.

Agnus Dei. The last division of the musical Mass, including the Dona nobis. It accompanies the actual participation.

The text is 'Agnus Dei qui tollis peccata mundi, miserere nobis, dona nobis pacem' (or, in the Requiem Mass, 'lux æterna dona eis').

Agogics. A term used by Riemann (1884) for the process and result of modifying strict tempo to bring out the full expression of a phrase. The so-called tempo rubato is an illustration of an agogical impulse.

Agraffe. In piano-making, a perforated metal-stud through which the string passes and which prevents the latter from being forced off the bridge by the hammer-blow.

Agréments. See Embellishments. G.

Air. A rhythmical melody, usually formed on the pattern of lyric verse (in symmetrical phrases or 'lines' and often in equal strophes or stanzas); a tune or song. Hence any vocal solo or song-like instrumental piece. The solos in operas, oratorios and similar large works are usually called by the Italian term aria. In part-music, also, the principal or predominating melody (usually the upper part in modern music) or the voice-part carrying that melody. G.

The purpose or class of an air may be defined by qualifiers, as Air de Ballet, National Air, etc.

Air-Column. The body of air enclosed in the tube of a wind-instrument (including an organ-pipe) and thrown into vibration when the instrument is sounded. The pitch of the tone produced in a given case depends upon the effective length of this column, that is, the distance between the points where it is closed by a plug or interrupted by an orifice. A closure or stoppage establishes a node in the vibration, and an opening, whether in the end or the side, establishes a loop. By varying the pressure of blowing the column may be made to vibrate either as a whole, giving its fundamental tone, or in one of its aliquot parts, giving one of the harmonics of that tone.

Alberti Bass. A type of accompaniment in similar broken chords for the left hand that came into vogue from the works of Domenico Alberti of Venice (about 1735). G.

Albumblatt, Album-Leaf. A short instrumental piece of lyric character, such as might be written impromptu in a musical album or souvenir-book. G.

Aliquot-Tones. In acoustics, same as harmonics or overtones, so called because caused by the vibration of the vibratile body in its halves, thirds or other aliquot parts, as well as entire.

Aliquot piano, a form of piano, invented by Blüthner of Leipzig, in which sympathetic strings are added from tenor g upwards, for 3 octaves tuned an octave higher than the tones reinforced and then in unison.

Allegro. An indication of rather rapid tempo; see Terms of Performance. Also a work or movement in such tempo and in a brisk, lively style. The diminutive allegretto means either in a tempo somewhat slower than allegro or a short allegro. G.

Alleluia [Heb. hallelu-jah, 'praise ye Jah']. In church-music, an acclamation appended to a Psalm or other item in the ritual, or the musical setting thereof. In old music the final syllable was often extended into a melodic coda or jubilatio. In some cases the word was represented by its vowels (a-e-v-i-a).

Allemande. See Dances. G.

Alpenhorn, Alphorn. A wooden trumpet, 3-8 ft. long, used by Swiss herdsmen for melodies and signals. G.

The so-called Ranz des Vaches, associated with the alpenhorn, is a traditional calling-melody, the form of which varies in different cantons.

Alphabetic Notation. See Notation. G.

Alt, Altissimo. Tones or notes lying in the octave above the range of the treble staff are said to be in alt and those in the second octave above to be in altissimo. G.

Alteratio. In mensural music, the customary doubling (in performance) of the time-value of the second of two similar notes, so as to fill out the triple measure of tempus perfectum. G.

Alternativo. In old dances, a subordinate, contrasting section, used in alternation with the chief section; also called trio, because often written for three parts. G.

Alto. In general, the voice or voice-part next above the tenor (hence called 'high', from the Latin altus); the contratenor or counter-tenor (hence also called contralto). In the early development of part-singing, the highest part for men's voices; but, as the mixed chorus became recognized, the lowest part for women's or boys' voices. In the latter case, low voices are now often divided into altos and contraltos, the second being the lower; see Voice. Also any instrument whose range corresponds to that of the alto voice (usually second or lower with reference to one of higher range), as the alto-viol (viola), the alto-horn, the alto-trombone, etc. G.

For alto-clef, see Notation.

Ambrosian Chant or Music. See Gregorian Music. G.

Amen. An acclamation in the Hebrew ritual ['so be it,' 'verily'], appearing in the doxologies appended to Psalms 41, 72, 89 and 106 (marking the ends of 'Books' I-IV). Thence it passed into Christian usage, especially as a form of congregational assent after prayers and praises. In modern church-music it is used as a conventional conclusion for hymns, anthems, etc. G.

The word has been often taken as the text for an extended chorus, especially during the 16-18th centuries (as by Handel at the end of The Messiah); note also the burlesque chorus in Berlioz' Damnation de Faust. Several short settings have had wide use, such as the so-called Dresden Amen (used in Wagner's Parsifal) and Stainer's Sevenfold Amen.

For Amen-cadence, see Cadence.

American Organ. The English name of certain types of reed-organ (q. v.). As contrasted with the earlier harmonium, it was distinguished by being sounded by suction instead of by compression of the air. G.

Amusement. A short, easy and entertaining instrumental piece; a bagatelle or divertissement.

Amusia. A pathological condition in which the ability is lost of appreciating, producing or notating musical tones or effects; the loss of musical faculties. Cf. tone-deafness.

Analytical Program. A program for a work or concert with explanatory notes as to technical structure, themes and treatment or as to origin, history, topic, plot, allusions, etc. G (Analysis).

The earliest clear example is one by John Thomson for a Reid Concert in Edinburgh in 1841, followed by many by Ella for his concerts in London from 1845. Since 1850 such programs have been common, especially in connection with important series of symphony-concerts. Somewhat related are the many Führer or Guides prepared for extended works, such as those of Wolzogen and others for the Wagnerian operas, with the handbooks giving sketches of miscellaneous works of a class (as of operas, oratorios, cantatas, symphonies, etc.).

Andamento. In fugue-writing, a subject or theme of exceptional length, usually in two sections or strains (as in Bach's organ-fugue in G min.). Also sometimes used for an extended episode. G.

Andante. An indication of moderate tempo; see Terms of Performance. Also a work or movement in such tempo and in flowing style. The diminutive andantino means either in a tempo rather slower (but sometimes quicker) than andante or a short andante. G.

Anemochord. A keyboard application of the principle of the Æolian harp, the air-current being supplied by a bellows: invented by J. J. Schnell of Paris in 1789. The compass was five octaves and there were three strings to the key. A similar pneumatic piano was made by Herz in 1851 under the name piano éolienne.

Anglaise. See Dances. G.

Anklang. A Javanese instrument consisting of sets of graduated bamboo-tubes of peculiar shape, mounted on a frame. The tubes are in groups of three (made to vibrate sympathetically in harmonics), the fundamental tones forming a scale. It is played by shaking or striking one group after another.

Answer. See Fugue. G.

Antecedent. See Canon and Fugue.

Anthem. In general, any detached choral piece, as an anthem of rejoicing or a national anthem. Specifically, in Protestant church-music, a Biblical text, liturgical formula or metrical hymn, set for a choir as part of a service. The word is derived from antiphon and the form is analogous to that of the motet, though in technical treatment anthems are less restricted than motets. G.

In the Anglican Church an anthem is regularly provided for after the third collect in both Morning and Evening Prayer, and, where a choral service is maintained (as in cathedrals), it is a constant item in both these services. Hence a large literature of anthems has accumulated since the 16th century, written in diverse styles, from the strictly and severely contrapuntal to the freely lyric and dramatic, and designed for various forces—choral, solo and sometimes orchestral. Some are for double choir and are more or less antiphonal. An anthem or section for chorus is called full, one for solo-voices is called verse. Some are a cappella, but an organ-accompaniment is usual.

The use of anthems is common in all English and American Protestant churches, but is not liturgically defined by rubric or fixed usage except in the Anglican Church. The term is often extended to brief responses or to hymns, if sung by the choir. Occasionally anthems are made congregational exercises, led by the choir.

In the Lutheran Church, as in the Roman Catholic, the usual name for an exercise analogous to the anthem is motet. If the terms are contrasted, motet means a form more contrapuntal in structure and often also one based on a Latin text.

The anthem belongs to the free or variable side of the liturgy. When the text is that of a prescribed and invariable exercise (like the Gloria in Excelsis or the Te Deum), it is better called a canticle. When musical settings are made for the chief exercises for a whole order or office (like Morning or Evening Prayer or the Holy Communion) they form a service. In this an anthem may be inserted, but, being variable, it forms no permanent part of the 'service' as such.

Anticipation. In harmonic and contrapuntal writing, the sounding in advance of an accent of a tone, temporarily dissonant, that belongs to the chord under the accent. Such melodic prolepsis is common in the part having the chief melody, but may occur elsewhere and in more than one voice-part at once. Opposed to retardation and suspension. See Suspension and under Syncopation. G.

The term is rarely extended to the proleptic enunciation of a figure or phrase in advance of its normal place and amid harmonies to which it is not germane.

Antiphon. In medieval liturgies, both Eastern and Western, a sentence or verse (usually from the Psalms) used in close connection with some exercise (before or after, or as a refrain). The musical setting of such ejaculations or responses, especially when associated with the regular recitation or cantillation of the Psalms, usually at first took on a form somewhat adapted to the melodies with which they were to be used. In some cases an antiphon belonged to a special office as a whole (or one of its divisions) and thus tended to greater extension and independence, and it may be that such expanded antiphons gave rise to the anthem as used in England (the word anthem being derived from antiphon). G.

Choral singing is antiphonal when two parts of the choir sing alternately, as in the Anglican chanting of the Psalms (see Cantoris and Decani) and in many passages in works for double chorus. It is responsorial when the officiant and the choir sing alternately.

Antiphonal, Antiphony, Antiphoner. A service-book containing the antiphons required for the Roman Catholic Mass or for Breviary services. That for the Mass early came to be known as the Gradual, the term Antiphonal then being reserved for that for the Breviary offices. The term is sometimes loosely applied to any collection of ritual music. G.

Apollo-Lyra. See Psalm-Melodicon.

Apollonicon. A form of orchestration, made by Flight & Robson of London in 1812-17 and for about twenty years somewhat regularly used for public concerts, the chief leading performer being Thomas Adams. It had about 1900 pipes and many stops manipulated from five keyboards. G.

Apotome. In Greek theory, the interval left when a hemitone is subtracted from a tone ( $\frac{9}{8} \div \frac{3}{2} = \frac{3}{4}$ ) =  $\frac{3}{4}$  (or  $\frac{3}{4}$ ). This larger hemitone was sometimes called chromatic in distinction from the smaller or diatonic (or limma). It is slightly larger than the modern semitone ( $\frac{1}{2}$ ). G.

Appoggiatura. See Embellishments and also under Suspension.

Arabesque. An ornamental passage developed around or out of a central theme—analogue to the architectural decoration thus named. Occasionally also used for a piece in ornate or fanciful style. G.

Archlute, Archilute. A double-necked bass-lute; see Lute and Theorbo. G.

Aretinian Syllables. The traditional syllables used in solmization (q. v.), so called because attributed to Guido d'Arezzo (11th cent.).

Argheel. An Arab reed-instrument of the chalumeau- or clarinet-class, having two tubes tied together side by side. Sometimes both have finger-holes, making two melodies possible, but often one serves only as a drone. G.

Aria. In general, any vocal melody or tune; an air or song. In the 17th century the term came to be specifically applied to the extended and somewhat formalized solos in the opera, the oratorio and similar large forms, the mature conception of the aria in this sense being reached gradually through experiments with free recitative (or dramatic declamation) and the vague and unsettled type known as the arioso. From the later 17th century arias were usually in da capo form—a first section, a second in contrast and then a repetition of the first. The successive phrases were often separated and thrown into relief by instrumental ritornelli or interludes, besides having an introduction at the opening and a coda at the close. The diminutive is arietta. G.

During the prevalence of the Neapolitan type of opera in the 18th century certain varieties of aria were technically differentiated, including the aria cantabile, with a simple, flowing outline (largely diatonic), the aria di portamento, with wider latitude of motion in mezzo carattere, with still less restriction and uniformity in style, the aria parlante, with emphasis on declamatory effects based on a vigorous dramatic text (including special forms, like the aria agitata and the aria infuriata), and the aria di bravura or d'agilità, with emphasis on all sorts of vocal difficulty and display. A favorite special form was the aria d'imitazione, in which the accompaniment vied with the voice in imitating or suggesting sounds like bird-songs, running or falling water, martial noises and the like. In some cases the aria all'unisono appeared, the accompaniment doubling the voice almost or quite without harmony. The aria senza accompagnamento was rare, but occasionally introduced. These technical distinctions remained in force till almost 1800 and their influence is traceable in dramatic practice till much later.

There were also conventional rules as to how arias were to be distributed among the several singers and as to how they were to be systematically varied in the plan of each act. Under this mechanical arrangement of the so-called concert-opera the whole work came to be usually a mere series of set arias, each preceded by a recitative. Once or twice in an extended work there was commonly a duet or double aria for the leading singers.

In the transformation of style effected by Gluck about 1775 and with the rise of new types of opera after 1800 the function of the aria came to be conceived much more elastically. The number of arias in a work became less, but their intrinsic value as parts of the drama was increased. They continued to serve as the chief means for bringing out the individuality of the principal personages, for displaying the lyric interest inhering in moments of intense sentiment and passion, and for developing the emotional value of crises in the plot. In all these ways they still afford rich opportunity for singers to reveal and deploy their artistic power. But in the modern opera and oratorio these results are sought without adhering to fixed types of structure.

It may be added that after 1800 the dramatic aria was somewhat affected by two new influences that drew it in opposite directions. The one was the simple romanza or folk-song—already recognized in the singspiel and the ballad-opera. The other was the elaborate scena, which is substantially a monodrama, so independent and self-determined as to stand alone. Both of these types found place in modern opera.

Arioso. A form of vocal solo intermediate in character between the recitative and the full aria—not as irregular and declamatory as the one and not as lyrically and melodically developed as the other. Also a passage of such character occurring in a recitative or even in an aria, occasioned by some special feature in the text or situation. The term is sometimes extended to a cantabile passage or work for instruments. G.

Arpanetta. See Spitzharfe.

Arpeggio. The process or result of playing a chord on any instrument after the style common on the harp, that is, with the tones in quick and even succession (from below upward) instead of simultaneously. It is usually indicated by a wavy line to the left of the notes. G.

On the piano or organ, as on the harp, an arpeggio may be confined to either hand or taken by both either simultaneously or in succession. As a rule, an arpeggio should begin with the beat belonging to the chord as such. Sometimes an arpeggio is inverted or reversed (begins at the top).

Where an accompaniment-figure is made out of chord-tones in succession or a melody is similarly constructed, it is said to be arpeggiated.

The value of an arpeggio lies in its individualizing the chord-tones and its adding a slight element of suspense in their disclosure.

Arpeggione. An instrument of the viol-class, invented in 1823 by G. Stäuffer of Vienna, having a body somewhat like a guitar and six strings stretched over a fretted fingerboard (tuned e<sub>2</sub>-a<sub>2</sub>-d<sub>1</sub>-g<sub>1</sub>-b<sub>1</sub>-e). Also called guitar-violoncello.

Arrangement. The process or result of readjusting a work for performance by different artistic means from that originally intended. Thus a vocal work can be adapted to instrumental performance or vice versa, a solo made into a quartet, a dramatic, orchestral or chamber-work put into form for the piano or the organ, etc. Somewhat akin to these are variations (as of a popular air), elaborations (as of a Gregorian melody or a chorale), transcriptions (as when a song or dance is taken for free original treatment on an instrument), etc. But the word is most used for relatively close or literal renderings of the substance and form of a work with only those modifications demanded by the limitations or peculiarities of the medium in view. In this sense the process is somewhat analogous to literary translation. G.

Common illustrations are the vocal or piano-scores made of operas and oratorios, the piano-versions of symphonies, overtures and other orchestral works, and transcriptions for military band of either vocal or orchestral pieces. As fine illustrations of method, see the list of examples by famous composers of arrangements of their own or others' works compiled by Parry in Grove's Dictionary.

Ars Antiqua, Ars Nova. Terms applied to two contrasted schools or tendencies in composition at the beginning of the Renaissance. The one, associated with Paris in the 12-13th centuries, emphasized merely a developed form of organum or conductus, the voices moving together syllable by syllable in contrasted formation, while the other, associated with Florence from the 14th century, was the first step in the development of that freer part-writing which later characterized the Italian madrigalists. This Florentine movement seems to have been an indirect successor of the Troubadour movement and it became the forerunner of the liberated secular style of the 16th century.

Arsis. See under Foot. G.

Articulation. See Vocalization.

Art-Song, Artistic Song. See Kunstlied under Volkslied and also under Song.

Associations. Societies of musicians for various purposes have been numerous since as far back as the 15th century (without mentioning the minstrel-bands and various guilds of earlier date). As a rule, however, they were at first only local in scope rather than national or otherwise comprehensive. A few of the Academies, though originally local, gradually took on a national (even international) importance, while other societies have acquired a like comprehensiveness. During the 19th century the formation of bodies of wide scope became notable, so that music as a professional interest is now represented and promoted in several countries by organizations analogous to those otherwise influential in the scientific, literary and artistic worlds generally.

These associations have had varied aims. Some have been artistic (to encourage composition or performance in certain fields), some scholarly (to promote historical or theoretical research, discussion and publication), some pedagogical (to advance standards of teaching and to improve the status of teachers), some protective in a trade-sense (to guard the legal and personal interests of practical musicians, especially of orchestral players), some special or departmental (for example, to advance intelligence and methods in fields like church-music, school-music, choral societies, the opera, criticism, instrument-making, etc.). Their aims have been variously pursued, as through stated meetings, conventions, festivals, the publication of journals or volumes of proceedings, the establishment of funds for prizes, scholarships, pensions and the like. Membership has sometimes been limited to a comparative few who are specially qualified (so that inclusion is counted an honor) or extended to hundreds and thousands of mere adherents of and contributors to the cause represented. They have also been variously governed and directed, as by a relatively permanent central board or by officers who are frequently changed.

No complete register of such associations is practicable. But some conspicuous examples of different kinds in several countries may well be cited.

The only broadly international body that has been attempted is the

Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft, founded in 1899 at Leipzig to promote scholarly research in all branches of musical knowledge by maintaining a monthly Zeitschrift and quarterly Sammelbände, by encouraging the formation of national Sections and local Groups, and by holding occasional Congresses (such as occurred in 1904 at Leipzig, in 1906 at Basel, in 1909 at Vienna, in 1911 at London and in 1914 at Paris). More than fifteen national Sections were established, including nearly the whole of Europe and also the United States. In 1914 the convulsion of the World War brought the Gesellschaft to an end. In Germany its place was taken by the Institut für musikwissenschaftliche Forschung (Bückeburg), started in 1916, and the Deutsche Musik-Gesellschaft (Berlin), started in 1918. The French, English and Italian Sections, as well as those of Scandinavia, also continue active in some form, though there is no international combination.

Of more than national scope are the Cäcilienverein, founded in 1867 at Ratisbon by Franz Witt for the promotion of Catholic music in the Palestrina style, with branches in many parts of the world; the Wagner-Verein, founded in 1883 at Bayreuth for the support of the Wagner Festivals, with contributors in all countries; the Deutsche Sängerbund, founded in 1862 to unite the interests of German singing-societies (men's voices) in Germany and elsewhere (nearly 6000 organizations); and the Internationaler Musikpädagogischer Verband, founded in 1903 at Berlin and holding congresses in 1903, '04, '06, '08 and '11 at Berlin, with a more ambitious meeting in 1913.

Among the many national associations in different countries the following may be named:

In Austria the Tonkünstler-Gesellschaft (1771–1871); the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde (1812); the Oesterreichischer Tonkünstlerverein (1885); and the Oesterreichischer Musiker-Verband (1896).

In England the Musical Association (1874); the Incorporated Society of Musicians (1882); the Plain-Song and Mediæval Music Society (1888); the Union of Graduates in Music (1893); the Society of British Composers (1905).

In France the Association des Artistes Musiciens (1843); the Société des Compositeurs de Musique (1862); the Société Nationale de Musique (1871).

In Germany the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein (1859); the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverband (1872); the Gesellschaft für Musikforschung (1868); the Evangelische Kirchengesang-Verein (1883); the Verband der Deutschen Musiklehrerinnen (1897); the Genossenschaft Deutscher Tonsetzer (1898); besides unions of orchestral conductors, directors of conservatories, professional critics, etc.

In Holland the Maatschappij tot Verordering der Toonkunst (1840), including the Vereeniging voor Noord-Nederlands Muziekgeschiedenis (separated in 1868).

In Italy the Associazione dei Musicologi Italiani (1908).

In Russia the Imperial Musical Society (1859, on the basis of an earlier Symphonic Society, founded in 1840); this has local branches throughout the country.

In Switzerland the Schweizerische Musik-Gesellschaft (1808); the Allgemeine Musik-Gesellschaft (1812); the Schweizerischer Tonkünstler-Verein (1900); and the Schweizerischer Musikpädagogischer Verband (1913, out of earlier bodies).

In the United States the Music Teachers' National Association (1876); the American Guild of Organists (1896); the National Federation of Musical Clubs (1897); the Music Supervisors' National Conference (1907); the National Association of Organists (1908); the Musical Alliance of America (1917); and the Society for the Publication of American Music (1919).

An extensive list of Associations in many countries is given in Riemann's Musiklexikon under 'Vereine.'

Attacco. A figure or short phrase used as a theme or basis for imitation. In fugue-writing, a short subject; opposed to andamento. In free imitation, a brief figure taken for treatment in each fresh section (to give variety and individuality), as in a motet or glee. G.

Attack. In general, the method or manner in which a tone or phrase is begun. It is often specifically confined to a beginning that is firm, clear-cut and precise, or, where several performers are involved, simultaneous and united. Thus, in singing the attack of the tone implies correct control of both breath and the organs of phonation and resonance, and in orchestral technique the acquirement of absolute unanimity of attack is of fundamental importance. G.

Attendant Key. A key (tonality) that bears close relationship to another. Thus with any key are associated the keys of its dominant, subdominant and relative minor (or major), and to a less extent some other keys (as the relative minors of the dominant and subdominant). See Key and Relative.

Aubade. A morning-song; opposed to sere-nade. Also used of a lyric instrumental piece of similar character. G.

Augmentation. That variety of melodic imitation in which the time-values of the notes of the subject of theme are systematically lengthened (usually doubled); opposed to diminution. G.

Augmented. See Chord, Interval and Triad. G.

Aulos. The Greek name for the flute, however constructed and played. Music for the flute was auletic, and a flute-player an aulete. G.

Authentic. In medieval music, denoting a mode, scale or melody whose ambitus (compass) lay between the final and its octave; opposed to plagal; see Gregorian Music. The term is still somewhat used for a melody or phrase whose range is mainly between the key-note and its octave. In ordinary four-part harmony two voice-parts are usually authentic and two plagal. In harmony, an authentic cadence is one in which a dominant chord leads into a tonic chord; opposed to plagal, deceptive, interrupted, etc. See Cadence. G.

Auto-Harp. A semi-mechanical zither, having no distinction between melody- and accompaniment-strings, but fitted with several dampers that can be used to silence all strings except those of a particular chord. By means of these a series of harmonies can be produced in arpeggio by sweeping the finger or a plectrum across the strings. Melody-notes can be made obvious either by ending the arpeggios upon them or by special emphasis.

Automatic Appliances. Devices of this class are almost wholly for producing concerted music without the detailed effort of either a single performer or a group of performers. Some are truly automatic in that, once set in motion, they proceed without further intervention, but many are semi-automatic in that their action may be modified by various means as it proceeds. G.

The more important classes of mechanical processes are the following:

(a) Revolving barrels or cylinders, actuated by a handle, treadle, weight or clock-work, which have on the surface projecting pins, staples, etc., that engage and actuate levers in the playing-action proper. The pins are so disposed on the barrel as to select the desired keys in the action in precisely the right order and time-sequence. The playing-action varies. In the barrel- or hand-organ it opens valves to admit compressed air (from a bellows) into one or more sets of organ-pipes or harmonium-reeds. In various types of mechanical pianos it trips levers that throw hammers against a set of strings. In music-boxes it twangs the graduated teeth of a metallic comb. The barrel may be large enough to include more than one tune in a revolution, may revolve spirally so as to utilize successive revolutions, or may be shiftable so as to present more than one set of pins; and in some cases the barrels are interchangeable.

Music-boxes are notable because they use a peculiar tone-producing element (the metallic comb, with its sympathetic vibrations). Barrel-organs have at times been useful in supplying a small stock of tunes for church-services. Hand-organs and street-pianos are familiar sources of popular amusement. Orchestrons of various degree have sometimes given fairly effective reproductions of elaborate orchestral pieces. Of several inventions in the piano-class Debain's piano mécanique (from about 1850) had special significance. In this removable planchettes were used so that numerous pieces might be played at will.

(b) Perforated paper-rolls, connected with a system of pneumatics, have recently proved extraordinarily effective as the basis of many automatic instruments. A strip of paper, often of great length, is made to pass over a tracker-bar that contains small openings for all the keys (or other parts) to be affected. These openings are connected by tubes with small pneumatics located in a vacuum-chamber, the air-pressure of which is reduced by an exhaust-bellows. When a perforation or slot in the paper-roll corresponds with an opening in the tracker-bar the air enters and opens the appropriate pneumatic. Each pneumatic is so related to the playing-mechanism that the action of the former operates the latter. This system has had numerous and varied applications.

The early piano-players were independent instruments that could be moved up to a piano-keyboard so that the keys could be depressed by finger-levers in the machine. These have generally given place to player-pianos, in which the player-action is contained within the piano-case and actuates the hammer-action more directly. The same principle has been extensively applied to pipe-organs (including ingenious devices for controlling registration). It has also been used for sets of bells.

In general, this system has signal advantages. An indefinite number of different rolls may be used, which can be manufactured in quantity and provided with marks and directions enabling the user to modify and enrich the interpretation by manual adjustments affecting speed and intensity. So successful has been the principle, both artistically and commercially, that in America it has affected the whole piano-making industry. The business of making player-rolls has acquired independent importance and a vast literature of music in this form has been built up, including contributions of special renderings by famous artists.

(c) The phonograph in its musical applications belongs to a wholly different class from the foregoing, both because based on a record of tones as actually performed and because the reproduction is not by means of a recognized musical instrument. The basal record is a series of indentations made in some suitable material by a stylus connected with a sensitive receiving-diaphragm, these indentations corresponding with the tone-vibrations affecting the diaphragm. When this indented record (or a replica of it) is passed under another stylus (called a needle) connected with a reproducing-diaphragm, sounds approximately like the original ones are produced. The precision and effectiveness of the method are often extraordinary, and it is particularly serviceable for vocal effects quite beyond the capacity of other automatic devices. The records are now usually made on circular disks of hard rubber, in the surface of which they are cut in a close spiral. In the reproducer these discs are revolved by clock-work under a stylus ingeniously combined with devices for magnifying and refining the tone. As with the player-piano, a significant literature of vocal and instrumental records has been accumulated that has both artistic and historical value.

(d) Many other automatic inventions might be mentioned. Many of these utilize electrical currents either to make records of effects or to actuate reproducing-mechanisms. Here belong various experiments designed to secure a permanent record of extempore performances, most of which have been superseded by applications of the principles of the player-roll or the phonographic record. Here also may be named some elaborate efforts to produce orchestral or vocal timbre synthetically by tuning-forks or strings thrown into vibration by electrical currents (as in Cahill's 'telharmonium').

In a class by itself is the use of wireless telegraphy to disseminate actual music performed at a central station so as to be received and listened to anywhere throughout an area of enormous extent, which began to attract general attention in 1922.

Auxiliary. Of keys and scales, same as attendant. Auxiliary tones or notes, in embellishments and the like, are those unessential to the harmony or accessory to principal and essential tones or notes.

Ave Maria. An acclamation based upon the salutations in Luke i. 28, 42, or a versified rendering or paraphrase thereof. Both the Latin formula and its derivatives have been used as texts for numerous musical settings in various forms. The original formula became a regular antiphon in the Breviary in the 16th century.

Avoided Cadence. See Cadence.

B. The alphabetic symbol and name for a certain tone or note, and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation. The German name for the same tone or note is H, the name B being used for the English B-flat. G.

As an abbreviation, B. stands for bass or basso.

Bachelor of Music (Mus.B.). See Degrees.

Backfall. In organ-making, a lever (pivoted at the center) designed to transform an upward motion into a downward or vice versa.

Bagatelle. A short and light piece for piano or other instrument; a trifle. G.

The term was first used by Beethoven (opp. 33, 119, 126 and without opus-no.).

Bagpipe, Bagpipes. A wind-instrument of the reed-class, known in ancient and medieval times in many parts of Europe and still popular in folk-music in Italy, France and especially Great Britain (Scotland and Ireland). Its name comes from the leather-bag that serves as an air-reservoir, into which air is blown either by the breath or by a small bellows worked by the player's arm. With the bag are connected the pipes, including 2-3 drones (sounding fixed tones) and a chanter (fitted with finger-holes, so as to yield a melody). The drones are variously tuned, but in any case furnish a stationary harmonic basis. The chanter has 6-8 finger-holes, usually so disposed as to yield a scale of an octave or a ninth, the pitches being traditional or capricious rather than acoustically regular. The reeds in the drone are single, but in the chanter double. Music for the bagpipe includes pibrochs, reels, strathspeys, etc. G.

Balalo. See Marimba.

Balalaika. A form of guitar common in Russian folk-music since the early 18th century (apparently derived from the earlier domra) and also found among the Gipsies. The body is now usually triangular, with a long, fretted neck and 2-3 strings of gut or metal. It is made in at least four sizes, forming a family.

Balanced Pedal. See under Pedal.

Ballabile. A term for any piece of dance-music, especially when inserted in an opera. G.

Ballad, Ballade, Ballata. Originally, a song or melody meant to accompany a dance; a dance-song. But the term has been largely transferred to any folk-like song, especially one that tells a story and that appeals to popular sentiment. The text may be descriptive, amorous, religious, political, satirical, comic, etc. In connection with the rise of the art-song, however, the term came to be used specifically (as by Zumsteeg, Schubert and Loewe) for a narrative song of decidedly dramatic character. During the 19th century choral ballades gradually became frequent, and also (from Chopin onward) ballades for piano and for orchestra. Neither the form nor the style of the latter is fixed enough for definition, except that there is usually an emphasis on lyric narrative. G.

Ballad-Opera. The English term analogous to the German singspiel; a musical play consisting chiefly of ballads or folk-songs (as in Gay's Beggar's Opera, 1728). Such plays had immense popularity in England during the later 18th and earlier 19th centuries. They were the forerunners of what is now the popular operetta or the higher sort of vaudeville. G (English Opera).

Ballet. Originally, at the end of the 16th century, a light, gay part-song or madrigal designed as a dance-tune or in that style; often called a fa-la, because having a refrain or passage sung to those syllables. In the 17th century the term came to denote in France a dance-spectacle with music for stage-presentation, somewhat akin to the English masque, or a dance-number inserted in an opera or appended after the action. With the rise of the so-called 'grand' opera in the early 19th century the ballet became a separate divertissement, danced by a special corps of dancers, inserted between the acts of an opera, but often without close connection with the latter's plot or subject. For this the composer of the opera sometimes wrote special music. The name ballet was then applied either to the spectacle as a whole, to its scheme as a dance or to the dancers collectively. Recently, through the efforts of French and Russian composers in the first instance, the term has come to be used often for a pantomime with music intended for independent stage-presentation, involving much dancing and mimetic action, usually without words that are sung or spoken, but with more or less of a prepared program. G.

The trainer of a ballet is called the balletmaster, one of the dancers a ballerina (f.) or a ballerino (m.), the dancing-force the corps de ballet, etc.

Band. In general, any company of instrumentalists, such as an orchestra or similar ensemble. Specifically, a company of players organized to assist in civic, military or naval functions, like the town- or city-bands long common in Germany and elsewhere, and the military and naval bands maintained in all countries. Such bands, if meant to perform in the open air, are usually made up mostly of metal-instruments and hence called brass-bands. Also applied with a prefix to designate a group or section of an orchestra, as string-band, wood-band or wood-wind, etc., as well as to any company of players all using the same instrument, as a band of bell-ringers, a Russian horn-band, etc. Usually opposed to choir and chorus, though the latter is sometimes termed a band of singers. G.

The conductor is called the bandmaster, the players bandmen or band'smen.

Bandola, Bandora, Bandura [also with the stem pand- or mand-]. An instrument of the lute-family, long associated with folk-music in many parts of Europe, having an oval body and a relatively short neck, with about 12 strings, half of them open (fixed intonation) and half susceptible of stopping. In large varieties the strings may number as high as 30. The strings are usually of wire and are sounded by means of a plectrum. cf. bissex.

The modern mandolin (diminutive of mandola) is a member of the general group, though without the open strings.

Bandonion. A free-reed instrument, similar to the concertina, but shaped more like an accordion. It was invented about 1830 by Uhlig of Chemnitz and named from Band of Crefeld, who was the selling-agent. See Harmonicum.

Banjo. An instrument distantly related to the guitar, probably of African origin (where the name bania occurs in Senegambia for a similar form) and a favorite among the Negroes in America. It is peculiar in having a body consisting of a circular hoop with a front or belly of stretched parchment or skin (like a drum-head) and an open back. The neck is long (usually without frets) and there are 5-6 strings (rarely more), of which one, shorter than the rest, serves as the melody-string. This latter is placed next to (outside of) the lowest or bass-string, so as to be played with the thumb (whence the name thumb-string). The accordatura varies more or less according to the player's fancy. G.

Bar. See Notation and Measure. G.

Barcarole. A boat-song, such as is sung by the Venetian gondoliers, or an instrumental piece in similar style; a gondellied or gondoliera. It is usually in easy sextuple rhythm, with a pulsing accent as of lapping water or a swaying boat. G.

Bard. Among Celtic peoples in Gaul and Britain, a poet-singer or minstrel holding a communal or tribal position of honor and influence. The bardic order continued powerful in Ireland till about 1690 and in Scotland till about 1750. In Wales the title of bard is still conferred as a supreme honor at the Eisteddfodau. The typical bardic instrument is the harp. G.

The Celtic bards are analogous to the Scandinavian skalds. It is possible that they may be the source or pattern of the jongleurs employed by the Trouvères, as of other traveling-minstrels in the Middle Ages.

Baritone, Barytone. The voice or voice-part intermediate in range and quality between the bass and the tenor; see Voice. Also an instrument whose range corresponds to that of the baritone-voice; specifically, (a) the viola di bordone or baryton, a viola da gamba with sympathetic strings, widely used in Germany in the 17-18th centuries, and (b) the euphonium or bass-saxhorn, common in military bands. G.

Baroxton. A metal-instrument with cupped mouthpiece, invented by Červeny of Königgrätz in 1853, having a wide scale and a compass of over two octaves (D to f).

Barré. In lute- and guitar-playing, the simultaneous stopping of several or all of the strings by laying the forefinger across them, so as to raise their pitch a semitone or at one—a sort of capotasto (q. v.).

Barrel-Organ. See under Automatic Appliances.

Baryton, Barytone. See Baritone. G.

Bass, Basso. The lowest variety of the adult male voice or its voice-part, or any part at the bottom of the harmony; see Voice. Also any instrument whose range corresponds to that of the bass-voice, including the bass-viol (or double-bass) the bass-trombone, the bass-clarinete, the bass-drum, etc. G.

For bass-bar, see Viol and Violin; for bass-clef, see Notation; for basso continuo, see Thoroughbass; for basso ostinato, see Ground-bass.

Bassanello. One of the variants of the old double-reed instruments of the pommer- or bombard-class; it was made in bass-, tenor- and disant-sizes.

Basse Danse. See Dances.

Basset-Horn. A tenor-clarinet, now seldom used. It is analogous to the cor anglaise or English horn in the oboe-family. G.

Bass-Horn. A wind-instrument with a cupped mouthpiece (on an S-crook), a wooden body and a brass bell, invented about 1800 by Alex. Frichot of London; also called basson russe or Russian bassoon. See Serpent and Ophicleide. G.

Bassoon. The bass of the oboe-family of wood-wind instruments. Its long tube is bent upon itself for compactness and to bring the finger-holes within easy reach, and the mouthpiece is carried on a curved tube projecting from the side (the peculiar appearance of the whole occasioning the Italian and German names fagotto or fagott, a bundle of sticks). It replaced the old bombart or bombard in the 16th century and its invention is often ascribed to Afranio of Ferrara (c. 1525). Through gradual improvements it has become one of the most valuable instruments in the modern orchestra, supplying a bass for the entire wood-wind division, blending richly with the tones of the strings and the brass, and giving valuable effects in independent passages because of its penetrating and individual quality. Its compass is about three octaves or even more. G.

The total length of the tube, from mouthpiece to bell, is over 90 inches, the central portion being a wooden cone gradually expanding to the bell. The number of finger-holes is usually 15-20.

A double-bassoon or contrafagotto is occasionally used, sounding an octave lower.

For basson russe or Russian bassoon, see Bass-Horn.

Bathyphon. A metal-instrument with a clarinet-mouthpiece and a low compass, invented in 1839 by Skorra and Wieprecht of Berlin and for a time used in military bands.

Baton. The stick or wand with which a conductor directs a chorus, orchestra or band, primarily to indicate rhythm and tempo. Also loosely applied to a conductor's method or style of interpretation. See Conducting. In notation, the name (bâton) of a sign for a rest of one or more measures. G.

The general use of a baton dates from the early 19th century, after the custom of using the harpsichord in the orchestra died out. A cappella singing, however, had long been led in many cases by means of a roll of paper (the sol-fa).

FAMILY OF TROMBONES

FAMILY OF BASSOONS

Battement. See Embellishments.

Batterie, Battery. The name of special instrumental effects, as (on the harpsichord) a chord quickly repeated for emphasis or a series of broken chords, or (on the guitar) striking the strings instead of twanging them, or (on the snare-drum) a rapid roll. Also collectively for the percussive section of an orchestra or band. G.

Battuta. Literally, a beat or pulse, but usually the down-beat marking the measures; hence a battuta, in strict rhythm (opposed to colla parte), or in ritmo di tre battute, the measures grouped in threes, etc. G.

Beaked. Denoting a mouthpiece that resembles a bird's beak, as in the clarinet, recorder, flageolet or other wind-instrument with a straight tube that is held vertically.

Beat. One of the units making up a measure or musical 'foot'; a pulse (both terms being derived from the analogy of the heart-beat). The distinction between measures and types of rhythm lies in the number of beats held together in groups by means of primary and secondary accents, and by the placing of accents in the group. See Accent, Measure, Rhythm and Time. Also a motion (usually of the hand) by which the tempo and measure is indicated, a chief accent being marked by a down-beat, a secondary accent by a side-beat and unaccented pulse by a up-beat (if preceding a down-beat) or a repetition of the motion just made—the whole action being the act or process of beating or marking time. Another similar process is that of mentally or vocally counting time (numbering the beats in a measure from 'one' onwards). Also applied to one or two forms of trill; see Embellishments. G.

Beats. In acoustics, the pulsating sound made when two tones that are not quite in tune are sounded together. As the two tones are made to approximate, the beats grow slower and when the two are 'in tune,' they disappear. G.

Bezibation. See Solmization.

Bebung. In clavichord-playing, a slightly wavering tone-effect effected by rocking the finger on the key so as to impart a pulsating pressure to the tangent, at the same time prolonging the tone. Also applied to analogous effects on other keyboard-instruments and to the vibrato imparted to a string on the violin or similar instrument by rocking the finger in 'stopping.' G.

Bel Canto. The vocal method or style associated with the singing of the Italian school, especially of the 17th–18th centuries, in which beauty and finish of tone and delivery were more prized than declamatory or dramatic effect.

Bell. A metal instrument, variously shaped and hung, sounded by striking, especially one in a church-tower to mark the hour or to announce services. Church-bells are regularly shaped like an inverted circular cup, but with a flaring mouth, having a pendent clapper inside or a hinged hammer outside (or both). If hung on a pivoted beam with a wheel attached, a bell may be swung until sounded by the falling of the clapper against the rim, and is then said to be rung, whereas if it remains stationary and is struck by clapper or hammer, it is said to be tolled. In any case, a given bell yields but one tone, the pitch and quality of which varies with the alloy of the metal, the size and weight and especially the relative thickness of the sound-bow (the thickened part of the rim). To secure melodic effects, several bells of graduated size are united in a peal, chime or carillon, the number ranging from 3 to 50 or more. G.

Change-ringing is the process of sounding a set of bells in regularly-changing order without regard to a set tune, while, with a set covering an octave or more, tunes may be rendered as far as the actual scale permits. Bell-ringing as an art has been specially cultivated in the Low Countries and in England. The art and the whole body of knowledge connected with it is campanology (from the Latin campana, whence also the architectural term campanile). The use of large bells has also been notable in Russia.

Bell-ringing has been variously effected, sometimes (where several bells are sounded by swinging) by having a ringer for each bell, sometimes by some sort of barrel-mechanism, automatically operating, and sometimes by means of a keyboard or lever-board. The player is called a bell-ringer or carillonneur. A piece especially adapted to bells is sometimes called a carillon.

Bell-founding is a specialized industry. The main constituents of bell-metal are copper and tin (roughly in the ratio of 3 to 1), though some zinc, lead, iron and even other metals have also been used. Bells as found in the ethnic field are of various composition, as well as of various shape.

Sets of small bells have been used for amusement or concert-purposes, often with much effect. In some cases a group of players has been tried, each sounding but one or two bells. In others, the series is so mounted as to be operated by a single player, sometimes by means of a keyboard. Recently fine results have been secured by sets of metal-tubes used as bells in church-towers, as an orchestral accessory and especially as an organ-stop. Single bells have long been used for occasional effects in operas and orchestral works. Any sort of mechanical device for such purposes is termed a glockenspiel or bell-piano.

The term bell is also used for the flaring mouth of any wind-instrument, whether small (as in the clarinet) or large (as in the horn and other brass-instruments).

Bellows. See Organ and Reed-Organ, also under Bagpipe. G.

Bell-Piano. See Glockenspiel.

Belly. The front of any instrument of the lute- or viol-classes, that face of the resonance-box over which the strings are stretched. Also, in the clavichord, harpsichord and piano, the soundboard (q. v.). G.

Benedicite. A canticle, or its musical setting, early adopted for church-use and used in the Anglican liturgy as an alternative for the Te Deum in Morning Prayer. G.

Its text comes from the Greek expansion of Dan. iii, where it is ascribed to Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego (whence often called 'The Song of the Three Children'). The first words are 'Benedicite, omnia opera Domini'; each sentence ends with the hortation 'Laudate eum, etc.'

Benedictus. The section of the musical Mass that follows the Sanctus and precedes the Agnus

Dei, being a hymn of adoration after the consecration of the Elements. G.

The text is 'Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini', with the Hosanna repeated from the Sanctus.

Also a canticle or its musical setting, the text taken from the Song of Zacharias in Luke i. 68-79, used in the Morning Prayer of the Anglican Church.

The text begins, 'Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel.'

Berceuse. A cradle-song or lullaby, or an instrumental piece in similar style. G.

Bergamasca, Bergomask. A dance or dance-tune named from Bergamo (Italy), though not always in a form like local dances there. G.

Vocal bergamasce are known as early as 1569 and an instrumental one from 1642 (Uccellini's Sonatas), but in the latter the name is apparently applied to the basso ostinato of the piece.

Bergkreyen, Bergreihen. Originally, dance-tunes from the Erzgebirge (Saxony), but at the time of the Reformation such tunes fitted with either secular or sacred words (various collections from 1531 onward).

Bible-Organ, Bible-Regal. A small portative organ, made to close up in covers like those of a book. See Regal.

Richord. Denoting an instrument with two unison-strings for each tone or key, as in various forms of lute, in many old keyboard-instruments, etc.; cf. trichord.

Bicinium. A composition for two voices; a vocal duet (usually contrapuntal). G.

Binary. Denoting anything consisting of two parts or elements; specifically, binary measure, a measure or foot with two beats (duple rhythm), and binary form, either a form of composition divided into two contrasted sections (as in many dances) or one based upon two principal themes (as in sonata-form).

Bind. Usually same as tie; sometimes same as slur or brace. See Notation. G.

Bird-Song. Though many animals have voices analogous to that of man, none produce vocal effects of a highly musical character except certain of the birds. The oscines or singing-birds comprise thirty or more species. In these, as in some others, there is a remarkable development of a lower larynx or syrinx, including parts of both trachea and the upper bronchi. Within the syrinx are vibratile membranes analogous in function to the vocal cords in man, controlled by muscles that often allow a wide range of pitch in the tones produced. Some birds confine themselves to a few calls that are repeated without much change. Others not only use a variety of melodies spontaneously, but have more or less readiness in imitating or parodying melodies that they hear. The analogies with human song are often extraordinary, though not easy to reduce to musical notation because of the acuteness of the pitch and the frequency of small intervals. These phenomena may have had influence at times upon figures and embellishments in florid vocalization. Throughout the 18th century the so-called aria d'imitazione was often applied to ornate effects simulating bird-song. Instrumental writing has also often sought to suggest the warblings and calls of birds either for their tonal value or as an element of pictorial suggestion.

Bissex. A form of guitar, invented in 1770 by Vanhecke, having 12 strings, half of which ran over the fingerboard and half were open; cf. bandola.

Biwa. A Japanese lute or mandolin with 4 strings, played with a plectrum.

Black. In notation, denoting a note with a solid head (as opposed to one with a white or open head); see Notation. On the keyboard, denoting a key or digital in the rear or upper rank, topped with ebony or stained like it; see Keyboard and note under White.

Block. See reed-pipe under Pipe.

Blocking. A derangement in the action of a harpsichord or piano in which the jack does not carry the spine past the string or the hammer does not recoil after striking, in either case producing a dull thud instead of a tone.

Blower. Specifically, one who operates the feeders that supply air to the bellows of an organ; also a machine, usually hydraulic or electric, that performs the same function.

Bluette. A short and playful comedy; also a light or trifling piece for the piano.

Boat-Song. See Barcarolle, Gondoliera, etc.

Bob. In English bell-ringing, the name for changes rung on an even number of bells—bob minor for six, major for eight, royal for ten, maximus for twelve. G.

Bobization, Bokedization. See Solmization.

Bockstriller. An instrumental effect consisting of the interrupted iteration of a single tone.

Body. In most instruments, the main portion of the structure, such as the resonance-box of any member of the lute- or viol-families, or the central tube (apart from the mouthpiece, the bell, etc.) of both wood- and brass-instruments, the tube of an organ-pipe from the mouth upwards (opposed to the foot), etc.

The term is also loosely applied to the general sonority or resonance of a tone.

Bogenflügel, Bogenklavier. A keyboard-instrument with strings sounded by the friction of revolving wheels or little bows, so as to simulate the tone of a violin; a violin-paino.

Examples are Heyden's Geigenclavicymbal (1610), Gleichmann's Claviergambie (1709), Hohlfield's Bogenklavier (1754), Meyer zu Znonow's and Kunze's Bogenflügel (1790, '95) and Rolli's Xanorophika (1797).

Bolero. See Dances. G.

Bombard, Bomhart. The older type of oboe, made in several sizes, shading into the shawm. This group of instruments constituted the nucleus of the early orchestra, before the full recognition of the superiority of the violin and its relatives. Also called pommer. G.

The modern bassoon is essentially a bass-bombard with the tube doubled on itself.

Bombardon. A bass-instrument of the trumpet- or saxhorn-families, much used in military bands. G.

Bonang. A Javanese instrument, consisting of a graduated set of small gongs mounted on a circular frame, within which the player sits or kneels; sometimes called a gong-piano.

Bones. The popular name for small clappers of bone, ivory or wood held in pairs between the fingers and sounded by twisting or shaking the hand; also called knicky-knackers (probably derived from the French nacaire).

Book. See Libretto.

Boot. See reed-pipe under Pipe.

Bourrée, Boutrade. See Dances. G.

Bout. In instruments of the viol-class, an inward curve in the side of the body to facilitate the access of the bow to the string. In the violin-family the two opposite bouts are sharply separated sections of the ribs bent inward elliptically; together they form the waist.

Bow. The implement by which the tone of instruments of the viol- or bow-class is produced. In its modern form, which is due to the epochal improvements of Tourte late in the 18th century, it consists of a highly elastic and slightly in-curved stick of lancewood or snakewood and a flat bundle of horse-hairs (usually over 100), stretched from the bent point in the head of the stick to the nut (an adjustable block controlled by a thumb-screw) in its heel. The fricative capacity of the hairs is increased by rubbing rosin or colophony on them. The bows for the viola, 'cello and double-bass are progressively shorter, stouter and heavier than that for the violin. That for the double-bass is of the general type of all those used until about 1780 for the violin and other members of the viol-family. G.

The right hand of the player is often called the bow-hand or arm (unless he be left-handed) and the method of applying the bow to the strings by the collective term bowing. This latter includes the choice of up- or down-strokes in the rendering of a given passage, and is also used for the marks showing the handling preferred. Instruments played by means of a bow are bow- or bowed instruments; occasionally also called fricative.

In bells, the thickened ring just above the rim, the part against which the clapper or hammer strikes and by which the tone and tune are largely determined: also called the sound-bow.

Bow-Zither. See Zither.

Brace. See Notation. G.

Branle, Bransle, Brawl. See Dances. G.

Brass. Denoting any one of the various solo metal-instruments used in bands or orchestras or such instruments collectively, irrespective of the composition of the metal used. The brass or brass-wind in an orchestra comprises the horns, trumpets, trombones, etc. A brass-band, such as used for military purposes, includes a variety of metal-instruments (such as cornets, horns, trumpets, saxhorns, saxophones, euphoniums, bombardons, trombones, etc.), with a considerable section of wood-wind instruments (flutes, clarinets, etc.). G.

Bratsche. The German name for the tenor-viol or viola.

Bravo ('well done!'). An exclamation of approval and applause. G.

Bravura. Daring, dash or display; as aria di bravura or bravura-air, an aria demanding brilliant vocalization. G.

Break. In the voice, the pitch at which one register or quality is exchanged for another, whether instinctively or deliberately, or the imperfect tone produced when the transition is abrupt or badly managed. Also extended to a similar point of transition or transitional tone in the scale of an instrument (especially in the clarinet and certain organ-stops). It is also applied to any poorly-produced tone in the voice and in several instruments.

Breath-mark, Breathing-mark. In vocal music, any sign inserted in the score to indicate the proper place for taking breath.

Breve. See Notation. G.

Alla breve, originally an indication or name for a slow quadruple rhythm, but now usually used for a broad duple rhythm, the beats in either case being marked by minims.

Breviary. In the Roman Catholic Church, the service-book containing the prayers, lections, antiphons, responses and hymns for the Canonical Hours observed throughout each day; analogous to the Horologion of the Greco-Russian Church and (in part) to the Morning Prayer and Evening Prayer of the Anglican Church. From the Breviary come many texts much used for musical setting.

Bridge. In a stringed instrument, a support that lifts the strings from the body, while transmitting their vibrations to the latter and at the same time defining their vibrating-length (at one end); specifically, in the harpsichord and piano the straight or curved transverse bar over which the strings pass to the wrest-pins, and in the violin and similar instruments the thin wedge set upright on the belly above the tailpiece and carrying the strings on its arched upper edge in such a way that all can be reached by the bow. G.

In the piano the strings are held in place on the bridge by small metal pins. In the violin, etc., the bridge has two feet, the treble-foot standing nearly over the soundpost.

Brindisi. A convivial or drinking-song. G.

Broken Music, including broken chords and broken octaves. Terms describing effects in which chords and octaves are arpeggiated or otherwise melodized, instead of played simultaneously. Broken cadence, same as interrupted cadence; see Cadence.

Brunette. A light popular song with a refrain, sometimes with dancing, such as was common in France in the 17th century. G.

Buccina. A Roman trumpet, usually with a tube bent in a circle. G.

From the term comes the German posaune (busaun). The Scandinavian lure may have been an imported buccina.

Buffo, Buffa. Denoting that which is humorous or comically grotesque, as an opera buffa or an aria buffa. One who takes humorous parts is often called a buffonist or a buffo-singer. The French form is bouffe. Opposed to serio.

Buffonistes. A term applied to the partisans of the Italian opera buffa, when it was first introduced at Paris in 1752, precipitating a warm dispute (the so-called guerre des buffons) which led to the establishment of the French light opera (opera bouffe or comique) in distinction from the serious or tragic opera. Those who opposed the innovation were called antibuffonistes. See under Rousseau and Opera.

Bugle. An instrument of the trumpet-class, but with a relatively short tube; a buglehorn. Its traditional use is to give infantry-signals. It is usually pitched in C and has 8 tones, but in 1770 and also in 1810 keys were added, giving several more tones (key-bugle or Kent-bugle). After a time its place in military bands was taken by the cornet. Valve-bugles have also been made; and the higher saxhorns are often called bugles. G.

Bundfrei. Same as fret-free; see Clavichord and Fret.

Burden, Burthen. The reiterated refrain of a popular song. Also applied to a ground-bass or basso ostinato and to the drone of a bagpipe (or its sound), in both cases because of their continued or persistent sounding. G.

Burla, Burlesque, Burlesca, Burletta. A broadly humorous stage-piece, often with more or less music; a farce, extravaganza or travesty. Sometimes also a short and humorous instrumental piece. G.

Button. In the concertina or accordion, one of the keys or studs that open the valves of the reeds. In the violin and similar instruments, the knob at the bottom to which the tailpiece is attached.

By-Note. A tone or note that is not essential to the main structure of the melody or harmony, such as the auxiliary tone in an embellishment or as a passing-note. The term may be applied specifically in the melodic effect of moving one step up or down from a principal tone and immediately back again, the tone transiently touched thus by a sort of side-step being properly a by-note.

C. The alphabetic symbol and name for a certain tone or note and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation. G.

Since on keyboard-instruments generally the scale produced by using only the white (lower and wider) keys is a major scale, which is the chief scale of modern music, and since the key-note or tonic of this scale is given by the key named c, the key and scale of c has been generally taken as typical or standard (because on the keyboard produced by using the 'naturals', often called the 'natural' key or scale).

Middle C (so called usually because the c lying in the middle of the keyboard) is a frequent tone of reference for pitch-relations. In theory, its vibration-number has been taken as either 264 (largely in German treatises) or 256 (the so-called 'philosophical pitch,' because the fourth power of 2); see Pitch. The older clefs were mostly c-clefs and regularly designated a staff-degree as belonging to a tone of medium pitch called by this letter—which may be the source of the term middle c.

As an abbreviation, C. or c. stands for capo (as D.C., da capo), cantus or canto (as c.f., cantus firmus), col (as C.B., col basso, C. 8va, coll'ottava, C.A., coll'arco, C.L., col legno), come (as C.S., come sopra) or contra (as C.B., contrabasso).

Cabaletta. Properly, a song or piece with a triplet-figure in the accompaniment (as of a cantering horse), but often applied to a short cavatina. G.

Cabinet. The exterior case of an organ or piano. The term cabinet-piano has been used for two or three forms of piano, as for early types of the upright variety or for an instrument suited for a small room (cabinet); and cabinet-organ is a name for portable reed-organs or harmoniums. Also cottage-piano, cottage-organ.

Caccia. A hunting-song (usually a 2-part canon) such as became common in Italy in the 14th century. The term may be the source of the English catch. Alla caccia, in the style of hunting-music (usually with horns).

For corno di caccia, see Horn; and for oboè di caccia, see Oboe.

Cachucha. See Dances. G.

Cadence. In general, the characteristic outline or movement of a vocal or instrumental piece or of its closing strain. Specifically, the harmonic formula by which a phrase or line is ended, so as to give a sense of temporary or complete finality; a close. G.

In modern usage, a cadence is called authentic, perfect or complete when a dominant triad or seventh-chord is followed by a tonic triad; plagal or Amen-, when a subdominant triad leads into the tonic; avoided, broken, deceptive, false or interrupted, when the final chord in one of the foregoing (usually the first) is not tonic; and imperfect or half-, when a tonic chord (or some other) leads into the dominant, producing only a temporary finality. Mixed cadence, a cadence combining two of the preceding forms, as in the sequence of subdominant, dominant and tonic.

In medieval music, a clausula or close was regarded melodically rather than harmonically, its character being determined by the motion of the leading voice and the tone to which it leads. The clausula vera ended with the final of the mode, other forms being called ficta, media, etc.

Cadenza. In vocal music, a florid passage in a song or aria, usually at or near the end. In the 18th century such passages were often extemporized or interpolated by singers, especially in operas. In instrumental works, especially concertos, an analogous passage by the soloist, the material usually being derived from the passages preceding and worked out either contrapuntally or with reference to a display of virtuosity. G.

Cadenzas for concertos are often written by others than the original composer. They are more common after the first main division than later.

Calandrone. A small chalumeau or shawm used by Italian peasants.

Calascione, Colascione. An Italian form of lute or guitar, with but 2-3 strings, played with a plectrum; cf. tambura. G.

Calata. See Dances.

Call. In military or naval music, a signal or order, as by bugle, trumpet or drum, for some duty or manœuvre. G. (Military Signals).

In English bell-ringing, call-changes are those rung in accordance with calls by a leader or by a written order instead of in numerical sequence. G.

Calliope. A rude form of pipe-organ sounded by steam instead of compressed air.

Camera. In various expressions (with alla, da or di), denoting for the chamber or room, that is, secular; opposed to chiesa, for the church; as alla camera, musica di camera, sonata di camera, etc. See Chamber-Music. G.

Campanology. The whole body of knowledge about bells and bell-ringing, including the industry of bell-founding, the art or practice of ringing chimes and carillons and the comparative study of bells as used in different countries. G.

Canarie. See Dances. G.

Cancel. See natural under Notation; also a piston in organ-combinations.

Cancrizans. See Canon. G.

Canon. A form or method of composition in which a melody as given by one voice or voice-part is imitated tone by tone or interval by interval by a second voice or by three or more others. The leading part is called the dux, antecedent or subject, and the imitating part the comes, subsequent or answer. Imitation of this exact kind is called canonic, whether or not carried out in full. Canonic imitation is an essential factor in fugue-writing. As in other contrapuntal forms, the leading part begins in advance of the imitation. G.

A canon or a piece of canonic writing, with reference to the number of parts engaged, is 2-part, 3-part, etc.; with reference to the pitch-relation between dux and comes, at the unison, at the octave, at the third, etc.; and with reference to the method of imitation, direct (like the dux), inverted or by inversion (upward steps transformed into downward and vice versa), by reversion, retrograde or cancrizans (backwards), by both inversion and reversion (both upside down and backwards), by diminution (each note of the dux represented in the comes by one half as long), by augmentation (each note in the dux represented by one twice as long); etc.

A canon is said to be infinite or perpetual when the dux returns into itself, without a close. This is the type used in the round or catch. An enigmatic or riddle- canon is one of which only the dux is given, without indicating precisely how the imitation is to be effected.

With many fine vocal canons a harmonized instrumental accompaniment is supplied. So, in instrumental works, canonic passages may be harmonically supported.

Canon. In the Greco-Russian Church, an extended canticle made up of 9 (or 8) odes, each in several stanzas and with its own melody; see Ode. In the Roman Catholic Church, the invariable or central part of the Mass, beginning with the prayer of consecration (Te igitur).

Canonical Hours. In both the Eastern and the Western Churches, a system of times of worship (every third hour) covering the entire day, the service-books for these being the Horologion and the Breviary respectively.

The Hours (beginning at midnight) include Matins, Lauds, Prime, Terce, Sext, Nones, Vespers and Compline—eight in all, but Matins and Lauds are often counted as one.

The strict maintenance of the system is possible only in monasteries or other large foundations. In other cases the morning and the evening offices are more or less combined.

Canonici. A name used of Pythagoras and his followers, who emphasized mathematics and theory in Greek musical discussion; opposed to the harmonici (Aristoxenus and his followers), who made more of taste and actual praxis.

Cantata. Originally, a composition to be sung; opposed to sonata (a piece to be 'sounded' on an instrument). But the term early assumed specific meanings, denoting usually a vocal work with instrumental accompaniment, made up of several successive movements or numbers (such as recitatives, arias, duets, choruses and the like) and adapted by limited length and moderate technical demands for presentation in a concert or in connection with church-services. In modern usage, the term shades off into the short oratorio, the choral ballade, the lyric scene and even the unacted operetta. The essential characteristic is the arrangement in sections of varied form and the predominance of lyric and epic material. G.

The term first appears in the early 17th century (from 1620), but in the odd form cantada. At first one or two solo-voices were used in alternate recitatives and ariosos. In what came to be called the cantata da camera the topic was secular, but in the cantata da chiesa sacred. The addition of the chorus was more frequent in the latter. Throughout the 17th and on into the 18th centuries the Italian cantata gave many composers the chance to use the new operatic methods of expression on a small and unostentatious scale, as well as with many texts quite unsuited for the stage. This development was somewhat parallel with that of the sonata da camera and sonata da chiesa.

Meanwhile in Germany a special type of church-cantata gradually took shape, also seeking to use varied vocal procedures in successive movements, but as a regular feature in services and so with reference to a worshipping congregation. The chorus was here prominent and in many cases the congregation was expected to join in singing the melody of well-known chorales. The accompaniment might be for the organ or for the organ and something of an orchestra. The usage originated in the musical observance of days like Christmas, Easter and Whitsunday, but soon spread to other days, until toward the end of the 17th century complete series or cycles of cantatas began to appear for every Sunday and other marked day of the Lutheran calendar. In this development certain poets, like Neumeister and Picander [C. F. Henrici], played an important part, supplying cantata-texts made up of selections from the Bible, versified prayers, meditations, etc., usually elaborated after the sentiment of the prevailing Pietism of the age. As the purpose was to make that which could be imbedded in a regular church-service, the Lutheran cantata may be called liturgical (in the broad sense). Its musical treatment naturally ran along lines consonant with existing church-music (the chorale, the motet and the polyphonic organ-piece). It does not readily lend itself to transference to other surroundings (as to a concert-program).

Another 18th-century type was the occasional cantata, intended to dignify the birthdays, weddings or funerals of eminent personages, to present homage to patrons, to celebrate military successes, etc. These were the forerunners of the national cantatas and festal odes in cantata-style that are still common.

The cantata took on several new tendencies in the 19th century. The influence of romanticism supplied much new material for secular cantata-texts of a strongly dramatic, fanciful or even fantastic kind. The rise of choral societies of all sorts provided a diversified and extensive field for composers and performers. And, on the side of the sacred cantata, the religious sentiment of different communions expressed itself particularly in the multiplication of short oratorios on Biblical, devotional and meditative subjects. This latter movement has been and is conspicuous in Protestant churches in England and America.

Cantate Domino. A canticle, or its musical setting, the text taken from Psalm 98, that is used in the Evening Prayer of the Anglican Church as an alternative for the Magnificat. G.

The text begins, 'O sing unto the Lord a new song' (Cantate Domino canticum novum).

Cantatorium. A musical service-book, like an antiphonary or gradual.

Canticle, Canticum. In general, any Psalm or hymn used in a church-service. Specifically, a non-metrical text from the Bible, or its musical setting, rubrically prescribed or permitted as a part of regular services. G.

In the Eastern and Western Churches the cantica majora include the Songs of Mary, Zacharias and Simeon (Magnificat, Benedictus and Nunc Dimittis) from Luke i-ii, and the cantica minora, certain Old Testament Psalms not included in the Psalter (from Ex. xv, Deut. xxxii, I Kings ii, Is. xxvi, xxxviii, Jon. iii, Hab. iii and Dan. iii [Greek version]). In the Anglican church the term is extended to the Gloria Patri, the Gloria in Excelsis, the Te Deum and such Psalms as the Venite, the Cantate, etc.

The Latin name of the Old Testament Song of Songs is Cantica Canticorum. From this numerous texts for music have been derived.

Cantilena (literally, as a diminutive, a small song). Originally, a vocal melody taken by itself, as the cantus firmus of a contrapuntal piece, a vocal exercise or soffeggio, or a popular canzona or chanson; later extended to any vocal solo, as in an opera. In modern usage, a graceful, flowing melody, usually for the voice (as in a ballad), but also sometimes instrumental. G.

The term is also used descriptively, of a smooth, connected style of performance.

Cantillation. In general, the act or process of singing. Specifically, such vocal rendering of a prose text as is practiced in the ritual of the Synagogue, the Greco-Russian, Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches and occasionally elsewhere. It is essentially a form of declamation, but with the broad, sustained vocalization and the obvious melodic motions of song, though without either the fixed intervals or the tendency to fixed rhythm and meter of the latter. Often also applied to chanting.

It is likely that the general style of Synagogue cantillation (as applied to the lessons, prayers and other ritual exercises) embodies an ancient tradition, that from which the usage of the Byzantine Church and of the Gregorian system was developed. Gregorian cantillation early tended to crystallize into a definite and precise body of unrhythmic melodies which could be noted down and thus maintained intact. But ideally cantillation is a free art, depending largely upon the genius and impulse of the singer.

In the Synagogue a cantillator is called a cantor.

Cantor. In general, a singer, especially in some official sense. Specifically, in the Synagogue, the one who takes those parts of the service as are cantillated, but in the Lutheran and Anglican Churches, the choir-master or precentor, and, in many German schools, the music-master. The term corresponds to maestro di cappella or maitre de chapelle. G.

In many German towns the office of Cantor is civic (as in the famous Thomasschule in Leipzig and the Kreuzschule at Dresden), involving duties in the town-churches and the town-schools.

The term Cantoris ('of the precentor') is used in England to designate the left or north half of the choir; opposed to Decani ('of the dean'). G.

Cantus, Canto. A general term for song or melody. Specifically, either a principal, leading melody that serves as a subject or theme, or (with qualifying words) some particular style or form of vocal music.

In the development of contrapuntal music the cantus firmus (or cantus) or canto fermo was the name for the thread of given melody (taken either from the established plain-song or from popular song) around which other melodies were woven so as to make a choral texture. Hence extended to any subject taken for contrapuntal treatment and even to the chief melody in harmonic composition. As designating a voice or voice-part, cantus originally meant the tenor, but later the treble or soprano.

Cantus planus or Gregorianus is the style or body of unrhythmic song traditionally associated with the musical ritual of the medieval Church; plain-song or Gregorian music. This is essentially unisonal, though its melodies may be contrapuntally or harmonically treated. As composition arose upon this as a basis part-music was called cantus figuratus, figuratus or mensurabilis, figurate or mensural music—the former term emphasizing the freer movement of the added parts and the latter the fact that they now needed to proceed with time-regularity (according to some system of note-values).

For cantus fictus, see Musica Ficta.

Canzona. Properly, an Italian folk- or popular song; cf. the French chanson. From the 16th century the term was extended both to secular part-songs (shading off into those called madrigals) and to various instrumental pieces in which the melody or the movement had a popular quality. The diminutive canzonetta or canzonet means a short or slight canzona.

Instrumental canzone first appear in Italy in 1543, being apparently suggested by French chansons (from 1530).

Capotasto. In all varieties of lutes and viols, the ridge at the top of the fingerboard over which the strings pass on the way to the tuning-pegs and by which their effective length at the upper end is determined. Also a separate attachment that can be pressed down upon the strings below this ridge so as to raise their pitch a semitone or more. See Nut and Barré. Commonly corrupted into capodastre or capo d'astro. G.

Capo tasto bar, in piano-making, a bar or ridge over which some of the strings are stretched on the way to the wrest-pins, serving to define their effective length at the front end and give a firmer bearing. It was introduced in 1843 by Antoine Bord of Paris.

Cappella, Chapelle, Kapelle, Chapel. Originally, in church-building, a recess or other small sanctuary set apart in honor of a saint, or a small church; also an oratory or other place of worship in a castle or palace. In cathedrals and monasteries, also extended to the room or space set apart for the singers; the choir as a part of an edifice. Thence it passed, specifically, to the singers themselves as a body; a choir. As it became frequent for royal, noble and wealthy personages to maintain musicians (singers or instrumentalists) in their retinue, the term was transferred to any such musical establishment, and has even passed to other groups of musicians, steadily engaged (as at an opera-house). G (Chapelle).

The leader of a chapel or choir in any such sense is called the maestro di cappella, maitre de chapelle, kapellmeister or choirmaster (sometimes also cantor or precentor). In Germany kapellmeister is also freely employed for the conductor at a theater or in any kind of concert.

Kapellmeister-Musik is a term, usually derisive, describing music made to order (as by the leader employed by a patron or in connection with theatrical routine), rather than under free artistic impulse. The 'Philistines' against whom Schumann directed his satire were partly those pedantic and perfunctory writers who turned out only such music. cf. schablone.

For a cappella, see the term.

Capriccio, Caprice. Originally, an instrumental piece in free imitation, like a fantasia or ricercar; in modern usage, one in a free and vivacious style, often like a scherzo. The diminutive is capricciotto. G.

Carillon. A set of bells or chime. But carillon is usually restricted to bells that are fixed and sounded by hammers, while chime means bells so hung that they can be swung; a carillon, also often contains many more and smaller bells than most chimes; see Bell. Also a piece played on a set of bells or one in a similar style. G.

In the Low Countries, where carillons are common and the art of playing them is highly developed, a professional player is called a carillonneur.

The term is extended to various instruments like the bell-piano, the glockenspiel, etc., in which small bells or metal strips are sounded by means of a keyboard.

Carmen. In some early vocal music, the name for an upper voice-part, above the tenor, usually taken by a solo-voice; cf. Air.

Carol. Originally, either a ring-dance or a song to go with it. Specifically, especially in England, festal songs, usually of a popular and often jovial character, associated with Christmas or Easter (occasionally with some other day or with a season). Christmas carols are also often called noëls (or novels). G.

The typical carol differs from a hymn in its ballad-like style, in the frequent inclusion of purely fanciful references and often in the use of nonsense-syllables in refrains. It is likely that carol-singing, as practiced in England, contains some vestiges of the old mystery-plays and of the pagan celebration of Yule-tide.

A carol-service is a Christmas or Easter service consisting mainly of the singing of carols and similar songs.

Cassation. A term used in the 18th century for an instrumental piece in several movements, more or less like the serenata or divertimento. G.

The word properly implies a going out (as into the open air) or a farewell. As one or more of the movements are often marches, the word may be related to cassa (drum). It has also been referred to the German Gasse, as if it meant 'street-music.'

Castanets. Pairs of small clappers of bone ivory or wood, made with rings so as to be slipped over the thumb and fingers and clicked or snapped together in the rhythm of dance or song. G.

The term comes from their resemblance to an opened chestnut-bur or shell. Their use is characteristic of Spain and southern Italy.

Castrato. An adult male singer whose boy's voice has been made permanent by the surgical operation of castration; also evirato or musico.

Artificial male sopranos and altos were somewhat frequent from the 17th century and in the 18th several of the most famous operatic singers were of this class.

Catch. A 3- or 4-part round or canon for similar voices, originally written out as a single continuous melody, each successive singer 'catching' his entrance at the proper point. Later various droll effects became common, like puns and unexpected words produced by the juxtaposition of the parts. G.

Catches and rounds were popular in England from 1600 onward and the singing of them is still common in conjunction with glee and part-songs.

See also Scotch Catch.

Caters. In English bell-ringing, the name for changes rung on nine bells. G.

Catgut. The common name of the material from which the strings of many instruments (like the violin, the harp, etc.) are made; see under String.

Cavalquet. A trumpet-piece used by cavalry when traversing a town.

Cavatina (diminutive of cavata, a song). A song or aria, less elaborate than the full aria and in one part or section, though sometimes extended to da capo arias of moderate extent. Occasionally used for a song-like instrumental piece or movement. G.

Cebell. A term used by early English writers for a dance or set of variations resembling the gavotte. G.

Cécilium. A free-reed instrument, invented by De Crousard of Paris about 1865. It was shaped like a cello, but played by means of a keyboard (left hand) and a bellows-handle like a bow (right hand). Its compass was about 5 octaves.

Celesta. A keyboard-instrument, invented by Auguste Mustel of Paris in 1886, having steel-strips over resonance-boxes in place of strings and a hammer-action like a piano. It has been much used by French composers, as also in operas or ballets by Tchaikovsky, Puccini, Mahler, Rich, Strauss, etc. G.

'Cello. Common abbreviation for violoncello.

Cellone. An instrument of the violin-family intermediate in range and tone between the 'cello and the double-bass, the accordatura being g3-d2-a2-e2. It was devised by Alfred Stelzner of Dresden about 1895 as a companion of his violotta (q. v.).

Cembalo. See Dulcimer. Also an abbreviation for clavicembalo (harpsichord); see the words. Cembalist was long the usual name for a harpsichordist, especially in the 18th-century orchestra, and was later used for pianists. The cembal d'amour was a form of clavichord, invented by G. Silbermann early in the 18th century, having tangents striking the strings in the middle, so that both halves vibrated. G.

Cento. A medley of pieces from various sources; see Pasticcio.

Cervalas. See Racket.

Chaconne. See Dances. G.

Chair-Organ. See choir-organ under Organ. G.

Chalumeau. See Shawm and Clarinet. Also the chanter of the bagpipe. G.

The term is applied to instruments with single and with double reeds, related respectively to the clarinet and the oboe.

Chamber-Music. In general, music suited to a private room or a small hall; opposed at first to music performed in a church or an opera-house. Hence came terms like cantata da camera, madrigale da camera and sonata da camera, which were not only essentially secular and designed for few voices or instruments, but apt to have a somewhat distinct form. Also extended to all music produced in a private way under a patron. Hence the titles for various court-directors (as, in France, Maitre de la Musique de la Chambre du Roi) or for singers or players retained or nominated (as, in Germany, Kammermusiker, Kammersänger and Kammerkomponist).

In modern usage, music for a small number of soloists or, especially, for a group of instrumentalists like a string-trio, quartet or other ensemble, with or without the piano. Though equally applicable to many forms of vocal music, the term is not usually so extended. G.

Any group of such chamber-musicians may be called a chamber-ensemble, though usually designated as a trio, quartet, quintet, etc.

Concert-pitch was early called chamber-pitch (Kammerton) because first defined in chamber-music.

Chamber-organ and chamber-piano are terms somewhat used for relatively small instruments.

Change. In harmony, same as modulation. In the voice, same as mutation. In English bell-ringing, the general name for any order used in ringing a chime other than the direct order of pitch. G.

Change-ringing consists in varying the order systematically according to some principle. Three bells are capable of 6 changes, six bells of 720, etc. Changes on four bells are called singles, on five doubles, on six minor, on seven triples, on eight major, on nine caters (quaters), on ten royal, on eleven cinques and on twelve marimius.

One who helps in ringing a chime or peal is called a change-ringer.

Changing-Chord, Changing-Note. In harmony, a chord or note under an accent that is dissonant and requires resolution; also called nota cambiata or cambita.

Chanson. A song or ballad, usually for a single voice and often with a refrain, but also extended to part-songs. The French equivalent of the Italian canzona, the German lied and the English song. The diminutive is chansonnette. The term is now sometimes applied specifically to a salon-song of popular type. G.

A composer of chansons is a chansonnier.

Chant. In general, a song of any kind. Specifically, in ecclesiastical music, a form of musical declamation applied to a prose text, as of the Psalms. The distinctive feature is a monotoned recitation, but with certain inflections or other melodic developments according to custom. The term is most frequent for the form in vogue in the Anglican Church, but is often used for that of the Gregorian system. G.

The typical Anglican chant is a 7-measure phrase, divided into two parts (one of 3 measures, the other of 4), each of which begins with a reciting-measure or recitation and passes into a rhythmical cadence (the first cadence being called the mediation). The reciting-measure may be prolonged to fit the text, but is not supposed to be shortened. The form is therefore essentially a rhythmical one, but with two possibilities of unrhythmical expansion. The setting is normally for four voices. The process of adapting a given text to the form is known as pointing. A double chant is one of twice the above length. A chant is changeable if it can be sung either in major or in minor.

The Gregorian chant (as in a melody used over and over for successive verses) consists of two reciting-tones or recitations, preceded by an intonation, separated by a mediation and followed by a cadence, all these latter being melodic, but not strictly rhythmical. It is normally sung in unison.

A collection of chants is called a chant-book.

Melodic motion or progression that is even or on a monotone may be called chantwise.

Chanter, Chaunter. In the bagpipe, the pipe with finger-holes on which melodies can be played; opposed to the drones. G. (Chanter).

Chanterelle. In instruments of the lute- and viol-families, the string of highest pitch. G.

Chantey. A sailors' work-song, used to accompany and even regulate action in hauling, lifting and the like.

Chapel. See Cappella. G.

Among many famous Chapels or musical establishments special distinction belongs to the Papal Chapel (in the Sistine Chapel) at Rome, the Imperial Chapel at Vienna, the Royal Chapel at Paris and the Chapel Royal at London, but at particular times various others have gained great importance. With many of them choir-schools (schola cantorum) have always existed.

Character. In notation, any conventional mark, symbol or sign. Also a personage in a drama or opera.

Also the sum of the qualities, properties and values in certain elements of artistic structure and effect that give them individuality as compared with each other and enable them to impart beauty and significance to musical expression or discourse. Character in this sense, as applied to factors in musical composition, is obviously parallel to 'meaning' as applied to the words of language. It may be predicated of tones, intervals, chords, tonalities, rhythmic or metric patterns, forms, etc.

Tone-character may be synonymous with timbre or tone-color. The two may also be quite distinct, as when the character of the tonic of a scale is compared with the character of the dominant. In the same way intervals have physical character according as they are major, minor, etc., but also a distinct sort of character when occurring in varying relations of tonality.

Chord-character may be regarded in the same way. It has its physical or technical side and it has what may be called its more æsthetic side, which becomes evident as triads, seventh-chords and their inversions and modifications are associated together in the harmonic apparatus of a tonality.

The same line of analysis is applicable to the character of melodic figures, of forms of imitation, of modulations, of rhythmic and metric patterns, of many definite forms, etc. Each of these has certain physical aspects that can be defined and named. Each has also a character derived from relations with others of the same class, or even with some of another class, which can be felt, but which are not easily defined.

It is largely in the perception and use of these character-values that musical development takes place, both in the advance of sensitiveness in the student or listener and in the power of creation in the composer or of representation in the performer.

At times, also, emphasis has been laid upon an asserted character in particular keys (tonalities of particular pitches). This, however, is not obvious or generally accepted.

Characteristic Piece. A term somewhat loosely applied, especially in piano-music, to pieces expressive or suggestive of a mood, sentiment, event or situation (and therefore emphasizing 'character' rather than form). See Program-Music. G.

Characteristic Note, Tone. Same as leading-tone, under Scale.

Chatzozerah. The long, straight trumpet of the ancient Hebrews, used for signaling and (at least in later times) in connection with the Temple ritual. It was probably always made of metal. Opposed to the curved shofar.

It seems that this is the only Hebrew instrument of which we have an indisputable pictorial representation. It is figured on the Arch of Titus in Rome in commemoration of the capture of Jerusalem in 70 A. D.

Check. Specifically, in piano-making, the projecting member of the key-action designed to catch the hammer as it rebounds after striking the string. G.

In pipe-organs, a transverse bar under the keys of the pedal-keyboard designed to hold them immovable when not in use; a pedal-check.

Chef. A leader or conductor, as chef d'attaque, concertmaster, chef de ballet, ballet-master, chef du chant, chorusmaster, and chef d'orchestre, orchestral conductor.

Cheng. A Chinese reed-instrument, consisting of a gourd with a short mouthpiece and a series of 12-24 small bamboo-pipes fitted with free reeds, the sounding of the pipes being controlled by finger-holes in the pipes.

The chance introduction of this instrument into Europe (by way of Russia) in the late 18th century seems to have led to the application of the free-reed principle in the harmonium, accordion, etc., as well as in the pipe-organ.

Cherubic Hymn. In the Eastern Church, a hymn (or bidding) that is said to have been introduced by Justinian (6th cent.) and is sung before the Great Entrance in the Liturgy.

It begins "Let us who mystically represent the Cherubim, now lay aside all worldly cares."

Chest-Register, Chest-Tone, Chest-Voice. In vocalization, the form of tone-production or its result in which the vocal-chords vibrate fully and the tone is reinforced by the resonance of the chest-cavity (best exemplified in tones of low pitch); opposed to head-register, tone and voice. See Vocalization. G.

Chest. See wind-chest, under Organ.

Chest of Viols. The old name for a graduated set or 'consort' of viols (trebles, tenors and basses), so called because such sets were often made to be kept in a chest or closet. G.

Chiavette. A system of clefs used in the 16th century to indicate certain transpositions of pitch similar to those now indicated by a change of key-signature. G.

Chica. See Dances.

Chiesa. In various expressions (with da or di), denoting for the church, that is, sacred; opposed to camera, for the chamber. So musica da chiesa, sonata da chiesa, etc.

Chime. A set of bells; a peal or carillon; see Bell and Carillon. G.

Chinese Crescent or Pavilion. See Crescent. G.

Chin-Rest. An oval ebony plate commonly attached to the lower edge of a violin-body so as to fit under the chin of the player.

Chirogymnast. Any apparatus for training the muscles used in keyboard-playing; see Chiroprast.

Chiroprast. A device, invented by Logier in 1814, for holding the hand in keyboard-playing in a level position; also called wrist-guide.

It was for a time emphasized as an aid to teaching and was imitated or modified by Stöpel, by Kalkbrenner (as 'guide-main') and by Herz (as 'dactylion'), as well as recalled in some later appliances.

Chitarra, Chiterna. See Lute and Guitar. The diminutive is chitarrina and the augmentative chitarrone. For the latter, see bass-lute and theorbo under Lute. G.

Choir. A group or company of singers; a chorus. Specifically, the singers of an organized choral society or those designated to sing in church-services; see Cappella. The term is also extended to the subdivisions of a large chorus (the first or second choir, the male or female choir, etc.) and to the sections of an orchestra (the string-choir, the brass-choir, etc.). From the fact that the space in front of the altar in a cathedral or church is where the singers are stationed that part of the building is technically known as the choir and the seats for the singers as choir-stalls. In other cases, where the choir is placed elsewhere, the term choir-gallery occurs. G.

In the Anglican Church, the two sides of the choir are known as cantoris ('of the precentor'), on the left or north, and decani ('of the dean'), on the right or south.

In the development of the liturgical system of the medieval Church the function of the choir was regarded as clerical or ministerial, so that the singers were either actually or virtually in orders. Hence came the usage of employing only men and boys. The Reformation Churches, however, tended to regard the choir more as a specialized branch of the congregation. Hence in many cases they have used choirs composed of both men and women.

Choir-singing and choir-music make up the most conspicuous division of church-music. In the period beginning with the 15th century it was developed mostly in the cappella and contrapuntal form (what is now often called 'the Palestrina style'). From the early 16th century the forms known as the motet and the anthem, often with organ-accompaniment, gradually became prominent, leading a century later to the church-cantata, especially as developed in the Lutheran Church. Choir-music in the Greco-Russian Church has had a highly characteristic evolution of its own, quite dissociated from the use of the organ.

The trainer and director of a choir is called choir-master, choir-director, choir-leader, cantor or precentor. The word chorister properly means choir-singer, but is also applied to a leader. Where the choir is known as a chapel, the forms maestro di capella, maître de chapelle and kapellmeister are also used. A choir in which the soprano and alto parts are assigned to boys is often called a boy-choir. For choir-boys cathedrals and large churches often maintain a choir-school or maîtrise under the direction of the choir-master.

Old spellings are quire, quister.

Choir-Organ. A division of the pipe-organ. See Organ. G.

Choir-Pitch. See Pitch.

Choragus, Choregus. One who leads a choir or chorus. G.

Specifically, an official instituted at Oxford University in 1626 to direct musical exercises—an office now long obsolete. The term has occasionally been used at other academic institutions.

Choral. Denoting that which pertains to a choir or chorus; as choral service, one at which all or most of the exercises are sung, choral society, one organized for the practice and performance of chorus-music, whether secular or sacred. For choral note, see Notation and Gregorian Music. A vicar choral is an ecclesiastic in minor orders assigned to duty as a singer.

The terms choral fantasia or choral symphony denote instrumental works in which a chorus is used. A choral festival is one in the program of which chorus-music is prominent.

Choral, Chorale. In Gregorian music, any part of the concentus or choir-exercises. In Protestant music, especially in the Lutheran and Reformed Churches, the musical setting of a metrical hymn or Psalm; a hymn-tune or psalm-tune, normally for the congregation.

The original Protestant chorales were adapted from existing secular songs or drafted in similar style, adapted to metrical texts having a definite stanza-form and with various verse-patterns held together by rhyme-schemes. Their rhythm might be duple or triple (at first more often the latter). For a century or more considerable variety in the use of long and short notes continued. But in the 17th century it became customary to rearrange them mostly in notes of the same length, but with a long note or a pause at the end of each line or phrase. Though at first the tempo and style was energetic and perhaps brisk, it then became the usage to sing them slowly and massively. This came to be regarded as the characteristic chorale-style.

Chorales were at first sung in unison. But parts were soon added, though for the choir rather than the congregation. The melody remained in the tenor till late in the 16th century, but was then gradually transferred to the treble or soprano.

A collection of chorales is called a Choralbuch. As organ-music developed in the 17th century, chorale-pretudes and interludes, chorale-elaborations and chorale-variations became common.

As the church-oratorio and cantata developed in Germany, the chorale was almost always prominent, not only in supplying themes for choral treatment, but also more or less by itself, so that the congregation might join in the work.

The traditional chorale of Germany and of the Reformed Churches, with its stately movement and solid harmony, stands in some contrast with the part-song hymn-tune now common in England and America, though the two types shade into each other. See Hymn and Tune.

Chord. In harmony, any simultaneous sounding of two or more tones of different pitch (usually at least three), but, more specifically, the simultaneous sounding of tones standing in certain recognized pitch-relations with each other. G.

Chord-building is the process or result of forming chords from a given tone or root. The typical method is to proceed by thirds from the root, a 3-toned chord being called a triad, a 4-toned chord a seventh-chord (sept-chord) or chord of the seventh, a 5-toned chord a ninth-chord or chord of the ninth, etc. Any tone in either a major or a minor scale may be taken as root and the resulting chords, normally made up of the tones of the same scale, are known by the name of the root. Triads are further defined as major or minor according to whether the lower third is major or minor, and as augmented or diminished according to the kind of fifth made by adding the two thirds together. Seventh-chords are also distinguished as chords of the major or the minor seventh according to the kind of seventh involved.

If in actual use the root of a chord is at the bottom of the harmony, the chord is said to be in its fundamental position (a-position), but if any other of its tones is at the bottom, to be inverted (if the third, in the first inversion or b-position, if the fifth, in the second inversion or c-position, if the seventh, in the third inversion or d-position). This method of nomenclature serves well up to a certain point. But how to extend it so as to include various extreme harmonic cases is much disputed.

Typical chords are those made up from the tones of a diatonic major or minor scale, but if other tones than these are used (but without modulation) the chords are said to be altered or chromatic. In all such cases the typical structure may be regarded as modified for melodic reasons.

A chord is incomplete if one of its tones is omitted; equivocal or doubtful if its key-relation is uncertain; transitional or transient if it occurs in the process of modulation; dependent or tendency- if containing a seventh or other dissonance that requires resolution in a subsequent chord.

In the history of composition chords were first recognized and considered mostly as incidents in the conjoint progression of several voice-parts, that is, as an aspect of counterpoint. But they soon began to be regarded also as tonal units of a kind different from those associated with a purely melodic point of view. This special conception permeates the modern science of harmony, though necessarily bound up with the older emphasis upon voice-part motion. It is particularly noticeable in composition for the piano, where chords are often juxtaposed as progressive or contrasted tonal items, without elaborated articulation through connecting voice-parts. In recent styles, also, there is remarkable attention to the peculiar tonal character or color of every chord that can be derived from or associated with a tonality or chain of tonalities. Chord-character and chord-color are thus made analogous to tone-character and tone-color.

For many purposes it is desirable to employ some abbreviated notation for chords as such. The earliest system was that of the basso continuo; see Thorough-bass. This is still used for various purposes. Another that is common employs a Roman numeral to designate the location of the chord-root in the scale (I to VII), using a large capital if the chord be major and a small capital if it be minor and also adding a ° if it be diminished, a + if it be augmented and a subjoined 7 if it be a seventh-chord, often also with superior figures to indicate inversions. Another system employs an initial to indicate the root in its scale-position (D for do, R for re, etc.), using large and small capitals as above and also the subjoined 7, but indicating the inversions by adding small letters (b, c or d). Riemann has advocated a further system, based on his doctrine of phones (q.v.).

Chord-bar. In the auto-harp, one of several dampers that may be pressed down upon the strings so as to silence all but those giving the tones of particular chords.

Chordometer. A device for measuring the thickness of strings; a string-gauge.

Choreography. The art, process or result of indicating the steps and evolutions of dancing by means of symbols; dance-notation. Also called orchestography.

Chorister. One who sings in a choir or chorus; a choir-singer. In England the term is often used specifically of a choir-boy. Also sometimes applied to a choir-leader or precentor. Once written quirister. G.

Chorus. A company of singers or choir, properly including three or more parts (varieties of voice) and with more than one voice to a part. Also music intended for such a body of voices. In popular usage, the refrain of a song. G.

Old polyphonic music was chiefly 3-part, 4-part or 5-part, though works were written for many more voices, usually arranged in groups. The typical form of modern chorus-music is for four parts (soprano, alto, tenor and bass, or for two sopranos and two altos or two tenors and two basses), but various other dispositions are common. A chorus for two groups of singers in some contrast and alternation is a double chorus.

As regards the number of voices to a part, a madrigal, glee or part-song is often distinguished from a chorus by being meant for but one or two voices to the part.

In the opera there is a sharp distinction between the soloists (or chief performers) and the chorus.

The trainer of an operatic chorus (and sometimes of a choral society) is called a chorusmaster, but the leader in a chorus-concert is usually called a conductor or director.

Christe eleison. The second phrase of the Kyrie in the musical Mass (sometimes set as a distinct section).

Chroma. A name once used for a small difference of pitch (as a semitone) or for a sign of such a difference (that is, an accidental). Also a name for a quaver or 8th-note (chroma simplex) or a semiquaver or 16th-note (chroma duplex).

Chromatic. In modern usage, denoting a tone, interval, scale or chord deviating by a small interval (usually a semitone) from the typical major or minor form; also the sign indicating such a deviation; opposed to diatonic. A chromatic tone is therefore one foreign to the typical series. Chromatic alteration is the process or result of modifying whatever is the typical form or process. Chromatic signs (accidentals or chromatics) include the sharp, the double-sharp, the flat, the double-flat, the natural and the sharp-natural or flat-natural, when any of these are applied in the body of written music (not in the key-signature). G.

It should be noted that speaking of a tone or a chord as 'chromatically altered' is unfortunate, since if a tone or chord is 'altered,' it becomes a new tone or chord. What is meant is that the pitch of the tone or the form of the chord is altered. In written music, therefore, an accidental 'alters' the pitch-meaning of a staff-degree, not the note or tone.

For chromatic genus, tetrachord in Greek theory, see Greek Music.

Chrotta. See Crwth.

Church-Modes. See Mode.

Church-Music. Music associated with stated services of Christian worship. G (Cathedral Music).

It is likely, though not certain, that early Christian music derived something from the Jewish synagogues, but its technical form was undoubtedly settled in accordance with Greek (Byzantine) usage. On this Oriental basis was gradually built up the rich and stately Gregorian system (officially regulated from the 7th century, if not earlier), which has remained the basal style of the Roman Catholic Church, as well as an analogous system in the Greco-Russian Church. From about the 14th century the unisonous cantillation of Plain-Song was supplemented by choral polyphony, at first crude and angular, but by the 16th century developed into a dignified and expressive style of purely vocal composition (the a cappella or Paestrina style). This type still persists in both East and West, though in the West there has been added more or less use of the organ, especially in connection with choir-music in styles freely adapted from secular sources, while in Russia it has taken on forms that are highly individual, but without the organ.

Protestant church-music (from the middle of the 16th century) developed somewhat diversely in the three main branches of the general movement. The Lutheran and Anglican Churches both maintained for about a century much of the musical usage of the Medieval Church, including some Gregorian melodies and some polyphonic choir-music (the latter being especially cultivated in England). But both of these and also the Reformed Churches of Switzerland, the Rhine Valley, the Low Countries and England early began to magnify the congregational singing of hymns or Psalms in metrical forms. This has remained ever since throughout the Protestant world a characteristic type, though with marked differences in different countries and communions. With it became associated in Germany and England a fresh evolution of choir-music, not based so much upon medieval principles of melody and counterpoint as upon the new principles of composition that appeared in the 17th century, and including a free use of the organ. These new types were variously expanded in the 18-19th centuries.

The effort is often made to find an objective statement of what constitutes sacred or churchly music as opposed to secular music, that is, to state what forms or styles (apart from any words that may be used) have an essentially religious character. In view of the fact that so-called church-music has again and again made use of secular material and the forms of secular writing, it would seem that no hard and fast line can be drawn. Even plain-song, which is to-day the style furthest removed from popular feeling, was probably derived from the popular song of classical times. The question properly belongs under the head of character rather than form (see Character). Skillful treatment on the part of composers and performers may impart to a great variety of forms a quality and a power of suggestion that make them serviceable in religious connections. When so treated, such forms may gradually become customary and traditional in the church. But this transference from the secular to the sacred field can take place only through the agency of musicians who are earnestly religious in sympathy. And it cannot be extended over the whole range of secular music, since, for example, music that is instinct with the spirit of riotous hilarity or erotic excitement is hardly susceptible of adopting ecclesiastical dress without an air of mockery.

Cimbalon. See Dulcimer.

Cinque-Pace. See Dances. G (Sink-a-pace).

Cinques. In English bell-ringing, changes rung on eleven bells. G.

Cipher. The common term for the irregular sounding of an organ-pipe, due to some mechanical fault or derangement.

Circle of Keys. See Key.

Circular Canon. Either an infinite canon or one in which the dux ends a semitone above or below the point where it began and is then repeated (so that after twelve repetitions it reaches the octave of its original pitch). See Canon. G (Canon).

Cithara, Cither, Cithern, Cittern, Citole. English forms of the common medieval name for an instrument of the lute-class, made in various shapes, sizes and stringings. From the same root come gittern, guitar and zither—the last now applied to an instrument of another class. G.

All these terms are derived from kithara, the name of the Greek lyre, which was neither a lute nor a zither.

City-Organist. A title for the organist employed by a municipality to play in the city-churches or the city-hall. See Cantor and Town-Musician.

Clang. A technical term for a tone as made up of a fundamental and partial-tones (or harmonics); a tone physically or acoustically regarded; see Phone.

The term is taken from the German Klang and was first used by Tyndall. Hence come clang-color and clang-tint as names for timbre or quality.

Clapper. The pendent tongue of a bell. Also sometimes applied to a fixed hammer.

For clappers, see Bones.

Claque. A body of persons employed in a theater or opera-house to stimulate applause and other expressions on the part of the audience.

This curious institution, notably prominent in Paris, is widely exemplified in some form elsewhere. In its typical form it is organized by the management, sometimes in careful consultation with the author and players, but occasionally it represents the partisans of particular players or those hostile to the play. Notable instances of analogous demonstrations in the history of the opera are the contests in Handel's time at London, the Guerre des Buffonistes and the Gluck-Piccinni controversy at Paris, and the treatment of Wagner's works in many German cities.

Clarinet, Clarionet. The modern representative of the family of wind-instruments made of wood and sounded by means of a mouthpiece with a single reed. It consists essentially of five parts (mouthpiece, socket, right- and left-hand joints and bell), traversed by a wind-way of uniform bore (cylindrical) and with 18 side-holes, largely controlled through keys. G.

Its differentiation from the earlier chalumeau is usually assigned to Denner of Nuremberg about 1700. It did not become a fixed component of the orchestra until the time of Haydn and Mozart. From that time, however, it acquired extreme importance because of the varied quality, the extensive range and the notable expressiveness of the tones possible to it. With the flutes, the oboes and bassoons, the clarinets join to make up the wood-wind division in the orchestra. They are also extensively employed in military bands, where in a measure they take the place of violins in the orchestra.

The clarinet-tone owes its peculiarity largely to the fact that it includes only the odd partials. Two registers are distinguished as 'chalumeau' and 'clarinetto', the former secured by a moderate wind-pressure, the latter by increasing the pressure (overblowing) so as to produce upper-partial. The range accessible is more than 3½ octaves, the pitch depending on that adopted for the given instrument. The typical orchestral clarinet is pitched in C, but instruments in various other pitches are common, especially in bands. The system of holes and keys (and of the fingering) was re-organized in 1843 by Klosé of Paris so as to parallel the Boehm system on the flute.

Large varieties of the clarinet are the basset-horn

(tenor) and the *bass-clarin*et (an octave lower than the usual clarinet). The saxophone is a metal-instrument fitted with a clarinet-mouthpiece and with a system of holes and keys like a clarinet.

Music for all the clarinets is written as if the instrument is pitched in C.

The manipulation of the reed by the player's breath and lips requires care. False handling is liable to produce a squawking tone or 'couac.'

Clarino, Clarion. Terms variously used for forms of the trumpet or bugle. G.

Classical. A term variously used as regards composers, works and styles. In general, it denotes that which has gained competent artistic recognition in such a way as to be in some degree a standard or model; opposed to that which is transiently popular and that of which the artistic value is undetermined or disputed, as well as that which is mediocre or inferior. Often also, specifically, denoting music which represents the period or style of Haydn, Mozart and others of the Viennese group who adopted and established in general recognition the forms and methods of the Mannheim instrumentalists; opposed to romantic (as denoting a group and style of a later time and not localized). Hence the terms classical period, classical style and classical school, as opposed to romantic period, style and school. G.

The distinction between classical and romantic is difficult to define with precision. In its specialized meaning classical connotes a strict regard for form and regularity, an emphasis on objective beauty or charm, an avoidance of intense, strained or pathetic sentiment, even a studied and conventional elegance or polish, and a liking for topics derived from classical literature. By contrast, the tendency of the romantic artist is to subordinate everything in style and method to the expression of subjective feeling or of what captivates the imagination, to seek for what is new and strange and often to magnify extremes in various ways.

In popular usage, classical music is usually that which is supposed to interest musicians and connoisseurs more than others.

Clavecin, Clavicembalo. See Harpsichord. G.

Clavichord. A keyboard-instrument much used in the 16-18th centuries and, with the harpsichord, one of the precursors of the piano. Its essential principle was akin to that of the monochord, so that it may be called a keyboard-poly-chord. G.

Externally, it was a shallow, rectangular box, in most instances not too large to be readily carried from place to place. When in use it was placed on a table or other support. Its shape became the prototype of the modern square-piano.

Internally, it had a keyboard on one of the long sides, the number of keys ranging from about 20 in the earlier examples (about 2½ octaves, but with little more than a diatonic scale) to 4-5 octaves in the time of Bach. Back of the keyboard and parallel to it the strings were stretched over a soundboard. These were of metal, not differing greatly in length or size. In later specimens they were often made in pairs or threes, to increase the volume of tone.

The action was extremely simple. At the rear end of each key there projected upward an upright plate or wedge of brass, called a tangent, so set that when the key was depressed the edge of the tangent was driven against the proper string or strings and held there. The impact started the vibration and this could be somewhat prolonged and made slightly tremulous by rocking the finger on the key (see Bebung). The stroke of the tangent divided the string into two parts, one of which was free to vibrate, while the other was silenced by a damper-strip. The peculiarity of the instrument lay in the fact that the pitch of the tone was fixed by the point on the string at which the tangent was adjusted to strike rather than by the string's length. Hence it followed that, to reduce size and weight, an instrument could be made so that two keys might use the same string and produce two different tones. In this case the action was called gebunden, in other cases bundfrei. As soon as the key was released the tone was silenced by the damper-strip.

The tone of the clavichord was weak and metallic, but it was capable of considerable delicate gradation of intensity and expressiveness. Hence, and because of its cheapness and portability, it became a common instrument for private use. It was ill-adapted to concert purposes. By composers it was often preferred to the more powerful, but stiff-toned harpsichord. Both gradually disappeared as the piano came into favor late in the 18th century.

Clavicylinder. A keyboard-instrument, invented by Chladni about 1800, the tone of which was produced by the friction of a revolving cylinder against strips of glass or metal; also called euphon or euphonium.

Clavicytherium. A name for an upright variety of spinet or harpsichord. G.

Clavier. A keyboard or an instrument with a keyboard. G.

In the 18th century the term was used either for the clavichord and harpsichord indiscriminately or for the clavichord distinctively. It was for a time transferred to the piano and persists in the German Klavier.

In modern usage, it occurs as the name for a keyboard adapted to a set of bells or similar device, and for one made for finger-practice only.

Claviharpe. A keyboard-harp, the strings being sounded by finger-like hooks on depressing the keys and damped on releasing them. In shape it somewhat resembles an upright-piano. It was invented by Christian Dietz of Paris about 1815.

Clef. See Notation. G.

Click. The sound made in depressing or raising a key on the Virgil Practice Clavier. Also see under Phonetics.

Cloiture. A term proposed by Karl Stamitz (18th cent.) for an instrumental concluding-piece in a concert; opposed to overture; cf. prelude and postlude.

Close (noun). See Cadence. G.

Close Harmony, Close Position. See Harmony.

Close Play, in lute-playing, was a method or style in which the fingers were kept close to the strings, instead of being snapped away freely. Also called Covert Play.

Coach. See Trainer.

Coda. A concluding phrase or section in a vocal or instrumental work (usually the latter) which is not strictly necessary for completeness, but which serves to extend and dignify the ending. In large works it is often expanded to considerable dimensions. The diminutive is codetta. G.

A coda may occur at the end of a principal section or even of a smaller division. Codetta is also somewhat used for a slight extension of a phrase or figure, as in transitional tones appended to a fugue-subject.

Collegium Musicum. A name once often adopted in Germany, Switzerland and Sweden by social clubs for the practice or hearing of music (akin to the early Italian accademia), especially where such clubs grew up in academic institutions.

In several cases clubs of this name have given rise to large permanent organizations for concert-giving. The Gewandhaus Concerts in Leipzig (1781) are an illustration.

Colophane, Colophonium. See Rosin. G.

Color. In general, of a tone, quality or timbre; as tone-color, klang-color, etc. Also extended to the instrumentation of a passage or work, to the disposition of voices and instruments in a concerted work and to organ-registration.

In organ-music of the 17th century the term was applied to a style of writing or playing in which decorative notes or passages abounded; cf. coloratura.

In early notation, differences of color were used to indicate contrasts between tempus perfectum and imperfectum (triple and duple rhythm) or corresponding distinctions in note-values. The modern white notes were first used thus in color-contrast with the standard black notes.

Color-Music. A term used for music intended to be accompanied by the display of color-effects (as in Scriabin's Prométhée).

The idea of such a combination was first foreshadowed in the experiments of Castel in 1725.

Coloratura. In vocal music, a general term for decorative effects like trills and graces, rapid runs or other melodic figures and the like, introduced by composer or singer for display. A singer who is expert in such devices is called a coloratura-singer. Also extended occasionally to similar decorations in instrumental music. G.

Comb. See under Music-Box.

Combination. In organ-playing, the general term for the particular selection of stops used for a piece or passage. G.

Certain groups of stops are often controlled by a special combination-pedal or piston. To set or change a combination is to arrange or alter the stop-selection.

Combination-Tone, Combinational Tone. In acoustics, the additional tone generated by the combined vibrations of two distinct tones that are sounded simultaneously.

Such tones are of two kinds. Those more usually regarded are at a lower pitch than the generating tones, being produced by the coincidences between the two sets of vibrations. Thus two tones a fifth apart generate the lower octave of the lower tone. Such additional tones have been called Tartini's tones (because first described by him) or difference-tones. But there are also combination-tones that are at a higher pitch than the generating tones, being produced by the coincidences of the respective upper-partials of the latter. Thus two tones a fifth apart generate the upper octave of the upper tone. For these summation-tones the term multiplication-tones has been suggested by Riemann. In general, the pitch of the first type is found by subtracting the vibration-number of the lower original tone from that of the higher, while that of the second type is found by multiplying the two vibration-numbers together.

Comedy, Comic. Terms used of dramatic works in which the plot and incidents are more or less humorous or laughable; opposed to tragedy and tragic. As applied to the opera, both the opera buffa and the opéra bouffe are distinctively comic, if not broadly jocose or grotesque. But the French opéra comique is a work that is entertaining because of its wit or satire or because of its realistic portrayal of actual life. See Opera. G.

Comes. See Canon and Fugue. G.

Comma. In acoustics, the difference between the large and small whole-tones ( $\frac{8}{3} \div \frac{10}{9} = \frac{81}{88}$ ), or the difference between an octave and the sum of six whole-tones ( $= \frac{5}{2} \frac{3}{4} \frac{1}{2} \frac{4}{3} \frac{1}{2} \frac{4}{3}$ ). The first is called the Didymic or syntonic comma, the second the Pythagorean comma or comma maxima. G.

Common Chord. A major or minor triad.

Common Meter or Measure. In hymnody, an iambic stanza-form having the syllable-scheme 8-6-8-6, with alternate rhymes.

This acquired its name from its being the well-known 'ballad-meter' of England and hence more used than any other in metrical Psalms and hymns. Abbreviated C.M.

Common meter double (C.M.D.) has two quatrains instead of one. Common long meter or Hallelujah meter (H.M.) has one quatrain as above with 8-8 or 4-4-4-4 added. Common particular meter (C.P.M.) has the syllable-scheme 8-8-6-8-8-6, with rhymes in each pair of 8s and between the 6s.

Common Measure, Common Time. Popular names for duple or quadruple rhythm (usually the latter). G.

The sign  is often erroneously supposed to stand for 'common'; see Notation.

Communion Service. The common name for a musical setting of the Anglican office of the Holy Communion (analogous to the Catholic Mass). G.

Compass. The range or extent in pitch of which a voice or instrument is capable or within which are comprised the tones of a composition, performance or theoretic tone-series; sometimes called diapason. In Gregorian music, technically called ambitus. G.

Complement. In harmony, the difference between any interval and an octave. This is the same practically as the inversion of the interval.

Compline. The last of the Canonical Hours (9 P.M.). Sometimes called completorium. G.

Composed-through. See Durchkomponiert.

Composition. The general term for the art, process and result of fitting tones together so as to produce music; see under Theory. One who exercises the art is a composer, and what he produces is a composition, work or piece. G.

Artistic creation in music, as in other fine arts, involves two stages or aspects that may be distinguished, even though in practice they may be intimately blended. One is the primary mental experience, often called invention or inspiration, in which a tonal conception becomes more or less defined in the composer's thought. The other is the realization of this in actual tones (or the symbols for them), which is the translation of that which is conceived into actual fact. Many technical factors in this realizing process may be further differentiated and separately regarded, such as the elementary schemes of 'tune' and 'time' assumed and adopted, a doctrine of 'form' (the partition and disposition of the successive stages or parts), a use of the principles of tone-combination usually comprised under 'harmony' or 'counterpoint', an application of some practical features of 'vocalization' or 'instrumentation' (or both), and, if the composition is reduced to writing, a use of 'notation'. When composition is pursued as a study, all these factors are in some way taken up and considered with reference to the acquisition of skill or 'technique.'

Historically, the art of composition is often said to begin only when something more than a single line of melody was deliberately undertaken—that is, about 1200. This view emphasizes the point that the distinctive property of 'music' is the artistic employment of tones in their mutual relations and usually in simultaneous combination. Yet all melody rests upon the unconscious recognition of these relations and combinations. The defining of this epoch, therefore, is more for convenience than essentially valid.

Compositions may be variously classified—as to form (dances, songs, sonatas, operas, etc.), as to purpose (for the church, the salon, the concert-room or the stage), as to style (lyric, comic, polyphonic, 'program', 'ultra-modern', etc.), as to the forces or implements used (for chorus, solo, piano, organ, orchestra, etc.), and so on.

Composition-Pedal. Same as combination-pedal; see Organ. G.

Compound. For compound interval, see Interval; for compound measure, rhythm and time, see Rhythm; for compound stop, see Organ and Stop. G.

Concento, Concentus. Harmony or concord, or music in which it is exemplified. G.

Specifically, concento is used as the opposite of arpeggio, denoting the simultaneous sounding of the tones of a chord. Concentus is the opposite of accentus, denoting the portion of a choral service that is sung by the choir.

Concert. Originally, the union of several voices or instruments (usually the latter) in musical action; a consort or ensemble. Also extended to a particular group or combination of instruments; as a consort, concert or chest of viols. More specifically, a gathering of musicians for the performance of music for the entertainment of an audience, especially one that is open to the public for an admission-fee. Also applied to the program for such a performance. This meaning is still further restricted so as to limit it to a performance where the program is made up of several distinct elements or numbers; in this sense opposed to a church-service, an opera and an oratorio. G.

Music intended or suitable for performance in a concert is concert-music; usually opposed to salon-music, church-music and stage-music. A place for concerts is a concert-hall or concert-room. One who arranges business details connected with concerts is a concert-manager. One who takes part in a concert (usually as a soloist) is a concert-performer, concertist, concert-singer or concert-player. The list of works performed make up the concert-program.

The special institution or usage of the concert appeared late in the 17th century and became general by the middle of the 18th. Prior to this operas had begun to be given in public opera-houses in Italy from 1637, and a variety of entertainments had been privately provided by wealthy patrons or at courts. But the first concerts in the technical sense seem to have been those in London from about 1675 that were arranged by John Banister and Thomas Britton. Notable steps in advance were the starting in Paris in 1725 of the Concerts Spirituels (so called because given on Sundays, when the Opéra was closed), the many oratorio-performances of Handel in London from 1739 and the activities of various Collegia Musica in Germany, Switzerland and Sweden. Equally important, though under private auspices, were the intensified development of certain Kapellen, such as those of Frederick the Great at Potsdam, of the Eleonor Palatine at Mannheim, of Prince Esterházy at Eisenstadt and Esterházy, etc. The vogue of the choral concert was stimulated in England by the Handel Commemorations (from 1874) and in Germany by the founding of the Berlin Singakademie (1790). Meanwhile concerts by instrumental soloists or virtuosos had steadily become more common, preparing the way for the numerous performances of noted violinists and pianists that were conspicuous throughout the 19th century. To these in time succeeded concerts by vocal soloists. See under Virtuoso.

The concert is one of the means by which musical literature is made known or put into circulation. From the educational point of view, its function is parallel to that of the opera-stage and in a way comparable to a gallery of pictures or a museum, since through it works and performers are brought to public attention. Furthermore, as in the case of the opera, the concert as an institution reacts powerfully on musical progress, since style is constantly affected by what the public and the critics approve or disapprove. From the point of view of the composer and the performer (especially the latter) concert-giving is indispensable to the fullest success.

Concertante. Originally, a work for solo-voices or instruments, or for these with an ensemble like an orchestra, in which the several solo-parts are made prominent. The term is now mostly used descriptively of passages or sections in a concerted work in which solo-parts are conspicuous. G.

Concerted, Concertato. Denoting music for several voices or instruments, as in part-music, choruses, chamber-music and orchestral music, or any combination of voices and instruments.

Concert-Grand. A grand-piano of the largest size, suitable for use in concerts.

Concertina. A free-reed instrument, invented by Wheatstone of London in 1829 as a variant of the accordion, which it resembles except in having hexagonal ends, studs in place of keys and a refinement of reed-action. G.

Concertinas have been made in several sizes, with a total range of nearly 7 octaves. Various elaborate works have been written for the instrument in conjunction with orchestra, chamber-ensemble or piano.

Concertmaster. Specifically, in an orchestra, the leader of the violins. G.

The concertmaster assists the conductor in drilling the players, often acting as assistant-conductor. Sometimes the leaders of the first and second violins are respectively called the first and second concertmasters.

Concerto. Originally, a concerted work for voices and instruments or for several instruments. Specifically, in modern usage, an elaborate work for a solo instrument with orchestra. The diminutive is concertino. G.

Like the term sonata, concerto has had several stages of meaning. It first appears as the name of motets with organ (the Gabriellis, 1587, Banchieri, 1595, Viadana, 1602). Hence came the concerto da chiesa or ecclesiastico. Even in Bach's time concerto still persists for that otherwise known as cantata. Parallel with this was the vocal concerto da camera (Arrignon, 1635). But the latter term early began to be common for various forms of chamber-music for a small group of instruments. The modern usage of a work for a solo with ensemble first appears late in the 17th century (G. M. Bononcini, 1677, Torelli, 1686). Such works were closely associated with the advance of violin-virtuosity in the 18th century. They were also written for many other instruments. The terms double or triple concerto (one for two or three soloists) and concerto grosso (one for a chamber-ensemble) were early adopted in some form, combination with the orchestra belonging with both.

The modern type of concerto dates from the time of the Mannheim school and of Mozart. It is virtually a three-movement sonata, but with a somewhat special distribution of sections in all movements so that the soloist shall appear alone at intervals and also in conjunction with the orchestra, usually with passages for the orchestra alone. The classical procedure is to provide two or three solo-passages in the first movement, at least one of them culminating in a cadenza (provided, improvised or interpolated), in the second movement to use the solo-instrument largely in decorative embellishment and in the third movement (usually a rondo) to recur to the alternating form of the first movement, but with greater conciseness. Among later writers the form is less regularly conceived, adopting more the freedom of the fantasia.

Concert-Piece, Concertstück. A concerto, but usually without regularity in regard to number or form of movements. Also applied to any work specially intended for concert-use, even when for a solo-instrument without orchestra. G.

Concert-Pitch. See Pitch. G.

Concord. Same as Consonance. G.

Concussion-Bellows. See Winker.

Conductor. One who directs a chorus or orchestra. In modern usage he usually does this with a baton, though sometimes only by hand-motions. G.

The primary purpose of conducting is to indicate tempo and rhythm and to secure unanimity. In the old a cappella church-music the leader often guided the singers by means of a roll of paper (the sol-fa). Throughout the 17-18th centuries the harpsichord was regularly used with the orchestra and the composer (or other leader) not only filled out the basso continuo upon it, but controlled the whole by his playing. The use of a baton gradually came in after about 1800.

The established method of indicating rhythm is to mark the first beat or pulse of each measure by a down-beat, the last beat or pulse by an up-beat and intermediate beats or pulses by side-beats. Subdivisions of any beat or pulse are marked by repetitions of the original motion. A conductor is therefore often loosely called a time-beater.

But the higher function of a conductor is to interpret the intention and spirit of the music. Most of his direction in this regard must be given verbally in rehearsal and through drill under criticism. In performance, however, various points of expression are commonly indicated by movements of the hand or body. And the conductor's conception may be conveyed by general attitudes and a diffused magnetic impression.

The modern notion of minute attention to the details of orchestral performance seems to have taken its rise in the Mannheim orchestra under Stamitz about 1750.

The music for a conductor's use is called a conducting-score or conductor's part; see Score. It is placed on a conducting-stand or desk. But many modern conductors lead even the most elaborate works absolutely from memory.

The conductor of a church-choir is usually called a choirmaster (or similar term) and that of a military band a bandmaster. In the Chapel Royal of England the conductor and trainer is the master of the children. In Germany the standard term for concert- and theater-conductors is Kapellmeister and in France chef d'orchestre.

Conductus. A term occurring in the early history of polyphonic writing, apparently meaning a work or style in which subjects were drawn from secular music or freely invented (instead of being taken from Plain-Song), or perhaps a form of writing in which the voices moved simultaneously from syllable to syllable (as in a modern hymn-tune). G.

Conical Mouthpiece. See Mouthpiece.

Conjunct. Denoting a melody or voice-motion that passes from one degree of the scale to the next above or below (without skips); opposed to disjunct.

In Greek theory, a tetrachord was said to be conjunct when its first tone was the same as the last of another tetrachord, but disjunct when they did not thus overlap.

Consecutive. See Parallel. G.

Consequent. See Canon and Fegue.

Conservatory. An institution where the science and art of music is taught as a technical specialty; a music-school. G.

The Italian conservatorio means 'nursery' or 'orphanage' (somewhat analogous to seminario, a 'seed-bed' or 'plant-nursery'). The term acquired a musical association in the 16-17th centuries from the fact that the boys at the four orphanages in Naples were given musical instruction as an occupational education. The same was true of four charitable institutions in Venice (though the name there was ospedale) and of one at Palermo. Quite parallel with these were the many choir-schools attached to cathedrals and other ecclesiastical foundations (called schola cantorum or matrisse) and such more general schools as the Thomasschule at Leipzig and the Kreuzschule at Dresden. In all these music was taught in order that the scholars might serve as chorists while children and as active musicians later. Until the end of the 18th century more detailed professional training was always secured by the individual instruction of a master to whom the pupil stood in a relation like that of apprentice.

The first institution for collective instruction in the modern sense was the Ecole Royale de Chant et de Déclamation set up in Paris mainly to train singers and instrumentalists for the Opéra and which in 1795 became the Conservatoire Nationale de Musique. Its initial organization was due to the genius of Bernard Sarrette. Its early policy was also influenced by a desire to train players for the bands of the national army. Its influence was seen in the starting of somewhat similar schools at Bologna (1804) and Milan (1807), in the consolidation of the Naples schools into the Collegio Reale di Musica (1808), and in the founding of schools at Prague (1811) and Vienna (1817), at Brussels (1813), The Hague (1826) and Liège (1827), and also in London (1823).

The Leipzig Conservatorium, established in 1843 by Mendelssohn, was from the first rather more distinctly professional in that its object was musicianship in a broad sense, with an emphasis on instrumental music quite as much as vocal, on discipline in composition and on the equipment of those who were to become teachers. Its influence tended to heighten the dignity and power of conservatories as centers for the diffusion of information and enthusiasm as well as for the acquisition of personal skill. It marked the beginning of a more obviously educational ideal in conservatories and music-schools generally. Its influence was profound throughout Germany, Scandinavia, England and America.

Throughout Europe the multiplication of important institutions has been conspicuously due to municipal or governmental enterprise. Each large city and country has felt a pride in organizing technical instruction in music as in other branches of culture. The subventions and prestige thus provided have made most of these enterprises permanent and independent. This policy of public sustentation has been only slightly applied in England and is almost unknown in America. In these latter countries, as also in Europe generally, music-schools of every degree are continually being undertaken as private business ventures. Some of these have gained standing as conservatories of high rank.

There is only a general consensus as to the contents and method of instruction. In the vocal department appear topics like voice-building, solfeggio, solo-singing (for concert or the stage) and chorus-singing; in the instrumental field the playing of the piano, the organ, the violin and usually a long list of orchestral instruments; under the head of 'theory', harmony, counterpoint, form and higher composition; and more or less in the way of music-history, acoustics, æsthetics and the art of teaching as applied to music. As compared with the methods of other academic institutions, there is usually meager emphasis upon a comprehensive curriculum (as necessary for graduation), on topics of scientific or scholastic interest and on mental breadth and ability in non-musical branches of knowledge. On the other hand, the prevailing method of intensive personal instruction secures certain results in individual development quite out of the reach of the collective methods common in other forms of education. A significant factor in the conservatory-system is the widespread custom of more or less open performances of standard works by members of the teaching-force or other competent artists. These recitals and concerts supply acquaintance with some parts of music-literature as well as standards of technique and interpretation. Another stimulating factor is the rather general practice of offering medals and scholarships for competition. Sometimes the latter provide means for study within the institution and are competed for in advance; sometimes they provide for post-graduate study elsewhere. Most conservatories have considerable collections of music in particular departments. Some have notable libraries of both music and books about music. A few have museums of instruments.

FAMILY OF CLARINETS

FAMILY OF SAXOPHONES

The more important institutions will be found listed in Part III.

Console. The case or desk containing the key-boards of a pipe-organ and the mechanism immediately associated therewith, especially when detached from the general organ-case. G.

Sometimes a console is movable from place to place, even at a considerable distance from the organ proper, all connections being made through a cable of electric wires.

Consonance. In harmony, any combination of tones that is not only smooth, but in some degree complete and final; also called concord; opposed to dissonance and discord. G.

The perfect consonances are the unison, octave, fifth and fourth; and the imperfect the major and minor thirds and sixths. The minor seventh fails of being a consonance because it lacks finality or equilibrium.

Consort. The old English form of concert; especially used of a set or group of players (an ensemble) or of a set of instruments (see chest of viols).

Continuo. See Thoroughbass.

Contra-. A prefix in many terms, usually denoting that which has a lower range or pitch (especially an octave lower than the ordinary form); as contrabass, contrafagotto, etc. Also double-.

Contralto. The lowest female voice or its voice-part; see Alto and Voice. G.

The term is now often used interchangeably with alto. But originally contralto was the low female part that stood in contrast (counter) to the male alto. Occasionally, also, contralto means a low alto as opposed to a high alto.

Contrapuntal, Contrapuntist. See Counterpoint.

Contrary Motion. See Motion. G.

Contredanse. See Dances. G.

Copla. (i.e., couplet). See under Villancico.

Copyright, Musical. Copyright protection as regards printed works of music does not differ essentially from such protection as regards other printed works. But in the case of music there have always been difficult questions over the right of performance as distinct from the right of publication. To these is now added a perplexing series of questions about the right of mechanical reproduction. International copyright dates from the Berne Convention of 1886. G.

Cor, Corno. See Horn

Cor Anglais. See English Horn under Oboe. G.

Corda, Corde. See Terms of Performance.

* Cordonophon. A keyboard-instrument, exhibited in Paris in 1890, having a graduated series of bronze cylinders sounded by hammers and with a compass of 2 octaves.

Cornemuse. A type of bagpipe popular with the peasantry of France and Flanders, as well as in parts of Italy. G.

Cornet. (a) An old wind-instrument with a cupped mouthpiece and a wooden tube, either straight or curved, provided with finger-holes; see Zinke. From the large or bass variety (cornon) was derived the serpent, and several of the older organ-stops were made to imitate cornet-tones. (b) A modern member of the horn- or trumpet-family, with a cupped mouthpiece, a rather short conical tube of brass and three valves with pistons; a cornet à pistons or à bouquin. In military bands this has largely taken the place of the true trumpet, though inferior in tone. Also called cornopean. G.

Coronach. A Keltic funeral-song, dirge or lament, or an instrumental pibroch of similar character. G.

Cotillon, Cotillion. See Dances. G.

Cottage-Organ, Cottage-Piano. See Cabinet. G.

Couac. The harsh sound produced on the clarinet when the reed is out of order or is improperly manipulated; also called goose. G.

Couched Harp. A spinet or harpsichord. G.

Coulé. See Embellishments.

Count, Counting. As rhythmic units (pulses) are called beats, because often marked by a motion, so they are also called counts, because marked by numbers audibly or mentally repeated. Hence keeping the rhythm is called beating or counting time. See Beat.

Counter-. A prefix denoting a voice or voice-part set in contrast with some other; as counter-tenor (i. e., alto) or counter-subject (a figure or theme accompanying a main theme).

The name counter has been popularly used for a tenor-part sung an octave high by women's voices.

✓ Counterpoint. In general, the art, process and result of fitting two or more melodies together simultaneously; polyphony, part-writing. In a broad sense, all musical composition may be regarded either vertically or horizontally (with primary attention to the chords or other tone-combinations that succeed each other or to the threads of melody that run through these). The former method is harmonic, the latter contrapuntal. The science and discipline emphasizing the former is harmony, while the science and discipline emphasizing the latter is counterpoint. The two can never be dissociated wholly, but historically and pedagogically they may well be distinguished. G.

The ancient and medieval conception of music was essentially vocal and therefore melodic. The Gregorian system, which was evolved out of ancient methods of song for application to ecclesiastical needs, was a system of melodic declamation either by a single voice or a group of voices in unison. Its modes or scales, its inflections and other accepted formulae were all based on melodic relations. It is likely that harmonic notions were unconsciously at work within this system, as also in much popular music that is no longer extant. But these remained comparatively dormant until long after part-music had been undertaken and pushed to a high degree of elaboration.

The initial experiments in part-writing or the simultaneous combination of tones must have been chiefly carried on by actual voices. The use of instruments of all kinds was still very immature and there were no instruments convenient for such harmonic effects as the later keyboard made possible. All early efforts in the direction of composition (in the narrower sense) were vocal or choral. Hence came the traditional usage of speaking of the threads of composition, even when later worked out instrumentally, as voices or voice-parts. Hence, too, procedures were estimated primarily according to their practicality and effectiveness for the singing-voice.

Experiments looking toward a practical art of part-writing accelerated the reduction of time-values to a system (see Mensural Music) and also great improvements in notation.

From the 10th century, and more positively from the 13th, progress in part-music went on with special fruitfulness in the region that is now northern France and Belgium, with the parts of England then closely affiliated with these. Here was laid the foundation of what came to be called the Flemish, Gallo-Belgic or Netherland school of composition.

In various ways the object of effort was to arrive at a satisfactory method of adding one or more parts to some melody assumed as subject or cantus firmus. This latter was taken either from the Gregorian melodies of the church or from current secular song. Through the several processes called organum, faux-bourdon, discant and the like principles as to the mingling of consonances with dissonances and as to voice-leading were gradually established that gave a considerable degree of freedom in the new art and disclosed something of its possibilities as a positive extension of musical resources.

Very early the value of imitation became clear. This combined the unifying element of repetition with the progressive or unfolding element of advance or construction. All the fundamental varieties of the process were mastered and extensively applied during the 14-15th centuries (see Imitation). Many of the works thus produced seem to have been more exhibitions of technical dexterity—or the desire to achieve it—than inspired by eagerness for artistic beauty. But by the cumulative efforts of numerous workers a plastic and expressive type of polyphonic composition came into being that in the 16th century was employed not only in Flanders, but in England, southern Germany and Italy with memorable success. The style came to its culmination in masters like Tallis of London, Lassus of Munich and Palestrina of Rome. In its purity it was designed for unaccompanied voices and the texts were primarily sacred, though secular words were becoming more common.

In the 16th century, and much more in the 17th, all composition began to be impelled in new directions. Harmony as contrasted with counterpoint and the exaltation of a single melody with accompaniment became conspicuous, in many cases driving the old contrapuntal interest from the field. But during the later 17th century a second development of elaborate polyphony became notable in Germany. This was in large part instrumental rather than vocal and hence included details of procedure that were novel. Though subjects were still often derived from Plain-Song or from chorale-literature, the free invention of themes also became common. The active harmonic and thematic freshness of the age was reflected in the variety and freedom with which contrapuntal skill was applied to materials of every sort. The culmination of this style was in the works of the great Bach, who was at once a consummate craftsman and a true artist.

Again, after a period of innovation and change in the ideals of composition during the monophonic or 'classical' period and its sequels, modern counterpoint is still a living branch of musical art, though with a flexibility and warmth of effect all its own. Its vitality demonstrates the general truth that counterpoint is one of the essential methods by which the tonal material may be moulded technically into structures that are artistically unique, having both an intellectual interest and an emotional suggestiveness for which none of the other fine arts offer satisfactory analogies. The asserted parallel in architectural intricacies is very incomplete. A better parallel might be sought in the involutions of a drama or a novel. But neither of these contain anything comparable to the tonal interplay of even the most ordinary contrapuntal composition.

Turning back now to the details of procedure, it is to be noted that there has been a steady advance (a) in the freedom with which dissonances have been introduced, (b) in the mastery of varied motions between voice-parts, (c) in the employment of exact or approximate forms of imitation, and (d) in securing general coherence and progress in the total effect.

Though at first part-writing may have tried to adhere wholly to consonant intervals, the artistic value of dissonances must have been early recognized, both to give variety and to facilitate part-motion. The fourth was long counted a dissonance and its use restricted. And all dissonances were at first required to be prepared (the dissonant tone 'held over' from the preceding consonance or approached diatonically) as well as resolved with similar smoothness. It was a significant innovation late in the 16th century when the unprepared dissonance of the seventh became established. It was only as keyboard-counterpoint achieved importance and thematic flexibility became recognized as a prime object that the old restrictions as to intervals were relaxed. In all this progress, also, a large factor was the gradual shift from the modal theory of the Middle Ages to the modern theory of the major and minor scales.

Starting with much reliance on similar or oblique motion of the parts, the value of opposite motion speedily became apparent, especially as a source of internal strength in the texture. Diatonic progression was long the rule or at least preferred. Skips were cautiously handled and dissonant steps, including chromatic semitones, were rare until toward about 1600. Here, as before, the transfer of counterpoint to the keyboard wrought great changes, since what was hard or extreme for the voice often became easy and natural. Thus there has been a steady increase in the ductility and freedom of motion until in much modern counterpoint hardly any limitation is imposed.

As to imitation, the principle of the canon was very early recognized, not only disclosing the value of strict or literal imitation, but leading on to the metric variations from it that give increasing interest. Even where nothing like full canonic exactitude was undertaken, all its processes could be employed in partial or transient ways. Out of this was slowly developed the principle of the fugue, with its essential contrast between tonic and dominant in the presentation of the same theme. The latter form did not attain its maturity till the period of instrumental counterpoint, for which it supplied the grandest field of expression. See Canon, Fugue and Imitation.

To modern feeling, the older counterpoint seems to lack organization in that its progress is often vague in direction and apparently not wrought out with reference to a total completeness of effect. Part of this, no doubt, is due to our loss of the sense for the old modes and their implications. But part is due to the lack among musicians till after 1600 of the organizing quality of modern harmony and its tendency to associate itself with forms having successive divisions or strains. It is true that contrapuntal writing naturally resists the tendency to frame detached and completed phrases and sections. Yet analysis of examples of instrumental counterpoint indicates how much advance was made when the experience derived from harmonic writing was unconsciously applied to the laying out of contrapuntal fabrics. There was unquestionable beauty and dignity in the older writing. But there is also a fresh beauty and dignity in that of later times. To the latter belongs an architectonic vigor that the former lacked, though it may not have quite the dreamy abstraction which leads one to call the Palestrina style 'unearthly.'

In pedagogical practice it is common to employ the term counterpoint for specific discipline in strict writing according to some system of scholastic rules. One of the traditional processes divides counterpoint into five species (note against note, two notes to one, four to one, two or four to one in syncope and florid or irregular). Through systematic stages the student acquires the experience and instinct to enable him to apply contrapuntal methods with success in free writing as well.

The number of voices or voice parts engaged is indicated by calling a contrapuntal piece or passage 2-part, 3-part, 4-part, etc. In cases where two, three or four parts are so contrived that they may be inverted (one transposed across another by an octave or some other constant interval) the counterpoint is called double, triple or quadruple according to the number of the parts. Where two parts cannot thus be inverted the counterpoint is single.

As contrasted with a cantus firmus or subject a part adjusted to it is often called a counterpoint.

Up to about 1750 all composition was prevailingly controlled by contrapuntal methods, that is, was polyphonic. After that time it was prevailingly monophonic or harmonic. But the exaltation of a leading melody and the development of harmony began as early as 1600.

Country-Dance. See Dances. G.

Coupler. See Organ. G.

Couplet. A 2-note group occupying the time of 3; a doublet or duplet; see Note-Groups.

Courante, Coranto. See Dances. G.

Course. In various stringed instruments, any group of strings tuned in unison (for increased sonority). Strings so tuned are called unisons.

Covered String. In various stringed instruments, a string having a core of silk, gut or wire around which is wound a close spiral of fine copper or silver wire, so as to increase the size and mass of the string; also called spun string.

Thus on the guitar and the piano the lower strings are covered.

Covered Tone. In vocalization, a tone whose resonance is focussed relatively far back in the mouth or the pharynx; opposed to open tone. Sometimes called dark tone, as opposed to white tone.

Covert Play. See Close Play.

Crackle. In lute-playing, the effect of using broken or arpeggio chords instead of playing them solidly or simultaneously.

Cracovienne. See Dances. G (Krakoviak).

Credo. The third division of the musical Mass, following the Gloria; the Athanasian Creed. G.

Its text begins 'Credo in unum Deum.' It is often divided into sections, especially at the points beginning 'Et incarnatus', 'Crucifixus' and 'Et resurrexit'.

Crescendo. See Terms of Performance. G.

Crescendo-Pedal, in the pipe-organ, a pedal, usually balanced like the swell-pedal, the depression of which adds or draws all the stops of the instrument progressively so as to produce a steady increase in sonority. Releasing it reverses the process. The action of the pedal is independent of other mechanisms, so that whatever combination happens to be in use at the outset remains undisturbed.

Crescent. An Oriental instrument, formerly used in military bands, consisting of a crescent or cap-shaped frame (mounted on a pole) bearing bells or strips of metal that can be jingled by shaking; also called Chinese crescent, Pavillon Chinois, Chapeau Chinois, etc.

Cromorne. See Krummhorn.

Crook. In various instruments of the horn- or trumpet-family, a bent piece of tubing that can be slipped into the convolutions of the main tube so as to increase its effective length and thus lower its pitch. Such crooks are usually U-shaped. G.

Cross-flute. Also German flute; see Flute.

Cross-Relation. See False Relation.

Crotchet. See Notation. G.

Crouth, Crowd, Crwth. A singular stringed instrument, apparently the oldest European example of the viol-class (possibly originally of the lyre- or lute-class), still in use in the 18th century in Wales and Ireland (crwth). Also called chrotta, rotta, etc. Its body was nearly square, with two circular sound-holes. From it rises a bent yoke-shaped arch (slightly recalling the upper part of a lyre), to the center of which at the top is attached the upper end of the raised fingerboard. The heavy, oblique bridge rests with one foot on the belly, while the other passes through one of the sound-holes to the back (serving as sound-post). The strings, originally 3, were later 6 (4 on the fingerboard and 2 outside). The total height of the instrument was about 23 inches and its width about 11. G. (Crwth).

Crucifixus. A part of the Credo in the musical Mass, sometimes treated as a separate movement.

The text is 'Crucifixus sub Pontio Pilato.'

Cue. A few notes from another part inserted in either a vocal or an instrumental part to enable the performer to make a sure entrance after a rest. These are usually given in small notes, with the name of the part where they occur. G.

Cum Sancto Spiritu. A part of the Gloria in the musical Mass, sometimes treated as a separate movement.

Cupped Mouthpiece. See Mouthpiece.

Cycle of Songs, Song-Cycle. A set of several songs based on texts having a common theme or story, such as Wilhelm Müller's Die schöne Müllerin and Die Winterreise; set by Schubert; a Liederkreis or Liederkrantz. G (Liederkreis).

Cyclical. In the naming of forms, denoting usually a composition laid out in a series of movements (like a suite or a sonata) or, of a movement, denoting the repetition at intervals of a central theme, with episodes between (as in a rondo). In a certain sense a song with a recurrent refrain may be called cyclical.

Cymbals. A percussive instrument, consisting of two flat or slightly concave metallic discs that can be clashed together. They vary in size from little finger-plates (like castanets) to the large plates used in military bands and orchestras. In bands, one of the pair is usually fastened to the bass-drum, so that the drummer can strike the other against it with his left hand while also playing the drum with his right. Cymbals are essentially a double form of bell.

Čakan. A Bohemian form of flute or flageolet, for a time popular in Austria about 1830. It had a large flageolet-mouthpiece, fitted at right angles into a flute-tube (with inverted conical bore). Its compass was about 2 octaves. G.

Čzardas. See Dances.

D

D. The alphabetic symbol and name of a certain tone or note and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation. G.

As an abbreviation, d. stands for da (dal) and for dextra or droite; in the Tonic Sol-fa notation, also for do.

Dactylon. An apparatus invented by Herz in 1835 for strengthening the muscles used in keyboard-playing. It consisted of pendent rings for the fingers connected with springs. See Chiroprast.

Damenization. See Solmization.

Damper. In the piano, the small felted block lying on each of the strings which is raised when the key is depressed and dropped again when the latter is released. When in place, it prevents the sounding of the string. All the dampers can be raised at once by means of the damper-pedal, thus not only prolonging tones, but allowing for much sympathetic vibration in strings other than those sounded by the keys. The term is also somewhat used for the mute employed in brass-instruments. G.

Dances. The kinship of dancing and music as arts is variously expressed in dance-songs (vocal) and dance-tunes (instrumental), both characterized by emphatic rhythm and a tendency to recurrent metric figures. Folk-dances form a large part of the general phenomenon of folk-music, belonging to unconscious popular life. From these are evolved the society-dances for which musicians deliberately compose and which thus attain the place of recognized art-forms. And from these latter, again, arise stage-dances (often covered by the general term ballet), including both picturesque series of single dances and other evolutions devised for scenic or pantomimic effect, the musical treatment of which has come to be a striking appendage to the opera.

The entire development of modern musical style has been affected in various ways by the influence of dance-patterns and the dance-spirit, while a number of particular dances have been idealized into highly significant types of composition. Thus has become established a general conception of dance-form, which, even more regularly than song-form, is built up of duple units—2- or 4-measure phrases united in 8- or 16-measure strains and forming 16- or 32-measure sections, two contrasted sections often constituting the whole (thus constituting a binary form). Within the phrases the form varies with the dance, some dances being essentially duple in rhythm, some triple, and each having also a tendency to employ certain metric patterns, conforming to the particular steps used. Whatever style is adopted at the outset is apt to persist throughout, uniformity of details being a mark of dance-form as compared with song-form. There is also much less tendency to modulation. Though great melodic and harmonic interest may be secured by skillful handling, along with considerable thematic and even polyphonic elaboration, the prime characteristics of dance-writing lie in the fitting of tone-patterns to the obvious rhythm.

Historically, the dance-song, which at the outset was universal and dominant and which much influenced the evolution of the artistic song, came to be overshadowed by the dance-tune (for instruments), and this in turn tended early to be transformed from a tune for actual dancing into an idealized and often much-modified form, even to the point of being only a fantasia, caprice or rhapsody on a dance-basis. The musical treatment of dances first became important in Italy and France in the late 16th century, continuing with increasing interest throughout the 17th and 18th. The idealization of dances began in a striking way soon after 1700 and was brilliantly developed in the romantic movement after 1800. In the 19th century, also, with its growing tendency to explore folk-music in search of national types, the list of forms has been considerably extended. G.

Dances as such may be for single dancers, for two or more independently or joined in couples, for sets of four, for two equal companies of varying size, etc. They differ in the placing of the dancers with reference to each other and their mutual evolutions—line-dances being by two lines or rows facing each other, ring-dances by several joined in a circle, square-dances by sets of four facing inwards, round-dances by linked couples that circle about among each other, etc. They further differ technically, not only in the prevailing rhythm, but in the step or steps used, in the figures or evolutions on the floor, in posture, gesture and even customary face-expression. Some emphasize the instinct of action and the love of graceful and varying motion, while others seek to express a sentiment or thought with some degree of mimetic suggestion. Each tends to be symbolic of a certain class of feeling, which is often made definite by singing. Dance-music proper must conform to the rhythm, the steps and the general figure of the actual dance. But dances interpreted instrumentally may depart widely from these restrictions.

A large number of dances have acquired place in serious musical literature. The source and date of these cannot always be traced. Some are national or racial and some at first local or regional. Some, too, are plainly of salon-origin. The usual names are mostly Italian or French.

A condensed summary of the leading musical dances and various terms connected with them is as follows:
Allemande, Almain, Tedesca. German (whence the name); from c.1575 applied to various forms or a set of them; later a form in duple rhythm that tended to displace the pavan; in the 18th C. a dance-like form in quadruple (or dodecuple) rhythm with flowing, song-like melody, not sharply accented, in the suite placed first (or next after the prelude). Also applied to other forms, duple or triple, which are better called by other names.

Alternativo. General term for the second of two forms used in alternation; hence any contrasting section or movement thus used. Later called trio.

Anglaise. English (whence the name); variously applied to forms of country- or rustic dance, some of which also called in Germany française.

Ballata, Ballad. Originally any dance-song.

Ballet. Originally an independent scenic or dramatic entertainment, similar to the masque, including dances, songs, etc. Later a dance or series of evolutions on the stage by single dancers or a considerable company, used with an opera (or other drama) either as part of the action or as an inserted divertissement. Also now applied to dance-plays in one or more acts in which dancing or pantomime takes the place of song.

Basse Danse. Old French form for two dancers; rhythm originally duple, later triple; name derived from the gliding step.

Bergamasca, Bergomask. Italian country-dance (name from Bergamo), in vocal form extant from 1569 (Azzaiolo) and instrumentally from 1642 (Uccellini), in the latter case, however, referring to a ground or basso ostinato.

Bergkreyen, Bergreihen. Dance-songs from the Saxon highlands, from c. 1530 often adapted to Reformation songs.

Boleto. Spanish (from c. 1780); rhythm lively triple, often with the pattern  (cf. cachucha and seguidilla).

Bouffons. See matassins.

Bourrée. French (or Biscayan); rhythm quick duple or quadruple, beginning with up-beat, often with syncopation on the second; frequent as third movement in suites (cf. gavotte and rigaudon).

Boutade. Any impromptu dance or similar piece. Brantle, Bransle, Brawl. French ring-dance, common in England in the 16th C.; rhythm lively duple or quadruple.

Cachucha. Modern Spanish; see boleto.

Calata. Old Italian (from c. 1500); rhythm duple. Canarie (named from the Canary Islands). Old French; rhythm quick sextuple, often with the figure  (cf. gigue and loure).

Carol. Originally a ring-dance or its song, but, like ballad, early losing its dance-meaning.

Chaconne, Ciacona. Dance-like form, probably Spanish; rhythm slow triple, in 8-measure strains on a basso ostinato, like the passacaglia.

Chica. Old name for the fandango or similar form.

Cinque-pace, Sink-a-pace ('five-step'). Rhythm stately quadruple, beginning with up-beat; apparently a predecessor of the gaillard.

Contredanse. French, especially after 1700; like the anglaise, but called française in Germany; named from the placing of pairs of dancers face to face; rhythm duple or quadruple. Also, inaccurately, for country-dance.

Cotillon, Cotillon. Compound salon-dance (from late 18th C.), comprising a series of figures by a dancing-quartet (see quadrille); in more elaborate form called the german, especially when made up largely of waltzes.

Country-dance. General term in England for any rustic dance, or series of such dances, when used in polite society, the step, figure and music varying according to tradition or even the wish of leader or dancer. Collections of such dances were often issued from 1650. Often confused with contredanse.

Courante, Coranto, Corrente. Old French or Italian; rhythm moderately rapid triple (sometimes alternately triple and sextuple); from the 17th C. often used as a pendent to the allemande and so in the suite the second member. In Italy the music usually abounded in runs or passages of equal notes, but in France it tended much to unequally-divided beats and other metric irregularity. In its later development a dance-form rather than a dance proper.

Cracovienne, Cracoviak. Polish (name from Cracow); rhythm rapid duple, with many syncopations and trisected accents.

Czardas. Hungarian; properly made up of a slow, pathetic introduction (lassu) and a quickstep (fris), the two sections alternating at the dancers' wish.

Dreher. See Ländler.

Écossaise. Properly same as schottische, but often applied to a line-dance in duple rhythm.

Fackeltanz. A procession with torches, traditional at certain German courts on festival occasions, the music being usually a showy polonaise by military band.

Fandango. Spanish, for two dancers; a variety of the seguidilla.

Farandole. Provençal; a festival procession or chain-dance (for any number of persons hand in hand), the evolutions being directed by a leader or captain; music usually in quick sextuple rhythm, like the gigue.

Fling (or Highland Fling). A lively Scottish form marked by many 'flings' (knee-thrusts), set to any vigorous quadruple rhythm.

Folia, Folia, Folie. Old Portuguese or Spanish, for a single dancer; rhythm slow triple; extant from c. 1575 and popular in the 17th C.; music usually on a basso ostinato (cf. chaconne and passacaglia). Now loosely applied to a variety of stage-dances or an entertainment made up of them.

Forlana, Furlano. Venetian; rhythm rapid sextuple. Française. See anglaise.

Furiant. Bohemian; with alternating rhythms and sharp accents, as if in impetuous excitement.

Gaillard, Galliard. Old French; rhythm bright triple; usually pendent to the sedate pavan; also called saltarello or romanesca.

Galop. Salon-form, from c. 1825 popular in France and England; rhythm duple, often with the figure , danced with a springing step. It is said to go back to a German form.

Gavotte. Old French (from 16th C.); rhythm duple or quadruple, beginning with second half of measure (thus differing from the bourrée), often with the figure , in older usage often pendent to the bransle; in the suite frequent as third member (sometimes second). Two gavottes are often coupled, the second being an alternative or trio to the first and, if on a drone-bass, called a musette.

German. In salon-dancing, an elaborate cotillon, largely made up of waltzes and other dances at the will of the leader.

Gigue, Giga, Jig. Probably old English, but musically developed on the Continent; properly for a single dancer; rhythm rapid triple or sextuple, expressive of hilarity; in the suite common as concluding member. Guaracha. Spanish; in two sections, one in lively triple rhythm, the other duple.

Habanera. Probably African, but introduced in Spain from Cuba (name from Habana [Havana]); rhythm duple, often with the measure-pattern . It is properly a posture-dance for two dancers. Sometimes called contradanza criolla.

Halling. Norwegian, for 1-3 single dancers; rhythm duple, with beats much divided; movement usually sluggish at the outset, then with increasing animation almost to the point of frenzy, and finally again sluggish. It is related to the Keltic reel and strathspey.

Hanacca, Moravian; rhythm triple, somewhat as in the polonaise, but quicker.

Hornpipe. Old English, for a single dancer (name from early accompaniment by a pipe of horn); rhythm originally triple, with many subdivided beats and some 'snaps', but also duple. It is common among sailors. See under Pibroch.

Jaleo. Spanish, for a single dancer; rhythm slow triple.

Jig. Same as gigue. But the English term is often loosely applied to any lively dance-tune.

Jota. Spanish for couples; rhythm rapid triple; somewhat like the waltz, but with capricious variation in the steps.

Kosakisch, Kosatchék. Little Russian; rhythm duple with accelerating tempo.

Lancers, The. A form of quadrille popular from c. 1820.

Ländler. Austrian (name probably from a section of the valley of the Enns); rhythm slow triple; the precursor of the modern waltz. Also called tyrolienne, dreher, schleifer, etc.

Lavolta. Italian round-dance, popular in England in the 16th C.; rhythm apparently triple.

Loure. Old French; rhythm slow triple or sextuple; named from early association with the bagpipe. From its style of music came the term louré for a legato, sustained playing of melodies.

March. General term for a procession or rhythmic walking; the typical form of duple action; musical forms in great variety, such as military march (including the moderate parade-march and the rapid quickstep), triumphal or festal march (cortège), various stage-marches (entrée or intrada, etc.), wedding or nuptial march, funeral or dead-march (trüermarsch), choral forms like processional and recessional, etc. (see also polonaise, fackeltanz, etc.); all usually in three main sections, the second in contrast as a trio.

Matassins, Matatchins. Old French character-dance for a quartet of men in armor, with several figures, ending with a mimic combat; also called bouffons. The rhythm is quadruple, often with the figure .

Matolette. A sailors' dance or hornpipe. .

Mazurka, Mazurek. Polish (name from the duchy of Mazovia, which includes Warsaw); rhythm originally slow triple, often with divided first beat and accented second; from the 18th C. a fashionable round-dance, preceding the waltz, but with varying steps. It was much idealized by Chopin.

Minuet. Old French, made important by Lully; rhythm stately triple, but in musical treatment often quickened; in the old partite often more than one; in old sinfonie often the final member, but in the later sonata the third. For it Beethoven generally substituted the scherzo.

Morris-dance. General name for various English country-dances in costume to simple tunes in duple rhythm. The name suggests a Moorish derivation (whence the further names moresque, moresca or morisco).

Muñeira. Spanish; rhythm duple, beginning with up-beat.

Musette. See gavotte.

Nachtanz ('after-dance'). General term for any dance pendent to another (as the gaillard to the pavan), usually furnishing contrast in rhythm and lively character. In French sometimes called tourdon or tordion.

Obertas. Polish; rhythm triple, much like that of the mazurka, but wilder and more boisterous.

Ordres. Same as partita or suite.

Partita, Partie. Old name for a series of dances or suite. The custom of uniting actual dances in pairs goes back to the 16th C. and is rather common with country-dances generally. But sets of three or more are a musical extension, looking toward a developed movement-plan for instrumental works, the aim being to secure variety and contrast while maintaining unity by a uniform key.

Passacaglia, Passecaille. Italian dance-form; rhythm slow triple, on a basso ostinato (cf. chaconne and folia), which sometimes is transferred to another part. Its use dates from c. 1600. [The name may come from early use as a street-dance, whence the German name gassenhauer.]

Passamezzo. Old Italian; rhythm duple, the name suggesting likeness to a modern quickstep.

Passepied, Paspé. Old French (Breton?) round-dance; rhythm quick triple; in suites sometimes following the sarabande.

Pavan. Old Italian (name from Padua); rhythm duple and stately; until the 18th C. the leading slow dance, then yielding to the saraband. It was regularly followed by a gaillard.

Périgourdine. Southern French; rhythm quick sextuple; usually with singing.

Polacca. See polonaise.

Polka. Bohemian; rhythm quick duple, with many divided beats (to match half-steps) and a tendency to accent the second. From about 1830 it had great vogue throughout Europe as one of the fashionable round-dances.

Polonaise, Polacca. Polish, said to have originated in courtly festivities in the late 16th C. Though treated as a dance, it is rather a form of procession (like the entrée or intrada), although its rhythm is slow triple. Chopin idealized it into a glowing tone-picture.

Polska. Swedish; rhythm slow triple, with beats much divided.

Quadrille. French square-dance (introduced in the 18th C. and everywhere popular after 1800). It came to consist of five separate parts or figures—Le Pantalon, L'Été, La Poule, La Pastourelle (or Trénise) and La Finale, these being in sextuple and duple rhythm alternately. As a set of varying figures, see cotillon and german.

Quickstep. A rapid form of march or a dance of similar character.

Redowa. Bohemian; rhythm rapid triple, like the mazurka, but livelier. There is also a duple variety, much like the polka.

Reel. Probably Celtic (mostly Scottish or Irish), for 2-3 couples; using gliding steps in weaving (eight-shaped) figures; rhythm duple or quadruple (rarely sextuple), faster in Ireland than in Scotland, the beats much divided evenly. The strathspey (name from the Spey Valley) is a slow reel, but with many jerky steps and the music abounding in unevenly divided beats. The reel is related to Scandinavian forms (see halling).

Rigadoon, Rigaudon. Provençal, for a single couple, with a peculiar leaping step; rhythm duple or quadruple (rarely sextuple), beginning on up-beat; phrases sometimes unequal and the trio-section often in a lower key (cf. bourrée).

Romanesca. See gaillard and saltarello.

Saltarello. Same as gaillard and romanesca. Also an Italian form, characterized by a hopping step; rhythm triple or sextuple, increasing in rapidity (cf. tarentella).

Saraband. Old Spanish, properly for a single dancer, but sometimes transformed into a line-dance; rhythm stately triple, often with the figure  in the suite very common as third member.

Schottische. Modern salon-form, from about 1850, being a variety or offshoot of the polka; rhythm duple, with divided beats; also called écossaise.

Seguidilla. Spanish, for dancers in couples; rhythm triple, in some varieties quick, in others slow; the name derived probably from the dance alternating with sung couplets of a long ballad. From it came the modern bolero.

Siciliana. Sicilian country-dance; rhythm sextuple, with smooth, flowing movement; very similar as a musical form to the pastorale.

Sir Roger de Coverly. One of the most popular of old English line-dances; rhythm nonuple.

Strathspey. See reel.

Suite. Same as partita or ordres. In the 18th C. its favorite plan was allemande, courante, saraband and gigue, sometimes also with a prelude at the beginning and with other dances inserted after the saraband, all in the same key. In the mature suite the main members are usually treated much more as dance-like forms than with the strictness of true dance-tunes. It was therefore a stage in the evolution of movement-plans as found in the sonata. In modern usage the term is freely used for any instrumental work (usually orchestral) made up of three or more separate movements, none of which are necessarily dances and usually in varying keys.

Tambourin. Old Provençal; rhythm duple, accented with drum-taps.

Tango. Mexican, probably from an African source; related to the habanera, but quicker and with accelerating movement.

Tarentella, Tarentelle. Italian (name from Taranto); rhythm sextuple, with accelerating movement; once regarded as a means of curing the disease called tarantism. The modern musical form is in sextuple rhythm, very quick and bold.

Tedesca. See Allemande.

Tirana. A graceful Andalusian form of the seguidilla.

Tourdon, Tordion. Same as nachtanz.

Tyrolienne. Same as länder.

Varsouvienne. Modern round-dance, from c. 1850, related to Polish forms like the mazurka and redowa (whence the name, taken from Warsaw); rhythm rather slow triple, beginning with up-beat and with strong accents on every second down-beat.

Waltz. Modern round-dance, from c. 1775, after 1800 becoming the chief favorite among salon-dances; rhythm triple or sextuple, with some accent on the second beat, sometimes slow, sometimes quick, according to changing fashion. It is almost certainly derived from the länder. Its musical importance began with Weber and Schubert.

Zorkho. Old Basque; rhythm pentuple.

Dark Tone. See Covered Tone and Vocalization.

Dash. See Notation and Embellishments. G.

Dauidsbündler. Schumann's purely imaginary association for the overthrow of pedantic and mechanical conservatism in music and the establishment of freedom and imagination. G.

The name is taken from the stories of the forays of David and his partisans against the Philistines (I Sam. xxii, etc.). The term may have included especially Schumann's associates in the Neue Zeitschrift (Knorr, Schunke and Wieck) or may have covered the fanciful personages 'Florestan', 'Eusebius', 'Meister Raro', etc., by which he delighted to designate his own contrasted moods and tendencies of feeling. See his Die Davidsbündler (op. 6), with its 'Marche des Davidsbündler contre les Philistins.'

Début. The technical term for the first professional appearance of a singer or player, especially in concert, opera or oratorio.

Decachord. Any 10-stringed instrument of the lyre-, harp- or lute-classes.

Decani ('of the dean'). The term used in England to designate the right or south half of the choir; opposed to cantoris ('of the precentor').

Deceptive Cadence. See Cadence.

Decet. A group of ten performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quartet, quintet, etc.

Decimole, Decuplet. A 10-note group occupying the time of 8 or 4; see Note-Groups.

Declamation. Either, in general, the method of enunciating words in singing, or, specifically, a form of song that approximates speech (as in recitative and certain dramatic effects). It may also be applied to the free melody better called cantillation.

Defective. In harmony, denoting an interval that is less than the normal or standard (as a diminished fifth), or a chord in which one or more of the normal tones is omitted.

Degree. In any consecutive series, such as the tones of a scale or the lines and spaces of a staff, any one of the constituent items. Both scale-degrees and staff-degrees are usually numbered from the bottom upward. Also called step. G.

The term is also used, less happily, for the interval or passage from one scale-degree to the next; for this step is better.

Degrees, Musical. The recognized academic degrees in England and America for music are Musices Baccalaureus (Mus.B.), Musices Magister (Mus.M.) and Musices Doctor (Mus.D.), but the Master's degree is almost unknown. In Germany none of these is commonly used, the regular academic distinction in music being Ph.D. G.

English and American practice regarding these degrees is at present more or less different. In general, the English usage is to require both the passing of a considerable examination and the presentation of an 'exercise' (one or more original compositions). But degrees are also somewhat conferred honoris causa. Residence is not required. Women are eligible for examination, but the degree is not actually conferred on them. The American usage has been almost wholly to give the Doctor's degree honoris causa, but the Bachelor's degree in some way in connection with graduation from a regular institutional course of study. The University of Toronto follows the English practice. In England both Bachelor's and Doctor's degrees are sometimes taken at once. It follows that an English degree is ordinarily much more significant than an American, especially as in the United States the liberty of conferring degrees is held by colleges and universities generally and has been exercised with extraordinary latitude.

In England the Archbishop of Canterbury has the right (originally because he was Papal Legate) of conferring degrees in various subjects. Many of these so-called 'Lambeth' degrees have been conferred in music.

At Cambridge and Oxford degrees in music were granted as early as 1463 and 1499 respectively. Except for some examples at Dublin from 1612, no other Universities granted such degrees until late in the 19th century. The earliest American degrees appear to date from 1849 (Georgetown) and 1855 (New York), and S. P. Tuckerman received a Canterbury degree in 1851 (or '53). See list in the American Supplement to Grove's Dictionary.

In England the holders of musical degrees are organized into a Union of Graduates in Music (founded in 1893).

(It is to be noted that the English and American practice of conferring musical degrees honoris causa is somewhat paralleled by the German practice of conferring titles like Musikdirector and Professor, though these emanate not from universities, but from the government.)

Delineative Music. See Program-Music.

Delivery. A general term for the method or style of a performer, especially of a singer's enunciation or vocalization.

Demiquaver, Demisemiquaver. See Notation. G.

Dependent. In harmony, denoting a chord that contains dissonance, so as to require resolution.

Derivative. In harmony, either the root of a chord (the tone whence it is derived) or an inversion of a chord (a disposition of its tones derived from that which is normal or primary).

Descant. See Discant.

Descort. A term used in the 13th century for a song in which short stanzas or strophes were provided with constantly varied melodies; a lai or leich.

The type was derived from that of the sequence and was opposed to that of the hymn and the secular chanson or ballad, in which several longer stanzas were sung to a single melody. It has a certain analogy to the 'through-composed song.'

Design. The form or pattern of a phrase, passage or movement, especially its melodic outline or rhythmic and metric disposition.

This term is much and skillfully used in C. H. H. Parry's Art of Music (1893).

Dessus. Same as treble or soprano.

Deus misereatur. A canticle (being Psalm 67), or its musical setting, used in the Anglican Evening Prayer as an alternative for the Nunc dimittis. G.

Its text begins 'Deus misereatur nostri et benedicat nobis.'

Development. In general, the unfolding of the latent possibilities of a theme or subject by means of melodic, harmonic, rhythmic or contrapuntal variation or expansion. Specifically, the second section in the fugue or in sonata-form, following the enunciation or exposition of the subject or subjects. It is in the development that the invention or original power of the composer is best displayed. Sometimes called the working-out. See Fugue and Sonata. G.

Diapason. The Greek name for the interval of the octave (because comprising all the tones of the scale). Hence extended to mean compass or total range of a tone-series. In French usage transferred to a tuning-fork or the standard pitch which it registers; hence diapason normal, the standard pitch adopted by the French Academy in 1859 ( $a^1 = 435$ ) and later made international. As a name for stops in the pipe-organ, see Organ-Stops. Sometimes also used for the scale or rule by which certain instruments or parts of instruments are made. G.

Diapente. The Greek name for the interval of the fifth. G.

Diaphony. The Greek term for dissonance; 'opposed to symphony.' In medieval music, same as organum. G.

Diatesaron. The Greek name for the interval of the fourth. G.

Diatonic. In Greek music, denoting a tetrachord (or other tone-series) the steps of which were mostly separated by 'tones' opposed to chromatic and enharmonic; see Greek Music. Hence, in modern usage, denoting a scale similarly constructed, including the standard major and minor scales; opposed to chromatic. Hence extended to any step, interval, progression, melody, harmony or modulation that utilizes only the tones of such a scale, as well as to instruments made to give such tones; opposed to chromatic. G.

Diaulia. In Greek music, an interlude in a song accompanied by the aulos or flute.

Diazeuxis. In Greek music, the separation of two tetrachords (in a mode or genus) by the interval of a 'tone', or such an interval itself. Such tetrachords were termed diazeuxtic or disjunct.

Dichord. Same as bichord.

Dictation. An elementary pedagogical method in which the ear and the musical sense are trained by listening to various tonal effects or phrases and noting them down. It is designed to counteract the tendency to form only eye-impressions of musical facts instead of ear-impressions. See Ear-Training.

Dictionaries of Music. Books of reference giving (usually in alphabetic order) either definitions and descriptions of technical terms used in music, or biographies of musicians, or both terms and persons; also called lexicons or encyclopedias. Some are general or comprehensive, some confined to a single country or a single field. See Appendix A. G.

Dies iræ. The sequence (probably by Thomas of Celano, 13th cent.) which forms the second part of the Requiem Mass (q. v.). G.

Its text is in 18 stanzas, of which the first is Dies iræ, dies illa,

Solvat sæculum in favilla,
Teste David cum Sibylla.

Diesis. In Greek theory, same as limma or diatonic hemitone (see apotome). In modern acoustics, the interval left when the sum of three major thirds is subtracted from an octave ( $\frac{3}{2} \div \frac{1}{64} = \frac{1}{2}$ ), this being sometimes further called the enharmonic diesis. G.

Difference-tone. See Combination-tone.

Digital. A key or finger-lever in a keyboard; opposed to pedal (or foot-lever).

Digitorium. See Dumb Piano.

Diminished. See Chord, Interval and Triad. G.

Diminution. That variety of melodic imitation in which the time-values of the notes of the subject or theme are systematically shortened (usually halved); opposed to augmentation. G.

Dip. In keyboard-instruments, the vertical distance through which a key (whether digital or pedal) descends when depressed; also called key-fall.

The average dip on the modern piano or organ is about 3/8 in. (for the pedal-keys of the pipe-organ not much more). On the piano the dip, once adjusted, is not likely to change, but in the pipe organ changes may occur and are corrected by regulating-screws.

Direct. As a noun, see Notation. Direct motion, same as similar motion (see Motion). G.

Director. The leader of a chorus, orchestra or other company of musicians; see Conductor. Also the head or administrative manager of an opera-house, conservatory or music-school.

In an opera-house or large conservatory the functions of owner, lessee or manager as the purely business-director are apt to be distinguished from those of the artistic director.

In German universities a distinction is made between director and professor, the former being in charge of musical performances and rehearsal for them, while the latter teaches by lecture.

In Germany, also, Musikdirector is an honorary title, conferred by the civil authority; see under Degrees.

Dirge. A funeral hymn or service (if sung); hence any music used in connection with a funeral or memorial service, especially a solemn or mournful march.

The term comes from the first word of the antiphon in the office for the dead, 'Dirige, Domine, Deus meus, in conspectu tuo viam meam' (Ps. v. 8, Latin version).

Discant, Descant. In polyphonic music, a voice-part added to a cantus firmus; a counterpoint. Hence in part-music generally, the treble or soprano. More often used as a general term for the art, process or result of part-writing or counterpoint. G.

The term appeared in the 12th century, replacing terms like organum and diaphonia and being itself largely displaced later by contrapunctus, though lingering in literary usage. The art of improvising a discant to a given melody was cultivated until the 16th century.

In the naming of instruments belonging to a family, a designation of the upper or smaller member, as a discant-viol.

Discord. See Dissonance. G.

Disdiapason. The medieval name for the interval of the double octave or fifteenth.

Disjunct. Denoting a melody or voice-part motion that proceeds by intervals greater than a whole-step, that is, by skips; opposed to conjunct; see Motion.

As applied in Greek theory, see Conjoint.

Dispersed Harmony. See Harmony.

Disposition. A general term, variously applied in music; as of the distribution of the tones of a chord among the several voices, of tonal materials among the parts of a chorus or orchestra and hence in a score, of the stops in an organ-specification or of the pipes within an organ-case, of the placing of players in an orchestra or band, of the arrangement of valves or keys in various wind-instruments, etc.

Dissonance. In harmony, any combination of tones that is either harsh and unpleasant or, though not so, still incomplete and unfinal, so that some further combination is required after it; also called discord; opposed to consonance and concord. See Preparation and Resolution. G.

Among intervals, major and minor seconds, with all augmented or diminished intervals, are dissonances. In early medieval theory major and minor thirds and sixths were regarded as more or less dissonant.

Progress toward true composition was made possible through the recognition of the necessity of dissonance in combination with consonance.

Distinctio. In Gregorian music, a pause or break corresponding to the construction of the text, or the phrase marked off by such a pause.

In an ordinary verse in the Psalter three such pauses are customary, making four phrases or tone-groups, each of which has some sort of a termination or cadence. The first of these is called the intonation. This fourfold partition of the verse is analogous to that in the Anglican chant.

Dital. A finger-lever in some forms of lute or guitar by pressing which a string can be shortened so as to raise its pitch by a semi-tone; opposed to pedal.

Dital harp, a harp-lute, invented by Light of London about 1795 and improved in 1818, with 12-18 strings, each provided with a dital.

Dithyramb. In Greek poetry, a lyric form of exalted or excited quality and versified in lines of varying length and meter. Hence a composition, vocal or instrumental, of irregular metrical construction and expressive of excited or hilarious feeling.

Ditone. In Greek theory, an interval equal to two 'tones' ( $\sharp\sharp$ ), analogous to the modern major third, but slightly greater.

Divertimento, Divertissement. In general, any light and amusing piece, usually instrumental, whether comparatively artless or a form of skillful salon-music, especially if used in a variety in connection with other music. Specifically, in the opera, any entertainment inserted without direct relation to the action; an entr'acte; including ballets, many intermezzi, etc. Also, in a fugue or other extended work, an episode, especially if of comparatively light quality. As an extended instrumental form, see Cassation and Serenata. G.

Divided. Denoting that which is separated (by exception) into two; as divided part or voices, with those who usually play or sing in unison separated into two groups, for a time proceeding independently (marked divisi, with a due or unisono at the end of the passage), and divided stop, in organ-making, a stop that is separated into two parts, treble and bass, with two stop-knobs. G.

Division. An old name for a passage (or the tone-groups composing it) made up of rapid short tones or notes, so called because utilizing divisions of the beats; a coloratura-passage. Such a passage, if vocal, is executed upon one or a few syllables and on a single breath. G.

Division-viol, a viol with a fretted fingerboard, especially the viola da gamba.

Dixit Dominus. An antiphon (from Psalm 110) used in several liturgies at Vespers, and often taken for musical setting.

The text begins, 'Dixit Dominus Domino meo, sede a dextris meis'; cf. Matt. xxii.44, Mark xii.36, Luke xx.41.

Do, Doh. See Solmization.

Doctor of Music. (Mus.D.). See Degrees.

Dodechordon. A 12-stringed instrument; also called bissex.

Dodecuplet, Duodecimole. A 12-note group occupying the time of 8; see Note-Groups.

Dominant. The name for an important central tone in a mode or scale. In the Gregorian system it was the chief reciting-tone, especially for the Psalter, and in the authentic modes was normally the fifth above the final, but in the plagal modes otherwise placed (see Modes). In the modern system it is the fifth above the tonic or key-note (see Scale), serving as a secondary and contrasting harmonic center as compared with the latter (see Harmony). A triad or chord of which it is the root is called a dominant triad or chord, and such chords, with their derivatives, constitute dominant harmony. In an extended work a section in the key of the dominant is called a dominant section. G.

The duality of structure in modern music that results from using the tonic and the dominant as contrasted centers for both melody and harmony is conspicuous, not only in elaborate forms like the fugue and the sonata, but in almost every form. In conjunction with other dualities, such as major and minor, consonance and dissonance, duple and triple rhythm, etc., it constitutes an inexhaustible source of interest and expressiveness.

Domra. An old Slavic lute with 3 or more strings, played with a plectrum. It is said to have been made in the 16-17th centuries in three sizes, forming a family. It is the probable ancestor of the modern balalaika.

Dona nobis. See Agnus Dei.

Dot. See Notation. G.

Double. As a noun, a repeat, a variation or an added tone (see below, under verb); also, in an organ, a 16-foot stop, in an opera-troupe, a substitute singer, and (plural), in English bell-ringing, changes rung on five bells. As an adjective or prefix, denoting an instrument sounding an octave lower than the standard form; also a tone or note an octave higher or lower than that indicated; also same as duple. As a verb, to perform with the addition of the higher or lower octave of the tone or tones indicated. G.

For double bar, dot, flat, sharp, etc., see Notation. For double canon, counterpoint, fugue, concerto, sonata, chorus, etc., see the nouns. In playing the violin and similar instruments, double-stopping is the stopping of two strings at once in producing two part effects. In playing the flute and some other wind-instruments, double-tonguing is the production of staccato effects by rapid movements of the tongue-tip.

Doubleé. See Embellishments.

Double-Bass. The largest and lowest-toned member of the viol-family (except rare forms like the octobass), having either 3 or 4 strings, in the former case usually tuned  $g_3$ - $d_2$ - $a_2$  (Italian usage) or  $a_2$ - $d_2$ - $g_2$  (English) and in the latter  $e_3$ - $a_2$ - $d_2$ - $g_2$ . It has the flat back and the sloping shoulders of the old viols, but in other respects is analogous to the violin. Also called contrabass or bass-viol. G.

It is the counterpart of the older violone, replacing it from the 17th century. At first it was used only to double the bass part as taken by the viol da gamba or the 'cello, but from about 1750 was more independent. The bow used differs from that of the violin-group (see Bow).

Doublet, Duplet. See Couplet.

Doublophone. A union of a euphonium and a valve-trombone with a common mouthpiece and a valve turning the breath into either one or the other at will, invented in 1891 by Besson of Paris.

Down-beat. In conducting, a downward motion of the hand to mark the first beat of a measure; opposed to up-beat and side-beat; hence the first beat or primary accent in a measure.

Down-bow, Down-stroke. In playing the violin and similar instruments, a motion of the bow from nut to point; opposed to up-bow, up-stroke.

Doxology. In general, any hymn or song of praise and adoration to God. Specifically, such established formulæ as the Gloria in Excelsis (the Great Doxology), the Gloria Patri (the Less Doxology), the Tersanctus or Seraphic Hymn (from Is. vi. 3) and various metrical forms, or musical settings of them.

In medieval and many modern liturgies it has been customary to sing the Gloria Patri at the end of every Psalm in course. This practice was extended to the hymns of the Breviary and later not only to metrical versions of the Psalms (from the 16th century), but to metrical hymns in general (from about 1700). These latter varied in form according to the meter of the Psalm or hymn. The familiar metrical form, beginning 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow', is a L. M. doxology in three hymns for the students of Winchester College by Bishop Ken (c. 1675), and its traditional melody is that adapted by Bourgeois to the Genevan version of Psalm 134 (c. 1550) and from 1561 transferred to Psalm 100 (whence the name 'Old Hundredth').

Dramatic. Denoting a work, piece or passage adapted to the text of a literary drama or stage-piece or in similar style; sometimes extended specifically to program-music or similar music in which either a plot, action, characters or events are suggested.

In general, dramatic art, as distinguished from that which is lyric or epic, magnifies the development of a story as if enacted on a stage in such a way as powerfully to rouse the interest and emotions of an audience. Its larger musical applications are in the opera, the oratorio, the scena, the ballet, the dramatic cantata and ballad, etc.

Often used, also, in characterizing that which is intense, thrilling or startling in a high degree, as the dramatic climax of a song.

Draw-stop. See Organ.

Dreher. See Dances. G.

Drill. See Rehearsal.

Drone. In the bagpipe, one of the 2-3 pipes of fixed pitch which sound continuously while melodies are played on the chanter; also analogous parts in other instruments, as in some other wind-instruments and in the hurdy-gurdy; or the persistent sound thus produced. G.

This sort of effect, often called, a drone-bass, is not uncommon in instrumental (and even vocal) music. It usually consists of the tonic alone or the tonic and dominant together. It is characteristic in the musette and in many Russian and Oriental pieces.

Drum. In general, a percussive instrument, consisting of some sort of hollow body of wood, metal or other stiff and resonant material, across an opening in which is stretched an elastic head of skin or parchment that can be so tightened that when struck by the hand or a stick a tone is produced. The forms most used in artistic music are the side-drum, played by two small drum-sticks, the bass-drum, played by a single stick with a large soft head, the tambourine (q. v.) and the kettledrums (q. v.) or timpani. The side-drum and the bass-drum are conspicuous in military music, while the kettle-drums are regularly used in the orchestra. The latter are made so as to yield varied tones of definite pitch, but the others simply to mark rhythm and accent. G.

Drums are universal among all peoples, from those of primitive culture upward. Their materials, forms and sizes vary indefinitely—hollowed logs, dried gourds, moulded wood or metal, earthenware, metal jars, etc. Besides being used to mark rhythm for song and dance they often have religious applications and furnish the means for remarkable signaling.

The modern side-drum or snare-drum has a cylindrical body of thin wood or brass, both top- and bottom-heads, the tension being controlled by side-cords laced into hoops enclosing the edges, and a few strings of gut (*snare*s) stretched tightly across the face of the lower head. The bass-drum is essentially similar, but much larger. The side-drum is suspended at the drummer's side by a strap, while the bass-drum, if carried, is usually in front, partly supported by an assistant. The side-drum is extensively employed in military service for marching and for varied signals or drum-calls. Sometimes a large form, known as a tenor-drum, is thus used.

Dualism, Harmonic. See Scale and Harmony.

Duet, Duo. A composition for two voices or instruments, or for two performers on a concerted instrument like the piano, in either case with or without accompaniment. Piano-duets may be either for four hands (on the same instrument) or for two pianos—the distribution of the two parts being quite different in the two cases. Also a piece, movement or passage in which two voice-parts are made prominent as a double solo, usually with accompaniment. The diminutive is duettino. G.

Sometimes duet is mainly restricted to vocal examples and duo to instrumental ones.

Dulcimer. In general, an instrument having several or many metal strings stretched over a resonance-box or soundboard and sounded by blows from small hammers. Specifically, a form (known since about 1500) in which the body is trapeze-shaped and the strings extend between the sloping sides over the soundboard and over two bridges resting upon it. In modern instruments the compass is 2-3 octaves and there may be 2-5 strings to the note, while the hammer-heads are made respectively hard and soft, so as to produce differences in loudness and quality. The dulcimer differs from the psaltery merely in its method of tone-production. The piano is essentially a keyboard-dulcimer as the harpsichord was a keyboard-psaltery. The German name is hackbrett, the Italian cembalo and the French tympanon. G.

The dulcimer-type is ancient, being depicted on Assyrian monuments and being widely distributed in the Orient under the Persian name santir (probably the fifth of the series named in Dan. iii, the word being p'santerin). Throughout the Middle Ages it and its relative, the psaltery, were common. About 1700 Hebenstreit developed a large form with 135 strings, and became noted for performances upon it. From this may have come early experiments leading to the invention of the piano.

Dumb Piano. A device for hand-training, consisting of a small keyboard fitted with springs or weights so as to simulate the resistance of a piano-keyboard, but without tone; a digitorium.

Dumka. A form of Russian folk-song, properly a lament. G.

Duodecimole. Same as dodecuplet.

Duodene. In a system proposed in 1874 by A. J. Ellis of London for the analysis and solution of acoustical problems, a group of twelve tones (starting from any tone as root or duodenal), consisting of four trines (each made up of a root, its major third above and its major third below), the roots of which are respectively the duodenal, its perfect fifth below, its perfect fifth above and a perfect fifth above that. Out of the use of this system Ellis deduced certain principles regarding the practical application of just intonation to keyboard-instruments. See Appendix xix to his translation of Helmholtz' Tonempfindungen (1874).

Duodrama. A melodrama with two principal spoken parts. G.

Duole. Same as couplet.

Duology. A pair of dramas on related themes and intended to be given in succession.

Duple. Of rhythm or measure, denoting a division into two equal parts, duple rhythm being characterized by two beats to the measure; double; opposed to triple. Also denoting a similar division of beats. See Measure, Rhythm and Time.

Duplex Scale. In piano-making, a method of stringing, introduced by Steinway of New York, in which the sections of the treble strings that lie beyond the bridge (and are ordinarily silent) are arranged to sound sympathetically with harmonics of the main tones.

Durchkomponiert. Of songs, denoting those in which the treatment is progressive or continuous throughout, each stanza being freshly set according to its sentiment; opposed to strophisch (one treatment for all stanzas). G.

There is no quite satisfactory English equivalent. 'Through-composed' is a mere transference and 'progressively composed' is not entirely obvious.

Dutera. A Turkestan instrument having 2 or 4 strings stretched over a box-shaped body and sounded either by plucking or by means of a short bow.

Dux. In a canon or a fugue, the theme in its first or leading enunciation; opposed to comes; also called antecedent or subject.

Dynamics, Musical. In general, that branch of theory and praxis that regards the phenomena of relative intensity or loudness as used in composition and performance. It properly includes the primary element of rhythm, so far as that rests upon accent, various aspects of phrasing and the use of nuances, so far as these utilize intensity-relations (contrasts between loud and soft and progressions from one to the other) and the bearing of these and similar tonal phenomena upon emotional or other mental effects (thus shading off into æsthetics). The term dynamics is also applied to the method or style used by a performer in treating accents and all other details of loudness in interpretation.

E

E. The alphabetic symbol and name of a certain tone or note and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation. G.

E la, in the medieval hexachord-system, was the highest tone (corresponding to e'; from this the term was transferred in literature to mean the extreme of anything.

Ear. The physical organ which is the seat of the special sense of hearing, on which music as a function, an experience and an art depends; hence the sense itself and its operation with regard to music. To have a musical ear is to have hearing that is sensitive to minute distinctions in tones (as to pitch, quality and loudness) and their relations, or that is so impressed by tones in their artistic presentation as to appraise, analyze and hold them in attention, and hence, if required, to guide in recalling and reproducing them. Persons having this capacity are able more or less to sing and play by ear. The power of speech and song depends upon that of hearing, any defect in the ear being accompanied by some impairment in the voice.

The internal structure of the ear and the method of its functioning are entirely beyond the reach of ordinary observation. The parts of the intricate mechanism that are most important in their bearing upon musical acoustics and aesthetics are (a) the membrane (popularly known as the ear-drum) that separates the outer from the middle ear and that is thrown into vibration by sounds of all kinds, (b) the chain of three ossicles that conveys the vibrations of this membrane into the inner ear or labyrinth, and, most important of all, (c) the structure of the labyrinth itself, with its convoluted shape, its internal sac, filled with liquid, running up into the cochlea (an organ shaped like a twisted snail-shell), in which are distributed the many terminals of the auditory nerve (estimated at about 3000). Because these parts are so hidden and so minute, it is not strange that their precise mode of operation is unclear or differently interpreted. The critical point of dispute is as to the functions of the abovenamed terminals (the rods of Corti). The most common view is that these terminals respond as resonators to the vibrations brought to them and in some way serve to translate vibrations into sensations of tone. The classical discussion of the subject is that of Helmholtz in his Tonempfindungen (1863).

For ear as a part of organ-pipes, see Pipe.

Ear-training. In elementary instruction, the process of developing sensitiveness to musical phenomena of all sorts, especially by making the student listen to and record a progressive series of illustrations; cf. dictation.

Ecclesiastical Modes. See Mode.

Echo. Acoustically, the repetition of a sound by reflection or repercussion from an obstructing object, so that it may be heard apart from its direct or primary transmission, but always with less intensity or loudness. Hence, in music, applied to the repetition of a figure or phrase with reduced force, sometimes an octave higher or lower, sometimes with a change of quality. Also any mechanical device on an instrument, like a harpsichord or an organ, whereby echo-effects can be readily produced; as an echo-stop. In organ-making, one division of the instrument, located apart from the others and containing soft stops, is called the echo-organ; see Organ. G.

Echo-effects were specially common in music of the 17-18th centuries and are still used, often with subtle changes of tonal form.

Écossaise. See Dances.

Effect. Specifically, the particular character of a detail or passage, if not of the whole to which it belongs, that is imparted by a studied and dexterous use of devices either of composition or of performance, so as to make a definite and designed impression. See Expression and Interpretation.

Églogue. An instrumental idyl or pastoral.

Eighth. Same as octave. Eighth-note, eighth-rest, see Notation.

Eisteddfod. A Welsh national assembly designed to stimulate patriotic feeling through literary and musical exercises and competitions under the leadership of bards. G.

Traces of such gatherings are found as far back as the 7th century, with more definite accounts from the 15th onward. They appear to have been held at entirely irregular intervals. During the 19th century, especially after about 1820, they have been frequent, tending to become annual, and are sometimes held in more than one place in the same year (of late years in the United States as well as in Great Britain). During sessions of 2-3 days contests in oratory, poetry, choral singing and harp-playing take place, for which prizes and titular honors are offered. These competitions have not only made Welsh part- and chorus-singing famous, but have powerfully stimulated composition in all forms, from congregational tunes to cantatas and oratorios. Many quaint usages and traditions also tend to make them both picturesque and socially influential.

Electric Action. In organ-making, any type of key- or stop-action in which the connection with the internal mechanism is effected through contacts and an electric current instead of by rods and levers or compressed air. An organ with such action is often termed an electric organ (or electric-pneumatic, if both electric and pneumatic devices are used).

Electric motors are also often used to actuate the blowing-apparatus by which compressed air is supplied to organs, as well as to operate various automatic instruments.

An electric piano was invented in 1891 by Eisenmann of Berlin, in which the strings were made to sound, not by hammers, but by electro-magnets thrown into action by the keys, the intensity, duration and even quality of the tone being modified by special devices. A still more elaborate application of electro-magnetism is the telharmonium, exhibited in 1907 by Thaddeus Cahill of New York, designed to produce quality-effects synthetically (by means of the necessary partial-tones) and with them to perform instrumental music so as to distribute it telephonically. Recently, also, electricity has been extensively applied in the dissemination of both vocal and instrumental performances by wireless telegraphy.

Elegy. A vocal or instrumental composition of a pathetic or mournful character; a lament or dirge. An extended work, like an ode, sonata, suite or symphony, may be termed elegiac. G.

Elevation. In church-music, a vocal or organ-piece designed to be used during the elevation or ostension of the Host in the Mass.

Eleventh. The interval of an octave and a fourth or a tone or note at that interval. G.

A chord of the eleventh or eleventh-chord is one ideally made up of a seventh-chord plus a ninth and an eleventh (see Chord).

Embellishments. In general, any tones added to the essential tones of a vocal or instrumental melody, whether in the design of the composer or at the will of the performer, for decorative or other effect. Some are special forms, designed to elaborate the melody in such a way as to form an integral part of it (such as passing-tones and figurations) and are noted in full with the rest of the melody; most of these naturally bear no specific names. Some are named and have a more or less recognized form, but cannot readily be noted except by a very general sign (such as the portamento). Some have names and a somewhat precise form and method of performance, but are commonly noted by abbreviated signs or, if written out, are expressed in small notes so as to emphasize their subordinate character. It is to this last class that the general term is ordinarily applied; also called abbellimenti, agréments, fioriture, graces, manieren, ornaments, *verzierung*en.

The subject of embellishments is not only extensive, but of indefinite boundaries, since melodic embellishment on the one hand shades off into procedures that are commonly regarded as parts of counterpoint and harmony (such as anticipation, suspension, etc.) and on the other touches upon the intricate field of phrasing and the minutiae of expression. It is particularly obscure as regards music for the voice or for instruments without fixed intonation (like the violin).

In the 16th century, as composition advanced for instruments like the lute and the harpsichord, many characteristic embellishments began to accumulate, some of them doubtless simulating vocal effects and some devised to offset the lack of sustained sonority in these instruments and their rather colorless tone. By the 18th century their use had become a settled system and their proper execution a notable feature of good playing. But with the advent of the piano many of them became obsolete.

The more important forms now in use are the appoggiatura, with the shorter acciaccatura and the double anschlagn (prefacing the tone with one just above, or in the anschlagn, with both the one below and that above), the mordent or inverted mordent (varying the attack of the tone by a quick alternation with it of the tone below or above), the turn or back-turn (prefacing the tone by an alternation with it of the tone above and below in a twisted or upward figure) and the trill (the prolonged and rapid alternation of the tone with the tone above). All these, in their several varieties, are understood to occur within the time of the principal tone, the trill taking the whole of that time and the others part of it, and whatever accent belongs to the principal tone is transferred to the embellishment. In some cases, however, effects like the appoggiatura and the turn, follow, instead of precede, the principal tone, being then unaccented (cf. the German term nachschlag as opposed to vorschlag).

No attempt is here made to describe or even to list the multitude of harpsichord-graces that at one time constituted the niceties of execution (a convenient summary is given in Baker's Dict. of Musical Terms, 1900, art. 'Graces'). Some, like the backfall, were related to the appoggiatura; some, like the beat, belonged to the extensive mordent class; many, like the cadence, utilized some variation of the turn; and many more, like the relisch, spread alternating tones into more or less of a trill. It should be noted that fredon is a rather inclusive term for any elaboration of a tone by a roulade or trill. Praller or pralltriller usually means an inverted mordent.

For most of these there were manifold signs in the older keyboard-notation, the exact interpretation of which by players naturally formed a considerable part of the discipline of harpsichordists and clavichordists. Many of them were also carried over into organ-music, though others were there quite inapplicable.

Embouchure. Same as mouthpiece. Also, in playing certain wind-instruments, the adjustment of the player's lips to the mouthpiece. G.

Emphasis. Accent or stress. Also extended to the special distinction or prominence of a tone, chord or figure in phrasing or interpretation, whether by stress, prolongation, quickened approach or a slight pause before or after.

Encore ('Again!', like the French 'Bis!'). The recall of a performer by prolonged applause or the music performed in response to such a recall. G.

Originally a vocal exclamation (in use in England as early as 1711), but rarely so used now.

Ending. See Cadence, Inflection, Coda, etc.

English Horn. The tenor-oboe or cor anglais; see Oboe.

English Violet. A form of viola d'amore with 14 sympathetic strings. Also a name for the obsolete tuning of the violin e<sub>1</sub>-a<sub>1</sub>-e-a.

Engraving, Music-. See under Printing. G.

Enharmonic. In modern usage, denoting certain facts or relations that are theoretically distinct, but in the nomenclature and notation based upon the keyboard practically identical. It is applied in two ways:

(a) emphasizing the practical identity, as enharmonic tone or chord, a tone or chord on the keyboard that may be noted in two or more ways and thus be melodically and harmonically related differently, and enharmonic change or modulation, one that effects a theoretical altered harmonic relation and procedure simply by changing the naming and notation of a tone or chord without changing its actual sound on the keyboard.

Thus on the keyboard a single digital serves as both g-sharp and a-flat, and may be regarded enharmonically in either way, but with diverse harmonic relations. Thus, also, the seventh-chord on the seventh degree on any minor key on the keyboard may be regarded enharmonically (by changes of naming and notation) as a similar chord in any one of three other keys and may be used as the first step in a remarkable variety of modulations. These are but single illustrations of numerous applications of the enharmonic conception that accompanies the practical use of the 12-toned scale of the keyboard.

(b) emphasizing the theoretical distinction, as enharmonic scale, a scale that includes many or all of the theoretic tones that on the keyboard are represented by but 12 digitals, and enharmonic organ or piano, an organ or piano that aims to represent part or all of such a scale by having more than 12 digitals to the octave. G.

Ensemble. In general, the total effect of a composition as a whole or of any combination of performers, vocal, instrumental or both. Specifically, a particular combination of voices, as in a chorus, choir, quartet, trio, etc., or of instruments, as in an orchestra, band, quintet, quartet, trio, etc., or of voices and instruments, as in performances of opera, oratorio and other concerted works. Also the particular effect produced by any such combination. G.

The term is most used with reference to the union of a small group of soloists for the performance of what is called chamber-music; hence ensemble-music (for chamber-music), chamber-ensemble, etc. Chamber- or ensemble-music differs from orchestral music in using but one player to a part, in limiting itself to a small number of parts, usually all of the viol-family or one or two others, and in being better suited to a small room or hall.

Entr'acte. An instrumental piece intended or suitable for use between the acts of a play or opera; an intermezzo; formerly known as act-tune or playhouse-tune, when used in the theater. Also extended to a ballet or similar divertissement. See Incidental Music, Intermezzo and Opera.

Entrée. Specifically, one of the main divisions of an extended ballet, analogous to a scene in an act (of a play), or the music for it. Also, like intrada, an introductory procession in any stage-work, or the music for it, especially as a prelude to a ballet. Also see polonoise under Dances. Occasionally applied to the music for a church-procession. G.

In the older operas the scene in which the chief singer or singers appeared was called the scène d'entrée and the aria in it the aria d'entrée.

Entremes, Entremets. Originally, a short play, with or without music, at first on an allegorical or historical subject, later mostly burlesque, popular from about the 13th century and probably the precursor of the modern drama. Later sometimes used for entr'acte.

Enunciation. See Vocalization. Also the process or result of stating or setting forth a theme or themes, as at the opening of a fugue or a sonata.

Epic. Denoting a work or passage, literary or musical, in which a topic of exalted and heroic character is developed more or less definitely as a story or narrative, but without the personification, interplay of action and plot-interest of a drama.

In general, epic art is distinguished from lyric art by its objectiveness, its choice of national, mythical or religious themes of grandeur and its use of elaborate and extended forms. Its musical applications are chiefly in certain oratorios (like Handel's Messiah), cantatas and choral odes, with some symphonic poems and similar instrumental works.

Epicède, Epicedium. A funeral song; an elegy or lament.

Epinicion. A song of triumph or victory. Also, in the Greco-Russian Church, a name for the Sanctus.

Episode. In an extended composition, a passage or section of a parenthetical or digressive character, to some extent interrupting the ordinary succession or development and usually not employing the principal themes. Episodes are particularly noticeable in orderly forms like the fugue and the sonata and are often so treated as greatly to enhance the total effect. G.

Epistrophe, Epode. A refrain or burden; also any concluding strain or passage that is repeated at the end of successive sections.

Epithalamium. A nuptial or marriage-song; a piece of wedding-music.

Equal Counterpoint. Counterpoint in tones or notes of even duration; see Counterpoint.

Equal Temperament. See Temperament. G.

Equal Voices. Voices of the same range and quality, those ordinarily singing together on the same part. Also extended to voices of the same sex, either women's or men's collectively; opposed to mixed voices. G.

Equivocal. Of a chord, of more than one tonal relationship or tendency; referable to two or more keys or tonalities.

Eroticon. A passionate love-song or an instrumental piece of similar character.

Escapement. In piano-making, that part of the action which provides for the immediate recoil of the hammer after it strikes the string, independently of whether or not the key is released. This is usually managed by means of a notch on the under side of the hammer-butt into which the hopper slips after giving its impulse. The escapement is said to be double when a second blow of the hammer can be caused without entirely releasing the key; an action so fitted is called a repeating- or repetition-action.

Essential. Denoting that which is fundamental, necessary or characteristic; as essential harmony, the chord-sequence of a passage, disregarding all irregular features (like passing-tones and suspensions) and all that is decorative (like embellishments); essential tone or note, in an embellishment (like a turn or a trill), the tone belonging to the melody to which the embellishment is added; opposed to auxiliary tone or note; essential seventh, either the same as leading-tone or the dominant seventh-chord.

Establishment, Musical. See Cappella.

Estabillo. See under Villancico.

Estampida. A form of dance-song or similar instrumental piece used by the Troubadours (c. 1300).

Ethnic Music. A term sometimes used to designate all music lying outside of the historic domain of European culture, including not only music as found among primitive or nature-peoples, but in civilizations like those of the Hindus, the Chinese, the Persians, etc.; occasionally (and not so happily) called exotic music.

The need for some term like this did not appear until, in connection with data secured by travelers and missionaries, it began to be realized that the phenomena of song and instruments in all parts of the world were not only curious, but scientifically important, even in cases where they exemplified systems and practices extremely remote from those of European music. For music among peoples of the lower grades of culture, terms like primitive or savage can be used, but these are plainly improper with regard to many forms in southern and eastern Asia.

Étude. An instrumental piece designed to illustrate a problem or difficulty in the technique of any instrument; a study. Also extended as the name for such a piece having so much of intrinsic artistic interest or sentiment that its purely technical quality is subordinate; if elaborate, often called a concert-étude. G.

The distinction between an étude and an exercise lies in the full development of the former as a piece of lyric composition. But the distinction between the technical and the characteristic étude is not always easy to enforce. Furthermore, many short pieces that are called by other names might well be termed études, just as some notable études might be called characteristic pieces, impromptus, etc.

Études or studies have been written abundantly for almost all the leading instruments, notably for the piano and the violin.

Euharmonic. In acoustics, denoting tones, intervals, harmonies or instruments in pure or just intonation; opposed to tempered.

A euharmonic organ is one fitted with more than 12 keys to the octave and tuned so as to yield scales and chords in purer or just intonation than is possible on an ordinary instrument. See under Enharpmonic.

Euphon, Euphonium. Same as clavicylinder. Also a name for the bass-saxhorn or tuba. G.

Even Notes, Even Tones. Notes or tones of the same time-value.

Even-song. In the Anglican Church, an office or service for the late afternoon or evening; Evening Prayer. It corresponds in part to the Roman Catholic office of Vespers.

Evirato. See Castrato.

Evovae (a bastard word made up of the vowels of the words 'seculorum amen'). In Gregorian music, one of the tropes or cadential formulæ used at the end of the Gloria Patri or Less Doxology (of which the above are the final words); also extended to any other analogous trope. Cf. avvia. G.

Execution. In general, the method of using the voice in singing or the fingers, hands, etc., in playing so as properly and effectively to realize the mechanical process in detail that is intended or desired; the technique of performance. Also, specifically, the particular method or procedure used in performing a given piece or passage. The term is often used with special reference to accuracy, dexterity and the ability to overcome technical difficulties.

A performer, especially on an instrument, is often called an executant.

Exercise. A short figure or passage for the voice or an instrument pedagogically devised so as to advance a pupil's technique by strengthening his muscles, developing his skill by studious iteration and thus freeing his attention from elementary difficulties. Also a problem or piece of practice in harmony, counterpoint or composition, usually set in the form of a single part to which other parts are to be added or a formula or outline to be filled out. Also, in England, the technical name for a composition submitted in application for an academic degree.

Though an exercise may be truly musical in structure, its brevity and its lack of artistic purpose keep it distinct from the étude (q.v.).

Exotic Music. See Ethnic Music.

Exposition. Specifically, in forms like the fugue and the sonata, that section at the outset in which the subject or subjects are set forth or proposed. G.

Expression. In general, in all forms of fine art, the process, act or result of bringing into definite form and actual realization that which the artist's mind has conceived and projected. In music, however, usually applied specifically, not to the composer's act of original production, but to the performer's act of reproduction. Hence the process and method of putting into tonal effect by means of singing or playing the form and matter of a composition, as conceived and noted down by the composer or editor and as understood by the performer, with special attention to the expository display of its æsthetic and emotional content through judicious and skillful shading, phrasing, dynamic contrast, choice of tone-quality and the like. Signs intended to guide the performer in these regards are called marks of expression or expression-marks, some having to do with tempo or pace, some with loudness or intensity, some with general style or emotional attitude, etc.; see Terms of Performance. G.

In ordinary usage, expression lies between execution and interpretation, being higher and broader than the former and more external and material than the latter, though blending with it. Facile execution may occur without adequate or effective expression and a brilliant and even moving expression may be an imperfect and unsatisfying interpretation. The three unite to form the art of performance. See Interpretation.

In the harmonium, the expression-stop is a knob which, when drawn, closes the escape-valve on the bellows, so that the wind-pressure and the tone-intensity may be directly controlled by the pedaling.

Expressive Organ, Orgue Expressif. Same as harmonium.

Extemporize. See Improvise. G.

Extended. Denoting that which is longer or more spread out than is usual or typical; as extended compass, interval, etc. Extended harmony, same as open or dispersed harmony. Extended position, in piano-, organ- and violin-playing, a hand-position with the thumb, forefinger or little finger stretched out sidewise; extension.

Extraneous. Denoting that which is outside of or additional to what is usual or standard; as extraneous chromatics, chromatic signs or the pitches and tones they denote that are not required by the original key; extraneous modulation, a modulation into a remote or unrelated key.

Extravaganza. A whimsical, farcical or fantastic instrumental piece; a burlesque or caricature. G.

Extreme. In harmony, same as augmented (of intervals) or remote, extraneous (of keys and modulations).

F

F. The alphabetic symbol and name for a certain tone or note and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation. G.

As an abbreviation, f stands for forte and ff for fortissimo; also in c. f. for cantus firmus and in pf. for pianoforte, and, in Tonic Sol-Fa notation, f for fah.

Fa, Fah. See Solmization.

Fabliau. A Troubadour ballad or romance; hence sometimes taken as the name of a short lyric instrumental piece.

Faburden. See Faux-Bourdon.

Fackeltanz. See Dances. G.

Fagott, Fagotto. See Bassoon.

Fa-la. In the 16-17th centuries, a dance-like part-song with refrains sung to fa, la or similar nonsense-syllables, probably derived from earlier solo-songs. G.

Fall. The closing strain or cadence of a melody. Also the hinged part of a piano-top that covers the keyboard; a fly.

False. Of pitch or intonation, denoting that which is incorrect or inexact; opposed to just or true. Of intervals, especially the octave, fifth and fourth, same as imperfect (i. e., augmented or diminished). In general, in either composition or performance, a tone or note that is incorrect or wrong structurally or in manner of production.

False Relation, in harmony or counterpoint, the contradictory effect produced when a tone in any part is succeeded in the next chord by one of its chromatic alterations or substitutes (sharp or flat) in another part; also called inharmonic or cross-relation. The contradiction arises from the fact that two such tones imply contrasted tonalities. It is not felt when the passage from one tone to the other occurs in the same part, since thus one tonality passes normally into the other. G.

Falsetto. The smallest and highest register in the voice, whether male or female (usually applied to the former); so called because, until trained, it is apt to sound unnatural and even grotesque; see Register and Voice. G.

In ecclesiastical music and in part-singing by men's voices generally, except where boy-choristers are used, parts higher than the tenor are taken by singers who use this register (falsestists or male altos).

In many cases the skillful cultivation of this register induces marked improvement in the larger registers.

Fancy. An old name for a short instrumental piece of an impromptu character; a fantasia or fantasy. If contrapuntal, it was usually not based on a derived subject. G.

Fandango. See Dances. G.

Fanfare. A prolonged trumpet-call or flourish, as in courtly assemblies, martial exercises, hunting-parties and the like; often introduced into operas and other dramatic works. G.

Fantasia, Fantasy, Fantaisie, Fantasie. In early instrumental music, a short impromptu or fancy. Later a contrapuntal piece in which imitation was free rather than strict and the form somewhat irregular or even capricious. In modern usage, either a piece founded on operatic or similar themes (like a potpourri or para- phrase) or a free composition somewhat like an overture or a symphonic poem, but less regular in form than the former and shorter and less significant than the latter. Also written phantasie, phantasy. G.

Free Fantasia, in a fugue- or sonata-form, same as development.

A fugue is often preceded by a fantasia, as a prelude.

Fantasy-Piece (Fantasiestück, Phantasiestück), a name often used for a brief imaginative or sentimental piece for the piano or other instrument.

Farandole. See Dances. G.

Farce. A short play, with or without music, of grotesque or broadly comical character. G.

The term (meaning 'stuffing') was originally applied to an odd form of canticle, once used at church-festivals, the text of which was a mixture of Latin and the vernacular.

Faux-Bourdon, Falso-Bordone, Faburden. In mediæval music, a general term for discant or rudimentary harmony that consisted mainly of a series of thirds and sixths superposed upon a cantus firmus, but with some deviations from this parallelism for variety and completeness of effect. Later extended to any simple note-to-note counterpoint with considerable, but not exclusive, use of parallel or similar motion. G.

The upper of the three voices was called the treble and the middle one the meane, and the three voices were sometimes covered by the general term sights.

The earliest extant reference to faburdens is in England from the 15th century, but the practice in extemporized part-singing must be much older. It is often thought that this and related practices are to be counted as the initial effort toward true harmony as well as toward simple counterpoint.

The term sometimes came to be loosely applied to the monotoning of the Psalms and even to a burden or a refrain.

Feeder. See bellows under Organ and Reed-Organ.

Feminine Ending or Rhyme. In versification, a line-ending or rhyme with the accent on the penult or antepenult instead of the final syllable. Extended to analogous endings or rhymes at the close of musical phrases, the chief accent preceding the last tone or note. Opposed to masculine ending or rhyme.

Ferial. In liturgies, denoting that which pertains to any ordinary day or season in the calendar, for which no special office or service is appointed; opposed to festal. G.

Fermata. See Notation. G.

Festal. In liturgies, denoting that which pertains to a feast or similar marked day in the calendar, for which a special office or service is appointed; opposed to ferial. Also, in general, pertaining to or in the style of a festival or jubilation of any kind; as a festal march or cantata.

Festival, Musical. In modern usage, a series of large concerts on two or more successive days, employing combined choral and orchestral forces, with eminent soloists and often a guest-conductor, especially such recurrent series as become an institution by being held annually or at some other interval and by attracting hearers from beyond the local circle. Since the latter part of the 18th century musical celebrations of this class have gradually multiplied, especially in England, Germany and America, in many cases exerting an important influence on musical progress. G.

The term festival (or feast) is taken from religious usages, as well as national or civic commemorations and similar social jubileations, at all of which music has usually supplied a conspicuous part. In many cases religious or civic implications are still traceable in enterprises which are now mainly artistic in purpose. The social or communal aspect is usually prominent because of the inclusion of many amateurs in the choral forces.

The modern festival may be said to be prefigured in the competitions of the Troubadours and Minnesingers, in the Eisteddfodau and the guild-assemblies of minstrels, in sundry celebrations at coronations and other political functions, etc.

In England the Sons of the Clergy (a benevolent society, founded in 1655) in 1697 began to hold annual services at St. Paul's in London, usually with orchestra as well as combined choirs. The enthusiasm over choral singing aroused by Handel expressed itself in the successive establishment of the festivals of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford in 1724, at Birmingham in 1768, at Norwich in 1770, at Chester in 1772, at Liverpool in 1784 and at York in 1791, with the striking Handel Commemorations in Westminster Abbey in 1784, '85, '86, '87, and '91. To the list of stated provincial festivals were later added those at Manchester (1828), Leeds (1858), Bristol (1873), Sheffield (1896), etc., with Handel Festivals at the Crystal Palace in London from 1857. Most of these were not at first held regularly, but later tended to adopt a triennial plan.

In Germany and Austria the Tonkünstler-Societät of Vienna (a benevolent organization) began holding annual concerts in 1772. The Thuringian festivals, with an accent upon the works of Bach, were started in 1810. Most significant of all are the Lower Rhine Festivals, which date from 1817, being held in rotation at Cologne, Düsseldorf and Aix-la-Chapelle (until 1824 at Elberfeld). These have led to similar undertakings in the Middle Rhine region (Coblenz, Mayence, etc.). The numerous strong choral societies of Germany have from time to time added festivals to their ordinary concert-series, often to exalt the genius of a single composer, like Bach, Mozart, Beethoven or Wagner, and sometimes in connection with national bodies, like the Allgem. Deutscher Musikverein. Unique in purpose and influence have been the various operatic festivals since 1876 at the Wagner Opera-House at Bayreuth. Various enterprises in France, Belgium, Holland and the Scandinavian countries might also be cited.

At several of the great international expositions the musical features have assumed festival proportions.

In America festivals were initiated as early as 1857 and '58 at Boston and Worcester, though not made regular until after the Civil War. The example of these was soon followed at several other places in the East. In 1873 Thomas started the biennial Cincinnati Festival, which at once gained international renown. This latter grew out of the annual gatherings of German singing-societies, which began to be common in the Middle West from about 1850, and to which are now added similar meetings of Welsh, Norwegian and Swedish fraternities. The Bach Festivals at Bethlehem, Pa., under Wille began in 1900 (intermitted in 1905-11). About the same time followed the Norfolk (Conn.) Festivals, supported by Mr. Carl Stoeckel, in 1910 the Peterboro (N. H.) Festivals, under the care of the Macdowell Association, and in 1917 (for chamber-music only) the Berkshire Festivals at Pittsfield, Mass., supported by Mrs. F. S. Coolidge. Since 1893 notable festivals have been held at the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor) and since 1909 at Northwestern University (Evanston, Ill.), these being but examples among many at educational centers. Since 1900, also, the Nat. Federation of Musical Clubs has maintained a biennial festival of a competitive character.

f-hole. In instruments of the violin-family, one of the two f-shaped openings in the front or belly, on either side of the bridge and somewhat below the level of the waist. They are analogous to openings of various shape found in practically all instruments of the viol-class. Their purpose is to increase the flexibility of the belly at the point where the vibrations of the strings are transmitted to it and to determine the pitch of the volume of air contained within the body. Their exact position and form are the result of countless experiments. The placing of the bridge is guided by small nicks in the outline of the holes. Also called sound-holes.

Ficta. See Musica Ficta (under Musico).

Fiddle. The old English name for any form of viol; now only used humorously or contemptuously. Hence fiddler for a viol-player and fiddle-bow or fiddlestick for a viol-bow. G.

Fife. An octave-flute with 6 finger-holes and a compass of about two octaves, resembling the piccolo; its chief use is in drum-corps and military bands. G.

Fifth. The interval between the first and fifth degrees of either the major or the minor scale, or any similar interval, having the vibration-ratio 3/2; also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point; in a standard scale called the dominant. G.

The above standard interval is called the perfect fifth (sometimes major). Other intervals, larger or smaller by a chromatic semitone, are the augmented fifth (ratio 25/16) and the diminished fifth (ratio 36/25) [sometimes called minor].

Being the next most perfect harmonic interval after the octave, the fifth has been much used as a tuning-measure. The ancients employed the Pythagorean theory that scale-degrees were to be determined by tuning upwards from the starting-tone in fifths and back in octaves. This practice led in medieval theory to an oversharpening of the major third and sixth and thus retarded the recognition of the modern major scale. That it was not quite satisfactory is clear from the fact that the replicate of the starting-tone reached by a series of twelve fifths is too sharp by a comma. In modern tuning, therefore, the fifths are slightly reduced, enough to make the above replicate correct and to divide the octave into twelve equal semitones (see Temperament). In such a scale, which is that represented by the keyboard of the piano and organ, a circle of fifths appears, reading either upward or downward, of which the following is a diagram (assuming C as root):

In counterpoint and harmony, the progression of two voice-parts from one chord to another by parallel or consecutive fifths is objectionable, but by hidden or concealed fifths (to a perfect fifth by similar, but not parallel motion) usually much less so. See Progression and Motion.

Fifty. In acoustics, denoting a tone in which the second partial-tone above the fundamental is obtrusively strong.

Figuration. In general, the decoration or elaboration of a simple melodic outline or harmonic structure by details that make it more complicated and ornate. Applied specifically to the breaking up of plain or strict counterpoint by passing- or by-notes, by groups of short notes and the like, or the variation and amplification of a theme by multiplying small details or adding accessory and embellishing figures. Such writing is called figurate or figured. Also the process and notation employed in thorough-bass (q. v.). A bass-part with the figures thus required is called a figured bass or basso continuo. G.

Figure. A small melodic tone-group or motif, properly occupying not more than a measure or even not more than a beat or two, which has coherence and character in a slight and subordinate degree; usually the smallest element into which a phrase or clause, or its accompaniment, can be divided without resolving it into single tones. Figures are commonly made effective by repetition, imitation and variation, thus making them fully analogous to the small visible forms used in architectural decoration, in weaving, etc. Also the numerals used in the notation of thorough-bass. G.

Final. In Gregorian music, the tone in each of the modes with which a melody must close, being in authentic modes the first or lowest tone and in plagal modes the fourth. G.

Finale. The last movement in an extended work like a sonata, symphony or concerto, especially when strongly developed as a climax to the whole. Also, in the opera, the last scene in an act or of the work. G.

In earlier operas acts were usually ended by an aria or duet in which some special opportunity for vocal display was afforded and in some cases the last act closed with a short chorus (or even a dance). But after about 1750, at first only in opera buffa, finales in concerted form (for all or most of the principal singers) began to become common, continuing more or less customary for about a century.

Finger. As a noun, same as execution in general or as method of fingering. As a verb, in general, to play upon any instrument sounded by means of the fingers, or (where a choice of method is in view) to play a passage or piece with a particular fingering, or to mark upon a passage or piece the method of fingering to be employed.

Fingerboard. In instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, the flat front of the neck or a flat or slightly arched piece of wood fastened to the neck, over which the strings are stretched to the head and against which they may be 'stopped' or temporarily shortened by finger-pressure. G.

In the lute, guitar and similar instruments the fingerboard is provided with frets, so placed as to effect stopping in progressive semitones by pressing the strings against them. The old viols were similarly fitted. But the modern violin and its relatives have fingerboards without frets, so that the intonation is absolutely controlled by the placing of the finger.

In instruments with sympathetic strings or accompaniment-strings of fixed intonation, only the principal or melody-strings pass over the fingerboard. The others are said to lie off the fingerboard.

Finger-hole. In instruments of the wood-wind group (flutes, oboes, clarinets, etc.), with some of the brass-wind group as well, a hole in the side of the tube the opening or closing of which is controlled by the player's finger; also extended to holes so situated that they are controlled by means of a key-and-lever mechanism.

The general term for both is side-hole. The purpose of such orifices is to determine the position of nodes and loops in the vibrating air-column and thus govern the pitch of the tones produced.

Finger-holes were used in some of the older instruments with a cupped mouthpiece (like the zinken and the serpent). They are also characteristic of the ocarinas.

Fingering. In playing upon instruments that are sounded by means of or with the aid of the fingers (including those with a keyboard, those with strings plucked or subject to stopping and those wind-instruments with finger-holes, keys, valves, etc.), the method of applying the fingers in playing and the succession of fingers chosen in playing various classes of passages or combinations of notes. Also marks or numerals added to written or printed music to indicate the method of finger-succession that is required or suggested. See Touch. G.

Until the 18th century keyboard-fingering was largely or wholly confined to the use of the fore-, middle- and ring-fingers, the thumb and little-finger being mostly idle. The finger-position was flat or unflexed. After 1700 a curved finger-position and the free use of all five fingers were gradually adopted. The technical problems of the best methods of executing shifts in scale-passages and the like, of adapting the hand to the free use of black as well as white keys, of treating all kinds of embellishments and special figures, of sounding chords and chord-series, etc., were variously regarded. When the piano replaced the clavichord and harpsichord in the late 18th century it naturally took over the theories as to fingering previously held. But its differences from its predecessors forced a fresh study of hand-mechanism, leading to many practices quite unknown earlier and to much greater uniformity in the treatment of details.

The present notation of fingering assigns the numerals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 to the digits, beginning with the thumb. The earlier form used 1, 2, 3, 4 for the fingers, beginning with the forefinger, and marked the thumb by x or o.

Fioriture. See Embellishments. G.

Fipple. The mouthpiece of any instrument of the whistle or direct-flute class, especially one in which there is a cavity into which the air is blown and whence it passes through a slit-shaped windway. All instruments having such mouthpieces are termed fipple-flutes. G.

The mechanical principle is like that in the flue-pipes in the pipe-organ.

Firing. In English bell-ringing, the simultaneous sounding of all the bells in a peal. G.

First. The interval between the first degree of a scale and itself, or any similar interval, having the vibration-ratio 1/1; also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point; in a standard scale called the tonic or keynote. Also called prime or unison.

The above standard interval is called the perfect first, prime or unison, and is more an identity than an 'interval.' Another interval larger by a chromatic semitone, is the augmented first or prime (ratio 25/24), to which the name unison cannot well be applied.

In the staff-notation, degrees, lines and spaces are numbered from the bottom, the lowest being the first.

In classifying a group of voices or instruments of the same kind, that having the highest pitch is called first. Similarly, the strings of an instrument are numbered from above, the highest in pitch being the first.

In a pipe-organ with more than one manual that belonging to the Great Organ is usually called the first. See also Prima Donna.

Five-toned Scale. See Scale.

Fixed Do, Fixed Syllables. A system of using the solmization-syllables (do (or ut), re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, not with reference to key- or scale-relation, but as the mere equivalent of the letter-names c, d, e, f, g, a, b, any tone called c, for example (including c-sharp and c-flat), being called do or ut, etc.; opposed to movable do and syllables; see Solmization.

The system is most common in Italy, France and Spain, especially in elementary vocal teaching and somewhat in the naming of compositions (as a sonata in la).

Fixed Intonation or Pitch. A term used in describing instruments like the piano, organ, etc., in which the pitch of the tones cannot be changed at the will of the performer; opposed to free intonation or pitch.

Flag. Same as pennant; see Notation.

Flageolet. A small instrument of the whistle or direct-flute class, usually of wood, but occasionally of metal (the tin-whistle), with 6 finger-holes and a compass of about 2 octaves from g upward. It is the modern representative of the old family of fipple-flutes or recorders. G.

In 1802 Wm. Bainbridge of London invented a double flageolet (two tubes of different size placed side by side and sounded through a common mouthpiece), capable of simple duet-effects. Triple flageolets have also been tried.

Flageolet-tones, same as harmonic-tones or harmonics (on certain stringed instruments).

Flat. The sign or character  $\flat$  (originally b rotundum), used in notation to indicate that the pitch-significance of the staff-degree on which it stands (and hence of any note on that degree) is lowered a half-step or semitone; opposed to  $\sharp$  or sharp; see Notation. Hence, as a noun, a tone or note a half-step lower than a given tone (as the flat of a or a-flat), or, on the keyboard, a key (digital) next to the left of a given key (yielding a tone a half-step lower than that of the latter); as an adjective, of tones, below a given or intended pitch, or, of intervals, minor (as compared with major) or diminished (as compared with perfect), or, of keys or tonalities, having flats in the signature; or, as a verb, to produce a tone lower than the given or intended pitch, or, in notation and nomenclature, to attach a flat to a degree, note or note-name (often incorrectly written flatten). Opposed in almost all senses to sharp. G.

In the alphabetic or letter-notation, in which the sign  $\flat$  first appeared, the half-steps gradually recognized as falling within the longer steps of the scale were sometimes regarded as variants of or substitutes for those just above them; thus came the names a-flat, b-flat, d-flat, c-flat and g-flat, all of which, on the modern keyboard, are represented by black keys. This usage was extended to include c-flat and f-flat, which, on the keyboard, are represented by white keys. As black keys also bear names of sharps they are often popularly called sharps and flats.

The double flat,  $\flat\flat$ , has twice the value and effect of a flat, lowering the significance of a staff-degree two half-steps and, on the keyboard, referring to a key next but one to the left of a given key; it is virtually the flat of a flat.

Fling. See Dances.

Florid. Denoting a style of either composition or performance in which embellishments, rapid passages and other decorative details are freely employed. G.

Florid counterpoint is technically that in which the counterpoint is in notes of varying lengths; opposed to strict counterpoint.

Flourish. A trumpet-call or fanfare, as at the approach or entrance of dignitaries. Also sometimes a more or less confused and meaningless sounding of various instruments together as a form of acclamation.

Flue-pipe, Flue-stop, Flue-work. See Pipe-Organ. G.

Flute. An instrument of the pipe-class, having a more or less extended tube of wood or metal with a conical or (now more commonly) cylindrical bore, sounded by a stream of air directed against the edge of a hole in the side of the tube, and with finger-holes by which the pitch of the tones is determined. G.

The essential principle of the flute is the production of tone by the vibration of a flat stream of air directed against a sharp edge, which is the principle of the flue-pipes in an organ. The exact explanation of the principle is somewhat disputed, but it is usually held that the air-stream acts like a free reed, oscillating in and out and thus throwing the air of the tube into vibration.

Flutes of some kind are universal in all lands and ages. They fall into two main classes: (a) sounded by means of a mouthpiece (fipple-flutes) and held vertically or forward from the player's mouth, and (b) sounded by blowing across a hole in the side of the tube and held horizontally or across the player's mouth. The former are direct or beaked flutes (flûtes à bec, schnabelflöten), the latter transverse or cross-flutes (querflöten). To the former belong manifold whistles, recorders, flageolets, etc.; to the latter the modern concert- and orchestral flute. The latter type displaced the former in concerted music early in the 18th century, but was not perfected until about 1830 (by Theobald Boehm). The old direct-flutes or recorders were made in a full family (bass to treble), but the modern form is in but two varieties, the standard and the octave- or piccolo flute. Both of these latter, however, are set or pitched variously to suit different requirements.

The modern flute is made in sections, that with the mouthhole being slightly enlarged and closed by a plug at the left-hand end. The side-holes are usually 14 in number, closed by keys so disposed as to be convenient for the fingers of the two hands; but instruments with fewer holes are often used. The compass is about 3 octaves from c upward, the upper tones being produced by overblowing.

In the orchestra there are two or three flutes (and often a piccolo), standing at the head of the wood-wind division. They are peculiarly valuable because of the varied sonority of their tone, their blending power with other instruments and their capacity for the most brilliant and sparkling effects.

The flute d'amour was an older type, set at a somewhat lower pitch and with a peculiarly mellow tone.

Flute-work. See Pipe-Organ. G.

Fly. In the piano or organ, the hinged cover of the keyboard; a fall.

Foglietto. A conducting-score, usually an abbreviated form of the full score.

Folia, Follia, Folie. See Dances. G.

Folk-Music. In general, music that arises among the common people or peasantry and becomes traditional among them; more specifically, folk-dances, folk-songs, folk-tunes, etc. Its characteristics include artlessness of content and form, detachment from an individual maker or

The recapitulation or reprise may take up the answer and subject in reverse order to that of the exposition or, rather more commonly, in a stretto, the voices entering so rapidly that they overlap and crowd together, so as to build up a strong climax of polyphonic effect. Before the recapitulation, or with the stretto, there may be a prolonged organ-point underneath the web of moving voices. At the end there may be more or less of a coda, prolonging and intensifying the climax.

The fugue was foreshadowed by every systematic effort during the 16th century to develop the use of strict imitation in the a cappella (vocal) style of the period. But it was perfected only gradually during the 17th century and then at first as an instrumental form (especially for the organ), reaching its first culmination in J. S. Bach, early in the 18th. About the same time it began to be applied with power in choral writing as well. Since then it has remained one of the supreme types of composition on its more learned and strenuous side. Though some of its features have been regularized by usage and its handling demands great mastery of strict procedure, its magnitude and general flexibility of structure give large opportunity for original genius of the highest order.

Führer. See Analytical Program.

Full. Denoting that which is complete or without omissions, as full chord, full cadence, full orchestra, etc.

A full anthem is one set for chorus throughout; opposed to a verse anthem, for solo-voices. In organ-playing, full organ means with all the stops drawn (so full great, full swell, full choir for the stops of particular manuals) and full to fifteenth means with all stops (on the Great Organ) except the mixtures and reeds. A full score (of a concerted work) is one with the parts of all the voices and instruments written out completely; see Score.

Fundamental. In acoustics, the generator of a series of harmonics or the first (lowest) of a series of partial-tones. Of chords, the same as root or fundamental bass.

A chord is said to be in fundamental position when its root is in the lowest voice-part. In any key or tonality, the triads of the tonic, dominant and subdominant are sometimes called its fundamental chords or triads.

The harmonic doctrine of a fundamental bass (that is, of referring chords to their roots, irrespective of which of their tones appears in the bass) was first systematically developed by Rameau (from about 1725). Its acoustical soundness of principle was finally established by Helmholtz in his demonstration of combinational tones (about 1860). G.

Furiant. See Dances. G.

Future, Music of the. A rendering of the German Zukunftsmusik, a word satirically coined by Ludwig Bischoff in the Rheinische Musikzeitung, derived from Wagner's essay on Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft (1850). It was later adopted by Wagner in his Zukunftsmusik (1864) and was widely circulated by his partisans as a rallying cry.

G. The alphabetic symbol and name for a certain tone or note and for the scale or key associated with it; see Notation. G.

As an abbreviation, g. stands for gauche and G. sometimes for Great (Grand) or Great Organ.

Gabelklavier. A keyboard instrument like a piano, but with tuning-forks in place of strings, patented in 1882 by Fischer and Fritzsche of Leipzig.

Galanter Stil. In the 18th century, an instrumental style of composition in which there was no effort to carry through a certain number of voice-parts as in a vocal madrigal or motet; opposed to gebundener or strenger Stil; see Voice-Part.

It was the name for a style fully germane to instrumental use as distinct from one merely transferred from vocal use.

Gaillard, Galliard. See Dances. G.

Galop. See Dances. G.

Galoubet. A direct or vertical flute immemorally associated in Provence with a small drum or tambourin. It has a compass of about 2 octaves. Four sizes are made, forming a complete family. G.

Gamba. See Viola da Gamba. G.

Gamma, Gamut. In the medieval hexachord-system, the first or lowest tone of the lowest hexachord was known by the Greek letter-name gamma or  $\Gamma$ , and, being solmized ut, also gamma-ut. Hence the French gamme and the English gamut as terms for scale (the latter loosely extended to compass as well). Gamut has also been applied to the staff and to the key (tonality) of g. See Hexachord, Notation and Solmization. G.

Gassenhauer. In the 16th century, a popular street-song, like the Italian villanella; now used only for a vulgar or rude melody.

Gathering-Note. In Anglican chanting, a term for the arbitrary emphasis or pause on the last (or almost last) syllable in the recitations, designed to enable the singers to begin the cadences together.

Gavotte. See Dances. G.

Gazel, Ghazal. A song or melody in which a short refrain frequently recurs.

The name comes from a type of Persian lyric.

Gebunden. Same as legato; see Terms of Performance. Also, of clavichords, same as fret-free; see Clavichord and Fret.

Gebundener Stil, in the 18th century, an instrumental style in which a certain number of voice-parts are carried through as in vocal writing; opposed to galanter Stil; see Voice-Part.

Geige. The German name for the viol or the violin; hence many compounds, like geigenklavier, geigenprincipal, etc. G.

Generalbass. Same as thorough-bass.

Generator. In chords, same as root. In acoustics, same as fundamental or first partial tone.

Genus. In Greek music, the general term for the form or type of tetrachord, which might be diatonic, chromatic or enharmonic. Also, in modern usage, same as mode (form or type of scale).

German. For German dance, see Dances; for German flute, see Flute; for German sixth, see Sixth.

Gesangbuch. A collection of part-songs or hymn-tunes; in the latter sense also Choralbuch.

Gigue, Giga. See Dances. G.

Gimel, Gymel. In old English vocal music, a term for a form of discant, usually in parallel thirds. Later applied to a passage in which the voices on a single part are divided; opposed to semellus. G.

Giraffe. A form of upright spinet or harpsichord, as used in the 18th century.

Gittern. See Cithara, Guitar and Zither. G.

Glasses, Musical, Glass-Harmonica. See Harmonica.

Glee. A form of part-song for three or more solo-voices, unaccompanied, brilliantly cultivated in England from about 1700. It differs from the earlier madrigal in being in the modern major or minor mode, in being broken up into many brief phrases or strains, conformable to the phrases or lines of the text, and hence in avoiding extended contrapuntal development of a few themes or subjects. Its interest often lies in the abundance of thematic material and in its emphatic rhythm and its characteristic metric figures or patterns. It may include passages in solid harmony, with a predominant melody, but usually the voices move with considerable freedom. It may be divided into two or more distinct sections or movements. G.

The term does not necessarily imply cheerfulness or jocularity; a glee may be serious or even pathetic. Minstrels in general were once called gleemen.

A glee-club is an association of singers to sing glees in the special sense or part-songs in general; the term is often applied to a choral club that sings secular music.

Glissando. See Terms of Performance. G.

Glockenspiel. A set of bells or steel-bars or tubes, tuned diatonically and played with hammers; a bell-piano. Also same as carillon. G.

Gloria in Excelsis. A hymn or canticle used in the liturgies of both the Eastern and Western Churches, usually in the office for Communion, but in the Greek Church also after certain Psalms in lesser services and in the American Prayer Book also as an alternative for the Gloria Patri after the Psalms in Morning and Evening Prayer; often called the Great Doxology or the Angelic Hymn (see below). G.

Its basis is the short song attributed to the angels in Luke ii. 14, and it was first used in this form. But it was soon expanded on lines somewhat parallel to those of the Te Deum. Its complete form begins 'Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis'.

tis.' [It may be noted that the usual English version contains a duplication of the words 'that take away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us,' which is supposed to be due to a printer's error in the Prayer book of 1552.]

Gloria Patri. An ascription or doxology extensively used in the liturgies of both the Eastern and Western Churches; often called the Lesser Doxology.

Its text is 'Gloria Patri et Filio et Spiritui Sancto, sicut erat in principio, et nunc, et semper, et in sæcula sæculorum. Amen.'

Gloria Tibi. An acclamation after the Gospel is announced in the Communion office of both the Eastern and the Western Churches.

Its text is 'Gloria tibi, Domine.'

Gondellied, Gondoliera. See Barcarole.

Gong. A general name for a suspended metal bowl, cup or plate, sounded by means of a hammer, especially as used in Chinese music and in some forms devised for modern orchestral use; a tam-tam. G.

The gong is essentially a bell and is made of similar alloys. In China large gongs play a prominent part in the temple-music. In the form of plates they are occasionally mounted in series on an upright frame. In Burma and Siam small gongs are mounted in series in a circular frame, the player sitting in the middle; popularly called a gong-piano.

In the modern orchestra a gong is sometimes introduced for special effects, and one of the cymbals is also sometimes used as a gong.

Goose. See Couac.

Gorgia. In the 16th century, a vocal trill, slide, run or other embellishment, analogous to the decorative color later common in organ-music.

Gospel Hymns. A general term in America and England for a popular type of religious hymn and tune, analogous to a folk-song.

The title comes from evangelistic hymn-books first issued in 1875 by P. P. Bliss and Ira D. Sankey, the series extending to six numbers (to 1891), and the name is popularly applied to numerous similar collections. Many of these books contain words and music of a cheap and mechanical sort, so that the term is often used derisively. Yet the adoption of these simple melodies, first in America and later in England, as a transient kind of folk-song is somewhat noteworthy. It recalls similar movements at intervals since the rise of Protestantism in the early 16th century.

Gourd-Piano. See Marimba.

Graces. See Embellishments. G.

Gradual. An antiphon or respond sung between the Epistle and the Gospel in the Roman Catholic Mass. Also a service-book containing forms for such use and usually also for other parts of the office; a cantatorium. G.

The name is derived from the fact that it is sung from the step (gradus) of the ambo or reading-desk. The texts used are usually from the Psalms, followed by an Alleluia. See also Tract and Sequence.

The term is often extended to short motets.

Psalms cxx-cxxiv are sometimes called Gradual Psalms instead of Psalms of Degrees or Ascents.

Grand Opera. A term introduced in France about 1820 to designate a type laid out on elaborate lines and without spoken dialogue, usually with a serious text; opposed in some measure to opéra comique. It properly includes or is supplemented by a ballet. See Opera.

Grand Piano. A piano with a wing-shaped or harp-shaped case, the strings running away from the keyboard, as in the earlier harpsichord; opposed to square and upright piano.

Often called simply a grand, the largest and most powerful variety being a concert-grand and small varieties being parlor- or baby-grands.

Such pianos have what is called a grand-action. Most of the digitals have three strings each. There is now usually provided a pedal that shifts the keyboard and hammers enough so as to sound only two (or even one) of these. In addition, there is usually a sustaining-pedal, which prolongs whatever tones are sounding when it is depressed. See Pedal.

Grandsire. In English bell-ringing, one of the traditional methods (perhaps the oldest) of shifting the bells in changes. G.

Grasshopper. See Hopper. G.

Grave. In acoustics, denoting a pitch or tone with relatively slow vibrations; low; opposed to acute or high. Also an indication of a decidedly slow tempo or a work or movement in such tempo. G.

Gravicembalo. See Harpsichord.

Great. For great octave, see Pitch and Octave; for great-organ, see Organ; for great staff, see Notation.

Greek Music. Of the several ancient systems of music that of the Greeks was by far the most highly developed and the only one that has exercised a decided influence upon the evolution of modern music. Unfortunately, however, we know it almost exclusively on its theoretical side, its practical effects being evidenced by only a very few authentic examples. G.

The word 'music' in Greek stood for the total art of expression through verse and song. This art was widely cultivated and practiced as a necessary part of culture, developing at different periods and in different parts of the Greek world into many specific types and forms, epic, lyric, liturgic, dramatic, etc. Its progress and diffusion were promoted by frequent contests at the several 'games' or national festivals held at Olympia, Delphi, Corinth, etc. Its significance probably culminated in the part it played in the Attic drama, tragic and comic, which had more analogy with the modern opera than with the modern theater.

So far as we know, all song was melodic only, for the solo-voice or the unison chorus, but melodies were conceived with a definite sense of the interval- and scale-relations that are central in modern harmony, so that song was implicitly harmonic, though not developed into the union of distinct voice-parts. Among several instruments, two or three varieties of lyre were the most prominent, and on these some harmonic effects may have been attempted. Flutes were frequent, probably doubling the voices or for independent melody.

The metrical and accentual character of the words was doubtless reproduced in the music, long syllables going with long tones and vice versa, but whether this usually established a regular and uniform rhythm or was embodied in a free and elastic cantillation is not clear. Analogy suggests that the latter was the fact.

We have fairly complete statements about the alphabetic notation by which melodies were indicated, but actual examples are pitifully few. The best of these is the noble hymn to Apollo incised on the walls of the Athenian Treasury at Delphi (discovered in 1893).

No extensive account can here be given of the theoretic system. The discussions that have been preserved are voluminous, but not always clear from the modern point of view. The tone series were probably conceived downward (the reverse of the ordinary modern practice). The units of measurement (besides the octave) were, the tetrachord (or fourth, so named because represented on the lyre by four strings) and the tone (the step determined by subtracting two tetrachords from an octave). The standard genus (partition of the tetrachord) was the diatonic (two tones plus a hemitone, roughly like our e-d-c-b), but two others were in use, the chromatic (roughly like e-#c-b) and the enharmonic (involving quarter-tones, somewhat like e-c-b-b). But the diatonic tetrachord had three varieties of tonal arrangement, the Dorian (like e-d-c-b), the Phrygian (like d-c-b-a) and the Lydian (like c-b-a-g). Various species or modes (octave-scales) were recognized, each comprising two tetrachords and a tone, but differing both in the genus (form of the tetrachords) used and in the placing of the tone. Standard species were the Dorian (like e-d-c-b, a-g-f-e), the Phrygian (like d-c-b-a, g-f-e-d) and the Lydian (like c-b-a-g, f-e-d-c), in which the tetrachords were disjunct (separated by the tone), but other forms were recognized in which the tetrachords were conjunct (joined at a common point) and with the tone either at the bottom or the top of the octave (these known by names like hypodorian, mixolydian, etc.). It is a matter of dispute just how far and in what way the modern principle of tonality (conscious association of scale-tones with a central keynote) was recognized and used. Finally, two octave-scales were united into a system corresponding in range to that of the male voice (as from a to a<sub>2</sub>), and each of the 15 tones received names derived from the one of the four tetrachords to which it belonged and from the string of the lyre assigned to it (thus, lichanos meson, 'forefinger string of the middle tetrachord,' etc.). The middle tone was called mesē and served at least as a center, if not as a true keynote. The lowest one was called proslambanomenos or 'added' (since it lay beyond the last tetrachord). All these details of theory are important, not only as indicating the thoroughness with which Greek music was rationalized, but because out of this practical and theoretical system was later developed the Gregorian system of the Middle Ages and thus the basis of modern development. Cf. the hexachord-system (under Hexachord).

It was the desire to recover the poetic and dramatic cantillation of the ancient Greeks that led (from c. 1575) to experiments by the Florentine dilettanti with recitative and thus to the embryonic opera. It was also the study of Greek ideas about the union of poetry, song and action that helped to shape Wagner's operatic theory (from about 1850).

[From the Greek come many terms in modern nomenclature, such as music, melody, harmony, tone, chord, meter, rhythm, acoustics, drama, epic, lyric, hymn, ode, psalm, poem, psalm, liany, chorus, orchestra, organ, lyre, psalter, tympani, cithara (guitar, zither), theme, episode, scene, canon, symphony, program, rhapsody, etc., not to speak of made up words like polyphonic and various names of instruments (like baryton or bathyphon).]

Gregorian Music. A general name for the type of ritual music associated with the liturgy of the Roman Catholic Church; otherwise known as plain-song or plain-chant. It consists of an extensive body of melodies for unison singing, laid out on a system of antique modes (octave-scales) and having no regular rhythm or definite time-structure. It is a form of cantillation or musical declamation adapted primarily to prose texts and, as such, is analogous to ritual cantillation as employed, for example, in the Greco-Russian Church and in Jewish synagogues. But in definiteness of system, in copiousness and variety of forms in use and in influence upon musical history in general it is unique. Its practical application, also, extends without great essential change or break over twelve or perhaps fifteen centuries, besides being somewhat spread throughout most of the world, making it the most venerable of musical institutions. G.

The exact origin and early history of the system remain topics of controversy. It is obvious that the general tonal principles are those of ancient Greek music and it is not unlikely that some of the older melodic forms were borrowed or imitated directly from Byzantine or possibly from Jewish sources. But just when, where and by whom the initial steps were taken is not clear. The liturgy-forming process began in both East and West in the 4th century and this almost certainly included the practice of intoning or cantillation after the ancient fashion. But no adequate and satisfactory historical data for the system in its total magnitude exist till several centuries later.

According to the traditional view, the name 'Gregorian' points to Gregory the Great (Pope in 590-604), who, it is believed, not only adjusted the liturgy substantially as used throughout the Middle Ages, but completed the musical system adopted in Milan by Bishop Ambrose (d. 397), revised the melodies already accepted and added to them, established a school in Rome for training priests and chorists by a uniform method and drafted an antiphonarium to serve as standard for usage everywhere. But the details of this tradition have been extensively challenged. Many scholars hold that the whole ritual system remained in flux till perhaps the 8th century, so that the name 'Gregorian' may refer to Gregory II (d. 731) or Gregory III (d. 741). The rise of the tradition dates from a monkish writer late in the 9th century.

The name 'plain-song' arose when rhythmical and polyphonic music began to develop (c. 12th century), cantus planus being then opposed to cantus mensuralis. This contrast with styles of other character, sacred or secular, became increasingly notable. From 1600 onward plain-song took on an archaic quality and this was heightened by its exclusive association with Latin texts.

The extant melodies, numbering 3500-4000, are of different degrees of antiquity. Some seem to go back to the early Christian centuries (notably the Psalms-tones), some come from the 6-8th centuries (the great body of the antiphons and similar ritual items) and some belong to the early Middle Ages (as the settings of many canticles and fixed formulae in the Mass and of sequences and hymns). They vary greatly in style and magnitude. Some are mere monotonies with casual inflections. Some match each syllable with a tone and move by steps. Others have flowing figures and many skips. Some give the impression of extreme restraint, even austerity, while others are exuberantly floriated. Accents and quantities are determined by the words, and in the best rendering are handled with expressive flexibility.

It is in connection with this system of song that two forms of notation came into use, the one alphabetic (ultimately settling upon the letters a, b, c, d, e, f, g as names and symbols of pitches and tones) and the other stenographic (using all sorts of dots, dashes, slanting strokes, crooks, compound 'ligatures', etc., as pictorial symbols of voice-motions). These latter were called neumes and, when gradually made definite as to pitch by means of a staff and definite as to duration by shape, became the source of the modern staff-notation. In both cases scales and melodies are reckoned from below upward (the reverse of the ancient practice).

The tone-system, as finally completed, included 12 octave-scales, commonly called the church or ecclesiastical modes. They fall into pairs, each pair having the same final (somewhat like a keynote), but one of the pair being authentic (ranging upward from the final) and other plagal (ranging across the final from a fourth below to a fifth above), the range in each case being technically called the ambitus of the mode. In each mode particular tones had special significance, the next in importance after the final being the dominant (chief reciting-tone). For convenience, the modes were represented by letter-names indicating different pitches, but in singing any mode might be used at any pitch. The names adopted are the same as used by the Greeks, but curiously transposed in application. The series is as follows (finals in capitals and dominants in small capitals):

MEDIEVAL NAMES		GREEK NAMES
1. Dorian	D e f g a b c d	Phrygian
2. Hypodorian	a b c d e f g a
3. Phrygian	E f g a b c d e	Dorian
4. Hypophrygian	b c d E f g a b

MEDIEVAL NAMES	GREEK NAMES
5. Lydian	F g a b c d e f Hypolydian
6. Hypolydian	c d e F g a b c Iastian
7. Mixolydian	G a b c d e f g Æolian
8. Hypomixolydian	d e f G a b c d Lydian
9. Æolian	A b c d e f g a
10. Hypæolian	e f g A b c d e
11. Ionian	C d e f g a b c
12. Hypoionian	g a b C d e f g

Plain-song, being in one part only and seldom exceeding a range or ambitus of an octave, has always contented itself with one of the simpler varieties of the staff-notation. The traditional usage is to employ only two or at most three shapes of notes,  $\blacksquare$   $\blacklozenge$   $\blacktriangle$  (roughly indicating the relative length or quantity of the tones), placed upon a 4-line staff, the pitch-significance of which is fixed in each particular case by means of a c-clef (or sometimes an f-clef with a  $\flat$  on the b-degree) that is located on whichever line brings the given melody best within the staff. As there is no regular rhythm, there are no frequent bars, but the end of phrases is marked by bars or checks.

The Gregorian system is the only prescribed form of music in the Roman Catholic Church. It has been extended until it covers the entire body of verbal formulae that have a musical rendering, whether belonging to the Missal or to the Breviary. From the 14th century onward, however, the unisonous plain-song has been freely supplemented by polyphonic settings of the larger and more striking texts, at first and still characteristically a cappella, but more or less susceptible of being instrumentally supported. Beginning in the 15th century, a tendency began to set masses, canticles and motets in forms more or less dramatic, at least utilizing the varied resources of elaborate concert-music. This entire tendency, which grew stronger during the 19th century and often ran to questionable extremes, was checked in 1904 by the Motu proprio of Pius X, ordaining that thereafter only plain-song and the purer and stricter forms of choral music were to be permitted (by choirs of men and boys only).

Following the revision of the Missal and the Breviary by the Council of Trent in the later 16th century, the entire apparatus of musical service-books was codified in the so-called Edictio Medicea (completed in 1614), which has remained standard until recently. Though supported by strong traditions and at times made the object of critical elucidation by many learned scholars the historic validity of this has been attacked and at last overthrown by a species of 'higher criticism,' instituted from about 1860 by the Benedictines of Solesmes. These investigators have demonstrated that the modern usage of the Church in its plain-song does not fairly correspond with the facts of medieval usage, and their position has proved so well supported by evidence that a complete revised edition of the musical service-books, called the Edictio Vaticana, was set on foot in 1904.

It remains to add that the great body of plain-song melodies naturally became the treasury whence were drawn the subjects or themes most used during the entire polyphonic period (14-17th centuries) for contrapuntal treatment. From these melodies, also, were derived directly or by imitation some of the chorale-melodies, or phrases in them, that began to be made in the 16th century for the Psalms and hymns of Protestantism. At many times during subsequent periods composers of various schools have repeatedly utilized them further, either after the ancient choral fashion or for purposes of instrumental development. When used in counterpoint or harmony some retention of their peculiar modality is necessary if they are to preserve their distinctive character. Only as they are thus kept apart from modern forms and idioms do they fully maintain their historic quality as a sort of musical 'Scripture' which needs only to be quoted to be revered.

Groove. In organ-making, one of a series of channels or passages above a wind-chest into which open the valves or pallets operated by the keys of the keyboard and from which compressed air or 'wind' can be distributed to the pipes belonging to those keys. Each groove serves only pipes belonging to a single key. When its valve is open, these pipes sound so far as the sliders of the stops to which they belong are drawn. See Organ.

Ground. A subject or theme for contrapuntal treatment; a cantus firmus. G.

When a theme of 4-8 measures is used in consecutive repetitions as the bass of a composition, it is called a ground-bass, fundamental bass, basso ostinato, pes, etc. Such a bass is characteristic of the chaconne and the passacaglia.

Group. A small set of rapid tones or notes, especially such as appear in certain embellishments and forms of figuration; sometimes called gruppetto; a compound grace-note. Also one of the deviations from regular rhythmic subdivision; see Note-Groups. Also a division or section of a band or orchestra, comprising instruments of some one kind, as the wood-wind group.

Guaracha. See Dances.

Gudok. An old Russian viol with three strings, somewhat resembling a 'cello.

Gue. An old form of viol with two horsehair strings, played like a 'cello, once used in the Shetland Islands.

Guida. In counterpoint, same as subject, dur, antecedent, etc.; see Canon and Fugue. Also, in notation, same as direct or as presa.

Guide. See Analytical Program.

Guide-Main. See Chiroplast.

Guidonian Hand. A mnemonic or pedagogic device, attributed to Guido d'Arezzo (11th century), consisting of a hand-shaped diagram, marked at the tips and joints of the fingers with the syllable-names used in the hexachord-system. cf. Aretinian Syllables. G.

Guilds, Musicians'. See Meistersinger, Minstrel and Town-Musician.

Guitar. An instrument of the lute-class, in its typical form associated with Spain, but related to similar forms elsewhere, having an 8-shaped body with flat front and back, a rather broad fretted neck and usually 6 strings (3 of gut and 3 of silk overspun with silver wire), the normal tuning being e<sub>2</sub>-a<sub>2</sub>-d<sub>3</sub>-g<sub>3</sub>-b<sub>3</sub>-e and the compass  $3\frac{1}{2}$  octaves. The pitch can be raised a semitone by a capotasto, facilitating the use of certain keys. The music is written an octave above the actual pitch. G.

It is supposed to be of Oriental origin, introduced into the West by the Moors. It became extremely fashionable throughout Europe in the 18th century. Old instruments often have ten or more strings, tuned in pairs. Most Italian forms have wire strings. In Portugal the small 4-stringed machete, tuned an octave higher, is the popular form. Guitars differ from mandolins in being played by the fingers alone.

Gusla. A Serbian viol, having a bowl-shaped body of hollowed wood, a belly of parchment and a single string of horsehair.

Gusli. An old Russian instrument of the zither-class, sometimes with but 5-7 strings (somewhat like the Finnish kantele), sometimes with larger dimensions and 18-32 strings (in the 14-15th centuries known as the gusli-psaltyr), and (in the 18th cent.) also made with a keyboard and a form like that of the clavichord.

H

H. The German name and symbol for b; see Notation. G.

As an abbreviation, h. stands for hand and (in organ-music) for heel.

Habanera. See Dances. G.

Half-. For half-cadence or half-close, see Cadence; for half-note or minim, see Notation; for half-shift, see Shift; for half-step, half-tone or semitone, see Interval, Step and Tone; for half-stop, see Stop and Organ.

Hallelujah. See Alleluia. G.

Halling. See Dances. G.

Hammer. The implement by which the strings of any form of dulcimer are struck, or the corresponding part of the mechanism or action of a piano; see Dulcimer and Piano. G.

In the modern piano, the hammers consist of a slender shank, hinged at one end (either directly or by means of a butt) to the action-rail and having at the other end a head, which is covered with glued layers of leather and felt. In a grand-piano the head terminates below in a heel or catcher which is caught by the check when the hammer rebounds.

Hammerklavier, an old name for the piano.

Hanacca. See Dances.

Handle-Piano. A piano fitted with a studded barrel (like the barrel- or hand-organ) for actuating the hammers and played by turning a handle or crank; also called street-piano.

Hand-Note. In playing the horn, a tone whose pitch and quality are affected by inserting the hand in the bell; a stopped tone.

Hardanger Fiedel. An old form of viola d'amore, used in Norway, having 4 strings on the fingerboard and 4 sympathetic strings.

Harmonic (adjective). Pertaining to or involved in harmony in general or simultaneous tones in particular; opposed to melodic and also sometimes to contrapuntal or rhythmic. Also, in acoustics, pertaining to harmonics or partial-tones. G.

For harmonic figuration, see Broken Chords. For harmonic minor, see Minor and Scale. For harmonic stop (harmonic flute, harmonic reed, etc), see Organ.

Harmonic (noun). Same as partial-tone or overtone; see Acoustics. Also, in instruments of the viol-, lute- and harp-classes, a tone secured after lightly touching one of the nodes of the string to be sounded, so as to force it to vibrate in segments (rather than as a whole) and to yield one of its harmonics or partial-tones rather than its fundamental or normal tone; such tones are also called harmonic or flageolet-tones (also designated flautato). G.

If the string thus touched is 'open,' the harmonic is called natural, but if the string is 'stopped' as well as touched, the harmonic is called artificial.

Harmonica. A term variously applied in naming different kinds of instruments. In English it is most often used in one of two senses, viz.: (a) for a graduated and tuned set of thirty or more glass bowls, mounted on a horizontal axis or spindle so that they can be kept in revolution by means of a treadle (their lower edges passing through a pan of water) and sounded by pressing the fingers against their moistened edges; and (b) for a set of small free reeds, mounted in a small wooden or metallic box, with orifices on one edge so grouped that they can be sounded by the breath (exhaled or inhaled) as they are moved from side to side between the lips. G.

The first instrument (also called glass-harmonica or musical glasses) was devised in the above form by Benjamin Franklin in England about 1760. It embodies the principle of friction on glass which had been known and utilized for at least a century before, but not so as to be feasible for varied artistic effects. Franklin's arrangement provided a true instrument, which continued popular for more than half a century, with several performers of great dexterity, especially after a keyboard was added (from about 1785), and with considerable music specially written for it (as by Mozart, Beethoven, J. G. Naumann, etc.). Its artistic value lay in the purity and stability of its intonation, the crystalline quality of the tones and its capacity for delicate gradations of force. At Darmstadt it was for a time regularly used in the court-orchestra.

The second instrument (also called mouth-harmonica or mouth-organ), though commonly regarded as little more than a popular toy, is an interesting application of the principle employed in the accordion and concertina (the former called ziehharmonika in German).

The name harmonica has also been given to several types of percussive instruments in which graded sets of wooden, glass-, stone- or metal-plates or strips are mounted so as to be struck by hand-hammers, as in the xylophone (German names include glasslabharmonika, holzharmonika, stahlharmonika, steinharmonika, etc.).

Harmonichord. One of the many forms of bogenklavier or piano-violin. G.

Harmonici. See under Canonici.

Harmonicon. Same as mouth-harmonica or orchestron.

Harmonicor. See Harmoniphon.

Harmonicum. An improved form of bandonion, having an accordion-body so mounted in a case that it can be blown by means of treadles and played from an ordinary keyboard. It was invented in 1893 by Brendel and Klösser in Saxony.

Harmonie. A German term for a group of wind-instruments (a wind-band) or music for such instruments (Harmoniemusik). G.

Harmonietrompete, a metal-instrument intermediate in form between the horn and the trumpet, invented in Germany early in the 19th century.

Harmoniphon. An instrument, invented in 1837 by Panis of Paris, consisting of a set of reed-pipes controlled by a keyboard and blown by means of a single mouthpiece; as it simulated the oboe-tone, it was called in Germany klavieroboe. Also a similar form with clarinet-tubes, invented by Jaulin of Paris; also called harmonicor.

Harmonium. The English name for one type of the reed-organ (q. v.), distinguished from what is called in England the 'American organ' by being sounded by a compression-bellows instead of an exhaust-bellows. Also used for reed-organs in general. G.

Harmony. As a general term, music or any agreeable combination of tones. More exactly, any simultaneous sounding of tones as opposed to melody, or concord as opposed to discord. So far as composition may be separated into vertical and horizontal aspects, harmony designates or regards the former as counterpoint does the latter. Hence, technically, the art of forming and connecting chords so as to produce logical and effective artistic results. G.

Technical harmony, at least in any developed sense, belongs wholly to modern music. It is true that some interesting instances of it occur in primitive music and may be found outside the bounds of modern culture. No doubt, also, every scale and melody whose intervals are selected through some instinct for tone-relation is implicitly harmonic, so that harmonic principles are apparent in most folk-music and even throughout the early or contrapuntal era of artistic composition. Yet the definite recognition of chords as constituting musical units of a peculiar kind was delayed till the 15-16th centuries. This recognition seems to have been due to the accumulating body of contrapuntal works in which harmonic effects were being instinctively multiplied and to the increasing use of instruments like the lute, the clavicord and the portable organ, on which chord-constructions could readily be produced and studied. During the 16th century popular or folk-music began to modify artistic thought and praxis, bringing in many elements that favored a change from a contrapuntal to a harmonic center.

This transfer of attention and effort was accelerated during the 17th century and led, after 1700, especially as the new science of acoustics began to take shape, to formal harmonic theories and systems. About the middle of the 18th century came a distinct shift in all composition to forms that were frankly and predominantly harmonic. Hence, in modern musical pedagogy, harmony as a discipline precedes counterpoint, though the essential interdependence of the two is fully recognized. The foundations of formal harmony were naturally laid in the procedures of vocal music, but there has been an increasing tendency to broaden and modify them so to fit the genius and conditions of instrumental style as well. Recently, also, several notable efforts have been made to revolutionize or at least restate the whole subject either on novel premises or with novel logic.

The chordal structure or harmony of a piece is often defined by various descriptive terms. It is three-part, four-part, etc., according to the number of voice-parts employed. It is simple when not more than one of the essential chord-tones is doubled, but compound if two or more of these tones are doubled. It is close when the voice-parts lie as near together as the structure of the chords will allow, but open, extended, etc., when they are so separated that any one of them, if transposed an octave, would fall between two others. It is diatonic when only the tones of a given major or minor key are used, but chromatic when other tones appear. It is plain when only essential tones and chords are used, but figured when suspensions, passing-notes, etc., are used for melodic and rhythmic enrichment or when foreign tones and derived chords are freely introduced. It is strict when accepted rules of chord-formation and voice-progression are followed, but free or false otherwise. It is pure or just when performed in pure or just intonation, but tempered when in tempered intonation. For pedagogical purposes, also, the study is sometimes divided into analytical harmony or harmonic analysis, which subjects examples to dissection so as to ascertain and define their harmonic structure, and synthetic or practical harmony, which trains the student in actual writing, either with a given bass or given melody or with some given formula or outline.

For various technical definitions and distinctions, see Chord, Motion, Progression, Part-Writing, Anticipation, Suspension, Passing-Note, Tonality, Modulation, Cadence, etc., and for harmonic notation see Thorough-bass and also Tonic Sol-Fa.

The problems of practical harmony may be variously stated. The basal material includes triads and seventh-chords on each of the seven tones of the scale, with their respective inversions—a total of nearly fifty forms, which, however, vary greatly in character and actual utility, all but six of the triads (in their primary positions), if the scale be major, or five, if it be minor, being dependent and hence usable only in the course of progression. This material may be somewhat extended by certain altered chords or by either a distinct modulation from the given key into some other or the borrowing for a passing effect of some chord from another (related) key. While every chord has a character of its own, depending both on its type (major, minor, etc.) and on its relation to the key, that character, especially when the chord is inverted in any way, is generally subject to intricate modifications by circumstances, as by what precedes and follows, by whether it is accented or not, and by the influence of melodic drifts in the constituent voice-parts. Hence arise many rules or maxims of chord-succession and of voice-motion expressing the sum of experience or usage. Numerous procedures occur that have the quality of formula, especially in connection with the cadences by which phrases are ended or with the transitions involved in modulation. Inasmuch as every harmonic passage has its contrapuntal aspect (in the mutual relations of the voice-parts as melodies), chord-succession is always affected by the interior melody. But most harmonic writing is attached to a predominant melody, usually in the upper voice-part, which not only gives contour to the whole, but dictates in some degree what the chord-structure shall be. Furthermore, this melody, or the total form adopted, may present rhythmic or metric features that greatly influence both the choice of chords and their progressions. Beyond all this, modulation offers a large array of varying possibilities in connection with all the elements. It is evident, therefore, that practical harmony presents both intricacy and fascination. Though it has established modes of action that amount to grammatical rules or accepted idioms, in its larger range it has the flexibility and potency both of rhetoric and of eloquence. In modern music it has become on the whole chief among the great constituents of musical expression, though its headship is always exercised in due co-ordination with melody and form.

Harp. A typical class of stringed instrument, characterized by having many strings attached at one end to the resonance-box and stretched in an open frame so that they can be twanged or plucked by the fingers from before or behind. In some form it is one of the most widely diffused of all types. Most Oriental forms have a bow-shaped frame, but elsewhere and in all forms used in modern music the frame is more or less triangular. As the pitch of the tones depends wholly on the size, length and tension of the strings, and is not altered by 'stopping,' the number of strings depends on how many tones are desired. The sonority and richness of the tone depends chiefly on the shape, size and material of the resonance-box. Its importance arises largely from the fact that its relatively many strings are played by the player's two hands, so that full harmony is possible. Indeed, it is characteristically a chordal, rather than a melodic, instrument. G.

The modern orchestral harp has nearly 50 gut-strings, tuned diatonically from  $c_2$  about  $6\frac{1}{2}$  octaves upward. The frame rests on the pedestal, which contains the pedals, the large, hollow body or back rising obliquely from this, with the soundboard as its upper face, to which the lower ends of the strings are attached, the transverse neck above, with the wrest-pins to which the upper ends of the strings are fastened and by which they are tuned, and the upright pillar joining the outer end of the neck with the pedestal. The modern form has seven pedals, each double-acting, so contrived that certain strings can be shortened and their pitch raised a semitone or a tone and the instrument thus set in any desired key. The pedal-action is carried up through the pillar and operates ingenious revolving disks and studs attached to the neck. The fingering remains the same whatever the key. The mechanical improvements involved in the pedal-action were first undertaken about 1720 and were completed in 1810 by Érard of Paris. Harps with a full chromatic stringing and no pedals are also made, but lack the simplicity of the more usual form.

All ethnic, ancient and medieval members of the harp-class had comparatively few strings and were confined to a single key. But the modern Welsh and Irish have instruments of notable size and capacity. Some of these are double or triple (with two or three distinct sets of strings).

Throughout northern Europe harpers and their music seem to have had peculiar honor from time immemorial. The word 'harp' is Teutonic in derivation and may imply that this European development was indigenous, independent of analogous developments in other parts of the world.

The characteristic way of playing chords on the harp is with the tones in a quick ascending succession rather than simultaneously; this has given rise to the term arpeggio ('in harp-fashion') as applied to similar effects on other instruments. Harmonic tones can be produced by lightly touching the strings at one of their nodes.

Harp-way tuning, in the viola da gamba, is an arbitrary tuning (scordatura) of the strings to facilitate executing certain arpeggios.

Harp-pedal, in the piano, same as soft pedal.

For Æolian Harp, Couched Harp and Dital Harp (Harp-lute), see the terms.

Harpsichord. A keyboard-instrument much used during the 16-18th centuries and, with the clavichord, one of the precursors of the piano. It was essentially a keyboard-psaltery or zither (rather than a keyboard-harp, as its name would imply). Other names are clavicembalo, gravicembalo (or simply cembalo), etc.; small forms with the same essential mechanism were called spinnet or virginal. G.

Externally, the harpsichord was wing-shaped, like the later grand-piano (whence the German name flügel). Occasionally it was made in an upright form, called clavictherium. In many instances the instrument proper was removable from its case, especially when the latter was ornate.

Internally, the keyboard (or keyboards) occupied the shorter of the straight sides. The gut or wire strings were stretched over the soundboard longitudinally (at right angles to the keyboard). In small instruments there were 1-2 strings to the key, in large ones 2-4. In principle, the action consisted simply of a series of upright jacks (standing between the strings), each with a spine or quill projecting laterally so as to engage and pluck the strings and also with a soft damper to check their vibration. Pressing a key raised the corresponding jack and twanged the strings—the motion required being somewhat firm and positive (to avoid merely 'blocking' the quill against the strings). Varieties of tone-quality were secured by having more than one set of jacks, fitted with quills of different materials—wood or hard leather as well as quill. Usually in such cases there was a separate keyboard for each set of jacks, so that two or three keyboards were not uncommon. Sometimes changes of quality and also changes in the number of strings affected were controlled by means of stop-levers (as in the organ).

The tone was somewhat nasal, but in the best instruments resembled that of the harp or zither. It blended well with the tone of orchestral instruments. The most serious disadvantage was that it could not be greatly modified in loudness.

Throughout the 17-18th centuries the harpsichord was universally used in all kinds of concerted music, in accompanying the solo-voice or a solo-instrument, in every species of small instrumental ensemble and in every form of orchestra (including that for the opera). Prior to the time when the details of harmonic accompaniment were fully elaborated otherwise, the cembalist was expected to supply harmonies more or less according to his judgment from a figured bass (basso continuo).

He therefore acted as conductor, not only regulating the tempo, but often guiding the vocal and instrumental parts as required. This use of the instrument continued until nearly 1800.

The compass of the harpsichord was usually from four to six octaves. Many experiments were made with more than the normal number of keys to the octave, so as to avoid the harshness of tune outside of the small circle of favored tonalities. Some of these necessitated using 5-6 rows of keys.

Hausmusik ('house-music'). A term formerly used for all forms of music intended for private or domestic use rather than for the concert or the stage; somewhat imperfectly covered by the later term salon-music.

Hautbois, Hautboy. See Oboe.

Head. In instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, the upper part of the projecting neck, containing the peg-box and tuning-pegs and usually carried out into an ornamental scroll. Also, in the bow used for viols of every sort, the upper or outer end or point; opposed to heel. Also, in drums, the elastic membrane stretched over the open body. Also, in notes, the oval part whose position on the staff marks the intended pitch; opposed to stem or tail; see Notation.

Head-Register, Head-Tone, Head-Voice. Terms used to designate vocalization or vocal tones so produced as to magnify resonance in the head; opposed to chest-register, tone and voice. See Vocalization. G.

Heckelphon. A baritone-oboe, invented by Wilhelm Heckel of Biebrich in 1905, followed in 1909 by his Heckelphon-Clarinet, which has a cylindrical bore.

Heel. In instruments of the violin-family, the wooden elbow or brace fastening the neck to the body. Also, in the bow used for viols of every sort, the lower or inner end, that held by the player's hand; opposed to head or point.

Helicon. A form of contrabass-tuba; see Tuba.

Hemi-. A prefix signifying either half- or minor.

In Greek music, the hemitone or limma was the remainder left from the interval of the fourth after subtracting two 'tones,' namely, 256/243, which is slightly smaller than the modern semitone. Sometimes the limma was called the diatonic hemitone in distinction from the apotome or chromatic hemitone. Hemidiapente and hemiditone were the minor (diminished) fifth and the minor third respectively.

Hemidemisemiquaver. See Notation.

Hemiolia. In medieval music, the interval of the fifth or a doublet (two notes in place of three). In more modern usage, a triplet (three notes in place of two). G.

Its use for the fifth arose from the fact that taking two-thirds of a string-length gives the interval.

Hemispherical Mouthpiece. See Cupped Mouthpiece.

Heptachord. An instrument with seven strings. Also the interval of the seventh. Also a scale of seven tones to the octave, as in the modern major and minor scales; a heptatonic scale; see Scale and Septonate.

Heroic. Denoting that which celebrates or befits a hero; grand, imposing, noble.

Hexachord. An instrument with six strings. Also the interval of the sixth. Also a series of six tones, regarded as a unit. G.

The hexachord-system, often attributed to Guido d'Arezzo (11th century), was the basis of the conception and practice of solmization (q. v.). It assumed a general series of tones from g to e', distributed into seven similar and interlocking groups of six tones each, the tones of which were named ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la (from the initial syllables of a hymn to John the Baptist)—two of them using the tone b-flat instead of b. The successive tones were then named by the letter-name plus whatever syllables occurred in all the hexachords involved.

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
e'	.	.	.	.	.	.	la
d'	.	.	.	.	.	la	sol
c'	.	.	.	.	.	sol	fa
b	.	.	.	.	.	.	mi
b<sup>b</sup>	.	.	.	.	.	fa
a	.	.	.	.	la	mi	re
g	.	.	.	.	sol	re	ut
f	.	.	.	.	fa	ut
e	.	.	.	la	mi
d	.	.	la	sol	re
c	.	.	sol	fa	ut
b<sup>b</sup>	.	.	.	mi
b	.	.	fa
a<sub>1</sub>	.	la	mi	re
g<sub>1</sub>	.	sol	re	ut
f<sub>1</sub>	.	fa	ut
e<sub>1</sub>	la	mi
d<sub>1</sub>	sol	re
c<sub>1</sub>	fa	ut
b<sub>2</sub>	mi
a<sub>2</sub>	re

I = g<sub>2</sub> ut

The 1st, 4th and 7th hexachords were called durum (because with b durum [b-natural]), the 3d and 6th molle (because with b molle or rotundum [b-flat]) and the 2d and 5th naturale (because without either b).

This tone-system is longer than the Greek system and partitioned on a different principle. From the 16th century it was gradually set aside in favor of octave-scales, but its influence is somewhat traceable till after 1700.

Hey. Either same as country-dance or a figure in such a dance; see Dances. G.

Hidden Fifths and Octaves. See Fifth, Octave and Motion. G.

High. Of pitch, acute; denoting tones produced by relatively quick vibrations; opposed to low or grave.

The medieval and modern use of the metaphors of 'high' and 'low' as regards pitch seems to be the reverse of ancient usage. The latter was derived from the lyre, which was held with its graver strings above and the acuter ones below. It is not clear what occasioned the change of conception in the early Middle Ages.

Hirmos, Hirmus. In the Greco-Russian liturgy, the first strophe or stanza of an 'ode,' its meter and melody serving as a model for the other stanzas.

History, Musical. The field of music-history includes the whole range of facts that can be ascertained in all periods and countries. For obvious reasons, however, its chief concern is with the course of development leading to the elaborate and highly-organized art as found among the peoples of the modern culture. Within this specific field the accent of attention falls on the processes, forms and products of composition, the instruments and other implements, the character and purposes of performance, the personal agency of composers, interpreters and teachers, the body of literature accumulating about the practice of the art and the educational and commercial enterprises involved in its progress. The function of the historian is to investigate this area of fact, or some substantial part of it, so as to disclose and summarize in logical fashion what are the main lines of advance and achievement and thus to stimulate and direct comprehensive thinking about it.

As in all analogous subjects, it is important to distinguish between music-history as a body of objective facts and music-histories as efforts to report upon those facts. And to some extent it is also well to distinguish between the minute and technical research required to secure precise statements of the facts and the more reflective and philosophical codification of the results of research with reference to the culture of general inquirers. The work of scientific investigation is the task of those now called musicologists, while the other is the function of historians. Both investigation and the writing of histories began in the latter part of the 18th century, but the fuller development of both lines of effort waited till about 1850, when the general interest in historical method that characterized the 19th century began to affect the field of music. Since then the accumulations of both critical and expository material have become enormous—utterly bewildering if one tries to master all details, but emphatically illuminating if he seizes on the main currents of development that sweep these into orderly progress.

Almost all historical summaries include more or less about the vast field of Musical Ethnology or Ethnic Music, which lies outside of the geographical range of modern European culture. It includes both the music of numerous primitive or nature-peoples in all parts of the world and the more conscious art of races like the Chinese, the Hindus, the Arabs and their several relatives. From the Orient European music doubtless derived several of its instrumental types. And in both Oriental and primitive music may be found conceptions and processes analogous to those in which modern music had its origin in prehistoric times.

Among the types of Ancient Music known to us the Egyptian and the Greek are the most significant, since with them began the rational analysis of tone-materials and relations, as well as the studied employment of forms akin to ours. Ancient Hebrew music has little intrinsic importance; it was probably a blend of Egyptian and Babylonian usages. Roman music simply continued that of the Greeks, but with some improvements in practical detail. Byzantine music was ancient in origin, but medieval in development; it served as the principal bridge by which Greek theory and practice were brought over into modern art. Through Byzantium, also, may have come some suggestions affecting the growth of the drama.

In the long Medieval Period (roughly from the 4th to the 16th centuries) the outstanding topics are (1) the settling and spread of the Gregorian system of liturgical song, the influence of which remained potent until after 1600 and which is still vital to a certain extent, (2) the gradual evolution of a practical graphic method of notation, beginning with the indefinite and variable neumes and ending with the essential elements of the modern staff-notation, (3) the rise of a positive conception of composition, at first only in the way of vocal polyphony, but giving promise of the modern notions of harmonic construction as well, and (4) the fruitful instinct for secular song as illustrated by the Troubadours of France and the Minnesinger of Germany, with successors in France and Italy.

The Middle Ages closed with a period of strong transition, often called by the name Renaissance, to which belong in music-history (1) the energetic perfecting of the art of a cappella vocal polyphony by several generations of church-musicians in Western Europe (chiefly Flanders and England) and, in the 16th century, its transference to Italy and southern Germany, (2) the parallel, but at first less influential, growth from the 14th century of artistic mastery of secular song with accompaniment in France and northern Italy (the so-called ars nova), (3) the application of the art of printing to the production of musical literature (from about 1500), and (4) the shift of leadership in musical development during the 16th century from scholastic ecclesiastical music to the free styles of secular music, with consequent changes in the dominant theoretic system, an intense interest in instruments and the birth of several new forms.

The period following 1600 and running to about 1750 applied the innovations of the Renaissance most brilliantly in (1) the creation and rapid expansion of the opera (with its pendent, the oratorio), which not only linked music firmly with the drama, but exerted a powerful stimulus on the specialties of solo-singing and orchestral accompaniment, besides creating a widespread popular demand for music as a social entertainment, (2) the steady improvement of many instruments, especially the viol-family and two or three forms with a keyboard, so that instrumental resources, technique and characteristic forms began to rival those already in use in the vocal field, (3) the strong expansion of Protestant choir- and organ-music in Germany, culminating in a second great contrapuntal style, no longer only a cappella and strict, but adopting, especially under Bach, a majestic freedom of texture and spirit, and (4) the emergence of the modern doctrines of scale, harmony and form into definite shape, with the beginning of scientific acoustics, of tuning keyboard-instruments in equal temperament, etc. Towards the end of the period the instrumental virtuoso becomes a notable figure in many places and the social institution of the concert establishes itself as a public power. The modern distinctions between church-music, dramatic music, concert-music, chamber-music and house-music were already evident.

About 1750 there set in a series of remarkable movements of transformation which brought in the styles most characteristic of the modern period proper. Central among these was the shift of attention in composition from the polyphonic or contrapuntal point of view to that which is prevailingly monophonic and harmonic, with the associated exaltation of song and dance-types of form. Along with this went the rapid perfecting of the modern orchestra, with the violin-group as the nucleus, the stimulating influence toward progress radiating at the start from Mannheim, but before long centering largely at Vienna. The so-called 'classical school' of instrumental composers adopted the sonata as a sort of consummate type. From about 1775 the piano began to take the place of the harpsichord as the ruling keyboard-instrument. The wide sway of the mechanical Neapolitan opera was successfully challenged by the daring idealism of Gluck, while innovations like the Italian opera buffa, the French opéra bouffe and the English and German song-plays added materially to the range of dramatic effort. In general, the tendency of the 18th century was toward external regularity and precision in all kinds of art, with the accent upon objective charm and formal symmetry, but at its end, with the violent changes taking place in the social order, there were signs of novel developments to come.

The 19th century is by far the richest period hitherto, its complexity and abundance defying any brief statement. It is safe to say that the two dominating figures among composers are Beethoven and Wagner, the first working in the first quarter of the century and the second most influential in its last quarter (though in action before 1850). Before 1850 the most notable phenomenon, perhaps, was the altogether fresh accent upon high individuality and freedom upon the warmth and peculiarity of personal expression, and upon intensity of imagination and sentiment—those qualities in art that are comprehended under the rather elusive term 'romanticism.' Thus subjectivity more and more replaced the older etiquette of style and conventional-gate way to independent invention. The beautiful wealth in the field of the song rapidly disclosed itself. The opera diverged into the contrasted paths of the French opéra comique, the German romantic opera, the clever tunefulness of the new Italian form and the pretentious dignity of the 'grand' opera. Orchestral music attained an unexampled breadth and grandeur in the hands of a series of German masters. The piano displayed extraordinary capacity for both lyric and heroic expression, calling forth a multitude of powerful composers and performers. Musical education and scholarship began to take their place as cultural forces, and the popular dissemination of musical interest and intelligence led to a new valuation of musical art in its relation to social life. Throughout the first half of the century the strongest impulses to progress radiated from Germany as a center, but with important movements in creation and appreciation in several other countries.

The second half of the century witnessed the far-reaching controversies provoked by Wagner and his circle. One of these concerned the antithesis between 'program-music' and 'absolute music.' Another related to the office of the opera, at least in its more exalted ideal. Another was the tendency to extreme complexity and elaboration in orchestral style. Meanwhile fertile lines of new effort were opening on every side in the fields of national style. The several countries came into prominence at different times and in different ways, but by 1900 France, Italy, Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, Russia, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, the Low Countries, England and the United States had all shown in a greater or less degree their latent capacity for advance, each in its own way and in accordance with its national genius. In Germany a portentous amount of activity went on, often with fruits of high distinction, but her past leadership was in process of distribution. Thus the essential cosmopolitanism of music was impressively demonstrated.

Toward the end of the 19th century and since there has been some tendency to throw emphasis upon restless efforts after novelty, sometimes in the direction of a dreamy 'impressionism,' sometimes in the search of a theatric 'realism' or 'verism' and sometimes in the exploitation of the alleged excellence of cacophony. Just what is to be the permanent residuum only time can reveal. It is enough to realize that music has now established itself as by far the most universal and potent of the organized artistic interests of modern life. It is clearly one of the urgent expressions of the spirit of that life. It may find ways to mould that spirit to a higher nobility and grace.

Hocket. In early counterpoint, a treatment of a passage in which the ordinary continuity is broken by frequent abrupt pauses in the voice-parts, one after another, producing a halting or spasmodic effect; or a passage thus treated. G.

Hold. See Notation.

Homophone. A tone or key (digital) having the same pitch as another, but differently named and noted.

On the keyboard every key is named and noted in two or three ways, though the tone produced remains the same. Thus f-sharp, g-flat and e-double-sharp are said to be homophones of each other.

Homophony. In old usage, composition or performance in unison throughout, rather than in antiphony. In modern usage, composition in which one voice-part (usually the upper) predominates as the principal melody, the other parts supporting or accompanying it mainly in harmonic or chord-effects; opposed to polyphony, in which all parts have prominence in turn, with evolutions that are contrapuntal and imitative rather than chordal. Also called monophony and sometimes monody. G.

The song is the typical homophonic form. Down to about 1600 the prevailing style in composition was polyphonic. With the rise of the dramatic solo this style began to be replaced by a homophonic style. From about 1750 the homophonic conception was extended to instrumental forms generally. Hence the sonata, which then became the ruling large form, is homophonic, as opposed, for example, to the fugue, which is essentially polyphonic.

Hook. Same as pennant; see Notation.

Hopper. In the piano-action, the intermediate piece (with or without its accessory parts) that serves to transmit the motion of the key-tail to the hammer-butt, so as to throw the hammer-head against the string; also called grasshopper or sticker. G.

The upper end of the hopper is so adjusted that after giving its impulse it slips out of alignment, allowing the hammer to fall even though the hopper remains raised. This adjustment constitutes the escapement.

Horizontal. See Vertical.

Horn. A general name for all wind-instruments with a fairly long conical tube and sounded by blowing into the small end in such a way that the vibration of the lips sets the air in the tube into vibration. To facilitate the lip-action there is almost always a conical or socket-shaped mouthpiece. The pitch of the tones is taken from the natural harmonics of the tube and the selection is determined either by the combined breath-pressure and lip-tension or by these with the aid of mechanical devices that alter the acoustical length of the tube. In this general sense, horns are distinguished from flutes and reed-instruments, constituting a large and important class. Horn and trumpet are sometimes used more or less interchangeably, but sometimes they are applied specifically to different families in the general class. G.

The typical horn is an instrument made from the horn of an animal, as for signaling in war or the chase. In imitation of this numerous forms of wooden or ivory horns have been used. For musical purposes horns of metal are much more important.

In such horns a practical scale is obtainable only when the tube is at least eight or nine feet long. Hence, for convenience of handling, the tube is bent in convolutions. It expands at the outer end into a flaring bell. The characteristic horn-mouthpiece differs from that of the trumpet in being much more like a funnel than a hemispherical cup.

The modern orchestral horn or French horn is a much-elongated and refined hunting-horn (corno di caccia), the fundamental tube being 12 or more feet long, convoluted into a compact circle with mouthpiece and bell projecting on opposite sides. The bore of the tube increases very gradually until the flare of the bell is reached, but in its middle portion it is usually cylindrical, so as to facilitate alteration of its total length by slipping in various crooks, which are loops of tubing that add from one to several feet to the main tube and lower the fundamental pitch by various degrees. As many as 16 such crooks are made, but ordinarily only 8-10 are used, the one to be selected for a given piece or passage being indicated at the outset. Whatever be the pitch chosen, the tube may be made to yield a scale consisting of the natural harmonics of its fundamental tone from the second to the sixteenth (a total range of 3 octaves, but with wide gaps except in the upper octave). But the practical scale is much increased by means of the device of stopping, that is, inserting the hand into the bell (as a loose conical plug); the half-stop lowering the pitch of any tone by a semitone, the whole-stop by a tone, while slight modifications or temperings of the pitch can be made by less insertion. Music for the horn is written in the key of C, but the sounds produced depend on the key in which the instrument happens to be pitched. In the orchestra horns are usually employed in pairs or quartets.

In addition to the above natural or hand-horns, valve-horns are also much used, these having certain crooks permanently attached in such a way that pressing a piston or lever opens a valve into a given crook and temporarily alters the tube-length. Such instruments have a much greater practical scale than the others, but the quality of the tone is apt to lose something in purity and refinement.

The horn in something like its modern form came into the orchestra in the later 17th century, becoming common after 1750. Its notable capacity for rich and varied color, for both tender and majestic expression, has been diligently utilized by all important composers since Weber and Beethoven.

For English horn, see Oboe.

The name horn is also used for various conical and wide-mouthed tubes, as for certain reed-pipes in the organ, for the amplifying-trumpet attached to phonographs, etc.

Horn-band or Russian horn-band, a special form of wind-band, developed from about 1755 by the Bohemian Mareš (Maresch), then in court-employment at Petrograd. It consisted of a graded series of hunting-horns (about 9 in. to 12 ft.), each giving one tone. As many players were required as there were tones to be used, a compass of 3 octaves (with chromatics) calling for about 35 players. In spite of the difficulties of coordination, music of much complexity was possible and even effective.

Hornpipe. See Dances. G.

Hosanna, Osanna [Heb. hoshiah-na, 'save, I pray!']. An acclamation, originally of entreaty, but later of adoration, in the Mass appended to the Sanctus and repeated after the Benedictus. G.

It comes from the Passover service as recorded in Ps.cxviii.25 and from the story of Christ's entry into Jerusalem in Matt.xxi.9.15, Mark xi.9-10, John xii.13. In the Mass its text (from the latter) is 'Hosanna in excelsis.'

Hour-Bell. In a peal or chime of bells, the bell used for striking the hours; usually same as tenor-bell.

Humoresque, Humoreske. Properly, an instrumental piece of a droll or humorous character, but often used for a short, fanciful caprice. G.

Hurdy-gurdy. A peculiar form of stringed instrument, popular in the Middle Ages and still found in rustic use in some parts of Europe or as an implement for street-music. G.

Its body was pear-shaped, like the viol and lute, but there is no extended neck, what corresponds to the latter being mounted on the upper part of the body. There are 4-6 strings, of which 2 are chanterelles, running over the fingerboard, the others being drones (called bourdon, mouche and trompette). The melody-strings are tuned in unison and are stopped, not by the finger, but by tangents actuated by small keys in a sort of keyboard. The drones are tuned in fifths, one pair or another being used according to the key adopted. All the strings are sounded by the friction of the rosined edge of a small wooden wheel, set in the front of the body and revolved at right angles to the strings by a crank at the bottom of the body. In some modern specimens sympathetic strings are added to increase sonority.

At one time it was much used for church-music, but was later replaced by various forms of portable or positive organs. During the 18th century it had considerable vogue in France, so that it was made on a much-enlarged scale, compositions for it being supplied by several composers and at least two methods prepared.

In the 10th century the name was organistrum. Later it became armonie, symphonie (chifonie), sambuca, zampugna, etc. The modern French name is vielle and

FAMILY OF FLUTES
(Transverse)

FAMILY OF RECORDERS
(Vertical Flutes)

the German bauernleier (lyra rustica), drehleier or bettlerleier.

Hydraulus. A form of pipe-organ, said to have been invented by Ktesibios of Alexandria (probably about 175 B.C., perhaps earlier) and described by Hero of Alexandria (probably two centuries later) and others. G.

Its name came from the fact that the wind-supply was secured by ingenious applications of water-statics in both feeders and reservoir. Much light on its whole construction was thrown in 1885 by the discovery at Carthage of a clay model of such an organ. See article by Maclean in the I.M.G. Sammelbde. vi (1904).

Hymn. In general, any religious poem of lyric character; an ode; as the Vedic hymns, the hymns of Pindar, etc. Specifically, a poem designed for use in connection with Christian worship, normally in metrical and stanzaic form and thus adapted for congregational singing. G.

The Greek word probably implies song, as the analogous Hebrew word psalm seems to imply the use of instruments, but both terms are properly literary rather than musical.

In Col. iii. 16 and Eph. v. 19 the phrase 'psalms and hymns and spiritual songs' suggests the use of three kinds of poem in early Christian circles, 'psalms' probably meaning the Old Testament poems adopted from the Jewish synagogue, while 'hymns' and 'spiritual songs' apparently point to two new kinds of poem devised for Christian use. Of these there seem to be several traces in the New Testament.

From early centuries came scattered illustrations of such poetry, including the Te Deum, the two Glorias, the so-called 'Lamp-lighting Hymn,' Clement's 'Hymn of the Saviour,' etc. The more definite series of hymnists begins in the East with Ephrem Syrus (d. 373) and in the West with Hilary of Poitiers (d. 368), followed by the important Ambrose of Milan (d. 397). Greek hymnody was especially enriched in the 7-9th centuries by odes and canons still in use. Latin hymnody reached its greatest productiveness somewhat later, in the Missal appearing in the form called sequence (from its place after the Gradual) and in the manifold Breviaries under the name hymn. While the number of such poems retained in the later revisions of the Latin service-books was not large, the total number known runs to perhaps 3500.

Though the earliest Christian hymns were in prose, the Latin writers soon adopted the accentual and rhythmical verse (often with rhyme and so with couplet- and stanza-structure) which became the standard for mediæval and modern poetry (in contrast with the literary usage of antiquity). Thus mediæval hymnody was akin in form to popular poetry generally and open to analogous musical treatment. But it was essentially clerical, produced by ecclesiastics and mostly employed in monastic circles.

The Reformation (from about 1520) seized upon hymnody as the chief practical means of popular religious expression. In the Lutheran circles of Germany hymns proper multiplied rapidly during the 16th and 17th centuries, but in the Reformed churches of Switzerland, the Rhine Valley, Holland and England metrical versions of the Psalms were the rule. In England free hymnody had no vogue until introduced among Independents by Watts in 1707 and among Methodists by the Wesleys from about 1740, gaining no foothold in the Church of England till still later. Since 1800 the production and use of hymns have been universal among all branches of English Protestantism.

The treasures of hymn-literature have been interchanged in the various countries involved by means of translations, paraphrases and imitations, so that hymnody now has a singularly cosmopolitan character, besides forming a majestic demonstration of essential unity of spirit and sentiment between all Christian communions. Through missionary enterprise it has been spread into all corners of the world, constantly tending to arouse independent production in all languages.

There is no way of knowing exactly how many hymns and similar poems have become matters of record. The number has been estimated as over 400,000; it may run close to a half-million. Perhaps half of these have been made objects of historical study and classification.

For the ritual hymns of the Greek and Latin Churches melodies were provided similar in texture to those used for other ritual exercises. But in the Latin Church the tendency of hymns to adopt accentual and strophical versification brought the Gregorian melodies for them more or less close to the instinctive types of popular song. Just as the Gregorian psalm-tones were designed to be used over and over to successive verses of the text, so the hymn-melodies were repeated for successive stanzas. This is parallel to folk-song practice generally. Stanzaic repetition of the melody is now universally characteristic of musical hymnody in its congregational applications.

Protestantism tended from the first to adopt existing folk-songs and similar melodies for both hymns and versified Psalms and the musical type thus established has continued ever since. But various changes in form and treatment have occurred in each of the most active of the branches of Protestantism. In both Lutheran and Reformed usage the early melodies were varied in rhythmical and metrical structure, adapted to a considerable range of verse-forms. But in the 17th century a tendency set in to reduce melodies to an even-noted monotony, which then came to be thought standard for both the German chorale and the English Psalm-tune. At various times and in diverse ways reactions have set in that have reasserted the folk-song freedom and vivacity. Among these the highly-wrought part-song tunes of the Anglican Church in the 19th century are particularly notable, while the crude songs of early Methodism and the evangelistic melodies attached to evangelistic verses like the American 'Gospel Hymns' represent another grade of reaction.

In the Latin Church the technical name for a collection of hymns is hymnarium or hymnary. The standard German name is choralbuch. The modern English name is hymn-book or hymnal, but the older term was psalm-book (or psalter).

The scientific and historical study of the entire field is known as hymnology.

The form of hymn-tunes depends on the verse-forms to which they belong. German hymnody has always had considerable variety in the length and internal structure of stanzas. The same variety marked the early hymnody of the Reformed churches, though less in degree. But in England after a short time iambic verses became almost supreme, in lines of not more than eight syllables and in stanzas mostly of but four lines. In the 17th century the prevailing patterns (all iambic) were those later called Common Meter (C. M.), with the syllable-formula 8-6-8-6, Long Meter (L. M.), with the formula 8-8-8-8, Short Meter (S. M.), with the formula 6-6-8-6, and some six-line or eight-line variants. Trochaic meters were not used until the time of the Wesleys. During the 19th century there was a great extension of variety in the verse-forms adopted, so that in a modern hymnal there may be more than a hundred forms represented. As each of these requires a special form of tune, the corresponding variety of music has become conspicuous.

Iastian Mode. See Ionian Mode.

Ictus. Same as accent or stress.

Idea. A term somewhat variously used to designate a structural unit, usually melodic, but often involving harmony as well, such as is otherwise called figure, motif, phrase, strain, subject, theme, etc. G.

Idyl, Idyll. A name applied to an instrumental or choral work of a pastoral, romantic or sentimental character.

Imbrogllo. A passage in which the voice-parts are in conflicting and confusing rhythm and meter with respect to each other. G.

Imitation. In composition, especially in counterpoint, the process, act or result of making one voice-part repeat or copy the motion and intervals of another part either exactly or in some determinate manner. Specifically, such repetition or likeness when applied to a given theme or subject, as in the canon or the fugue. G.

The theme and its imitation are known as antecedent and subsequent, subject and answer, dux and comes, etc. The imitation may be strict or free, according as it adheres closely to certain recognized rules or departs from them (even to the extent of offering only an altered resemblance or a mere reminiscence). As to pitch-relation to the theme, imitation is said to be at the unison, at the octave, at the fifth or at whatever interval there is between the opening of each. As to method, imitation is canonic when the time-values and the intervals of the theme are duplicated (also called exact or direct), but inverted or by inversion when upward intervals or steps in the theme are represented by corresponding downward ones and vice versa, by reversion, retrograde or cancrizzans when the theme is taken backwards (occasionally by inversion and reversion at once), by augmentation when the time-values of the notes in the theme are systematically increased (usually doubled) and by diminution when those time-values are systematically decreased (usually halved).

Imitation is always one of the chief elements of interest and effectiveness in contrapuntal writing. When applied to the principal theme or subject in a fugue it serves not only to propose this as a tonal topic in both tonic and dominant relations, but later (in the development) to disclose some of its latent possibilities through one or more of the special redispersions of intervals above noted. Imitation also plays an important part in much writing that is not strongly contrapuntal, but is then apt to be free in method and often transient and irregular in application, perhaps merely suggesting in brief what is not carried out in full.

Though the term is technically only used of melodic repetition as between individual voice-parts, there are analogous harmonic effects, as in the reiterated chord-formula in a sequence or in a cadence-rhyme.

Imitative Music. Music in which technical imitation (see above) is conspicuous. Also, and more commonly, music in which non-musical sounds are copied or simulated; see Program-Music.

Imperfect. See under Perfect. G.

Impresario. The manager or director of an opera-house or an opera-troupe; sometimes applied also to the conductor in such a house or troupe, and (rarely) to a trainer or coach for opera-singers.

Impromptu. An improvisation. Also a work in a more or less impulsive and irregular form, as if improvised; a term applied to many instrumental pieces otherwise called caprices, fantasias, etc. G.

Improperia. The series of versicles and responses sung after the Gospel in the Good Friday service of the Roman Catholic Church; the Reproaches. G.

They consist of a series of upbraidings addressed by Christ to His people, reminding them of past gifts and mercies and demanding a reason for their faithlessness. In the Sistine Chapel a setting by Palestrina has been used for these since 1560; elsewhere Gregorian melodies are generally used. [See a setting of part of them in Gounod's Redemption.]

Improvise, Improvisation. Terms applied to a performance of music not previously composed or memorized, but conceived and executed at the moment. G.

The terms are often applied to a performance without notes that has been mentally prepared beforehand. But they properly belong to the spontaneous and extemporaneous treatment of a theme or form without preparation. The practice was common throughout the 18th century as a test of musicianship and in its truly artistic form is far from disused now, especially in organ-playing.

Improvisation is also used in the sense of impromptu.

Inch. As a unit of measure for wind-pressure in the organ, see under Wind and Organ.

Incidental Music. Music designed to be performed in connection with a theatrical play, either outside the action proper or as an embellishment of the action. G.

The term has no fixed meaning. It may denote an overture and entr'actes performed before the curtain rises and in the intervals between the acts. It has been used for the musical part of a melodrama (the running accompaniment of a spoken text). But its more common use is for such casual instrumental pieces and songs as were frequent in the drama of the 16-17th centuries (as in Shakespeare), and at many periods since, which serve as part of the total mise en scène without attracting great attention to themselves; or for still more pretentious instrumental pieces, like marches, dances, entrées, serenades, etc., inserted for vividness of impression. Incidental music in this sense has a certain kinship with the idea of the singspiel and the ballad-opera, as well as with some varieties of operetta and vaudeville. The term, however, is most commonly applied to pieces devised to accompany plays of poetic importance.

Independent. In harmony, denoting a chord that is consonant and requires no resolution; opposed to dependent.

Infinite Canon. See Canon.

Inflection. In general, a melodic shift of pitch in the speaking voice that occurs within the syllables of a word or a word-group, by its form indicating a shade of meaning and purpose otherwise indistinct. Hence, in cantillation, especially Gregorian, a melodic deviation from the prevailing monotone to mark the end of clauses and phrases; see Accentus. G.

Ingressa. See Introit.

Inharmonic Relation. See false relation under False.

Initial. In Gregorian music, one of the tones in a mode with which a melody in that mode may begin. Most of the modes have two or more such tones. G.

Inner Parts, Inner Voices. In harmony, the voice-parts other than the highest and the lowest (which are the outer parts); in ordinary 4-part writing, the alto and tenor; also called interior parts or voices.

Inner pedal, a pedal- or organ-point in the inner parts; see Organ-Point.

In nomine. In old English music, a title used both for certain antiphons or short motets and for organ- or virginal-pieces. G.

The term is supposed to come from an introit, antiphon or Psalm beginning with words like 'In nomine Jesu' or 'In nomine tuo.' It may be derived from the formula used with the sign of the Cross (as at the opening of the Mass), 'In nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritui Sancti.'

A fuga in nomine is a fugue that is free, irregular and hence 'nominal.'

Inscription. The technical term for a motto, sign or other device placed at the head of a canon that is not fully written out, nominally to indicate its intended resolution, but often to render it more enigmatic; see Canon. G.

Instruments. In producing musical tones men have always sought to devise mechanical apparatus to assist and supplement what they undertake vocally. All such implements are technically called instruments. Their primary purpose is to enable the one who uses them to extend the range and diversify the character of tonal effect without detaching it from himself or relinquishing the power to direct it as his own expression. Thus viewed, even the mechanism of the human voice, though largely instinctive and unconscious in action, is properly to be regarded as an instrument. Ideally, therefore, an instrument is a tool or implement rather than a machine, even though some instruments are so extensive and complicated as to have great interest as machines. But the distinction has importance as regards true instruments in comparison with mechanical appliances for the automatic reproduction of musical effects; see Automatic Appliances. G.

One of the striking features in a survey of primitive and semicivilized life everywhere is the fact that musical instruments abound and receive peculiar attention as to both construction and decoration. Among the objects found in connection with the vestiges of prehistoric man are flutes of bone. Even nature-peoples who have few other implements are seldom without devices for making music. The exuberant fancy of the Orient has exhibited itself copiously in this direction, and from the Orient, as well as out of its own ingenuity, the medieval European world came to possess a multiplicity of forms that in turn became the ancestors of modern instruments. Artistic progress has tended always to reduce the total number of types, but to refine and perfect these with utmost care. So it comes about that in a representative collection or catalogue of instruments those of importance to modern art are far outnumbered by those from outside the circle of advanced culture.

Every instrument involves four essential elements that are useful for definition and classification. These are (a) a vibratile body of solid material or of confined air, (b) provision for increasing sonority and influencing quality by resonance, (c) a vibration-producing agency to set the vibratile body in action, and (d) appliances connected with this to regulate pitch, force, duration and quality in the tones produced. Using these as bases for classification, instruments may be described (a) as pneumatic (the principal stops in a pipe-organ, flute, flageolet), stringed (harp, violin, zither, piano), longued or reed- (oboe, clarinet, reed-organ, the reed-stops in a pipe-organ), tympanic (drum, tambourine, zylophone), or vibrating entire (bell, gong, tuning-fork), (b) as depending on the sonority of an air-column confined in a tube (practically all so-called wind-instruments, including those named pneumatic and longued above), on that of a resonance-box or body of whatever shape (viols, lutes, harps, drums, marimba), on that of a soundboard or resonance-plate (piano, zither), and on some other devices hard to classify, (c) as flatile or in-flatile, blown either by the breath (flute, horn, bassoon), by air mechanically compressed and directed (organ, concertina, bagpipe), or even by the wind (æolian harp), percussive or pulsatile, struck by the hand or a hammer of some sort (drums, bells, piano), or struck together (cymbals, clappers), plucked or twanged, pulled aside and then released, whether with the finger or some form of plectrum (harp, lute, harpsichord, music-box), or fricative, rubbed by the finger (musical glasses), by a bow (all viols or bowed instruments), or by a wheel (hurdy-gurdy), and (d) as harmonic, the scale depending on the natural harmonics of a confined air-column (horns, trumpets), of free intonation, depending (mostly) on the player's action in 'stopping' (violin and its modern relatives), of intonation partly harmonic and partly determined by means of side-holes (flute, clarinet ocarina), or valves that change the effective length of the air-column (saxhorns, cornet, trombone), fretted, so that the action of 'stopping' is largely predetermined in effect (lute, guitar), or of fixed intonation, the several vibratile bodies being tuned or otherwise adjusted so as to be used without change in pitch on the player's part (harp, lyre, all so-called keyboard-instruments). The keyboard constitutes a modern application to several varieties of instruments that is of conspicuous mechanical and artistic importance; see Keyboard.

Further divisions of a general character are between instruments that belong to primitive life or to peoples outside the main European circle (a class that may be called ethnic or exotic) and those belonging more directly to the historic evolution of modern European culture; between instruments that are essentially popular (folk-instruments) and those that have become objects of concentrated artistic or professional improvement and application; between solo and concerted instruments, the one adapted to produce a single tone at a time (or little more) and the other designed to produce harmony and counterpoint as well. The instruments now ranked as orchestral are commonly grouped in divisions or groups—the strings (violins, violas, 'cellos, double-basses), the wood-wind (flutes and piccolo, oboes, English horn and bassoons, clarinet and basset-horn), the brass-wind (French horns, trumpets, trombones, tuba, etc.) and the percussives (tympani, bass-drum, cymbals, triangle, etc.), with usually also a harp outside the classification, as well as a piano (in concertos). Band-instruments belong to the last three of these classes (omitting the strings).

For special purposes and especially in comprehensive treatises on the subject and in the arrangement and cataloguing of great collections many other distinctions are naturally made.

One who plays upon an instrument (of any kind) is an instrumentalist; opposed to vocalist or singer.

Music conceived, composed or arranged for or in the special style appropriate to instruments is instrumental; opposed to vocal, choral, etc.

Instruments, Collections of. From time to time enthusiasts about particular instruments, such as the violin or the piano, have made important collections of specimens that illustrate the work of different makers and the advance in perfection from period to period. Not until comparatively recently, however, have collections been gathered on a more comprehensive plan, aiming to present many types, from all countries and representing the instrument-making impulse both within and without the circle of European culture. These greater museums, with their catalogues and the many technical discussions that they have stimulated, have set the whole subject in its true place as one of the significant branches of ethnological craftsmanship, quite aside from its special interest to the musician. In addition to these permanent collections, many temporary exhibitions of instruments have been arranged, sometimes as features in international expositions. G (Musical Instruments).

Of the many permanent collections now found in different parts of the world (more than 100 in all), the following are probably the most important because of scope and classification (some notes added as to date and author of catalogues, if published):

- Paris (Conservatory): Chouquet, Pillaut, 1884-94.
- Brussels (Conservatory): Mahillon, 1893-1912.
- Berlin (Royal Collection): Fleischer, 1892.
- Vienna (Musikfreunde (Imperial Museum): 1901.
- Cologne (Heyer Museum): Kinsky, 1919-12.
- Copenhagen (Industrial Museum): Hammerich, 1911.
- London (So. Kensington): C. Engel, 1874; (Royal College of Music).
- Munich (Nat. Museum): Bierdimpff, 1883.
- Petrograd (Conservatory): 1884.
- Moscow (Conservatory).
- Stockholm (Museum): 1902.
- Milan (Conservatory).
- Rome (Accad. S. Cecilia).
- New York (Metro. Museum): Brown, Morris, 1902-14.
- Washington (Nat. Museum).
- Ann Arbor (Univ. of Mich.): Stanley, 1918-21.

Among the special exhibitions, the most notable have been those at London in 1872, 1885, 1890, 1900 and 1904, at Paris in 1878, 1889 and 1900, at Milan in 1881, at Bologna in 1838, at Vienna in 1892 (the largest of all), etc.

Instrumentation. The art, process or result of composing or arranging music for performance upon instruments, especially for a body or group like an orchestra or military band; orchestration. G.

In its modern development instrumentation includes the selection of instruments to be employed in a given piece, division or passage, the recognition of the special capacities and limitations of such instruments in the form and distribution of their particular parts, the dextrous use of tone-qualities individually and in all kinds of combinations, large and small, not only with reference to general considerations like clarity of impression, variety and contrast, the building up of climaxes and the like, but so as to display and proclaim with artistic force the general progress of ideas and the train of feeling contained in the conception, and, finally, the reduction of all this to an actual written form or score (scoring).

The orchestra and the art of orchestration have developed together, each reacting on the other. In the modern sense they may be said to have begun about 1750. But both existed in rudimentary form from early in the 17th century. Certain masters have exerted exceptional influence on the modern development, notably Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn, Berlioz, Wagner, Tchaikovsky, Strauss, etc. Progress has been much affected by the perfecting of certain instruments or the extension of their technique, as well as by manifold experiments with their handling and combination.

Interference. In acoustics, the general name for phenomena arising when two sets of vibrations differing in rate or phase are brought together so as to modify the intensity of the resultant sound.

Thus two tones of precisely the same pitch and phase reinforce each other, but, if their phase be different, under certain conditions they annihilate each other.

If they differ in pitch by a small amount, beats result (periodic reinforcements when the vibrations most nearly coincide). The acoustical phenomena are analogous to corresponding optical and electrical phenomena.

Interior. See Inner.

Interlude. Same as intermezzo. Also an instrumental passage between the phrases or sections of a song or aria; a ritornello. Also, in church-music, an instrumental passage or piece between the stanzas or verses of a hymn or Psalm or between various exercises in a service; sometimes called a voluntary. G.

In Germany, interludes are not uncommonly inserted between the lines of a chorale.

Intermezzo. Originally, an entr'acte or divertissement between the acts of a play. More specifically, a musical play, the acts of which were intercalated between the acts of a serious opera. Also, in instrumental works like the suite, the sonata and the symphony, a movement inserted in addition to the regular or usual series of movements. G.

In the 16th century intermezzi (or intermedi) were usually madrigals or a song with instruments in madrigal-style. But from about 1615 they began to take on features of a slight and often humorous drama. In either case their topic was disconnected with that of the play or opera with which they were used. Throughout the 17th century they increased in popularity and became a recognized foil or complement of the established opera seria. After 1700 they gave rise to the independent opera buffa, an early and popular example being Pergolesi's famous Sera Padrona (1733). Light or comic operas continued sometimes to be called intermezzi long afterwards.

Interrupted Cadence. See Cadence.

Interval. In acoustics and harmony, the difference in pitch between two tones, often called (metaphorically) the 'distance' between them. G.

Physically, an interval is defined by the ratio between the vibration-numbers of the two tones (for a table of common intervals, see Acoustics), but practically it is customary to use a concrete case as an illustration (usually starting from the tone c). If the relative size of an interval is to be represented visually or in diagram, it must be plotted in proportion to the logarithm of its ratio (see diagram under Scale).

An interval is harmonic if its tones occur or are considered simultaneously, but melodic if they occur in succession. It is simple if it does not exceed an octave, but otherwise compound (then reducible to simple form by subtracting one or more octaves). It is standard if it corresponds to one of the intervals in the standard major or minor scale; and may be further defined as pure (just) or tempered according to the tuning adopted for those scales. For details as to numerical and other technical names, see Acoustics and Scale.

In acoustical discussions many more intervals are sometimes required than are recognized in practical harmony. For a list of 120 tones within an octave and their interval-relations with the fundamental tone, see Riemann, Musiklexikon, under 'Tonbestimmung.'

Intonation. In general, the process, act or result of forming or producing tones with the voice; phonation. Also the method of using the voice in speech or song with reference to pitch and sometimes quality; in part equivalent to inflection. Specifically, vocal or instrumental pitch as related to an exact or ideal standard, being further designated as pure, just or tuer as opposed to tempered or false, or as free as opposed to fixed. See Temperament. G.

Instruments with a keyboard, like the piano and organ, are instruments of fixed intonation because the pitch of the tones produced cannot be changed at the will of the player, while a violin, for example, is an instrument of free intonation, the pitch of the tones being determined by the player's preliminary tuning and by 'stopping.'

In Gregorian music, the two or more tones at the opening of certain melodies that lead up to the reciting-tone or recitation.

The intonation is usually sung by the priest alone, the choir joining in the recitation. Its form varies with the mode used, with the text or with the season.

Intone, Intoning. The delivery of words with musical tones, but more after the general fashion of speech than after that of song, especially if largely or wholly in monotone. See Cantillation and Chant. G.

Intrada. An instrumental piece designed to accompany the entrance of distinguished personages or a procession at a civic or social function; an entrée. Hence the prelude or introduction to a play or opera or to some scene in such a drama. Hence, also, an introductory movement in a suite or similar work. G.

Introduction. A passage or movement at the beginning of either a vocal or instrumental work that leads up to its first principal division; a prelude or overture; cf. intrada. G.

Introit. The psalm or antiphon with which the Roman Mass properly begins. Hence an introductory sentence, anthem or hymn sung at the opening of a service, whether or not that of the Communion. G.

The text of the introit varies with the day. Formerly a whole Psalm was used. It is followed by the Gloria Patri, after which the introit is repeated. The usage in the Greek Church is more elaborate. Other names for the introit are ingressa (Ambrosian use), prælegere (Gallican) and officium (Mozarabic, etc.); sometimes, also, invitatory (old Roman).

Invention. A short instrumental piece, usually contrapuntal, in which a single figure or theme is treated without much elaboration, after the manner of an impromptu or a study. G.

Inversion. The process, act or result of altering the form or disposition of an interval, chord or subject by transposing one or more of its tones. G.

When an interval is inverted by transposing one or the other of its tones an octave, it becomes another interval. Thus a fifth and a fourth are mutually inversions of each other. Perfect intervals remain perfect in inversion, but major intervals become minor, augmented become diminished and vice versa.

A triad or chord is said to be inverted when any of its tones other than the root is at the bottom. The disposition of the tones in the upper parts is immaterial. When the third of the chord is at the bottom, the chord is said to be in the first inversion (otherwise called second position or chord of the sixth). When the fifth is at the bottom, it is in the second inversion (third position or chord of the fourth). In the case of seventh-chords, the second and third inversions also bear the names of chords of six-five and six-four-three (or four-three) respectively, while the third inversion (with the seventh at the bottom) is also called the chord of the second (or of six-four-two or four-two). Inversion may also be predicated of ninth-chords, etc. See Chord, Triad and Thorough-Bass.

In counterpoint, a subject is said to be inverted when it is repeated with its upward steps taken downward and vice versa, the imitation being then by inversion or by contrary motion. In double counterpoint (with two subjects that appear together), inversion consists in transposing one across the other by an octave or other interval, so that the upper becomes the lower and vice versa. This latter is known as invertible counterpoint. See Counterpoint and Imitation.

An inverted organ- or pedal-point is one that occurs in some other than the lowest voice-part.

Invitatory. An old name for introit. Also any antiphon or formula of exhortation to praise, such as the Venite (Psalm 95) or the versicle and response 'Praise ye the Lord', 'The Lord's name be praised.'

In the Roman Church the antiphon preceding the Venite is also called the invitatory, and in the Greek Church the antiphon 'O come, let us worship,' preceding the Psalms.

Ionian Mode. See Mode and Gregorian Music. G.

Italian Sixth. See Sixth.

Jack. In the clavichord and harpsichord, the upright piece of wood standing on the tail of a key or digital, carrying the device by which the corresponding string or strings are sounded. Also the hopper or sticker in the action of the piano. G.

In the clavichord the jack carried a metal edge or tangent that was pressed and held against the string. In the harpsichord it was longer, so as to project past the string, and was fitted on the side with a spine of quill, leather or wood which twanged the string as it moved upward and which, being set on a hinged rocker, slipped past the string as it moved back. The harpsichord-jack also carried a damper at the top to check vibration when the key was released. In the piano the jack is the upright piece in the complex of parts above the key-tail by which the impulse of the key is brought to bear on the hammer-butt and the hammer thrown up or forward against the string; see Hopper.

Jaleo. See Dances.

Janizary Music. A bizarre form of military band and its music, the instruments including several drums, cymbals, triangles, a piccolo and one or two shrill oboes; also called Turkish music. G.

Its name and form were derived from the music associated with the military force called Janizaries that was maintained from the 14th century until its suppression in 1826 as the Sultan's body-guard and the nucleus of the Turkish army.

Janákó Keyboard. See Keyboard.

Jew's-harp, Jew's-trump. A small popular instrument consisting of a rigid iron frame and a slender, flexible tongue of iron or steel, fixed at one end to the back of the frame and playing at the other between its jaws. The free end of the tongue is bent at right angles, so that it can be twanged by the finger. It is played by being placed in the mouth, the frame resting against the teeth. The pitch of the tones is modified by changing the resonance-cavity of the mouth. G.

The proper tone of the tongue is low, but its adjustment to the mouth-cavity calls out either its own harmonics or the tones of the cavity. Instruments of this sort are found not only in various parts of Europe, but in the Far East. The English name may be due to its introduction by Jewish traders; it has also been conjectured to be a corruption of jaw's-harp. The French name is trompe or guimbarde and the German maul-trommel or brummeisen.

At intervals in the later 18th century and the early 19th expert players appeared who produced remarkable effects with Jew's-harps of varying size. The most famous of these was the Würtemberger Charles Eulenstein (1902-1890), who was active in Great Britain from about 1825, using a set of 16 instruments.

Jig. See Dances.

Jodel. See Yodel.

Jongleurs. Itinerant minstrels or entertainers, common in France in the Middle Ages and in England after the Norman Conquest. They were miscellaneous players (joculators), not only clever in singing and with instruments, but often tricksters and sleight-of-hand performers (jugglers).

They were not seldom utilized by the poet-musicians known as Troubadours and Trouvères, and were historically important as the medium by which melodies were conveyed from place to place, as well as somewhat modified to suit popular taste. They also spread the knowledge of various small instruments. But they tended to become mere mountebanks and to require restraint as objectionable tramps.

Jorram. A form of boat-song found in some parts of Scotland. G.

Jota. See Dances. G.

Jubilate. A canticle or its musical setting, the text taken from Psalm 100, that is used in the Morning Prayer of the Anglican Church as an alternative for the Benedictus. G.

The text begins, 'O be joyful in the Lord, all ye lands' (Jubilate Deo, omnis terra).

Jubilatio, Jubilus. In Gregorian music, a melodic cadence or coda often appended to the Alleluia after the Gradual; a pneuma. Hence any extended phrase or roulade sung to a single vowel; a perielesis.

Just. Of pitch or intonation in general or of a particular tone or interval, exact, right, pure or correct; opposed in general to false, impure, etc., and specifically to tempered. G.

K

Kammer-. An element in many German terms and titles connected with the historic practice by royal and noble personages of maintaining as part of their private retinue a body of musicians (collectively known as a capelle, cognate with cappella, chapelle and chapel in other languages) and often of conferring titles of honor, with certain duties and rights, on individuals not held in constant service. See Chamber and Chapel.

Thus kammermusik means either music designed for such courtly use (opposed to church-music, operatic music, concert-music) or the collective body of musicians employed to supply it. One who regularly takes part in it may be styled kammermusiker or kammer-sänger. A kammerkomponist or kammervirtuos might not be in constant service. In modern times terms of this class have been much used as honors or titles of distinction, without stated duties.

Associated with the above are kammermusik in the sense of chamber-music as a class, kammerstyl for the style of such music and kammerton for the usual pitch at which ensemble instrumental music was played (see under Pitch).

Kanoon, Qanun. An Oriental form of zither, having a trapezoidal body and usually a large number of gut and overspun strings, arranged in sets of 2-4 and stretched over two bridges that rest on the soundboard.

Kantele. A Finnish instrument of the zither-class, usually with 5-13 wire strings.

It is closely related to the Russian guski, the Lettish kankles, the Estonian kannel and some varieties of dulcimer.

Kapelle, Kapellmeister. See Kammer-, Chamber, Cappella and Chapel. G.

Kemangeh, Kemanjeh. A small Arab viol with a body made usually of a calabash or a cocoonut-shell, a slender wooden neck, 2-4 strings and a projecting foot of wood or iron, by which the player rests it on the ground as he plays.

Kent Bugle. A bugle with the scale extended by means of keys; a key-bugle; also called royal Kent bugle; see Bugle. G.

It was invented by Kälbel of Petrograd in 1770, but perhaps independently by Halliday of Dublin in 1810. Its name is said to have come from its being used before the Duke of Kent.

Kettledrum. The form of drum most suitable for orchestral use, because capable of being accurately tuned. It is used in sets of two or three (usually called the timpani), tuned to different pitches as indicated by the composer (usually, if two, the tonic and the dominant). G.

The body is a hemispherical kettle of copper or brass, resting on a tripod, and the large head of parchment (24-30 inches across) is secured by an iron ring and tensed as desired by screws or cords. It is sounded by two elastic sticks with small, soft heads. The player is called kettledrummer or timpanist.

Key (mechanical). In wind-instruments, especially those made of wood, a finger-lever operating a small, padded lid or pallet that is adjusted to close or open a vent or hole in the side of the tube and thus to determine the pitch of the tone produced. It takes the place of the direct action of the finger and makes it possible to utilize holes that are located beyond the easy reach of the hand. Thus keys serve both to extend the available compass and to simplify fingering. Some keys normally stand open and some closed. Operating them alters the effective length of the air-column in the tube either by increasing or diminishing it directly or by affecting the formation of nodes. G.

Until about 1800 keys were rare and few on most of the wood-wind group (except the bassoon), but after that time were steadily increased. Theobald Boehm introduced a new system on the flute about 1832 and later extended it to the oboe, clarinet and their relatives.

In brass-wind instruments the use of finger-holes has always been limited and so that of keys is small. But they are found in some bugles, trumpets and other horns and are extensively illustrated in the saxophone and the sarrusophone (both made of metal, but modeled like wood-wind instruments). Any instrument with keys may be named key- or keyed, as key-bugle, keyed trumpet.

In instruments of the violin-family, a finger-lever adjusted so as to effect the 'stopping' of a string in place of the finger; usually called a key-stop.

A violin fitted with such keys is a key-stop violin. A similar device is used in the klavier-violoncello invented by Vlamincq of Brussels in 1893.

In instruments with many strings stretched over a soundboard (mostly of the zither- or dulcimer-classes) and also in the complex wind-instruments known as organs, one of the finger- or foot-levers (digitals or pedals) constituting the playing-apparatus called a keyboard (see below).

All keyboard-instruments proper are distinguished from the several keyed instruments named above by being adapted to produce harmonic as well as melodic effects, so that they may be called ensemble-instruments rather than solo-instruments. It is by means of the keyboard that their scope and convenience in concerted effects are secured.

Key (tonal). In theory, the sum of relations which bind the tones of a scale into unity, so that they can be used in melody or harmony as constituting an interdependent group or series; tonality or keyship. Specifically, any particular scale or tone-series having such relations, usually in the arrangements or modes called major or minor and having a principal tone (the key-note, key-tone or tonic) in which the key-relations are felt to center and by the letter-name of which the scale is designated; any particular scale, regarded as a whole. For details of structure, see Scale and Mode. G.

Key and scale are used more or less interchangeably, both in a general sense and specifically. Various terms, including key with a qualifying adjective, will be found under Scale.

In written music, the intended key or scale is usually indicated by a group of sharps or flats (or none) at the beginning of each staff, these constituting the key-signature; see Notation.

In modulation or any contrast of different keys, it is customary to speak of the key-relation between the keys involved.

(about 1560 and simplified later by G. B. Doni), used over 30 keys to the octave (distributed in several rows or keyboards) in the effort to make possible the rendering of music in the three ancient Greek genera. In recent times many efforts have been made to devise something practical for playing in just or pure temperament, with provision for the theoretical difference, for example, between tones known as g-sharp and a-flat, etc. More significant are inventions designed to do away with the marked irregularities of fingering and other manipulation that arise from the arbitrary irregularity of the usual keyboard. In 1843 a 'sequential keyboard' was proposed by W. A. B. Lunn of England, having six upper and six lower keys in each octave, so that but two scale-fingerings were required. A somewhat similar plan later attracted much notice in Germany. The notable Jankó keyboard was patented in 1882 by the Hungarian Paul von Jankó. This has six rows of keys, ingeniously compacted so that the hand can pass readily from one to another and with the same pitch triplicated, so that the player can select different keys at will, and with the span of the octave reduced. In 1921 Emanuel Moór brought forward an arrangement of two keyboards, of which the upper gives tones an octave above those of the lower and open to use either independently or coupled.

The entire mechanism set in motion from the keyboard is known as the key-action or action. As the individual key is a rocking-lever pivoted at the middle on a pin, so that when the front half is depressed the back half rises, the former is sometimes called the key-head and the latter the key-tail. The visible part of the head is faced with real or imitation ivory (white keys) or with real or imitation ebony (black keys).

In most grand-pianos the entire keyboard can be shifted slightly to one side by means of a foot-lever (the soft pedal), so that the hammers strike less than the full number of unison-strings and thus give tones of reduced volume.

Keyship. See Key and Tonality.

Kin. A Chinese instrument of the zither-class, consisting of a long board with arched top, over which are stretched 5-7 silk-strings, sometimes more.

King. A name used by Engel for a Chinese instrument consisting of a graduated series of stone or metal plates mounted on a frame so that they can be sounded by means of hammers.

Kinnor. An ancient Hebrew instrument, probably some form of lyre, like the Arab kissar.

In the English Bible the word is regularly rendered 'harp.'

Klang. See Clang.

Kissar. A widely-diffused Arab instrument of the lyre-class, having a body of tortoise-shell or wood and 5 or more strings carried by a wooden yoke.

Kit. A miniature violin with but 3 strings, made for the use of dancing-masters so that it could be carried in the pocket, (whence the French name pochette). G.

Kithara. The Greek name for the lyre and the source of manifold medieval and modern names for instruments of the lyre-, lute- and zither-classes. See Cither.

Klavier. See Clavier.

Used in many compound names for instruments in which a keyboard appears as the means of playing, such as klavier-harfe, klavier-harmonium (a piano with harmonium-reeds), klavier-oboe, klavier-violola, klavier-violoncello, etc.

Knee-lever, Knee-stop, Knee-swell. In the harmonium or reed-organ, a lever under the keyboard that can be moved by a sidewise pressure of the knee, usually so as to vary the loudness of the tones or, if two levers are provided, to draw all the stops.

Knell. In English bell-ringing, a solemn ringing or tolling of a church-bell as a signal of death or as a token of respect in connection with a funeral. G.

Knot. See Rose.

Kobsa. An old Russian instrument of the lute-class, having from two to several strings.

Kosakisch, Kosatschek. See Dances.

Koto. A Japanese instrument of the zither-class, resembling the Chinese kin, but usually with more strings and with the pitch of these fixed by the placing of movable bridges on the face of the body. G (Japanese Music).

Krakowiak. See cracovienne under Dances. G.

Krummhorn, Cromorne. An obsolete instrument of the bombard-family or class, having a double-reed mouthpiece enclosed in a pirouette, a limited compass and a peculiarly pathetic tone. The lower end of the tube was curved back upon itself (whence the name). Sometimes it was made in several sizes, forming a family. G.

The name has been corrupted into cormorne, cremona (!), etc.

Kuhreigen. See Ranz des Vaches.

Kunstlied. See Volkslied and Song.

Kyrie eleison ('Lord, have mercy'). An acclamation of penitence and entreaty, forming the first number in the musical Mass of the Roman Catholic Church (after the Introit) and also used in litanies and other offices. G.

The text (a transliteration from the Greek) is 'Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison,' each phrase repeated thrice. In the Holy Communion of the Anglican Church it is represented by the response after the Commandments, 'Lord, have mercy upon us and incline our hearts to keep this law.'

L. As an abbreviation, stands for left (as l. h., left hand); also, in the Tonic Sol-fa notation, for la (lah).

La, Lah. See Solmization. G.

Lacrymosa. The final stanza of the sequence Dies iræ, which forms the second division of the Roman Catholic Requiem Mass, or a musical setting of it.

Its text is      Lacrymosa dies illa,
Qua resurget ex favilla
Judicandus homo reus;
Huic ergo parce, Deus.

Lament. An elegy or its musical setting; also any mournful song or piece; a plaint. G.

Lamentations. A musical setting of the lessons from Lamentations that form part of the office of Tenebræ as used in the Roman Catholic Church on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of Holy Week. G.

Lancers. See Dances. G.

Ländler. See Dances. G.

Language, Languid. In an organ-pipe, the shelf at the top of the foot which nearly covers it, leaving open only a narrow slit or wind-way through which the air is directed against the lip above. See Pipe and Organ.

Both terms appear to be corruptions of the French languet.

Lantum. An instrument shaped and played like a hurdy-gurdy, but fitted with small reeds, like those of the accordion, instead of strings.

Lapideon. An instrument consisting of a graduated series of flints, so mounted on a frame as to be sounded by means of small hammers or mallets. It was devised about 1875 by M. Baudry. Also called stone-piano or stone-harmonicon.

Large. See Notation. G.

Largo. An indication of extremely slow tempo; see Terms of Performance. Also a work or movement in such tempo and in grave or solemn style. The diminutive largetto means in a tempo rather faster than largo. G.

Larynx. See Phonation and Vocalization.

Laudi. Popular religious songs, prepared to be sung in unison or in simple 4-part settings by members of Italian fraternities called laudisti or laudesi. G.

The laudisti appear at Florence as early as 1310 and by the 16th century were common everywhere in Italy. The first printed collection of their songs was issued in 1485 and other collections came out at intervals down to almost 1750. From about 1560 Neri utilized music of this sort (by G. Animuccia, Razzi, Santini, Lazzeri, etc.) in his services at S. Maria in Vallicella in Rome (see Oratorio). The words, as a rule, were in Italian (not Latin).

Lauds. The second of the Canonical Hours (3 A. M.), usually combined with Matins. G.

Lavolta. See Dances.

Lay. In general, a song or ballad. Specifically, a long poem (lai) with recurrent refrain in old French usage or a similar form (leich) common with the Minnesinger and Meistersinger in Germany. G.

Lay Vicar. In English cathedrals, one of those designated to sing in the choir, including both laymen and those in minor orders; also called vicar choral. In some places the lay vicars form a corporation.

Lead. As a verb, to direct or conduct. As a noun, the first enunciation of a theme or subject; also the initiative or example supplied by a chief performer in any vocal or instrumental ensemble; also a cue or presa. G.

Leader. In general, a director or conductor, as of a chorus or orchestra. Also, in an orchestra, the principal player among the first violins (concertmaster); in a military band, the principal cornettist; in a chorus, the head-singer in the upper part (soprano or tenor); in a chamber-group, the first violinist (or player on any other instrument put at the head of the group), etc. G.

Leading. In harmony, denoting a tone or a chord that tends or leads toward the tonic; thus leading-chord, the dominant triad or seventh-chord, and leading-tone or note, the seventh degree of the scale (also called note sensible). G.

Leading melody, in harmonic composition, the melody or voice-part that controls or dominates the structure; in simple forms usually the soprano (or other upper part), but in thematic passages any part or all in turn.

Leading motive, see Leitmotif.

Leap. Same as skip. Also, in piano-playing, a sudden transfer or spring from one note or chord to another, involving a lifting of the hand clear of the keys.

Legato. See Terms of Performance. G.

Legend. A name for an imaginative piece, usually instrumental, based upon or suggesting a lyric ballad or a romance.

Leger, Ledger. See Notation.

Leich. See Lay.

Leitmotif, Leitmotiv. In dramatic music, a theme or figure, sometimes melodic, sometimes harmonic, indicating or symbolic of a personage, a situation, a thought or a sentiment, and recurring, either literally or in modification, when the original occasion of it is recalled or repeated. G.

The term came into use in connection with the critiques and discussions of Wagner's operas about 1876, apparently introduced by Hans von Wolzogen. But the device thus named is traceable in composers long before Wagner. In essence, it is a special application of the tendency to make tonal expression particular and concrete rather than abstract (the tendency otherwise embodied in so-called program-music). In part, therefore, it is pictorial or at least definitely symbolic in character. But, as used by Wagner, it was more than this. It was not simply useful for momentary vividness of characterization, but enabled him to incorporate into his scheme of orchestral exposition the peculiar interest and architectonic value of thematic writing on a scale and in a form entirely unexampled before. Furthermore, the plasticity of his thematic method enabled him to impart to his motifs a singular vitality in that they grew and changed under fresh conditions without losing identity. In elaborateness and variety of application, therefore, Wagner's use of the device went far beyond anything attempted by Loewe in his ballads or Weber in his operas or by any of the classical symphonists.

Lento. An indication of slow tempo (usually intermediate between adagio and largo); see Terms of Performance. Also a work or passage in such tempo. G.

Lesser. In harmony, same as minor.

Lesser appoggiatura, a short or quick appoggiatura.

Lesson, Leçon. A name used in the 17-18th centuries for such instrumental pieces as were combined into partite, ordres or suites. G.

Letter-name. An alphabetic name or symbol for a tone, a pitch, a key (of the keyboard), a degree (of the staff) or a note on such a degree and denoting a tone or pitch; see Notation, Keyboard and Staff. Sometimes opposed to syllable-name.

Lexicons of Music. See Dictionaries.

Libraries, Musical. The striking advance in the scientific study of music-history during the past few decades has called attention to the wealth of source-material contained in the libraries and archives of Europe. This material is not only accumulated in the great national collections at capitals like Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London, but is also profusely scattered in the possession of countless smaller cities and towns, of courts and noble families, of cathedrals and religious houses, of conservatories and various musical organizations and of individual collectors. As to the magnitude of this material it is enough to examine the pages of such a summary as Eitner's stately Quellen-Lexikon (1899-1904), with the serial studies that preceded and followed it.

The primary division of this bibliographical wealth consists of music itself, particularly in the form of autographs or early manuscript-copies, original published editions or those later editions and collected republications as rest on originals. But with this is closely associated whatever throws authentic light on the history of performance, of instruments, of the theory of composition, of institutions expository or educational, of criticism and pedagogical effort, and all sorts of data bearing upon the lives and personalities of musicians, especially those who have most affected the current of progress.

Associated with this primary material is the multitude of historical and critical summaries of fact and inference that proceed from the workshops of investigators, analysts and educators who seek to mass together, codify and annotate what the sources contain and indicate, so as to facilitate the growth of knowledge and culture on the part of the average student and inquirer. The literature that is thus always gathering about music itself is not only extensive, but in many cases of extreme practical value. It includes various kinds of dictionaries and similar books of reference, the larger historical summaries, both general and special, a host of biographies, various analyses and critiques of styles and works, manuals and text-books in practical composition and interpretation, studies in the physical, psychological and philosophical aspects of musical art, etc. These are relatively accessible to all libraries and it is in such secondary material that many libraries are strong even when they contain little or nothing in the way of 'sources.' G.

For information about particular libraries in Europe and America, see the articles in Grove's Dictionary, ii. 690-720, and vi. 271, and in Riemann's Musiklexikon, 10th ed., 122-3, with the works there mentioned. Of special value as a conspectus of the theory of the subject is the Classification issued by the Music Division of the Library of Congress (1904). The Bulletin of the U. S. Bureau of Education (1921) is also important as concerns American libraries.

Libretto. The literary text of an extended vocal composition (like an opera, oratorio or cantata), whether or not published separately from the music. The author or editor of such a text is called a librettist. G.

The original meaning of the term is 'booklet,' referring to the form in which texts for operas have usually been put forth for the use of listeners (cf. opera-book). Many important works, especially oratorios and cantatas, have utilized poetic texts that were not made in the first instance for specific musical setting. But in the early history of the opera the exigencies of the form itself, combined with various conditions in its first development, tended to make the writing of librettos a specialty, if not a mere trade. The mechanical ideal of the librettist's art continued as long as the stereotyped notion of the opera remained supreme, and has not yet been wholly laid aside. But from the time of Gluck, still more after the form of the opera began to be varied in the early 19th century and, most of all, when Wagner set up his strenuous doctrine of the intimate union of poetry and music in his dramas, the function of the libretto has tended to regain its rightful dignity.

Among the numerous librettists prior to 1800 the most famous were Apostolo Zeno (from 1696), Pietro Metastasio (from 1724) and Carlo Goldoni (from 1735), but many others might be added, like Aurelio Aureli (from 1652), G. A. Moniglia (from 1661), G. C. Corradi (from 1674), Philippe Quinault (from 1674), Francesco Silvani (from 1683), Silvio Stampiglia (from 1697), Ranciero da Calzabigi (from 1762), Giovanni Bertati (from 1770) and Lorenzo da Ponte (from 1783). In the early 19th century the most fertile librettists were Gaetano Rossi of Venice and Eugène Scribe of Paris, each of whom supplied about 100 texts. Wagner was his own librettist throughout, developing not only a novel method of construction, but even a novel style of verse. The composer Boito supplied texts for many of the strongest works of Verdi's last period and of his immediate followers.

From the literary point of view the usual standard of oratorio-librettos is far above that of opera-librettos, although their total number is relatively small and their popular appeal more limited.

License. In counterpoint or harmony, an intentional deviation from regular procedure; it may be permissible or unwarranted according to the point of view of the critic.

The term is often used in a more general sense, meaning a deviation from custom, as in the treatment of a form or in a particular method of performance.

Licenza. A kind of epilogue appended to some of the older operas, sometimes as a conclusion to the action, but often in compliment to those under whose patronage the performance took place.

Occasionally the term has been used as a name for a movement in a smaller vocal work. G.

Liceo. A name common in Italy for a music-school or conservatory, often with a personal name added, as the Liceo Rossini at both Pesaro and Bologna, the Liceo Marcello at Venice, etc.

Lied. The German term corresponding in general to the English song, the French chanson (or romance), etc., but naturally associated with the several forms, topics and sentiments found in German song-literature, so that it has come to have a somewhat technical meaning. G.

As to general class, a broad distinction lies between the volkstied or folk-song and the kunstlied or art-song, the latter being deliberately composed with the conscious use of technical refinements foreign to the artlessness of true folk-music. But the volkshämliches lied is an art-song composed more or less after the manner of the folk-song.

As to treatment, a distinction is also made between a strophisches lied which uses the same melody over and over for successive stanzas, and the durchkomponiertes lied, in which fresh treatment is given to each stanza in turn.

The history of the Lied in its highest development begins about 1760 with J. A. Hiller, J. F. Reichardt, J. A. P. Schultz and their circle, followed by the more brilliant work of Schubert, Loewe, Schumann, Franz and their successors.

A chain of connected songs is known as a liederkreis or liederzyklus. A collection of songs is a liederbuch. A light play consisting of songs is a liederpiel (akin to the English ballad-opera and the French vaudeville). A choral society (usually of men's voices) for singing part-songs is a liederkranz or liedertafel (see below).

Liederkranz, Liedertafel. Names used in Germany for clubs of men organized for the practice and promotion of part-singing. G.

The enterprises usually cited as pioneers are the society founded by Zelter in Berlin in 1809 and that started about the same time by Nägeli in Switzerland. But in London the analogous Catch Club and Glee Club had been formed as early as 1761 and 1783 respectively.

In Germany the movement had from the first a strongly patriotic side, arising in the depression during the Napoleonic campaigns and flourishing in the later national enthusiasm. In northern Germany the original plan was to include only professional musicians, while in the south the aim was broadly popular. In time the two movements coalesced, retaining a high degree of artistic quality, but affecting a wide circle of participants. Under the original names or that of Männergesangsverein, with the more comprehensive organization known as the Deutscher Sängerbund, the institution is now spread throughout Germany and Austria, numbering its members by tens of thousands, and similar societies are found in many other countries where Germans have settled.

The parallel development in England has been extensive, but is not organized and unified. In France the society of the Orphéonistes, dating from about 1835, has the same general purpose and has had wide diffusion in many cities and towns.

Ligature. See Notation. Sometimes also applied to a group of notes united by a slur and hence treated as a melodic unit or (in vocal music) sung to a single syllable. Also, in the clarinet and its relatives, the adjustable metal-band or clasp by which the reed is fastened to the mouthpiece. G.

Lilt. A simple song with cheerful, tripping movement. Also the swing and figure of a melody.

Limma. In Greek music; same as diatonic hemitone; see Hemitone and Apotome.

Line. See Notation.

Lining. One of the 12 slender strips of wood that are inserted as reinforcements in the joints where the ribs of a violin or similar instrument meet the belly and the back; sometimes called hoop-linings (from their curved shape).

Lip. In organ-pipes, see Pipe. Also same as embouchure (adjustment in playing).

Lira. Properly, the Italian name for the lyre, but applied also to the hurdy-gurdy (lira tedesca) and especially to a form of viol which was probably one of the steps toward the violin in its perfected shape.

The lira da braccio had 7 strings on the fingerboard and 2 open strings, the lira da gamba 12 strings, with 2 open, and the lirone, archiviola da lira or accordo sometimes as many as 24 strings.

Litany. In both the Eastern and Western Churches, a formula of prayer or intercession in which varied biddings or other statements of the persons invoked or the objects in view are constantly combined with responses that are either uniform throughout or but slightly varied. G.

The evident purpose of the form is to make the prayer in some measure actually collective or congregational. In early liturgies five litanies are found in connection with the Mass. In the Greek Church two have been retained, but they have been omitted in the revised Roman use. But since the medieval period various litanies as separate services or in connection with special offices have been common. Out of this practice the Litany of the Anglican use was compiled in 1544, probably by Cramer.

The standard litanies of the Roman use are those of the Saints, of the Blessed Virgin (or of Loreto) and of the Most Holy Name of Jesus. These have given rise to many hymns.

All forms of litany have received musical settings in different forms and styles, Gregorian, polyphonic and harmonic.

Liturgy. A form or method of public worship, especially one that is prescribed and fully formulated. In the Greek and Roman Churches the term is often restricted to the form for the Communion or Lord's Supper (in the Roman Church usually called the Mass), and this usage is the regular one in technical treatises on liturgiology. Hence arise different meanings for the adjective liturgical—pertaining to public worship in general and in any form, or to such worship when conducted according to a prescribed and fixed form, or to such a form for the Communion.

The use of music in every type of Christian public worship has been universal from the earliest times, especially from the 4th century, when the Church advanced from obscurity into civic prominence under the lead of Constantine. The so-called Gregorian style was gradually evolved to supply settings for the formulae of stated services, while hymns and melodies for them developed for monastic and popular use. As liturgical usages were from time to time modified in both East and West, and as musical methods advanced, successive alterations took place in sacred music, sometimes according to tendencies within itself, sometimes under influences exerted by secular music. But wherever fixed and uniform liturgical practice has been dominant the music associated with it has tended to preserve a somewhat stable character or to revert at intervals to that which is held to be traditional and hence consecrated by past usage. Against what is thought to be the excessive rigidity of this ideal, or some specific errors associated with it, there have been many reactions, all of which have been accompanied by special musical developments. See Church Music.

Lituus. A Roman military trumpet, having a wide bell, which was turned back, making the instrument J-shaped; opposed to the straight tuba. Also sometimes applied to the krumhorn and the older cornet. G.

Lombard Rhythm. An old name for the melodic effect usually called the Scotch snap.

Long. See Notation. G.

Long Meter or Measure. In hymnody, an iambic stanza-form having the syllable-scheme 8-8-8-8, with either successive or alternate rhymes. Abbreviated L.M.

Long meter double (L.M.D.) has two quatrains instead of one. Long meter, 6 lines (L.M. 6 l.), has a couplet added, but Long particular meter (L.P.M.), also with six lines, is made up of two triplets (888, 888).

Loop. In acoustics, that portion of a vibrating body, whether solid or gaseous, where the motion is greatest; opposed to node.

Loud. Of sound, strong, powerful or intense; opposed to soft.

Loud pedal, in the piano, same as dampers-pedal.

Loure. A form of bagpipe formerly used in Normandy. Also see Dances. G.

Low. Of pitch, grave; denoting tones produced by relatively slow vibrations; opposed to high or acute. See High.

Lullaby. A cradle-song or berceuse.

Lur. A prehistoric form of bronze-trumpet, found in Denmark, southern Sweden and Mecklenburg. Also a wooden trumpet, resembling the Swiss alpenhorn, used in Scandinavia by herdsmen.

The ancient lur, of which many examples have been found, has a small cup-shaped mouthpiece, a conical tube 5 to almost 8 feet long, bent in a sweeping curve, so that the flat plate at the mouth is faced forward over the player's shoulder. It may be wholly indigenous to northern Europe or may have been occasioned by the knowledge of Roman instruments.

Lute. A typical class of stringed instrument, characterized by having several to many strings stretched over an elliptical or pear-shaped body and a more or less extended neck, the sound being produced by plucking or twanging the strings with the fingers or by means of a plectrum. The lute and the viol differ essentially only in the method of sounding. The pitch of the tones is determined by the method of tuning adopted and by 'stopping' the strings against the fingerboard, which is usually provided with frets of some kind. Their quality depends chiefly on the materials used in making the body and on its form. In the 16th century and somewhat afterward the lute, made in various sizes and special forms, was the favorite instrument both for individual use and as prominent in various instrumental combinations. It was made in several sizes, so as to form a family, some of the larger varieties having two sets of strings (one on the fingerboard, for melody-effects, and the other open, for accompaniment). Experiments with lute-music had much to do with the transformation of ideas about harmony and instrumental style which took place during the 16-17th centuries. Certain members of the lute-class as then used became the progenitors of various similar instruments later. One who plays upon a lute is usually called a lutenist or lutanist. G.

The name lute is derived from the Arabic al'ud, implying that the type is of Oriental origin. The body was almost always pear-shaped, with flat front or belly and an arched or globular back. The lower ends of the strings were fastened to a transverse bridge on the front (sometimes set obliquely). The number of strings varied much, the usual number being 6-13, all but the highest doubled for sonority. Open strings (off the fingerboard) do not seem to have been much used till the later 16th century, but then became frequent, usually being 5-6 in number. The neck was relatively short and wide (as compared with that of the viol) and terminated in a large head, which was flat, curved or sometimes bent sharply back. The frets were adjusted to provide a chromatic scale. Lute-music was regularly written in a special form of tablature (q. v.). The pairs of unison-strings were called courses; thus a 13-course lute was one with 13 such pairs.

Of the many varieties, the chitarra or chilterna was the smallest, having only 4 strings, and the theorbo or archlute and the chilarrone the largest, having sometimes as many as 24 strings. The larger instruments were made with two heads at different distances above the body, one for each group of strings. While the ordinary lute was less than a yard high, the chilarrone ran to 6-7 feet.

The tone had no great power, but was capable of much delicacy and sweetness. Much depended on whether gut or metal strings were used and something on the skill of the player, as well as the structure of the particular instrument.

Lute-music at first aimed merely to reproduce music written for voices in the current polyphonic style. But players early began to evolve effects in detached chords that were more germane to the instrument and to use it in true accompaniment. It is likely that this hastened the advent of a harmonic way of conceiving composition and that lute-playing also tended to employ the modern major and minor scales while more technical music was still clinging to the church-modes. The lute, also, with its sharp-cut, accented tone, favored attention to emphatic rhythm and small metric patterns, such as belonged to the popular dances. In all these ways the lute helped forward the advance of instrumental style.

Lydian Mode. See Mode and Gregorian Music.

Lyre. The chief instrument of ancient Greece and the type of that class of stringed instruments in which several strings are arranged parallel to and partly over the face of the resonance-box and yet are accessible to both hands in playing (like the harp). The ancient lyre (usually called kithara, kitharis or phorminx) had a body of various form, sometimes a tortoise-shell or a circular bowl of wood, sometimes more like a square box, carrying two upright arms, between which was a cross-piece, so as to enclose a quadrilateral space. The 4-18 strings ran from some attachment at the base of the body to the cross-piece. In playing, the instrument was held with one of its sides down, the longest and lowest strings being uppermost. From this usage came the naming not only of the strings, but of the tones in the theoretic tone-system. G.

The names of the strings in an 8-stringed lyre was as follows: hypate ('the upper'), having the lowest tone, parhypate ('next to the upper'), kichanos ('the forefinger-string'), mesē ('the middle'), paramesē ('next to the middle'), trite ('the third' [from the bottom]), paranete ('next to the last or lowest') and nete ('the last or lowest'), having the highest tone.

Lyres continued to be used till medieval times, but then became blended with harps on one hand and with both lutes and zithers on the other. But the name persisted in several applications.

Lyra-way, in music for the viola da gamba, meant written in lute-tabulature.

Lyric, Lyrical. Denoting that which is adapted to the lyre or the forms of song associated with it; hence song-like, melodious, musically charming. More specifically, in musical style, denoting that which is cast in a relatively simple and obvious form, like a song, has spontaneous and appealing grace and voices some broadly human sentiment, almost always with a strong predominance of melodic interest. G.

As compared with that which is epic or dramatic, lyric art, as concerns the artist or producer, is more subjective, in that its apparent motive or impulse is self-expression, and, as concerns the percipient, is more intimate and personal, as its effect depends on his quick sympathy with and response to the picture, situation or mood presented. The terms lyric drama and lyric stage as referring to the opera in a collective way are based on the fact that many types of opera depend for their popular appeal almost wholly on their melodic richness and the opportunities they afford for the individual singer. Since the early 19th century the same interest which inheres in the typical song as a vocal form has been diligently cultivated in numerous lyric instrumental forms, such as the song without words, the nocturne, the ballade, etc.

M

M. In abbreviations: m. d. for mano destra, main droite; m. g. for main gauche; m. s. for mano sinistra; in organ-music for manual; in Tonic Sol-fa for mi (me); in tempo indications m. m. means Maelzel's metronome.

Machête. A small variety of guitar with but 4 strings, popular in Portugal.

Machicotage. A form of ornamentation or embellishment of a plain-song melody or theme, once somewhat practiced in France. It usually consisted of tones intercalated between those of the cantus. G.

Machine-head. A rack-and-pinion device sometimes used instead of tuning-pegs or pins in certain stringed instruments, like the double-bass, the guitar and the zither (for the chanterelles).

Madrigal. Originally, a medieval lyrical poem of a pastoral, amorous or descriptive character. Hence a musical setting of such a poem, normally in rather elaborate contrapuntal style, based on the medieval modes rather than the modern major or minor and designed for from three to several voices, without accompaniment. It differed from the much later glee in all but the last point and was normally sung by several voices to the part rather than by soloists. Also loosely extended to any glee or part-song, even if but slightly contrapuntal and provided with an accompaniment. G.

The true madrigal was the secular counterpart of the sacred motet. Both were first developed in Flanders in the 15th century as features in the general growth of a cappella music. Thence they were transmitted to both Italy and England, attaining singular perfection in both countries. After about 1625 they became rare, being supplanted by other forms. In the early operas and oratorios madrigals were often introduced as the only available form of chorus.

In the best examples the thematic material changes freely to match the progression of the text and there is usually much diversity in the rhythmic and metric form as well as variety in force and tempo. The words are normally in the vernacular.

The beauty of the form has led to its modern reproduction by choral societies or by clubs organized for its study, and modern composers have not seldom imitated it.

Maestro. Literally, a master in the sense of director or teacher. G.

Maestro di cappella, director of a 'chapel' or musical establishment, like Kapellmeister and Maitre de chapelle; specifically, in a cathedral or church, choirmaster, and in the opera or concert-room, conductor. Up to about 1800 the conductor usually led from the harpsichord and was then called maestro al cembalo or cembalist. A choirmaster may be called maestro del coro and a singing-teacher maestro di canto.

The title Maestro dei pulti, used at St. Peter's in Rome, is exactly like the English Master of the Children, used in the Chapel Royal.

The term is often used synonymously either of a teacher, a composer or a performer of eminence.

Magadis. A name for an ancient Greek instrument, usually a large harp with strings tuned in octave-pairs, but also a form of flute used in Lydia. In the Middle Ages, applied to the monochord. G.

Singing in octaves was sometimes called magadizing.

Maggot. An old term for a whimsical impromptu song or melody.

Magnificat. A canticle, or its musical setting, the text taken from the Song of Mary in Luke i. 46-55, used in the Breviary services of both the Eastern and the Western Churches and in the Evening Prayer of the Anglican Church. G.

The text begins 'Magnificat anima mea Dominum.' Besides its ritual settings, it has often been taken as the text for more elaborate treatment after the manner of a cantata or oratorio.

Maitrise. A choir-school connected with a French cathedral or collegiate church, designed to give the choirboys training in music and some other subjects; sometimes called psallete. G.

The institution of choir-schools goes back to the early development of the a cappella style in the 14-15th centuries and was doubtless first set up in Flanders. Thence it passed to other countries. Its necessity lay in the fact that no schools were available for the training of choirboys (sopranos and altos). Hence arose the practice of offering free tuition, with lodging and food, so as to obtain control of the boys desired. It is estimated that in the 18th century there were in France alone not less than 400 such schools, with at least 4000 boy-pupils, not counting the older singers attached to them. In early days these schools provided much general education, like the monastic schools, but later they confined themselves mainly to singing and the rudiments of composition, with some training upon instruments. Thus they served in a measure as music-schools for their local community. The same function was fulfilled by analogous institutions in Italy, Germany and England (see Song-School). In France the maitrisés were suppressed in the Revolution (1791). Their place was taken in a new form by the École Royale du Chant (1794), followed by the Conservatoire (1795).

Major. In acoustics and harmony, greater, larger, longer; primarily of intervals regarded as distances between tones, but extended to the naming of tones, scales, chords and modes or tonalities; in all senses opposed to minor. Since in modern music (from the late 17th century) the scale and mode called major has become the basis of theoretical thought, major has come also to mean standard or normal. G.

The intervals usually called major or minor are the second, the third, the sixth, the seventh and the ninth, the major being in each case a semitone larger than the minor; but perfect fifths and fourths are sometimes also called major (in distinction from diminished or minor fifths and fourths). The German terms dur and moll trace back to the medieval usage of distinguishing b durum from b molle, the former being a major third above g and the latter a minor third.

In addition, when two intervals are compared that are but slightly different, the larger is often called major. Thus, especially, the larger 'tone' (or major second) is called the major 'tone' in distinction from the smaller or minor (the ratios being 9/8 and 10/9 respectively).

When a tone is separated from another by a major interval, such as the major third, it is called briefly the major third of the other. This usage is plainly one of convenient abbreviation.

The standard scale of modern theory is the major (diatonic) scale, which derives its name from the fact that all its tones stand in either major or perfect intervals to its keynote or starting-tone, whereas the corresponding minor (diatonic) scale (in its full or ideal form) has either minor or perfect intervals. So any particular scale or tonality, based upon a given tone, like a, is called the major or the minor scale of a, according to the form used. Furthermore, a piece that uses a major scale is said to be written in the major mode, but if it uses a minor scale, in the minor mode.

The characteristic triad in a major scale is that based on the first tone or keynote. For this reason and because the interval between its root and its middle tone is a major third, such a triad is called a major triad, in distinction from the analogous triad in a minor scale, which has a minor third and is called a minor triad. This usage is extended to all triads of similar form, on whatever tone they may be based. Both major and minor triads have a perfect fifth between their lowest and highest tones.

In the further naming of chords, however, major and minor are usually applied according as the total interval between the lowest and the highest tones is major or minor; thus seventh-chords may be chords of the major seventh or of the minor seventh. So with ninth-chords, and the usage is extended to chords of the sixth as well.

Out of this total usage comes, finally, the custom of using major and minor as collective nouns, as in the expression 'the contrast between major and minor.'

The modern feeling associates the major in general with brightness, strength and wholesome normality, whereas, particularly in contrasts, the minor is more somber, weaker, tending toward pathos and sometimes toward the weird. On the whole, the major may be called masculine and the minor feminine. But it is well recognized that these aesthetic distinctions are liable to be modified or reversed by details of treatment in any given case.

Throughout the history of theory some students have urged strongly that major and minor should be regarded as mutually reciprocal, the former being tonal expression viewed in an upward direction and the latter being the same viewed downward. Modern music uses the major as its standard because it reckons structure from the bottom, whereas ancient music (and most ethnic music also) uses the minor as standard because its reckoning is more from the top. See further notes under Harmony, Scale and Tonality.

Mandolin, Mandoline. An instrument of the lute-class, with an almond-shaped body and either 4 or 5-6 pairs of metal-strings, which are sounded by means of a plectrum. G.

It is now the best-known representative of a variety of allied instruments known by many names like mandola, mandora, bandola, bandura, pandora, etc., all of which aimed to preserve something of the value of the 16th-century lute, though tending to adopt metal instead of gut-strings and to be played with a plectrum instead of the fingers. Among local varieties of the mandoline proper, which is much smaller than the typical lute, the Neapolitan and the Milanese are prominent. Larger forms are called mandola (tenor) and mandolone or mandolincello (bass).

A piece for the mandoline or one in its characteristic style is called a mandolinata. It is to be noted that Beethoven wrote one movement of a mandoline-sonatina, probably for his friend Wenzel Krumpholtz, and also a detached Adagio.

Maneria. In Gregorian music, a name for a pair of modes, authentic and plagal, having the same final; see Gregorian Music and Mode. G.

Manieren. See Embellishments. G.

Männerchor, Männergesangsverein. See Liederkreis. G.

Mannheim School or Style. A name for the unique transformation of ensemble-music, as to both composition and performance, that was initiated about 1750 in the musical establishment of the Elector Palatine at Mannheim under the direction of Johann Stamitz (who was leader in 1743-57).

The new style was essentially a reaction against the galant music, in contrast with the galant style, which was replaced. It also tended to adopt the clear and symmetrical dispositions of form that were exemplified in the folk-song and the folk-dance. Hence it made just the elements of charming melody, definite and vivacious disposition of phrases and sections, and division (only), with emphasis upon sonata-form as the principle.

It was brilliantly brought to consummation by the Viennese or Classical School (Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, etc.). The founders of this new conception of composition seem to have been Johann Stamitz (1717-1757) and F. X. Richter (1709-1789), the one from Bohemia, the other from Mannheim.

The Mannheim style was widely through many composers, of whom the Belgians Van Malder and Gossec, the Austrians Leopold Hoffmann and Dittersdorf and the Italian Boccherini were perhaps the most important.

No less remarkable were the improvements in orchestral organization and technique that were instituted at Mannheim by Stamitz and carried to completion by Cannabich. Under their lead the modern organization of the orchestra as a complex unit, with the body of strings as the center, became established, taking the place of the fluctuating schemes of the preceding period, in which the wood-wind was often the dominating element. With this elevation of the strings to supremacy came an unexampled care about tone-quality, shadings or nuances, variety of force in contrasts, strict unanimity in attack and tempo, and all the other amenities of ensemble-expression that are now traditional. Nearly all of them were then almost unknown in the large ensemble. They speedily spread to other centers, forming a foundation for the effects freely employed by the later symphonists.

The Mannheim establishment was moved to Munich in 1778, when the Elector Palatine became also Elector of Bavaria, but many of the musicians remained behind. It was just before the removal that Mozart made his first visit to Mannheim.

Manual. Sometimes same as digital or key. In the pipe-organ (as either adjective or noun), a keyboard for the hands as distinguished from one for the feet (pedal); see Organ. G.

A digital on a manual is called a manual-key (as opposed to a pedal-key) and a coupler that links two manuals is a manual-coupler. A piece or passage to be played without pedals may be marked manualiter; opposed to pedaliter.

The manuals are often designated by number, I. standing for Great Organ, II. for Choir Organ, III. for Swell Organ, etc.

March. See Dances. G.

March-time. duple or quadruple rhythm; opposed to waltz-time, which is triple or sextuple.

Marimba. A general name for a class of instruments, found in several parts of the world, most typically in Africa, consisting of a series of graduated wooden strips or bars, mounted upon graduated resonators (gourds, shells or wooden bowls) and sounded by means of hammers; also called balafo or gourd-piano. The principle is the same as that of the xylophone (q. v.). G.

Marine Trumpet. See Tromba Marina.

Mark. A sign or symbol, occasionally an abbreviation; see Notation.

Masculine Ending or Rhyme. In versification, a line-ending or rhyme with the accent on the final syllable. Extended to analogous endings or rhymes at the close of musical phrases, the chief accent falling on the final tone or note. Opposed to feminine ending or rhyme.

FAMILY OF KRUMPHORNS

FAMILY OF SARRUSOPHONES

Mask, Masque. An English form of spectacular pantomime, pageant or fanciful play, usually including musical numbers, vocal and instrumental. In the early 17th century it was a favorite diversion in courtly festivities and from about 1635 began to be put upon the public stage. Several gifted poets, especially Ben Jonson, contributed to its literary character and Purcell gave it musical significance. In the 18th century the attention to its musical features led to its gradual merging in the ballad-opera. G.

The name comes from the wearing of masks by the actors in the early pantomimes.

Mass. The traditional name for the office of the Eucharist or Communion in the Roman Catholic Church and to a limited extent adopted in Protestant usage (as by some Anglicans and by the National Churches of Denmark and Sweden). Its text may be read with the speaking voice by the celebrant and deacon (low mass) or cantillated by the chief officiants, assisted at certain points by the choir (high mass). The form of music may be Gregorian throughout or the choir-exercises may be developed polyphonically without accompaniment (in the a cappella or Palestrina style) or with any degree of harmonic richness, accompanied by the organ or the orchestra. The invariable exercises that are assigned to the choir constitute the musical Mass, and to these may be added on particular occasions other choir-exercises with variable texts which are best called canticles or motets. Besides the ordinary or daily Mass, various other forms are used on special occasions, such as Requiem, Nuptial and Pontifical Masses. G.

The name comes in some way from the Latin missa, used as a direction of dismissal, either as applied in early usage to the catechumens before the Mass began or to the congregation after it is ended.

The manual containing the text for the Mass is the Missal. That part of the service which is central is known as the Ordinary of the Mass and within this the invariable section containing the Consecration, Oblation and Intercession is the Canon.

The musical Mass regularly consists of six principal divisions, some of which may be divided into separate sections, viz.: the Kyrie, the Gloria (including the Gratias agimus, Dominus Deus, Qui tollis and Cum Sancto Spiritu), the Credo (including the Et incarnatus, Crucifixus, Et resurrexit and Et in Spiritum Sanctum), the Sanctus (with Hosanna), the Benedictus (with the Hosanna repeated) and the Agnus Dei (including the Dona nobis). When used in an actual service, these several exercises are not consecutive. The Kyrie and Gloria follow the Introit with which the service opens; the Credo follows the Collects, Epistle, Gradual and Gospel (with the Sermon, if there is one) and is itself followed by the Offertory and the prayers with which the introductory part of the service ends. The Sanctus and the Benedictus follow the Preface, while the Agnus Dei follows the completion of the Consecration.

The Requiem Mass differs materially from the above, omitting the Gloria and Credo and including the majestic sequence Dies iræ (18 stanzas).

Broadly speaking, the innumerable settings of the Mass text fall into two or three classes: (a) those of the a cappella period (extending in its purity to the middle of the 17th century) or conceived and executed in a similar objective and idealistic spirit, (b) those in which the resources of effect arising either from the dramatic spirit belonging to the opera-house more than the church or from the modern interest in instrumentation in connection with elaborate choral expression, or from both of these, is used to impart to the service another quality, sometimes sentimental, sometimes realistic, sometimes theatrical, and (c) those in which the text is used without liturgical intention, but rather as the basis for a free choral creation somewhat after the manner of an oratorio. Because of the extremes to which the second class of settings had sometimes been carried, in 1904 Pius X issued a rescript (the Motu proprio) decreeing that the music of the Mass (and of other services as well) should be either in Gregorian form or in a style not greatly removed from that of the a cappella period.

The most famous of the settings of the Mass that are not liturgical in form or purpose are those of Bach (the greatest being that in B minor) and the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven. Of similar settings of the Requiem, notable examples are those of Berlioz and of Dvořák. In the Anglican Church the Communion Service is analogous to the Mass and has received musical treatment in a similar way. Indeed, the similarity of the two orders has led to the adaptation of many masses to the English text.

It should be added that in practice it has often been customary to use a combination of miscellaneous compositions for the different exercises of the service instead of a continuous composition by one hand.

In the polyphonic period musical masses were named from the Gregorian or other melody taken as the cantus firmus. The most popular of the secular melodies thus used were L'homme armé and Se la face ay pale. A mass based upon an original rather than a borrowed subject was called sine nomine. Many were written also on solmization-syllables and their tonal figures.

Master. In general, one who is thoroughly proficient or expert, as in composition or performance (most used of the former). Specifically, in the Meistersinger guilds (14-16th centuries), a title conferred on those who achieved the highest honors in both verse and song; in the usual system of academic degrees, the grade intermediate between those of Baccalaureus and Doctor (Mus.M., Musices Magister); in ecclesiastical establishments, the director or leader (like the Italian maestro, the French maitre and the German Meister); and, less formally, any recognized teacher, vocal or instrumental.

In the English Chapel Royal, the director is known as Master of Song or Master of the Children.

Master-fugue, same as fuga ricercata. Master-chord, the chord of the dominant. Master-note, the leading-tone.

Mastersingers. See Meistersinger.

Matassins. See Dances. G.

Matelotte. See Dances. G.

Matins, Mattins. The first of the Canonical Hours (midnight), usually including Lauds; also an early morning service combining the observance of Matins, Lauds and Prime. G.

Morning Prayer in the Anglican Church corresponds to the latter.

Maxim, Maxima. See Notation.

Mazurka. See Dances. G.

Mean. Middle or inner, as of voices, voice-parts, instruments, etc., in ensemble; also of the strings of an instrument like the lute or the viol. G.

The C-clef is sometimes called the mean clef, either because used for middle voice-parts or because marking the place of the middle tone in the tone-system.

For mean-tone temperament, see Temperament.

Measure. Specifically, in versification, music and dancing, one of the fundamental time-units of which verses (lines), phrases and figures are composed. In each case measures are assumed to be of equal duration and to be made up of smaller units, also equal, known by various names (in ancient verse as mora, in music as beats or pulses, in dancing as beats or steps). In modern verse, as in music and dancing, a measure is in some way organized around or held together by a principal accent, with which it may or may not begin. But, since in musical notation, the place of this accent is now marked by a vertical bar, it is usual to speak of the time-unit represented by the space between two bars (with whatever notes it contains) as a measure; in popular usage often called a bar. See Rhythm and Meter for other uses. G.

Measure in music is analogous to foot (monopody) or double-foot (dispydy) in versification, and it is possible to transfer to music the poetic terms dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, etc., for the number of measures used in making up lines or phrases. But the ancient significance of these terms was not exactly the same as in modern musical theory, since feet were often made up of quantities in the syllables that were not equal. See Foot.

In notation, the bar defining measures to the eye is sometimes called measure-bar or accent-bar to distinguish it from bars used for other purposes.

Mechanical Instruments. See Automatic Appliances.

Mechanism. The complex of parts or members constituting the apparatus of tone-production in any instrument or in the voice; in many of the larger instruments technically called the action. Sometimes extended to manner or style in piano- or violin-playing or in singing, and also to the detailed motions or efforts involved in a full mastery of technique.

Mesiant. In the Gregorian modes, one of the so-called regular modulations, being in authentic modes usually the third tone from the bottom and in plagal modes variably located. In modern harmony, the middle tone of the tonic triad, being in the major scale the major third of the tonic and in the minor scale its minor third. G.

In Gregorian music the mesiant was one of the tones with which any phrase might begin or end (except a final phrase). In general, it ranked as the third important tone in the mode (after the final and the dominant).

In modern music the mesiant is important as fixing whether a passage is to be construed in the major or the minor mode.

Mediation. In Gregorian music, the cadence or inflection at the end of the first half of any of the regular 'tones.' In Anglican chants, the rhetorical cadence after the first recitation. G.

Medicea, Editio. The title of the revision of the Roman Catholic musical service-books in accordance with the action of the Council of Trent that was finished in 1614. It is now superseded by the Editio Vaticana, begun in 1904.

Medius. The middle voice-part in early three-part writing; also called motetus.

Medley. See Pot-pourri.

Meistersinger, Meistersänger. The name of a singular class of poet-singers that flourished in southern Germany during the 14-16th centuries. They followed the Minnesinger and regarded themselves as the successors of the latter. But they differed in being drawn wholly from the artisan and tradesman classes rather than from those of noble birth, in being organized into local fraternities or guilds that were kept exclusive by an elaborate code of regulations and in tending to exalt and foster not so much a free lyric and artistic spirit as a pedantic and artificial type of both verse and melody. The movement served usefully in emphasizing song as a dignified and worthy pursuit and in spreading a knowledge of rudimentary technical procedures. But its significance in the progress of musical art was slight and transient. G.

The tradition is that the movement was started at Mayence in 1311 by Frauenlob (Heinrich von Meissen), the last of the Minnesinger. At all events among the early centers were Mayence, Frankfurt, Strasburg, Würzburg and even Zwickau in Saxony and Prague in Bohemia, but later Ulm, Augsburg, Nuremberg, Munich and Ratisbon became prominent. The height of its popularity was in the later 15th and the 16th centuries. Its most famous leader was the Nuremberg cobbler Hans Sachs (d.1576).

The name may have some connection with the use by the Minnesinger of the name Meister for those not entitled to be called Ritter. But it more likely came from the fact that the ordinary member, after initiation, was advanced through various grades (Schüler, Schulfreund, Sänger and Dichter) before being permitted to use the name Meister. The discipline and tests in the process of promotion were rigid and severe, though often fantastic.

The topics most frequently taken for poetic treatment were those from the Bible. Of the stiff and stilted styles of verse devised there are many examples extant. But not much has survived of the melodies or Weisen.

After 1600 the movement rapidly lost headway, though guilds continued for two centuries further. The last guild, that at Ulm, was dissolved in 1839, and the last known member died in 1876.

Wagner's opera Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg presents a picture of certain aspects of the organization, as well as of Sachs.

Melisma. Originally, a song or melody; opposed to recitative or declamation. Usually a vocal passage with many embellishments or fioriture. G.

Melodeon. The name used for the early form of the American reed-organ or harmonium; often corrupted into melodium.

Melodica. A small organ with a single set of flue-pipes and a compass of 3½ octaves, designed for use as a solo-instrument in connection with the harpsichord. It was invented by J. A. Stein of Augsburg in 1770.

Melodicon. A keyboard-instrument, like a piano, but with tuning-forks or steel-bars instead of wires. It was invented by Peter Riffelsen of Copenhagen about 1800.

Melodion. A keyboard-instrument, invented by J. C. Dietz of Emmerich in 1806, in which the tones were produced by pressing graduated steel-bars against a rotated cylinder.

Melodrama. In general, any dramatic work in which music is used. Specifically, a play in which speech and song are used in alternation. Also, more technically, a dramatic text designed to be recited in speech while accompanied by instrumental music. G.

The term is further used, without reference to music, for a play of an extremely sentimental or romantic character.

Melody. In general, music or any agreeable series of tones. More exactly, the successive sounding of tones, as opposed to harmony, especially of tones so related to each other and disposed in such order as to form a coherent expression. Melody and harmony, in artistic music, use the same tonal materials, but melody aims to give contour or outline, whereas harmony provides body, substance and color in the total effect. The two are practically interdependent, though separable in analysis and for pedagogical purposes. Both proceed in conjunction with the time- and accent-elements usually covered by the term rhythm.

A melody or tune, in ordinary cases, whether combined with actual harmony or merely supported by the harmonic relations that are implicit in the scale-tones used, presents analogies with speech-effects, since its tones fall into small groups like word-groups, into larger groups like clauses and sentences, etc. Thus the office of melody, at least in relatively simple music, can be illustrated by the help of analogies in the arts of drawing and of language. But melody permeates the structure of music in ways that cannot be illustrated thus. Every harmonic composition consists of a union of melodies, each with some individuality and all coöperating to produce the chord-succession. And in what is called counterpoint there is a still more elaborate interplay of melodies that has harmonic aspects, but is so actively melodic and charged with so much structural intricacy that it requires a separate name. For these higher applications of melody there are no satisfactory analogies in other arts, except that some features of pattern and texture in counterpoint may be compared with weaving and embroidery. G.

It is likely that distinct variations in pitch were first sought in primitive music as decorations of bald rhythm, pulses and accents being thus heightened in interest. But with this went some sense of the difference between ascending and descending motion, the one involving effort, the other relaxation, the one positive and stimulative, the other relatively negative and quieting. In all melodic systems there is also usually an evident sensitiveness to the length and character of intervals as such—a sensitiveness that attention to harmony sometimes seems to reduce or nullify. It is not without meaning that at times notation has aimed particularly to indicate by what kind of step the voice was to proceed. But still more important has been the growing sense of a difference in value and character in the several tones of whatever scale is adopted. To-day this has been brought to its highest point through the modern principle of tonality, but it was undoubtedly present in ancient and mediæval systems as well. Here even melody without harmony probably betrays some feeling for implicit harmonic relations. And in all these elements of melodic instinct there play back and forth subtle influences of stress and quantity as modifying relative values in successive tones. By combinations of all these factors that defy exact analysis melody becomes not only one of the chief sources of design in musical structure, but one of the most powerful implements of emotional expression and effect.

For melody-string, see Chanterelle.

Melograph. A name often used in general for various mechanical devices for making a record of music as it is performed on the piano. By such means improvisations, impromptu transcriptions from score and individual readings of standard works may be put into form for preservation and further use. Such machines are now usually operated by electricity and often make a record which can be utilized in a reproducing-apparatus (like a player-piano).

Experiments with machines for this purpose were begun in the middle of the 18th century, the pioneers being Creed of London (1847), J. F. Unger of Einbeck (1748) and Hohfeld of Berlin (1752). These were applied to the harpsichord. After the advent of the piano similar efforts were made, continuing at intervals during the 19th century. Recently the multiplication of automatic instruments operated by means of a paper-roll has led to fresh inventions, enabling the player to prepare records himself that are similar to those commercially manufactured; see Automatic Appliances.

Melopiano. A form of piano in which depressing a key, instead of actuating a single stroke by a large hammer, starts a series of rapid blows by small hammers, so that tones can be prolonged at will, as well as varied in intensity at the same time. The inventor was Caldara of Turin in 1870. G.

The principle is applied in various types of street-piano.

Meloplast. The name of a system for teaching musical rudiments by means of charts and solmization-syllables that was devised by Galin of Bordeaux in 1817 and much extended by Chev   of Paris from 1844 onward. The method has many analogies with that of the English Tonic Sol-fa.

The term m  lopl  ste properly means a chart with a bare staff on which the teacher indicates positions by a pointer while a melody is sung, but it was extended to the method as a whole; cf. modulator.

Melos. The Greek word for song or melody, employed by Wagner to designate the prolonged and plastic melody-passages or discourses in his later works in which symmetrical division into the phrases and sections of traditional song-and-dance-forms is given up.

The term is most used for the continuous polyphony in the orchestra, but applies also to many vocal passages. It was strenuously objected to by numerous critics, who declared that Wagner was unable to write 'melody.' It has been aptly remarked that what should have been said was that for his purposes he did not choose to write 'tunes' (see discussion in Finck's biography, ii, 154 ff).

Mensurable, Mensural or Measured Music. A name given to the system of rhythmical composition and notation that was developed from the 12th century onward in connection with the rise of polyphony; opposed to plain-song, which was devoid of regular rhythm. The new conception of structure forced the consideration of 'time,' since two or more voices could not proceed simultaneously without agreement as to durations and their proportions, and this led immediately to an extension of notation that became the basis of the modern system. See Notation. G. (Musica Mensurata).

Data about the introduction of this conception are found mainly in the writings of Garlandia, Franco (probably of Paris), Odington, etc.

Messa di Voce. In vocalization, a sustained tone beginning softly, increasing to loudness and diminishing again, making a long swelling effect. G.

Messel. A rule or method of determining and classifying intervals used by Arabian theorists in the 14th century or earlier. It was based on a study of string-lengths on the monochord.

It was expounded by Mahmud Shirasi (d. 1315) and others. In their writings appears the first recognition of major and minor thirds and sixths as consonances, this being a century or two in advance of the West (where the use of the Pythagorean tuning hindered progress).

Metallophone. A piano with steel-bars instead of strings. Also an instrument like the xylophone, but with metal- instead of wooden bars.

Meter, Metre, Metrics. (a) The Greek word μέτρον means a measure or unit (not a definite length or size, but any unit taken as a standard) or the thing measured or defined by means of it. In prosody, it was that characteristic of regular construction in successive vocal units that distinguishes poetry from prose, song from speech. In ancient usage, metrics considered the time- or quantity-elements involved, irrespective of the accent- or stress-elements that are obvious in ordinary speech. In modern prosody, on the other hand, accent having come to dominate poetry as well as prose, metrics considers the accent- and stress-elements, almost irrespective of the time- and quantity-elements. In either case, however, poetry is conceived as built up out of successions of vocal units or meters that have some definite regularity. The difference between the ancient and the modern point of view lies in the kinds of unit or meter recognized. It is interesting to observe that much of what was characteristic in Greek poetry is better represented by analogous facts in modern music than by those of modern poetry. G.

The Greek units were the mora, the assumed time of a short syllable, a long syllable occupying the time of two mora; the foot, the smallest unit of combined syllables, whether long or short, which, taken singly or in pairs (monopody or dipody), supplied the fundamental metron or meter in any given case; the colon or verse, a group of feet that corresponded to the modern line, but might be made up of feet that were not alike; and any grouping of cola or lines into strophes or stanzas.

The most common of the many feet were the iambus, 		} = 3 mora the trochee,

the spondee,
the anapæst, 		} = 4 mora
the dactyl,

Iambi, trochees and anapæsts were regularly taken in pairs or dipodies, each counting as a meter, while spondees and dactyls counted singly. The character of a colon or line was defined by the number of meters it contained, as dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, pentameter, hexameter, etc. If the feet in a line were all alike, they gave a pattern of long and short quantities exactly like a modern musical pattern, and the same was true of the heroic hexameter (dactyls and spondees). But Greek verse often presents mixed schemes, not easy to reproduce musically.

Modern prosody adopted most of the terms used in ancient prosody, but applied them to syllables in accordance with their customary accent instead of their natural quantity, unaccented syllables being considered 'short' and accented ones 'long.' Theoretically, this altered the time-values in almost every case, but practically modern verse, when read aloud, abounds in the use of pauses or rests, so that the actual time-scheme is apt to vary greatly in given cases.

Even though we know little of the actual way in which Greek verse was adapted to singing tones, yet we may safely assume that every long syllable was sung to a longer tone and every short syllable to a shorter tone. But modern verse may be set to a large variety of patterns of long and short tones provided that the accented syllables match with accented tones. This renders the musical treatment of verse in the modern system essentially different from that of ancient times.

The famous Hymn to Apollo, which is the best of extant Greek melodies, is naturally understood to be laid out tonally according to the quantity of the syllables in the text. This gives a pentuple rhythm. But a modern hymn in any ordinary meter may be set to either duple or triple rhythm.

The term meter is extended to any regular or established form of verse-structure in either the ancient or the modern systems of prosody.

Thus, in the ancient system, we have the iambic trimeter, verse in which each line consists of three iambic meters or dipodies (=6 feet), and the heroic hexameter, six dactyls or spondees, etc.

Thus, in modern hymnody, we have a large number of forms, varying both in the construction of the lines and in the number of lines to the stanza, though usually in each case using only a single kind of foot. The more common varieties are iambic (with lines sometimes of 10 or more syllables), but the trochaic forms are also numerous, though tending to short lines and larger stanzas, while dactylic or anapestic forms are somewhat employed. It is not uncommon for an English hymnal to include 150 varieties, each requiring its own form of tune. German hymnody uses a few forms not found in English. See Hymnody.

(b) Ancient thought regarded poetry and music as two faces of a single indivisible art, so that the theory of one included that of the other. Modern developments have widely separated the two into independent arts. But the terminology of prosody has been continued as applying to musical facts. Hence meter and its derivatives are much used technically in musical analysis and theory. But they have become intricately entangled with rhythm and its derivatives, the two sets of terms sometimes being used interchangeably and sometimes in contrast, though not always in the same way. Hence they are most profitably considered together. See Rhythm and under Acoustics.

Metromano-Piano. An apparatus for exercising the fingers of pianists and organists, invented in 1897 by Luigi Pizzamiglio and approved by the Milan Conservatory.

Metronome. A mechanical device for marking even units of time as an aid in fixing tempo and in keeping rhythm uniform. Of several forms, that known as Maelzel's is the most usual. This consists of a pivoted or double pendulum, actuated by clockwork, the upper part of which carries a slider and a graduated scale, so that the rate of oscillation can be adjusted by moving the slider up or down. The scale is marked to show the number of beats per minute. As the pendulum oscillates it gives audible clicks. G.

The instrument is highly useful as a tempo-indicator. Much music is printed with a mark like M.M. ♩ = 84, meaning that in the given piece each quarter-note is to have the time-value indicated by Maelzel's metronome set at 84. In elementary study it is also serviceable in establishing a precise and steady sense of rhythm. A bell-metronome is one with a bell that can be adjusted to mark principal accents.

Its invention is ascribed to J. N. Maelzel of Vienna (1816), who had several connections with Beethoven, but the idea probably originated somewhat earlier with D. N. Winkel of Amsterdam. Other devices, employing single pendulums, had been suggested from as far back as 1700.

The notation with 'M.M.', etc., is sometimes called the metronomic mark.

Mezzo. See Terms of Performance.

Mezzo-soprano, a voice or voice-part intermediate between soprano and alto. Mezzo-tenore (or tenor), a voice or voice-part intermediate between tenor and bass; usually same as baritone.

Mi. See Solmization.

Middle C. See C, Notation and Pitch. G.

Middle Part, Middle Voice. See Inner Parts.

Military Music. Either, in general, such music as is associated with military drill and similar functions or resembles it in style, or, specifically, a group or organization of instrumentalists for the performance of such music. G.

Such a group is called a military band, wind-band or simply band (sometimes in contrast with orchestra) and its trainer and director is a bandmaster. But a smaller group, using a smaller variety of instruments (largely drums, fifes, etc.), is a drum-corps and its leader a drum-major. In marching-exercises, where a full band is used, the evolutions are usually guided and the tempo set by the drum-major, using a large ornamental staff or baton.

The composition of military bands varies with their size and also with the usage of different countries. But they are universally made up of wood-wind, brass-wind and percussive sections. The first usually comprises a main body of clarinets, with some flutes, piccolos and oboes; the second contains saxophones, cornets or trumpets, French horns, saxhorns, trombones, bombardons (with tuba); and the third includes both snare- and bass-drums, cymbals and often a triangle or similar instrument. When employed for concerts, the composition and balance are often much altered as compared with arrangements suitable for the open air.

In many countries details as to governmental bands (including those for naval as well as military use) are carefully prescribed and often special training-schools are maintained for leaders and players.

In connection with tactical evolutions, whether for practice or in martial action, numerous signals by means of instruments are widely used, the actual system varying with the country. The majority of these are given by means of the bugle, the trumpet or the snare-drum.

Minim, Minima. See Notation. G.

Minnesinger, Minnesänger. A general name for a class of poet-singers in southern Germany in the 12-13th centuries, analogous with the Troubadours and Trouvères of France. Like these, they were drawn from the noble or knightly class, including many princes of the Hohenstaufen line and some in Bohemia. Their aim was the cultivation of lyric poetry and song as an elegant and courtly accomplishment, excellence being stimulated by contests or competitions that served to give the movement coherence. They were not formally organized, though in their ranks were some holding the title of Meister, while full members had that of Ritter. G.

The region in which they flourished extended from Alsace to Austria and northward as far as Thuringia. In the west they were in contact with the Trouvères. Among the many poets known to us were Heinrich von Morungen, Reinmar, Walther von der Vogelweide, Wolfram von Eschenbach and Heinrich von Meissen.

The name comes from Minne, love, since the early minnesongs were love-songs, like those of the Troubadours. But their topics varied widely, including songs of nature, of social life, of political feeling and of religion. Their verse took on many forms, some highly artificial, some laying the foundation for the future technique of German poetry. The melodies or Weisen were influenced both by plain-song and by popular music, but tended to follow rules or traditions of their own. The Minnesinger seldom used the help of assistants like the jongleurs of France. Their favorite instruments were harps and viols.

Tannhäuser was an actual minnesinger (13th century) and about his wandering life a fanciful story accumulated, which is utilized by Wagner in his opera, combined with a picture of the competition held at the Wartburg in 1207.

Early in the 14th century the Meistersinger in a measure took the place of the Minnesinger; see Meistersinger.

Minor. In acoustics and harmony, smaller or shorter; primarily of intervals, but extended to tones, scales, chords and modes; see Major. G.

Minor Canon. In English cathedrals, an official appointed by the chapter and assigned to duty as choirsinger; also called vicar choral. He may be either a cleric or a layman. G.

Minstrel. A general name for the various classes of wandering musicians that were common throughout Europe from the early Middle Ages. In some cases they may have originated as the personal retainers of feudal chiefs (as the derivation of their name from minister, servant, may suggest). But they were mostly free traveling entertainers, living by their skill in song and with instruments. Sometimes they were also exhibitors of athletic feats and tricks of dexterity or played the part of clowns and buffoons. Yet among them were many who spread the knowledge of song and instruments among the common people and in doing so directly contributed to artistic advance. G.

Organizations of minstrels, implying a large and influential class, are traceable as early as the 11th century. At times these appointed 'kings' as local dignitaries and rulers. Some of their unions or guilds covered whole countries, while others were confined to small districts or towns, where they sought to secure a monopoly as professional musicians. Among these were the Brotherhood of St. Nicolas in Vienna (from 1288), that of St. Julien in France (from 1321), and that of the Holy Cross at Strasburg, with the Musicians' Company in London (from 1472). Out of these in many cases grew institutions like the Stadtpeiffer and other bands of town-musicians supported at public expense in many places in Germany to furnish music on civic, social and religious occasions. See Roi de Ménestriers and Town-Musician.

There can be little doubt that the preservation and gradual improvement of a variety of small instruments during the centuries before 1500 were chiefly due to the minstrel-class. To them, also, may be ascribed much of the shaping of folk-music of every kind. Of their activity and achievements there can be no adequate record. But of their popularity and cleverness there is much indirect indication. Most of the medieval pictures and sculptures of musical things point in this direction, and literary references are not few. After 1500, when just the light-hearted forms of art which minstrelsy had magnified were taken up by cultivated society and adopted by the contrapuntists of the Church, the demand for the minstrel proper began to disappear.

Minuet. See Dances. G.

Miracles, Miracle-Plays. See Mysteries.

Miserere. Psalm 51, or a musical setting of it, designed for use as an exercise in a regular church service, as in the burial service, the office of Tenebræ, etc. G.

The text begins 'Miserere mei, Deus, secundum magnam misericordiam tuam.' [Note that Psalm 51 in the English version is numbered 50 in the Latin version.]

The three settings used in the Sistine Chapel in Holy Week are those of Allegri (17th century), Bai (1714) and Baini (1821).

Missal. The service-book containing the text of the Roman Catholic Mass and its associated exercises for the entire year.

The modern Missal was first ordained in 1570, but has been somewhat modified since. Musical missals have been issued from time to time, the great historic editions being the Editio Medicea (1614), now superseded by the Editio Vaticana (begun 1904).

Mixed Choir, Chorus, Quartet, Voices. Vocal ensembles in which both men's and women's voices are used. G.

For mixed cadence see Cadence and for mixed mode see Mode.

Mode. Properly, a type or species of scale; a method of selecting tones within the limits of an octave for melodic and harmonic purposes; a scale in the abstract or a generalized scale (opposed to a particular scale, having a designated pitch). For purposes of reference and definition, a mode is usually presented as a scale and the differences between modes are regarded as lying simply in a different distribution of long and short scale-steps. But substantially the same scale may have more than one modal character, due to contrasted methods of conceiving and handling the tones.

Both ancient and medieval modes were essentially melodic in modal character, and the same seems to be true of the modes of many kinds found outside of the field of European music. But the modern modes are also strongly harmonic, both their structure and their practical effect depending upon certain relations between their tones as triads quite as much as upon the stepwise arrangement of those tones. The ancient method of looking at a mode or scale was apparently from above downward, producing one sort of tonal perspective. The medieval and modern method is the reverse, from below upward, producing another sort of perspective. Neither the ancient nor the medieval conceptions included a firm sense of the tonal center called a key-note, though in both cases certain tones had principally for certain purposes. But the modern conception of modes involves the exaltation of the key-note as not only a favorite melodic point of beginning and ending, but as a harmonic generator and center of chordal gravity. On this side the term mode merges more or less with the term tonality. G.

[In the following summaries the various modes are represented for convenience as octave-scales and with letter-names so that the succession of their long and short steps can be roughly seen by reference to the white keys of the keyboard. But a mode as such has no definite pitch and the tones of a modern piano give a more or less erroneous notion of the ideal tone-relations of all modes.]

The ancient and the medieval systems of modes were substantially the same in general form, though the names do not correspond and the medieval system, as completed in the 16th century, included the use of modes in two ways (authentic and plagal). The main varieties were

	MEDIEVAL NAMES	ANCIENT NAMES
d - d	Dorian	Phrygian
a - a	Hypodorian	Æolian
e - e	Phrygian	Dorian
b - b	Hypophrygian	Mixolydian
f - f	Lydian	Hypolydian
c - c	Hypolydian	Lydian
g - g	Mixolydian	Hypophrygian
d - d	Hypomixolydian	Phrygian
a - a	Æolian	Æolian
e - e	Hypoæolian	Dorian
c - c	Ionian	Lydian
g - g	Hypoionian	Hypophrygian

The second in each pair in the first two columns is conceived as plagal and therefore does not quite correspond to anything in the Greek series. Æolian was sometimes used for Ionian.]

A mixed mode in medieval usage was the total compass of any authentic mode and its corresponding plagal. Each authentic and plagal together made a maneria.

The modern modes are but two in number, though the second often appears in more than one form, with some features borrowed from the first, so as to yield itself better to harmonic treatment. Ideally they are

c - c	Major
e - e	Minor (in its full form)
a - a	" (in its ordinary form)

(The other forms of the minor scale are mixed accommodations of minor and major.) For details, see Scale.

In medieval usage, the term mode was also applied (a) to certain metrical patterns in song that reproduced the quantities of the ancient verse-feet known as trochee, iambus, dactyl and anapest, and (b) to certain rules, expressed or implied, as to the value of long notes as related to that of the next shorter species; also called mood; see Modus.

Modulation. In literary usage, a general term for alteration in pitch, as in the inflections of speech or the melody of song. Specifically, in harmony, the process, act or result of passing from one key (tonality) to another in the course of a piece or passage, so that the original key-note is replaced by some other as the center of the tonal structure, with a subsequent return to the original key (either by a reverse modulation or by an abrupt resumption). In the modulating-process the tonal character of all the tones is changed in consequence of the adoption of the new key-note. This involves, also, a new character for the chords used. G.

Modulations may be passing, transient or fleeting, if they are both brief and not carried out into a cadence in the new key. In this case they may be regarded as only casual extensions of the original key to include tones that do not strictly belong to it or as harmonic devices whereby the significance of certain tones other than the tonic is temporarily heightened by using a note or chord belonging to them rather than to the tonic. This digressive or enriching use of modulation is frequent in connection with the dominant and the subdominant.

On the other hand, a modulation may be complete or final, if it is carried out into a cadence, so that a phrase or section ends fully in the new key. The transition always involves the substitution of tones that are for-sign to the original key for one or more that are germane to it. A foreign tone thus melodically introduced is a modulating-note or note of modulation. On the harmonic side, also, the transition may be pivoted upon a chord which is approached in the original key, but left in the new key.

The simplest modulations from an original major key (with the substitutions required) are to key of V major	- 4# replacing 4

IV	- 7b " 7
VI minor	- 5# " 5
III	- 2# and 4# replacing 2 and 4
II	- 1# " 7b " 1 " 7
I	- 3b " 6b " 3 " 6

From a minor original key a variety of modulations are possible. Furthermore, on the keyboard many enharmonic modulations may be accomplished by utilizing the double and triple naming of the digitals. Some such modulations, though feasible and correct, are distant, extraneous or abrupt. These latter require some process of return to the original key, but after the simpler forms the latter can be resumed abruptly at the opening of a phrase.

In Gregorian music, the tones in each mode with which phrases may begin or end are called modulations, including those which are regular (the final, dominant, mediant and participant) and others which are conceded.

Modulator. A chart or diagram of the scale, especially that used in the Tonic Sol-Fa system of teaching. This indicates the tones by solmization-syllables (using, however, an anglicized spelling), spaced so as to show the whole- and half-steps, and adds an abbreviated indication of the scales most nearly related, one on the 'sharp' side, the other on the 'flat' side. G.

Modus. In mensural music, the relation in time-value between either a large and a long or a long and a breve, the former being modus major and the latter modus minor and either of them being perfect if the ratio was one to three, but imperfect if it was one to two; also called mood; see Notation and note under Perfect. G. (Mood).

Monochord. An instrument for acoustical experiments and determinations, consisting essentially of a single string stretched over a long resonance-box and provided with a movable bridge by which the string can be divided at will into separate vibrating-parts and also with a graduated scale for noting the length of these parts. In some cases more than one string is provided, so as to facilitate comparisons. In modern instruments the tension of the string is fixed by means of adjustable weights attached at one end. G.

The apparatus was known and used by Pythagoras (6th century B.C.), who was the first known demonstrator of the mathematical properties of the fundamental musical intervals, though he may have been anticipated by Egyptian investigators. By means of this instrument he and his followers established a correct list of most of the standard ratios used in modern acoustics, although he had no means of referring these to vibration-numbers, as is now the practice.

The monochords continued in frequent use through the Middle Ages, sometimes as an acoustical tool, but sometimes, also, as an elementary form of instrument. On its principle was constructed the instrument known as the tromba marina or nun's fiddle, which, however, was made with a long, heavy string, only the upper partials of which were used practically (this instrument was sometimes called a monochord). It also suggested the peculiar principle of the clavichord, which is essentially a many-stringed monochord, the placing of the bridges being controlled by means of a keyboard (hence this, too, was sometimes paradoxically called a monochord).

Monodrama. A melodrama with but a single spoken part. G.

Monodramas and duodramas were for a time notably popular in the last part of the 18th century.

Monody, Monophony. In general, melody or song for a single voice, including, therefore, all forms of vocal music that are unaccompanied by tones different from those of the voice; homophony. All ethnic and ancient music, with that of the Gregorian style, is essentially monodic or monophonus. Specifically, such solo song as was undertaken by the Troubadours and similar singers (11-13th centuries), by the promoters of the Florentine ars nova (14th century) or by the Florentine dilettanti who sought to recover the Greek dramatic recitative (16th century), all these forms of solo being provided with some species of instrumental accompaniment and having some harmonic basis. Hence the term was extended to composition in parts in which one part, usually at first the tenor, but presently the upper part, was principal and normative for the whole (as opposed to the polyphony that had been the prevailing style). Monody or monophony gained its first prominent place in dramatic music, but in the late 18th century it secured control of instrumental music as well and became the leading principle in all subsequent composition. See Mannheim School. G.

Monotone. A single tone, continued or repeated without variation in pitch, or a recitation, intoning or chanting to such a tone, as in parts of both Gregorian and Anglican chants. G.

Monotoning or intoning is a natural device for increasing the sonority and projection of the speaking voice. Its widespread use in religious services may have been due to this as much as to the increased dignity and solemnity that it gives to utterance.

Persons whose vocal development is so limited that in speech and song they adhere more or less to a single pitch are sometimes termed monotones.

Mood. Same as mode or modus.

Moralities. See Mysteries.

Mordent. See Embellishments. G.

Moresca, Morisco, Moresque, Morris-dance. See Dances. G.

Motet. Though probably originating as a secular form of part-song, from the 15th century a musical setting of a Biblical text or the verse of a sequence in rather elaborate contrapuntal style and designed for from three to several voices, without accompaniment. It was the counterpart of the secular madrigal and, like it, originally conceived in one of the mediæval modes. The same care and skill that were given during the a cappella period to the music of the Mass were extended to the motet as a form to be incorporated into services without being prescribed. After 1600 motets continued to be written, both in the old style and also in accordance with the new ideas of the age, often with instrumental accompaniment and even as solos with such accompaniment. In the 18th century their style became still more variable, until the word came to be practically equivalent to the English anthem, with which the form is at least in a general way analogous. In modern usage the two are often used indiscriminately, though sometimes motet is reserved for a work that is decidedly contrapuntal or that uses a Latin text or that is to be sung a cappella. G.

The derivation of the word is much disputed. It may be related to modulus, a melody or song, but is better referred to motto or mot, a text or saying. In early writers it appears in a great variety of forms.

The term seems to have been first used in the 13th century in France for secular part-songs having a cantus in the tenor, which was played, but usually not sung, these songs being among the earliest examples of free part-writing with more than one note to the syllable. In such early writing for three parts the middle voice was sometimes called motetus or mean.

The beauty and dignity of motet-literature as developed especially in the 16th century has led to the formation in some places of choral societies or choirs for the reproduction of works of their general class.

Motion. In composition, the melodic progression or advance (in pitch) of a voice or voice-part considered either by itself or in relation to others; voice-progression or voice-leading. G.

Absolutely, the motion of a part may be even or chantwise (on a monotone), ascending (to a more acute pitch) or descending (to a graver pitch); it may be conjunct or stepwise (by successive diatonic or chromatic intervals) or disjunct or skipwise (by an interval greater than a second).

Comparatively, the motion of two parts may be similar (both ascending or both descending), parallel (both ascending or descending by the same interval), oblique (one moving, but the other stationary) or contrary or opposite (one ascending, the other descending). When more than two parts are considered, the motion may be similar or parallel, but is usually mixed. See Progression.

In the development of artistic melody it was natural at first to cling mostly to even or conjunct motion. Skips were for a long time handled with reserve and event imidity. But, with the advent of harmonic feeling and the demand for free expressiveness, many melodic procedures became common that were once prohibited in strict composition.

The advance of both counterpoint and harmony has depended upon the minute study of the possibilities of part-motion. Early experiments lay in the use of similar and parallel motion, but it was soon perceived that strength of structure and the avoidance of certain unsatisfactory relations (like objectionable parallels) could be secured only by a free use of contrary motions.

Motive, Motif, Motiv. A short melodic figure or note-group, having such coherence and character as to be used and repeated as a structural unit (as in contrapuntal treatment, in accompaniments, etc.). Hence, more broadly, a subject used in a contrapuntal work or a characteristic theme in dramatic music; see Leitmotif. G.

Motive is also sometimes used for a small division of a phrase, like a measure.

Moto Perpetuo. A piece in which a rapid succession of short-note figures is maintained throughout; also called perpetuum mobile.

Mouth. The opening on the side of an organ-pipe (between the lips) in which the sound is produced; see Pipe and Organ.

Mouth-Harmonica, Mouth-Organ. See Under Harmonica. The latter term is also sometimes applied to the Pan's-pipes.

Mouthhole. In transverse or horizontal flutes, the hole on the side of the tube against the edge of which the breath is directed in playing.

Mouthpiece. That part of a wind-instrument which is applied to or held in the player's lips. Its form varies with the class of instrument. G.

In whistles, flageolets and direct or vertical flutes generally, the mouthpiece (apple or beak) contains a flat slit through which the breath is directed against the sharp edge of an opening on the side of the tube. The same principle is used in the flue-pipes of the organ.

In instruments of the reed-class, the mouthpiece contains one or two reeds, the upper ends of which are held between the lips; in clarinets it is called a beak.

In brass-instruments, the commonest varieties are the conical (as in French horns) and the cupped or hemispherical, in each case the player's lips being applied to and pressed against the rim of the mouthpiece.

In some instruments, as the bassoon and some brass-instruments, the mouthpiece is carried on a projecting piece of tubing, called a mouthpipe.

Movable Do, Movable Syllables. A system of using the solmization-syllables do (or ut), re, mi, fa, sol, la, si (or ti) so that do corresponds always to the key-note or tonic; opposed to fixed do or syllables; see Solmization.

This is the system utilized in the Tonic Sol-fa method of notation and teaching.

Movement. In general, either melodic or harmonic progression or advance, or rhythm and meter taken together, or tempo or pace. Specifically, a principal division of a compound or cyclical instrumental work, usually completely separated from the rest by cadence and pause, which has its own form, themes and development, so that it can be used apart from the rest. The key of the first movement in such a work establishes the key for the whole, but the keys of movements other than the first and the last may vary. The structure of a compound work as a whole is sometimes called its movement-plan, as distinct from the particular form of any of the movements taken alone. G.

The habitual union of pieces of contrasted form goes back to the coupling of two diverse dances in the 16th century, such as a pavan with a gailiard or saltarello. In the 17th both the sonata da chiesa and the sonata da camera were commonly laid out in at least three distinct movements. The same holds true of the Italian and French types of overture. The old sonatas were succeeded by the ordres, partite or suites of dances of the 18th century, while from the overture and other sources came the classical sonata and symphony, with their varied special applications. Both suite and sonata acquired somewhat fixed or regular plans, though the former adhered wholly to dance-forms and to a single key throughout, while the latter adopted sonata-form for at least the first movement (hence called first-movement form) and tended to use a different key for the middle movement or movements. In all these plans the artistic aim was to achieve a higher and richer artistic unity by combining diverse forms of expression. Undoubtedly, also, there was some impulse, as in the plan of the so-called 'concert-opera,' to construct a series that would have value as an effective example of program-making.

The successive numbers in a compound vocal work are seldom called movements, though they are more or less analogous.

Multiplication-Tone. See Combination-tone.

Muniera. See Dances.

Murky. A harpsichord-piece with the bass in broken octaves, such a bass being a murky-bass.

Muse. The mouthpiece of a bagpipe.

Musette. Originally a small variety of oboe or a form of bagpipe. In suites, an alternative for the gavotte; see Dances.

Music. In general, tonal beauty or tonal forms that cause aesthetic satisfaction through the sense of hearing. Hence the art of tonal expression or the science of tonal construction and production, in which the fundamental elements of melody, harmony and rhythm are used with definite purpose and result.

As a physical form of action, song is probably as instinctive as speech; indeed, the line between the two is not always distinct. But as the faculty of song is exercised and becomes specialized, as this is supplemented by the aid of the implements called instruments, and as, with these or by bringing individual singers into united action, complex tonal procedures are attempted and adopted into usage, a genuine fine art is seen to take shape, analogous with the other fine arts of representation, edification and literature. The harmonic aspects of music, which most strikingly differentiate it from other fine arts, are the last to appear in the evolutionary process, and when these are presented on the grandest scale, as in the modern orchestra and opera, musical art far outstrips all the other fine arts in variety and magnitude of effect and in intensity of appeal. In its simpler manifestations music is practically universal in all parts of the world and probably has been practiced in all ages of history, but its fullest development belongs only to European civilization and to the last five centuries.

The term is also used individually and collectively (a) of compositions or tonal creations; (b) of all kinds of written or printed transcripts or scores of compositions; (c) of performances or renderings of such productions; and (d) of organized groups of performers (like choruses or orchestras).

It is variously designated by qualifiers (a) as to general style, as popular or artistic, secular or sacred, etc.; (b) as to technical form, as melodic, harmonic or contrapuntal, classical or romantic, lyric or dramatic, etc.; (c) as to method of performance, as vocal or instrumental, solo or concerted, choral or orchestral, for the piano, the organ, the violin or any other instrument, etc.; and (d) as to intended application or use, as church-concert, chamber-, salon-, dance-music, etc., or ecclesiastical, operatic, military, etc.

Music-. An element in numerous compounds, most of which are self-explanatory, though some are noted below.

Musica Ficta or Falsa. A general term used in the cappella period for all chromatic alterations made by singers in written scores for the purpose of securing more satisfactory harmony, especially in cadences. Through this practice, at first not regularly indicated in notation, the use of tones additional to the usual modes and of harmonic modulation were gradually established. G.

For musica figurata, see Figuration. For musica mensurata or mensurabilis, see Mensurable Music.

Musical. Pertaining to the art of music in any of its forms, including composition, performance, notation, etc. Also, subjectively, fond of music or expert and discriminating in regard to it.

For musical drama, see Opera; for musical ear, see Ear; for musical glasses, see Harmonica.

Musicale. A vocal or instrumental performance or concert, usually at a private house or small concert-room and not open to the general public.

Music-box. An instrument consisting essentially of a metal-cylinder or barrel, revolved by clockwork, which bears on its surface small pins or pegs, so placed as to engage and twang the graduated teeth of a steel-comb that is firmly set in the frame. These teeth are carefully tuned so as to give an extended compass of tones and the pins are so set as to sound the desired tones in proper order of pitch and time. Often the same cylinder is adjusted to play several tunes in rotation. As the best instruments have been made in Switzerland, often called Swiss music-box. See Automatic Appliances. G.

Music-chair, Music-stool. A chair or stool for one who plays upon a piano; a piano-chair or stool.

Music-desk, Music-stand. A rack or stand to hold music for a performer, especially the stand used by the conductor of a chorus or orchestra (also conducting-stand).

Music-Director. One who teaches music and conducts musical exercises in a school, college or other educational institution. Often extended to one who is in charge of the music of a church, whether organist or choirmaster.

For the German usage, see under Director. See also under Professor.

Music-Engraving. See Printing.

Music-hall. Originally a hall intended for concerts, but the term has become associated, especially in England, with a hall where varied dramatic and musical performances of popular character are given, often with dancing, etc.

Music-house. A firm or store devoted to the sale of musical publications or instruments.

Musician. One who is trained and expert in any branch of music, especially one who makes composing, performing or teaching music his profession. The knowledge, skill and experience required are comprehended under the general term musicianship.

Music-paper. Paper with ruled staffs for recording music by hand.

Music-pen. A five-pointed pen for ruling staffs for written music.

Music-printing. See Printing. G.

Music-recorder. See Melograph.

Music-school. An institution where instruction is given in one or more branches of musical art; often called a conservatory, though in some cases the latter term is reserved for large, well-organized and often state-supported institutions.

The name is often taken by a mere association of private teachers, working independently.

Music-Supervisor. In the United States, one who has charge of music-instruction in a public school, usually with one or more under-teachers, or in the school-system of a town, city or district; cf. music-director.

Music-teacher. One who gives instruction in music, especially in the playing of some instrument, in singing or in elementary composition.

Music-type. Type suitable for printing the various characters and signs of musical notation.

A font of such type includes at least 400 different characters. See Printing.

Music-wire. Steel wire such as is used in pianos and some other instruments; piano-wire.

Such wire represents the highest achievement of modern wire-making.

Musico. See Castrato.

Musicography. The art and science of writing music in correct and intelligible notation.

It properly includes not only the mechanical formation of the characters, but also the choice of the best or the accepted ways of indicating the desired effect. There are many points on which usage is confused or divided, calling for the exercise of judgment and experience. See Orthography.

Musiology. A recent word, equivalent to the German Musikwissenschaft or the French musicologie. Its accepted meaning is the scientific pursuit of musical research, especially on the historical side, as in the investigation of documents, the editing and publication of sources, the discussion of disputed questions of fact or critical opinion, the codifying of scattered or neglected data, etc. The emphasis is frequently laid upon archaeological investigation or upon the exercise of highly-specialized editorial skill. It is possible that the term may become more inclusive of the whole range of music in its scientific and philosophical aspects. It properly includes acoustics, composition (as a science), instrumentals, vocalics, æsthetics, etc., as well as historical research.

Mutation. In medieval solmization, the act or process of shifting from one hexachord to another, involving the use of another syllable for the same tone. Also, in violin-playing, same as shift. Also the change that takes place in the boy's voice at puberty. G.

For mutation-stop, see Organ and Organ-stops.

Mute. Any device used in connection with an instrument to deaden or reduce its sound, especially, in the violin and similar instruments, the metal-clip that can be slipped over the bridge to check its free vibration, or, in the horn or trumpet, the cone of leather, paper or other material that can be more or less inserted into the bell so as to muffle the tone (and also modify the intonation); a sordino. An instrument with a mute in service is said to be muted, and the tone then produced is a muted tone. G (Sordino).

Mysteries. A general term for various forms of medieval dramatic play or pageant. Properly, three types are distinguished: mysteries or mystery-plays, dealing with the more solemn of Biblical topics, especially those relating to Christ, miracles or miracle-plays, dealing with the lives of the saints or similar persons, and moralties, allegories on moral and religious subjects, in which qualities or abstract conceptions are personified. In all of these representations, which were originally devised and carried out by ecclesiastics, music was apt to be used in some simple forms, though only incidentally. From them, through gradual steps of transfer and transformation, were derived the street-plays that in the 16th century were common in Italy. These were one of the main sources of derivation for the modern theater. They also furnished types of drama for the early experiments with opera and oratorio.

It is impossible to trace fully the growth of the medieval religious plays. They may have had a basis or suggestion from the post-classical drama of Byzantium. They may have been an instinctive amplification of Biblical suggestions to match liturgical symbolism. While their original purpose was religious edification, they tended from the 14th century to escape from church control, to magnify the exciting, the humorous and the grotesque, and thus to supply the craving for social amusement. What music they may have contained had little influence upon dramatic music as such. But their naive adaptation of themes and narratives to the exigencies of stage-presentation was directly imitated in the mythological tales used in the first operas and the allegorical or didactic topics of the first oratorios. It was not long before the opera set out upon paths of its own that differentiated it from the theater, but the oratorio long remained subject to the spirit and methods of medieval pageantry.

Nachschlag. A decorative note or notes appended to a principal note (and taking part of its time); an unaccented appoggiatura or afternote; opposed to vorschlag; see Embellishments. G.

Nachspiel. An organ-postlude for a service or an epilogue to a choral work; opposed to vorspiel or prelude. G.

Nachtanz. See Dances.

Nail-Fiddle, Nail-Violin. An odd instrument consisting of a lute-shaped body the top of which carries 12–20 upright pins or rods of metal, yielding tones as they are put in vibration by means of a bow. It was first devised by Joh. Wilde of Petrograd. In 1780 Senal of Vienna added sympathetic strings, while later Trager of Bamberg substituted a revolving band for the bow and attached a sort of keyboard. G.

Narrator. In many of the older Passions and other church-oratorios, the personage who supplies the connective narrative (usually in recitative) between the lyric solos and choruses.

Natural. A term originally applied (as an adjective) to these cond and fifth hexachords (c-a), which differed from the rest in including neither b rotundum nor b quadratum. Hence, as this hexachord was represented on the keyboard by front or 'white' keys, applied (usually as a noun) to such keys in general, as opposed to back or 'black' keys (sharps and flats). In this naming b quadratum was counted as a natural and thus all naturals came to be indicated (where necessary) by the sign n, which comes from the sign b for b quadratum. This new sign had its principal use as a corrective or cancel in cases where the effect of a sharp or flat, whether in the signature or as an accidental, needs to be set aside. See Notation. G.

Natural key, natural scale, on the keyboard, a key or scale using only white keys or naturals (as the major scale of c). [This term does not imply that that scale is 'natural' in any but this technical sense.]

Natural Tones. In a wind-instrument, especially of the horn- and trumpet-classes, the tones producible from the tube simply by varying the lip-tension and the breath-pressure, without altering the effective length of the tube. These tones are the natural harmonics or upper partials of the fundamental tone of the tube. See Wind-Instruments.

Natural harmonics, in violin-playing, are harmonics produced from an open string; opposed to artificial harmonics, produced from a stopped string.

Natural voice, in vocalization, either a voice that is untrained or undeveloped, or one used in an ordinary register, as opposed to the false alto. Occasionally, all vocal music is called natural, as opposed to music produced by means of instruments.

Neapolitan Sixth. See Sixth.

Nebel. An ancient Hebrew instrument, possibly some form of harp, but probably a lute, like the Egyptian nefer.

In the English Bible the word is usually rendered 'psaltery,' which is misleading if the nebel was a lute.

Neck. In instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, the more or less slender part that projects upward from the top of the body, bearing in front the fingerboard, against which the strings may be stopped, and terminating in the head, with the tuning-pegs and the scroll. In the violin and its relatives the neck is braced against the body by means of the heel.

In many lutes the head was compound or double, necessitating necks of peculiar shape.

Nenia. A funeral-song or lament.

Ninth. The interval between the first and ninth degrees of a scale, being major if the scale be major and minor if the scale be the full minor; a compound second; also a tone or note at either of these intervals from any starting-point. G.

The chord of the ninth or ninth-chord is a seventh-chord with the ninth added, making (in its full form) a five-toned chord, so that in four-part harmony one tone must be omitted. Like the seventh-chord, it has a decided tendency to resolve by the descent of both seventh and ninth. When its root is the dominant, it is a dominant ninth-chord.

Nocturn. A section of the Roman Catholic office for Matins, consisting of Psalms, antiphons and lessons varying with the season. On Sundays and festivals three nocturns are used, but at other times only one. G.

Nocturne. A name first used by John Field for an instrumental piece in lyric style and of dreamy or sentimental character. It was then adopted by Chopin and has since become fairly common. As a rule, nocturnes are in some kind of song-form. G.

Note. In acoustics, that portion of a vibrating body, whether solid or gaseous, where the motion is least; opposed to loop. G.

In a stretched string, for example, so far as it vibrates entire (giving its fundamental tone), the two fixed ends are nodes and the string as a whole forms a loop, but, so far as it vibrates in its aliquot parts (giving upper partials), there is a node at each dividing-point between such parts, with loops intervening in each case. Only the fixed ends remain at rest absolutely; all other nodes are only relatively so.

When the vibrations of a plate or disc are examined, it proves that the nodes form various patterns on the surface, which can be located by the use of sand or powder; these patterns are called nodal figures or lines.

The location of nodes is of importance in the construction of all wind-instruments using a body of air confined in a tube.

Noël, Nowel (literally, 'Christmas'). A carol for Christmas Eve or Christmas Day, often containing the word noël as an exclamation or burden. G.

The name and original style are French, applied to verses and melodies more or less of the nature of folk-songs. In the 16–17th centuries contrapuntal settings of similar words were made in Italy and elsewhere. English carols for Christmas are often called by this name to distinguish them from carols for other festivals.

Nome, Nomos. In ancient Greek music, a rule or pattern for a certain kind of music, as for the lyre or the flute.

Nomenclature, Musical. A general name for the technical names or terms belonging to music as an art and science; musical vocabulary or terminology. It includes both those words that are peculiar to music and those that have a special musical application, besides some symbolic uses of letters, numerals and syllables. At several points nomenclature and notation are so interwoven that they cannot be separated; see Notation.

Nomenclature and terminology are usually regarded as synonyms; but it may be urged that terminology is broader, including the criticism of terms as well as their mere collection, as well as any philosophy of the subject that may be possible.

The size of the musical vocabulary in any language is difficult to estimate satisfactorily. The separate entries in a first-class English dictionary run close to 10,000. But this includes a large number of words taken bodily from Italian, French, German and some other languages. Many of them are so special or limited in use that they do not attract general notice.

In some connections it is useful to note that musical terms belong mostly to the following classes: (a) those of acoustics as a science, (b) those of the tone-system and its notation, (c) those of instruments and their structure, (d) those of composition as a process and of forms as its product, (e) those of performance and style, and (f) those of the adaptation of music to other interests, such as the stage, the church, the school, etc.

Nones. The sixth of the Canonical Hours (3 P.M.). G.

Nonet. A group of nine performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quartet, quintet, etc. G.

Nonole, Nonuplet. A 9-note group occupying the time of a normal 8; see Note-Groups.

Normal Pitch, Normal Tone. In acoustics, a pitch or tone with a fixed number of vibrations per second, used as a standard of reference, as the diapason normal adopted by the French Academy in 1859 ( $a = 435$ ).

Notation. A general name for any system of marks and symbols by which tonal effects are visibly recorded for preservation and reproduction. Such systems have tended to be alphabetic or graphic in character. The so-called staff-notation, which is now universal and standard throughout the musical world, is essentially graphic, but at every point involves a system of letter-names, which is alphabetic, as well as interlocking with the mechanical apparatus known as the keyboard. These three accessories of musical art, the letter-names, the staff-notation and the keyboard, as they have developed hand in hand since medieval times, present one of the most intricate problems in music-history. The main outlines of the story, however, are clear enough and the total result as it now stands, though not free from objection, is on the whole an impressive monument of practical ingenuity. G.

The Letter-Names and the Keyboard. The Greeks had an extremely complicated method of designating tones by letters and similar signs, but this has no direct connection with modern usage. The earliest data about the use of Latin letters come from about 900, when Gregorian music was assuming permanent form. For a time a two-octave series of 15 letters (A to P) seems to have been somewhat used, but the simpler plan of using only 7 (A to G), covering but one octave, early became the favorite. As this rested on a notion of scales brought over from the Greeks, the letters stood for a series of tones in which there were two short steps, while the rest were long. Normally, the short steps fell at b-c and e-f, but (to provide for the full or 'Doric' scale) sometimes at a-b instead of b-c. In other words, there were two bs, which were distinguished by being written in two forms. The two types may be tabulated thus—a   b   c   d   e   f   g   a

a   b

The earliest keyboards corresponded to this scheme, having both what we call b-flat and b-natural. The starting-point in naming was at a because this was the basis of the prevailing scale-system of the time, as it continued to be till at least the 15th century.

The lower b was called b rotundum and was the source of the character b and of the modern notion of a flat, while the upper b was called b quadratum and was the source of the characters # and b, as well as of the notion of a sharp (see Flat and Sharp).

This nomenclature was carried out in the hexachord-system and the pedagogical device of the Guidonian Hand, involving the related system of syllable-names for tones (see Hexachord and Solmization). For the plan of discriminating between octaves by using large and small letters, etc., see Pitch and Octave.

The above simple system sufficed for the needs of plain-song. It was gradually extended to meet the demands of polyphony and the allied practice of musica ficta. All the longer steps were gradually filled in with additional tones. These, like the early b-flat, appeared as substitutes for regular tones and took their names from the latter. These intercalated or chromatic tones may have been recognized in this order: b♭, f♯, c♯, e♭, and g♯ or a♭; together they gave rise to this keyboard-plan—

b♭   c♯   e♭   f♯   g♯ a   b   c   d   e   f   g   or   a
a♭

This stage was reached by the 15th century. It was not till much later (17-18th cents.) that the generalized form of modern usage became established, with the basis of reckoning transferred from a to c— c♯   d♯   f♯   g♯   a♯

c   d   e♭   f♭   g♭   a   b   b♭   c   c♯

Neither the letter-names nor the early form of the keyboard implies a precise pitch. The low a of the medieval system stood for any convenient tone in the lower men's voices; in actual singing it may have fluctuated. There was no fixed pitch to which instruments like the organ or the spinet were regularly tuned. The notion of standardized pitch did not appear till the 18th century and even then was a topic of dispute (see Pitch).

The Neumes. Along with the growth of the letter-nomenclature ran manifold efforts to depict the rise and fall of plain-song melodies by stenographic marks of various sorts. These were called pneumæ or neumes (that is, 'breathings' or accents). The need of something of the sort was insistent. Just as each cathedral, church and monastery had its own copies of the Bible, so it had its own copies of the Missal and Breviary—in both cases in manuscript. Verbally, the service-books in different places were substantially identical, but in chirography each set was more or less unique. Though there came to be a fair consensus as to the writing of the words, there was no consensus for a long time as to the noting of the melodies. The marks used consisted of dots, dashes, crooks, etc., formed and collocated variously according to the skill and taste of individual scribes. In general, they aimed to represent up and down motion of the voice by higher and lower placing on the page, but often without much regularity or definiteness. The marks served to suggest melodies that were already familiar, but the books of one monastery were often unintelligible to singers from another. [It is to be noted that this system from the outset embodied the modern notion of 'up' and 'down,' which is the reverse of the ancient notion. The origin of this reversal is not clear.]

Chaotic and bewildering as are many examples of this cursive musical script careful research (especially by means of facsimiles of manuscripts from different places and times) has shown that it tended toward a system of characters, representing certain particular effects, partly single tones, partly small tone-figures (see table in Grove's Dictionary, iii. 394-5). The form of these characters and their relative position are obviously adjusted to the tone-system as made definite by means of letter-names. In a given case the neumes were brought into connection with the letter-system either by marking one or more letter-names on the margin or by drawing a horizontal line across the page to show the position of some tone of reference (usually at first f, the line being colored red), to which a second line might be added (usually c, the line colored yellow). From such lines the scale-relation of the neumes could be calculated with fair precision.

The Staff (or Stave). Lines had been used still earlier (by Huebald, about 900), but in a different way, as mere guides for writing the words to be sung so that the intervals of the melody might be seen (the syllables of the text being written in the spaces). This usage had no permanent importance. But the pitch-line or lines added to a series of neumes was a first step toward a system of such lines, what we now call a staff. At first there was no agreement about the form or use of this. Varying numbers of lines were tried (from 4 to 15). At times only the lines were regarded as significant, but at length both the lines and the spaces between them were counted as together making the degrees or steps of the staff (numbered from below upward in all cases) and corresponding to successive degrees or steps in the tone-system. A 4-line staff early became standard for plain-song, since its melodies rarely exceed a range of nine tones. A 6-line staff was for a time much used for organ- and virginal-music. But for secular song a 5-line staff proved so convenient that from about 1500 it tended to take the place of all others (except for plain-song). As writing for more than one voice became frequent it began to be seen that the eye can readily interpret two or more staves at once, if only they be ranged under each other so as to match. Such staves are now united into a system by a vertical mark at the beginning that is called a brace or accolade (compressed vocal harmony and piano-music on two staves, songs with accompaniment and organ-music on three, quartet-music on four or, if accompanied, on six, orchestral music on as many as there are separate parts, etc.). Any staff can be temporarily extended up or down (to accommodate unusual ranges of pitch) by means of added or leger lines and spaces.

Clefs. To make a staff serviceable as a diagram of pitch, its degrees must be connected with definite tones by means of some sort of a 'key.' At the outset, following the usage used with the neumes, certain lines were marked by a letter as assigned to f or c or g. Theoretically, any line might be given to either of these pivotal pitches. Out of these key-letters, as they were variously shaped by successive scribes, grew the conventional characters now known as clefs, one of which stands at the head of every staff as a basis of reckoning.

In Gregorian music two forms only are used, an f-clef and a c-clef:

For the 5-line staff three forms are used, an f-clef for lower parts, a c-clef mostly for parts of medium range and a g-clef for higher parts. Of these, the placing of the c-clef has been most variable, whereas in modern usage that of the f-clef and the g-clef has become almost fixed on the fourth and second lines respectively. When so placed, these stand at the extremes of a series of seven, which may be regarded as derived from a single system of 11 lines, sometimes referred to as the great staff. (See cut below).

This scheme required further extension so as to cover the case of the extra or chromatic members of the tone-system. As each of these normally replaces one of the primary tones, it may naturally occupy the same staff-degree, but with a special mark to show that that degree has a special significance. The signs # and b are thus used as required, standing on the degree to be altered; and, further, in case the ordinary force of the degree is restored, a q is now regularly used in the same way (usually called a natural, but when following and counteracting a # or b, a cancel). In much early music these chromatic signs of change in the meaning of the staff-degrees were scattered through the music wherever needed (or in some cases written above the staff). But, with the development of fixed schemes of keys (tonalities) and especially in view of the representation of these on the keyboard by fixed combinations of white and black keys (digitals), much complication was saved by grouping together at the head of the staff such sharps or flats as are necessary in the particular piece or passage. Such grouped signs are called signatures or key-signatures, but when sharps, flats or naturals occur in the midst of the music, with momentary or at least transient effect, they are accidentals. For a table of these, with their adaptation to the system of major and minor scales, see under Scale.

Notes and Rests. The special function of the staff is to furnish a framework into which may be fitted marks whose placing on the lines or spaces shall indicate the precise tones desired and whose form shall show the proportional length of those tones. These marks are called notes; with each form of them is a corresponding rest, marking a silence of equal duration.

In plain-song the relative duration of tones depends chiefly on the words sung and is never supposed to be regularly rhythmical. For such song the pictographic neumes served fairly well. But from the 12th century, when two or more voices began to be fitted together in rude harmony, and much more later, when true polyphony began to develop, the necessity for a definite notation for time-values became urgent, especially as all composition was adopting a clearly rhythmical character.

Hence appeared what was called musica mensurata, measured or mensural music, which was distinguished from plain-song by its minute attention to tone-quantity. Its notes were derived from the neumes called the virga, , and the punctus or punctum, , which had stood for tones relatively long and short. The characters first introduced were the longa, , and the brevis, , with a maxima or larga, , for the longest tones. To these others were later added, especially to provide for the rhythmical freedom of subdivision in part-writing. As these medieval notes became the source of the modern system, the two series may well be given together, though in detailed handling the two are not alike.

MEDIEVAL	MODERN
 maxima
 longa
 brevis	 breve, double whole-note
 semibrevis	 semibreve, whole-note
 minima	 minim, half-note
 semiminima	 crotchet, quarter-note
 fusa	 quaver, 8th-note
 semifusa	 semiquaver, 16th-note demisemiquaver, 32d-note hemidemisemiquaver, 64th-note

At first all notes were quadrate or square in form and all had solid black bodies. In the 15th century for various reasons they were often made open or 'white,' and from the 16th they began to tend toward the modern oval shape. In modern usage, the oval body (that is, the note proper) is called the head, the vertical stroke attached the stem or tail and the oblique strokes pennants, flags or hooks. When notes bearing pennants are grouped together, they are usually joined by connecting-bars (pennant-bars), thus:

The whole modern note-system assumes that the normal subdivision of time-units is duple and so in the above table every note is held to be equal to two of the next note below, unless there is a special mark to the contrary. The unit of reckoning is the semibreve or whole-note. But a triple subdivision may be effected by adding a dot to any note (increasing its value by one half), making it equal to three of the next species; and any note may be replaced by a triplet of the next species.

The medieval system was different in that it assumed that the normal subdivision was triple, so that in the above table every note was held to be equal to three of the next note below, unless there was a special mark to the contrary. The unit of reckoning was either the maxima or the longa. But a duple subdivision was provided for at each step in the series as a concession, being called imperfect or minor in distinction from triple, which was perfect or major. The whole subject was made needlessly involved by a cumbrous nomenclature, in which the subdivision of a maxima or longa was called modus, that of a brevis tempus and that of a semibreve prolatio, with certain signs indicating varieties in each case; but there was the further complication that more or less irregular methods of subdivision were made to apply to a whole piece in advance (by means of a sign at the outset) and then that notes under certain conditions might become regular 'by position' in spite of the sign. The probability is that in practice there was not so much difference between the old and the new ways; but the old naming and signs seem extremely complicated now. Of the signs it is enough to give those for tempus perfectum,  (■ = 3 ♦) and for tempus imperfectum,  (● = 2 ♦), since from the latter comes the modern sign for 'common time.'

In both the medieval and the modern system  signs placed at the head of a piece or passage indicate the general rhythm and its subdivisions. This is now usually called the rhythmic or time-signature. For a table of the modern signs, see under Rhythm.

The recognition of regular time-units necessitated the use of signs for pauses or silences, the length of which must be made commensurate with that of tones. Those now in use are directly derived from medieval forms; they are now called rests, as follows:

	breve-rest
	semibreve- or whole-rest minim- or half-rest crotchet- or quarter-rest quaver- or eighth-rest sixteenth-rest thirty-second-rest
	sixty-fourth-rest

The time-value of a note may be lengthened by placing after it a dot or point, making it a dotted note (sometimes called dot of prolongation); its value is then increased one-half, making it equal to three of the next species (like a similar sign in mensural notation, then called the point of perfection). A second dot adds half as much as the first, so that a double-dotted note gains three-quarters of its original value. Thus . A note's time-value may also be lengthened by placing over or under it the sign called a hold, pause or fermata,  which signifies that the rhythm is temporarily suspended and the notes marked are to be continued at the player's discretion. On the other hand, the time-value of a note may be shortened by placing over or under it a staccato-mark (either a dot or a pointed stroke, according as the shortening is to be moderate or extreme), but in this case the balance of the time-value is filled by a rest, so that the actual tone and the silence after it are together equal to the original note-value.

In modern music there are many cases in which two notes succeeding each other on the same degree are united by a tie or bind, , which means that the time-value of the second note is to be added to that of the first without repeating. This sign is not to be confused with the slur, which unites notes on different degrees and signifies connectedness of execution and, in vocal music, the carrying over of a syllable from one note to the other.

In old music little effort was made to mark the divisions of rhythm called measures. The ends of phrases were often marked by a check or similar mark, sometimes by a vertical bar across the staff. But from the 16th century the custom established itself of marking off the staff into regular measure-lengths by means of such bars. In this practice it was assumed that the measure begins with a stress or accent, so that the bar always means that the note or notes following are under the primary accent. The total time-value of the notes or rests in each part within each measure should equal that indicated by the time-signature. Meanwhile in all kinds of music at the end of sections and in hymn-tunes at the end of lines the old use of the phrase-bar was kept up, but such bars are now usually twice as heavy as measure-bars and are often double. (In England it is common to apply the term bar to measures.)

Just as was said about the pitch-significance of the staff-degrees, so it should be said here that the shape or species of notes indicates nothing about absolute duration. Their value is relative to that of each other in a given case and to the tempo or pace adopted. Yet in some sorts of music it is customary to use the 'longer' varieties of notes for slower pieces and vice versa. This is, however, offset by other traditional practices (such as the English habit of writing hymn-tunes and anthems as far as possible in breves, semibreves and minims).

Without attempting to enumerate many special signs used for different purposes, it is enough here to mention some that are in frequent usage. The scope of a phrase is often shown by a sweeping curve about it called a phrase-mark. In vocal music small checks serve as breath-marks in a slightly analogous way. When a section is to be repeated, a repeat-mark can be used at the point where the performer is to turn back—. The beginning of the repeat may be marked similarly— or with the sign  called a presa or segno. The signs for crescendo and diminuendo are  and , and there are various marks for sharp accents. All embellishments have special signs; those for the mordent, turn and trill are  and .

The original name for a note was punctus, a point; from this came the term contrapunctum or counterpoint, which is the art of fitting 'note against note.' An old English word for note was prick; hence prick-song was music that was noted down and also descant or counterpoint (because it needed to be noted).

The use of note for tone has already been mentioned. The colloquial use of note for key is less defensible.

Note-Group. In general, a small set of notes intended to be performed as a unit, in vocal music to a single syllable; it usually fills the time of only a single beat of other principal subdivision of a measure. Specifically, such a set of notes embodying a rhythmic subdivision different from that which is normal to the piece or passage as a whole, so as to offer an isolated point of rhythmic contrast to the general movement; the main rhythm remains unbroken, but the manner of subdivision is temporarily altered for the unexpected piquancy of effect. See Rhythm. The main varieties are as follows:

Couplet, doublet, duplet, duole, 2 notes in place of 3.
Triplet, triolet, triole, 3 notes in place of 2 or 4.
Quadruplet, quartole, 4 notes in place of 3 or 6.
Quintuplet, quintole, 5 notes in place of 4 or 6.
Sextuplet, sestole, sestole, 6 notes in place of 4 or 8.
Septuplet, septimole, septole, 7 notes in place of 4 or 6.
Octuplet, octole, 8 notes in place of 6.
Nonuplet, nonole, 9 notes in place of 8.
Decuplet, decimole, 10 notes in place of 4 or 8.
Undecuplet, 11 notes in place of 8 or 6.
Dodecuplet, dodecimole, 12 notes in place of 8 or 9.

The usual notation is a curve over or under the notes with a figure enclosed indicating the special subdivision.

Notograph. See Melograph.

Novelette. A name first used by Schumann for an instrumental piece of free and romantic character, in which several themes are developed somewhat boldly and energetically. G.

Nuance. In the performance of a phrase or passage, vocal or instrumental, a progressive varying of the tempo, loudness or tone-color for the purpose of bringing out the full beauty or meaning. Such effects are somewhat indicated by various terms and signs, but the more delicate depend upon the performer's judgment and taste. G.

Number. In extended vocal works, like operas, oratorios and cantatas, one of the distinct sections into which the acts or parts are divided, each number usually being complete in itself and in a specific form, such as aria, duet, chorus, etc. Also, any one item in the program of a concert or similar entertainment. Also same as opus-number.

Numerals. Besides several uses as abbreviations in the strict sense, numerals are also used as symbols, as in thoroughbass, in solmization, in harmonic analysis, etc.

Nunc dimittis. A canticle or its musical setting, the text taken from the Song of Simeon in Luke ii. 29-32, used in certain offices of both the Eastern and the Western Churches and in the Evening Prayer of the Anglican Church. G.

The text begins 'Nunc dimittis servum tuum, Domine, in pace.'

Nun's-Fiddle. See Tromba Marina.

Nut. In instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, especially the violin and its relatives, the ridge at the junction of the fingerboard and the head, over which the strings pass to the tuning-pegs; a capotasto. It serves not only to lift the strings clear of the fingerboard, but to define their vibrating-length at the top as does the bridge, at the bottom. Also, in the bow used with the violin and similar instruments, the movable piece at the lower end, to which the hairs are fastened and by sliding which (by means of a screw) their tension may be adjusted. G.

When the finger is pressed down upon a string in the action of 'stopping,' it is sometimes said to produce an artificial nut. On some instruments, like the guitar, an adjustable capotasto is provided, by which all the strings may be thus shortened and their pitch raised a semitone.

Obligato. In a concerted passage or piece, an indication that a part (usually for an instrument) is required for the intended effect; opposed to ad libitum. Also the part itself that is thus required. G.

The term is most used for a part for a solo-instrument (like a violin or flute) or for a solo-voice (like a soprano) added to an ensemble that might be considered complete without it.

Obertas. See Dances. G.

Oblique Motion. See Motion.

Oboe. A general name for those wind-instruments that are sounded by means of a double or paired reed, as distinct from the clarinets, which have a single reed. The class includes many Oriental forms, the obsolete groups known as krummhorns, bombards and shawms, and several modern forms, including the bassoons and sarrusophones. Specifically, the present orchestral instrument, which has an opposed pair of canereeds held in place at the top of the tube by a ring or staple, a conical wooden tube nearly two feet long, made in three sections, of which the lowest flares somewhat into a bell, and with a variable number of finger-holes, mostly controlled by means of levers. Its range is nearly three octaves upward from just below middle c. The tone is peculiarly keen and penetrating, susceptible of much variation in force and somewhat in quality, so that it lends itself to the expression of both jocularity and pathos. In early aggregations of instruments members of the oboe-class were always prominent, being largely depended on for melody and sustained tone, and in the early 18th century, when the modern form began to be approached, the oboes formed a large section in the orchestra, almost like that of the violins now. After 1750, however, they were subordinated to the strings and developed more as individual elements in the wind-division. G.

The name is derived from the French hautbois, the wood-instrument with a high tone, whence also the English hautboy and the German hoboe.

The modern oboe has been gradually evolved from the treble shawm, which had much thicker and broader reeds and a more stocky tube. The placing and manipulation of the holes have been modified since 1850 by many improvements, largely devised by Apollon Barret.

At present, the oboe is the treble of the group that also includes the tenor-oboe or English horn and the bassoon. The English horn seems to have acquired its name by a corruption of the French cor anglé (read cor anglais), which was due to the fact that its tube is bent at a slight angle. It serves as the tenor of the group, while between it and the oboe proper falls the oboe d'amore (or d'amour), pitched a third lower than the oboe and with a globular bell that imparts a somewhat somber quality to the tone. The oboe d'amore was much used in the 18th century and is sometimes revived now. Occasionally a baritone-oboe has been introduced, pitched a fifth higher than the bassoon. The obsolete oboe di caccia, tenoroon or fagottino is essentially a small form of bassoon, though often regarded as a low-pitched oboe.

It is customary in orchestras to have the pitch set by the tone of the oboe—a custom that is supposed to go back to the time when oboes formed the center of the band.

Ocarina. A small instrument of terracotta, having a hollow body shaped somewhat like that of a bird, a projecting whistle-like mouthpiece and a varying number of finger-holes. It has been made in several sizes, so as to form a family. G.

In its common form the instrument seems to have originated in the Tyrol and its name is supposed to come from the Italian oca, a goose. But somewhat similar forms occur in different parts of the world.

Ochetto, Ochetus. See Hocket. G.

Octachord, Octochord. Either an 8-stringed instrument or a series of eight tones, as in an ordinary octave-scale.

Octave. In acoustics, the simplest and most primary of tone-relations, being that between a tone and its first upper partial and having the vibration-ratio 2/1. In that relation, each tone has the effect of being merely a repetition or replicate of the other at another level or register. It is within this interval that scales are usually laid out, and its name comes from the fact that since the time of Greek music scales have normally included eight degrees (including both upper and lower limits). Hence the interval between the first and the eighth degree of either the major or the minor scale, or any similar interval; also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point. G.

This standard interval is called a perfect octave (rarely major). Other intervals, larger or smaller, by a chromatic semitone, are the augmented octave (ratio, 135/64) and the diminished octave (ratio, 48/25).

In counterpoint and harmony, the progression of two voice-parts from one chord to another by parallel or consecutive octaves is objectionable, not for the same reason as parallel fifths, but because the two parts merely duplicate each other and surrender their individuality. See Progression, Motion and Fifth.

In a general system of tones adopted as standard, the term is also applied to a section or group of tones an octave long, the pitch and name of which is adjusted to some standard tone of reference.

In Greek music, the so-called complete system comprised two octaves, united in the tone mesē. The octaves were not named as such, but each was regarded as made up of two named tetrachords. Mesē is usually assumed to be roughly equivalent to the a next below middle c.

In the hexachord-system of the Middle Ages, though the main units were the overlapping hexachords, the several tones were also considered as belonging to three octaves, the lowest set being graves, the second set acuta and the third set (defective at the top) super-acuta. The assumed pitch of gamma-ut at the bottom was that of the second g below middle c.

The modern system is reckoned from middle c. The most-used nomenclature calls the octave beginning two octaves below this the first or great octave, the next the second or small octave, that from middle c upward the third or once-accented octave and the next above that the fourth or twice-accented octave. Letters for tones in the great octave are written in capitals, in the small octave in small letters, in the third octave with a single accent or a superior <sup>1</sup>, and in the fourth octave with a double accent or a superior <sup>2</sup>. See Pitch.

Short octave, in many old organs, is a defective lower octave in one or more of the keyboards, consisting of only the most-used of the twelve keys normally required—a device to save the expense of pipes.

FAMILY OF OBOES

FAMILY OF POMMERS OR BOMBARDS

Rule of the octave, in early harmony, was a set of chords applicable in harmonizing the several tones of a scale and used as a formula in teaching.

In the organ, a stop that sounds an octave higher than the normal pitch of the key is an octave-stop or octave. Also a coupler that joins two keyboards in octaves rather than in unisons is an octave-coupler; such a coupler may also operate on any one keyboard.

Any instrument whose pitch is an octave higher than that of the usual or standard form may be named by means of the prefix octave-, as octave-flute for piccolo.

Octavin. An instrument with a wooden-tube, having a system of holes and levers as in the oboe and clarinet and sounded by means of a mouthpiece with a single reed, giving a tone intermediate in quality between those of the oboe and the horn. It was invented by Oskar Adler of Markneukirchen, Saxony.

Octet, Octuor. A group of eight performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quartet, quintet, etc. G.

Octo-bass. A gigantic form of double-bass, invented in 1851 by Vuillaume of Paris, having 3 strings and a range a third lower than the ordinary double-bass. It was more than 12 feet high and the stopping of the strings had to be effected by means of finger- and foot-levers.

Octole, Octuplet. An 8-note group occupying the time of 6; see Note-Groups.

Ode. An extended lyric poem, usually in somewhat varied versification, upon a subject of heroic or exalted character and expressive of ardent feeling or enthusiasm. Also any musical setting of such a poem. G.

In the Greek Church there are two sets of canticles or hymns called Odes, used in connection with the office of Lauds, the first consisting of various Biblical poems or prayers (not Psalms) and the second of hymns written in a special stanza-form. See Canon.

In the 15-16th centuries there were many efforts made to provide setting in harmony for various Latin odes, aiming to preserve the quantities of the ancient verse.

The term ode-symphonie is sometimes applied to a symphony in which a chorus is used; that is, a choral symphony.

Odeon, Odeum. A name for a music- or concert-hall, derived from a type of building common in Greek cities.

Offertorium, Offertory. In the Roman Catholic Mass, either the prayer of oblation after the Credo or whatever antiphons or other texts are sung after that prayer and while the celebrant is preparing the communion-elements (as yet unconsecrated) and presenting them upon the altar. G.

In many places the offertory takes the form of a motet; in others it is an organ-piece or offertoire. The offertory-section is followed by the Sursum corda and the Preface that lead to the Canon. Analogous usages are often customary in the Anglican Church (but see below).

Originally, the elements for the sacrament were taken from the offerings of the congregation, brought as an expression of devotion and including other articles besides bread and wine. Hence in Protestant usage the term offertory has been extensively transferred to gifts and the act of giving as a part of public worship (often called the collection, from I Cor. xvi. 1), and thence to any vocal or instrumental music accompanying that act.

Office. In liturgies, the technical term for a specific service, as the communion office, the daily offices, the office for the dead, etc.

Oireachtas. A national festival held annually at Dublin since 1897 under the auspices of the Gaelic League of Ireland, often including musical competitions and performances. G.

Oliphant. An ivory hunting-horn, usually of large size and highly ornamented with carvings. As a rule, such instruments were meant mainly for decorative purposes. G.

Omnitonic. Of instruments, denoting those capable of producing chromatic as well as diatonic tones, as an omnitonic horn (i. e., one with valves).

Open. Opposed to close or compressed, as open harmony, open score (see the nouns). Opposed to stopped, as open diapason, open pipe (see Organ-Stops and Pipe) or open string, open note (see Stop). G.

For open tone, see Vocalization. Open-pedal, same as dampner-pedal; see Pedal and Piano.

Opera. The general name for an extended work intended for actual stage-presentation in which music is either a constant or at least a predominating element; a musical drama or a drama set to music. In its finer manifestations it is the most complicated and difficult of musical forms, since, besides involving both the literary and the histrionic elements of the ordinary drama, it requires the application of almost all the resources of musical art on both the creative and the expository sides. Yet for more than three centuries it has also been the form most eagerly cultivated by composers and most sought after by the public. Its prevailing type and method have varied greatly at different periods and in different countries. Like the spoken drama, it has been developed on both the serious and the comic sides, aiming sometimes at the tragic or sublime, sometimes at the romantic or mystical, sometimes at the satirical or humorous and sometimes at the obviously homely or even sordid. It has utilized topics and texts of every order, from poems of extraordinary beauty and power down to manufactured doggerel and drivel. It has been presented on the most elaborate scale, with every resource of scenic artifice and with consummate artists, and again it has been set forth rudely and barely with but slight advantage in all these regards. But amid all these variations of condition and circumstance its vitality has been preserved by its musical nature and possibilities. G.

The name first used (about 1600) was dramma per musica or favola in musica, emphasizing the idea of a play with a musical setting. The term opera, which means 'work,' came into use about 1650, as the composite nature of the form grew more evident. Names for lighter plays with music were intermedio or intermezzo (in Italy), ballet (in France), singspiel (in Germany) and masque (in England). After 1700 came the distinction between opera seria and opera buffa, the latter giving rise to the French opéra bouffe, while in England the ballad-opera was long favorite. After 1800 fresh terms appear, including opéra comique as over against opéra grande, with drame lyrique as somewhat inclusive of both. At the culmination of his efforts after a more ambitious type, Wagner chose the term Bühnenfestspiel.

The main musical elements of the form in general may be classified under four heads:

(a) Recitative or declamation, whether prose or verse, usually embodying that part of the text in which the progress of the story or the interplay of characters is specially set forth. This, being closest to the method of the spoken drama, was the first aspect of the opera to be developed. It has retained its place in some form almost always, sometimes serving as a formal introduction to arias and sometimes passing over into the intermediate form of the arioso. At first it was regularly accompanied on the harpsichord from a basso continuo (secco), but later often with other instruments (stromentato). In the first case it might be almost without rhythmical regularity, but in the second was forced to adopt it. In many cases it was replaced by spoken declamation or dialogue, but since the early 19th century this has been generally discarded in ambitious works. Since Wagner, also, the recitative proper has become rare.

(b) Arias and duets, to a versified text, usually expressing lyrically and with prolonged intensity the sentiment or passion of the individual personage. This, though not possible in the earliest plays, was soon recognized as the chief element of effectiveness. After about 1650 it became the one conspicuous feature, so that an opera was presently understood to consist of a chain of arias by the leading actors in the cast. During the 18th century this structure was almost standardized (see under Aria), each aria being prefaced by a recitative. This exclusive and rigid conception was broken up not only by the reform of Gluck (about 1775), but by the many fresh methods after 1800. But the aria (with some use of the double or even triple form, duets or terzets) remains a leading constituent of the total form. In his later works Wagner sought to rid it of its artificial formality, replacing it with a freely-developed 'melos' that is really a strand in the general web of tone. Arias, of course, are regularly provided with full accompaniment.

(c) Choruses and concerted numbers (the latter by soloists or soloists and chorus). At the outset the chorus was of slight importance, often appearing only in a madrigal or similar piece appended at the end without close connection with the action. In the 18th century the chorus almost disappeared and concerted numbers were still unused. But the value of the chorus both as representing collective actors in the plot and as furnishing a welcome enrichment of musical effect led during the 19th century to its reinstatement in various forms. At that time, also, the concerted finale or episode was recognized as most useful for climax or other intensity of effect. Under this head mention should be made of the interweaving of dancing and finally of dance-spectacles (ballets) with the musical drama proper. This early received special attention in France, where it has always been cultivated with peculiar richness of effect. In recent times this has given rise to the mimetic ballet, quite without vocal elements.

(d) The orchestra. From the first the opera sought to use aggregations of instruments for the accompaniment of the voices, and its impulse became the reason of the steady improvement of the orchestra throughout the 17th century. It early added the instrumental interest of a sinfonia or overture before the rise of the curtain, with some interspersed numbers during the action, where the plot permitted. The original idea of the overture was a piece of independent interest, laid out in movements after the general fashion of detached concerted works generally, so that the same overture might be freely combined with more than one drama. Two main types were recognized, the Italian and the French (see Overture). With Gluck set in a tendency to make the overture definitely preparatory to the play and thus sometimes to reduce it to a rather brief prelude or vorspiel. Meanwhile, however, the older form had contributed to the formation of the classical symphony and to the production of various concert-overtures, neither of which belongs with the opera. At times orchestral interludes or incidental numbers (like marches, descriptive pieces, etc.) have found place in the development of interest in the plot.

The great and persistent importance of the orchestra has been in connection with the voices. It is true that until Gluck's time the varied and impressive use of this element was not well developed except by particular composers. But throughout the modern period it has grown increasingly important, bringing out many unprecedented capacities in the orchestra and building up still further the complex intricacy of the opera as a dramatic form. With Wagner, finally, the orchestra was pushed into the foreground, its delineation of the emotional current of the story becoming superior to the vocal expression imbedded in it. Thus that which had been merely ancillary became musically the chief medium of impression.

In addition to these purely musical elements, it needs to be said that at various times the opera has tended to take on peculiar popular interest by scenic display of an astonishing or gorgeous sort. This was specially prominent during the 17th century in Italy and reappeared in connection with the so-called 'grand' opera of the early 19th century, as well as in the works of the Wagnerian period. Such instances emphasize the essentially composite nature of the form.

The general occasion of the rise of the opera was the widespread interest in the drama in Italy throughout the 16th century, an interest that itself runs back to the evolution of popular plays out of the church-plays called mysteries, etc. (see Mysteries), in all of which music was used incidentally as far as could be managed. But the immediate occasion was the inquiry set on foot about 1575 by a circle of Florentine dilettanti as to how the ancient Greek dramas were actually performed. That a species of cantillation was employed seemed clear, though its method could only be conjectured. Hence experiments began with tonal declamation of poetic passages with a slight instrumental accompaniment. This speedily grew into a style of recitative which was musically a complete novelty and which was taken as the vehicle for several plays, including Dafne by Peri (1594) and Euridice by both Peri and Caccini (1600), the latter as being in combined form being often called 'the first opera,' besides Cavaliere's Rappresentatione di Anima e di Corpo (1600, at Rome), which is similarly called 'the first oratorio.' But the earliest welding of elements into impressive unity was in works at Venice by Monteverdi in 1607-08, '27-30 and '39-42. All the earlier works were given under private patronage. But in 1637 the first opera-house was erected at Venice and the opera began to be shaped as a public enterprise.

Its vogue grew rapidly in Italy, especially as its form was strengthened by Cavalli and Cesti, as singers became more competent in the new field of solo-singing and as the orchestra gradually acquired effectiveness. At first Venice was the sole operatic center of importance, but late in the century Bologna became her rival, followed by Naples. Meanwhile the influence of the new form had been felt in Germany, France and England. At Paris Lully initiated an independent line of progress after 1672. Shortly after at London the gifted Purcell put forth works of still greater originality. In northern Germany the most active center during the same period was Hamburg. Thus before 1700 four countries had taken up dramatic music with zest and ability.

The 18th century was marked almost throughout by the dominance everywhere of the type usually known as the Neapolitan opera (from the center whence its influence radiated) or the concert-opera (from the form usually adopted). The composer who first made Naples famous was Alessandro Scarlatti, but his less original successors had most to do with forming a type that had enormous popularity. This type was marked by shaping work after work upon a more or less stereotyped plan, whereby a pleasing and effective series of varied arias were strung together in a certain order and all the principals in the cast of singers were given opportunity to display themselves. Texts were supposed to be written with this plan of presentation in mind and composers had to adapt themselves to it. In short, all fresh dramatic instinct or invention was discouraged in favor of a concert-like program of solos by star-singers. The kinds of aria were carefully distinguished (see Aria) and the technical art of vocalization was pushed to extraordinary perfection (see Singing).

Meanwhile, however, out of the slight intermezzi that had early been attempted as diversissements in connection with the opera proper there now developed the opera buffa as an independent form. Some of its productions were simply farical or satirical, but others demonstrated elements of wit and characterization. And this new type avoided the mechanical structure of the current opera seria, so that in its freshness of invention had far greater scope. About 1750 this gave rise in France to the opéra bouffe, which became the seed of a brilliant growth later. Early in the century, also, for a brief period Handel had displayed notable power in England, in the main adhering to the established forms, but pouring into them exceptional musical value.

But the reform under Gluck in the latter part of the century was more significant. He had been trained in the conventional style, but grew weary of it and, after a process of study and experiment, put forth a series of works that made an epoch, the climax being in his Iphigénie en Tauride (1778, at Paris). He contended for the full restoration of dramatic truth and freedom, the abolition of all rules and conventions as to structure and the building up of text, music and presentation into an organic unity. To the support of his ideas he brought a sufficient musicianship of a refined and dignified order, so that from him dates a new era.

The early 19th century brought into view several distinct operatic movements. The clever brilliance of Rossini, followed by the more sentimental gifts of Donizetti and Bellini, enabled the Italian opera to keep its place in public attention. The versatile and ambitious French school not only held its leadership in works that were truly comic, but in what came to be called the opéra comique or comedy-opera gradually established a fresh form of utmost value, one that dwelt upon varied topics, even from the life of ordinary society, with a piquant wit and a lively esprit that had distinct value. In Germany the singspiel was transformed under Weber into the so-called romantic opera, with its liking for the mysterious or imaginative, its warmth of melody and its novelty of orchestration. And, besides, the old ideal of the opera seria received a new application in the hands of Spontini and Meyerbeer in what was called the grand opera, usually on a historical subject, in which elaborate and grandiose effect was pushed into the foreground.

About the middle of the century the immense advance that had been made in orchestral composition began to transform all the greater operatic undertakings. The outstanding figure from thence onward is that of Wagner, though the practical success of his revolutionary program was delayed till 1876. Aside from the general outlines of his dramatic theory as a whole, his musical innovations culminated in an emphasis upon the orchestra as the central element in the total expression—the incessant interpreter of the action. No one of his contemporaries or successors has perhaps been able to quite follow in his steps, but with them all the orchestra has tended to assume an eloquence and splendor of exposition unrealized before except in isolated passages.

Most notable has been the vigor with which different countries have advanced types of opera peculiar to their national genius. More than a dozen such national types might be instanced, each with its line of able and ingenious exemplars, its favorite works, its special contribution to the resources of dramatic and musical effect.

As compared with the spoken drama, the opera has obvious limitations. Music is not the natural vehicle for many lines of thought and expression that are effective in speech. It is not fitted for abstract or argumentative utterance, for example, nor for anything that requires minute verbal explanation. Neither does it lend itself readily to the complicated and rapid interplay of many contesting personalities except, perhaps, in a single scene, skillfully prepared. Speech in song can never hope to compete in rapidity, fullness or intellectual finesse with ordinary speech. And all through its history the opera has had to labor under the further disadvantages of slovenly vocal delivery on the part of singers and often of being in a language foreign to the hearers.

On the other hand, the opera, because it is in music, much surpasses the scope of the spoken drama in the depiction of the many-colored emotional aspects of situations and transactions, as well as of the profound excitements and exaltations of individual sentiment and passion. It has a thousand idioms for these where mere words have but a score. And while mere language seeks to be precise and discriminative, melody, harmony and rhythm are symbolic and general, yielding varied meanings according to the knowledge and disposition of the hearer. And, even in the many cases where operatic listening is quite unintelligent and listless, there are manifold impacts upon the hearer of the indescribable power of tonal beauty and energy as such.

Prior to Gluck's time the mechanical arrangement of operas tended toward a rigid scheme. The standard overture had three separate movements (quick-slow-quick or slow-quick-slow, according as its plan was French or Italian). The action was usually laid out in three acts, each composed of a series of detached scenes for one actor after another, with an occasional duet, but no ensemble-scenes. Everything was contrived after the fashion of a concert-program.

In the modern opera no fixed plan exists, except that three acts are rather more common than other numbers, though in larger works five are frequent. On the other hand, two and even only one have been tried with success. Overtures are now usually in but one continuous movement, sometimes based upon themes later to be emphasized in the action, but sometimes only preludes designed to set a general emotional 'key' for the opening scenes. In the 19th century the partition into separate scenes became steadily more irregular or was reduced to a brief transition. Flexibility of dramatic effect is now secured by a far greater use of ensembles than was formerly considered possible, both the interplay of principals and the introduction of the chorus. Especial attention is usually given to the building up of climaxes at the ends of all the acts. The old device of a licenza or epilogue at the end has almost vanished.

Operas are somewhat regularly given in almost 200 cities in about 25 countries. Prominent among these are the following:

Italy: Milan (La Scala), Naples (S. Carlo), Venice (Fenice), Rome (Argentina), Florence (La Pergola), Genoa (Carlo Felice), Turin.

France: Paris (Grand-Opéra, Opéra-Comique).

Belgium: Brussels (La Monnaie), Antwerp (French and Flemish).

Spain: Madrid, Barcelona. Portugal: Lisbon.

Hungary: Pest. Rumania: Bucharest.

Austria: Vienna (Hofoper, Volksoper).

Bohemia: Prague (German and Bohemian).

Germany: Munich, Leipzig, Dresden, Berlin, Hamburg, Cologne, Stuttgart and many others.

Poland: Warsaw. Finland: Helsingfors.

Russia: Petrograd, Moscow.

Sweden: Stockholm. Denmark: Copenhagen.

Netherlands: Amsterdam (Italian and Dutch).

England: London (Covent Garden, Drury Lane).

United States: New York (Metropolitan), Chicago (Auditorium).

Other American: Havana, Mexico City, Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires.

See list of recent operas appended to Part III.

Operetta. Literally, a small opera; usually applied, however, to a light, amusing and usually farcical stage-play, with more or less spoken dialogue and sparkling songs. G.

Works of this general class have been written by the hundred in the last half-century. Among early composers who became famous were Offenbach (from 1853), Hervé (from 1855), Leocq (from 1859), Suppé (from 1847), Millöcker (from 1865), Sullivan (from 1867), etc. Under this head may also be classed the innumerable Spanish zarzuelas.

Ophicleide. An instrument of the bugle-class, having a long tube of brass doubled upon itself (like a bassoon), a conical bore and 9-12 holes controlled by means of keys. It was developed out of the earlier bass-horn or basson russe about 1915 and for about a half-century was in use as a bass-instrument in bands and orchestras, but was displaced by the perfected valve-instruments. G.

It was at one time made in four sizes, forming a complete family. It was the last instrument with cupped mouthpiece and side-holes to be retained in the orchestra.

Opposite Motion. See Motion.

Opus. The Latin word for 'work,' used as the technical designation for a composition by a given composer when counted in a series and hence bearing an opus-number—a system applied either by the composer or by a publisher. The serial number may include one work or a group of works; in the latter case secondary numbers may be added. Usually abbreviated op. and no., as Beethoven's op. 27, no. 2. G.

The practice of using such numbers began sporadically in the late 18th century. Its application since has been fitful and irregular. But in many cases it has much convenience for reference.

Oratorio. The general name for a large and complex vocal work on a religious or at least heroic subject and text, utilizing varied resources (soloists, chorus, organ and orchestra) and intended for presentation without action or scenery in a church or concert-room. When the oratorio first appeared in 1600 it was clearly the counterpart of the opera, retaining much more than the latter the impress of the medieval religious plays that were the common source of both. Its first cultivation was in Italy and under the influence of Catholicism. But it was early taken up in Germany and there modified to suit Protestant conditions, becoming more an exalted form of church-service than a dramatic representation. The dramatic type has tended to magnify the office of the solo, while the liturgical type has magnified that of the chorus. Out of the interaction of these two tendencies has come the modern conception of the form, which is inclusive of all sorts of methods and is ready to adopt varied dispositions of the parts according to the requirements of a given text. G.

The word 'oratorio' means an oratory or place of prayer. It became attached to the musical form through the fact that from about 1565 the Florentine priest Filippo Neri attracted much attention at Rome by popular services in the oratory of S. Maria in Vallicella in which music was a conspicuous feature. The forms used were those of the choral laudi spirituali, without solo characterization. But when Cavellieri in 1600 produced what is commonly called 'the first oratorio' and as others followed with somewhat similar adaptations to sacred words of the new dramatic solo style, the name oratorio got associated with the form and has remained in use ever since. Sometimes church-oratorios have been specifically called by the time in the calendar to which they belong, as preeminently the various Passion or Christmas oratorios. Works of lesser dimensions are usually called cantatas.

Freedom from stage-requirements is the cause or occasion for many marked deviations of the oratorio from the opera. It has manifestly favored the free use of the chorus, even in the elaborate counterpoint of the finest church-music. It has opened the way for emphasis on elements in text and plan that embody comment or reflection arising outside of the action proper—somewhat after the fashion of the 'chorus' in the Greek drama. This contemplative element may veer to the side of a sort of sermonic hortation as from the author or to that of a personal response as from the auditor. This latter subjective expression may embody devout sentiment in view of what the main text is presenting or any attitude of direct address to God. In either case, whether reflectively digressive or subjectively declaratory, such matter is obviously foreign to the opera.

Although the subject of the 'first' oratorio was a moralistic allegory on The Soul and the Body, the early Italian oratorios usually tended to dwell upon scenes in the lives of the saints, the stories of Old Testament characters or the trials of the Virgin, Mary Magdalene or other Biblical witnesses. The New Testament stories connected with the Advent and the Crucifixion later became the characteristic themes of the German church-oratorio, especially in the innumerable settings of the narrative of the Passion. The Handelian type of English oratorio stands by itself in its masterly vigor and variety of technical elaboration, though manifestly Italian in its usual conception of the form as a whole, since almost all of his works are dramatic (The Messiah is an exception). It is not easy to frame any general statement about the modern treatment of the form. In many cases Biblical themes are taken, including such cosmic conceptions as the Creation or The Last Things. The lives of the saints still supply some material and several figures from the so-called Apocrypha have inspired various works. Perhaps the most notable new development is on the one hand to construct rather abstract librettos on religious topics, but without characterization (distantly akin to the old-fashioned allegory), and on the other to seek for thrilling personages in mythical or national history as subjects for what are called secular oratorios.

The maintenance of the church-oratorio and cantata is indirectly a branch of the general subject of church-music. The persistence and advance of the concert-oratorio, on the other hand, is closely involved with the institution of the popular choral society, which has been increasingly developed in all musical countries during the past century. The path originally pointed out as far back as 1740 by Handel has opened into many branches, often diligently and eagerly pursued from year to year in places large and small, sometimes in the form of stated series of local importance, sometimes in 'festivals' of more than local magnitude. These supply the only important means of preserving the values of choral music alongside of those of orchestral and dramatic music, and through them alone can so elaborate a form as the oratorio find its due presentation. Such enterprises are unique among large musical undertakings in that they enlist the services of multitudes of amateurs. See Festivals.

Orchesography. See Choreography.

Orchestics. The art and theory of dancing, including both rhythmic motion for its own sake and the application of such motion for scenic or mimetic purposes. The art is technically orchestis and the theory orchesography or orchesology.

Orchestra. The general name for an ensemble of instruments and players of several different kinds under the direction of a single leader or conductor. It is distinguished from the chamber-ensemble by the variety of its constituents and by the fact that in some parts more than a single player is usually included. Its ideal is to serve as a complex, but unified instrument, like an organ, though composed of many living performers, each of whom is normally an expert soloist on his own instrument. In its highest development it is therefore the most elaborate vehicle for instrumental exposition and impression. G.

The name comes from the level space in the ancient Greek theater in which the dances and evolutions of the chorus took place. This space in the early modern theater, though largely given over to spectators, also was the natural location for whatever instrumentalists were used, to whom its name was in time transferred. But the name still also remains as designating the floor of a theater or opera-house.

The modern orchestra consists of four divisions or sections: the strings, including first and second violins, violas, violoncellos and double-basses; the wood-wind, including flutes, oboes, clarinets and bassoons, with often a piccolo, an English horn, a basset-horn, etc.; the brass-wind, including horns, trumpets, trombone and tuba, with some variation in distribution; and the percussives, including the tympani and other forms of drums, with triangles, etc. For many special effects a harp is frequently included, and many scores call for many instruments not mentioned above. Besides the principals, ripieni players are regularly added for all the string-parts (as many as 12-16 first and second violins, for example), so that what is called a symphony-orchestra of the first class may number about 100 players. In large orchestras the leading first violin is called the concertmaster and the leading second violinist the second or assistant concertmaster. Upon them devolves much of the detailed drill of the parts. In Germany the conductor is usually termed kapellmeister or dirigent, in Italy maestro di cappella or capo d'orchestra and in France chef d'orchestre.

The music for each instrument is separately written in what are called orchestral parts. The full score ordinarily used by the conductor is an orchestral score, having all the individual parts combined on a unified system of staves; but in some cases the conductor uses a short score of abbreviated form.

Certain pieces or passages may be for string-orchestra alone (without wind-parts) or for small orchestra (usually a special selection of instruments, with few or no ripieni).

The term band may be used for a whole orchestra or any of its main sections; sometimes, however, band means a military band as opposed to the orchestra proper.

The orchestra as a definite artistic agency was called into existence by the rise of the opera in the early 17th century. But the experiments throughout that century (as by Monteverdi, Cesti, Lully, Legrenzi and A. Scarlatti) were extremely varied in the range and balance of the instruments employed. In some cases the light, evanescent tones of the lute-family seem to predominate, while in others there is a massing of violins, but without a full 'choir' of strings. Even in the early 18th century there was a tendency to use the wood-wind (flutes, oboes and bassoons) as the nucleus or (as in the case of Bach) to exploit various instruments in solo-effects rather than to seek contrasts and gradations of massed tone. It remained for the Mannheim group (about 1750) to fix upon the violin-quartet as the true center for the whole and to perceive the ideal coördination with this of the wood- and brass-groups. With them also begins the clear discernment of the office of the orchestra, not as an accompaniment for operas and oratorios only, but as an independent concert-instrument of transcendent value. Hence came the orchestral symphonies of the Viennese or classical school, which were as novel in instrumental conception as they were in structural detail. The further advances in magnitude and refinement of color-effects waited for the early and middle 19th century, when Berlioz and Wagner set up standards that have not been greatly exceeded since.

Throughout the 17-18th centuries the harpsichord remained a constant factor in the orchestra, and from it the composer or conductor was wont to direct, supplying a large part of the harmony at many points from a basso continuo and governing the tempo and the intensity-effects by the example of his playing. The modern custom of conducting by motions with a baton came in only gradually in the early 19th century, then slowly gaining its place as one of the most brilliant forms of genuine virtuosity.

The opera-orchestra has always naturally been placed in front of and below the stage (whence the name 'orchestra'), but the concert-orchestra as naturally occupies the stage, the conductor in either case having his back to the audience. Different conductors have different theories as to the best disposition of the players on the stage with reference to easy control and to the blending of tone-effects. Wagner carried out at Bayreuth the novel plan of concealing the orchestra in a sunken area between the stage and the auditorium, so as to prevent distraction of the eye. A similar plan has occasionally been tried in concert-halls.

For additional details about the Mannheim innovations, see Mannheim School.

Prior to 1750 orchestral music, outside of accompaniments, consisted chiefly of overtures, and various forms of concerto, the former magnifying the contrast of successive movements and the latter the contrast between solo and tutti. With J. S. Bach set in the first currents that led with Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven to the rapid evolution of the symphony as the orchestral sonata. After 1800 the concert-overture began to detach itself from the overture proper. About 1850 appeared both Liszt's movement in favor of the symphonic poem and Wagner's prodigious transformation of the orchestral side of the opera, while one composer after another added to the growing appreciation of the orchestra as the special medium for effects and constructions dominated by light, color and warmth. Like every other instrument of major importance, then, the orchestra has called into being either new forms appropriate to its own genius or tended to remodel existing forms to match its transcendent capacity for expression.

Orchestra di Camera. The name given by W. E. Evans of London about 1860 to a set of small free-reed instruments with keyboards, adjusted to represent the tones of the flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and French horn respectively. They were meant to be used in small performances where orchestral players cannot be employed. G.

Orchestra. A keyboard-instrument, invented in 1808 by Pouleau of Paris, resembling a piano, but with tones produced by friction instead of by hammers.

Orchestion. A mechanical instrument, usually based on the principle of the barrel-organ, but provided with pipes as well as reeds, so as to produce a crude imitation of orchestral and band-instruments. It has been made in various sizes and varieties. The first successful type was made by F. T. Kaufmann of Dresden from about 1851.

The name has been otherwise used, as by Vogler in the late 18th century for an organ made on his plan of 'simplification,' for a complex instrument, invented by T. A. Kunz of Prague in 1791, in which piano- and organ-mechanisms were combined, etc.

Ordres. A name for the suite, for a time used by French composers, beginning with Couperin. G.

Organ. Properly, a large keyboard-instrument whose tones are produced from a graduated series of pipes by means of air artificially compressed; also called pipe-organ in distinction from the reed-organ, in which pipes are replaced by small metal reeds without pipes. The distant prototype of the pipe-organ is the syrinx or Pan's-pipe, but its characteristic principle of tone-production is that of the whistle or flageolet, though it now uses other principles as well. It is the only important modern instrument that shows a continuous development from ancient times, by far the earliest to employ the device of a keyboard and the first to utilize decided complexity of inner arrangement and mechanism. G.

As noted under Keyboard and Hydraulis, a figurine of an ancient organ, probably dating from the 2d century A.D., was found at Carthage in 1885. The instrument was known at Alexandria at least as early as 100 B.C. From the Greeks it passed to the Romans and thence came into connection with Christian worship from perhaps the 4th century, becoming before the 10th century a frequent adjunct in religious services, though used only to support plain-song. Not until much later did it begin to assume the complexity required to make it serviceable as an independent instrument in the modern sense.

The word 'organ' means simply implement or instrument. Its use became established in the Middle Ages, when the organ was the largest and most dignified of instruments.

The essential elements of the modern organ are best gathered under three heads, the wind-supply, the pipe-work and the action. The wind-supply comprises whatever apparatus is used to collect air under pressure (technically called the wind) and to distribute it throughout the instrument as needed. The pipe-work includes all the sets of pipes (technically called stops), their individual form and method of operation and their collocation into groups or sections (called great-organ, swell-organ, pedal-organ, etc.). The action is the general name for the mechanism by which the player manipulates the instrument, including not only the keyboards and their connections with the pipes, but also many accessory mechanisms (like couplers, etc.). Of these what gives the organ its distinction is undoubtedly the pipe-work, which has become extremely elaborate and refined in most of its details, so as to offer for musical use a wide range of powerful and beautiful tone-qualities, many of them unmatched in other instruments. But, in addition, it is to be noted that no other instrument has demanded greater ingenuity to bring it to perfection as a piece of complex machinery, so that the action is also highly remarkable.

The basis of the wind-supply is a reservoir (usually called the bellows), into which air is blown by feeders (small oblique bellows) or some form of blower or pumping-engine, and where it is held under uniform pressure by weights or springs (see wind-pressure under Wind). From this reservoir wind-trunks pass to different parts of the instrument, sometimes being specially controlled by ventils, but usually communicating directly with the wind-chests, of which there is at least one for each sectional 'organ' and upon which the pipes of that 'organ' stand. The traditional arrangement for connecting the wind-chest with its pipes is to interpose two mechanisms at right angles, a system of longitudinal channels called grooves, one corresponding to each key of the keyboard, into which a valve or pallet admits the wind when the key is depressed, and a system of sliders working transversely, in which are holes exactly corresponding to the holes above in which the pipes stand, but which require to be slid into this position. Touching a key admits air to a groove, but it goes no further unless one or more sliders are thrown into position. There being a slider for each set of pipes, this enables the player to select the stops or tone-qualities which he will use. In many recent organs, however, the groove-and-slider mechanism is replaced by individual valves for each pipe, operated in series longitudinally and transversely.

Many details about the construction and character of the pipe-work are given under Pipe and Organ-Stop. Each separate 'organ' has its own sets of pipes or stops and its own keyboard. The 'organs' thus included are usually called the great-organ (that which is central or principal), the swell-organ (made expressive in loudness by being enclosed in a swell-box, with shutters that can be opened or shut), the choir-organ (originally designed to be so placed as to support choir-singing and, because often close behind the organist's seat, sometimes called choir-organ), the pedal-organ (played by a keyboard for the feet) and the solo-organ (containing stops of exceptional power or character for special effects). Small organs have only one keyboard or division, with or without pedals; medium-sized organs have swell, great and pedal or swell, great, choir and pedal; very large organs may have either four or five manuals, besides pedals. The choir-organ is now usually enclosed in its own swell-box, as is the solo-organ. The fifth manual is usually that of an echo-organ, placed at some distance from the rest of the instrument, also with a swell-box. Though the several 'organs' contain stops of similar classes, the voicing is managed so as to give each some degree of individuality both in intensity and in character. By means of mechanical couplers almost any desired combination of stops can be made from any 'organ.' The usual compass for the manuals is five octaves ( $c_2-c^2$ ) and for the pedals two octaves or more ( $c_2-c$  or  $c_2-f$ ).

The object of the key-action is simply to open a particular valve, so as to admit wind to the pipes of a certain pitch. In older instruments the connection between key and valve was by direct action through wooden stickers, trackers, squares and rollers, whereby the key-motion was transmitted from level to level and around corners until it reached the valve. In newer instruments the transmission of force is effected by means of pneumatic or electric connections and the valve finally actuated by small bellows called pneumatics, which are opened or shut by the wind-pressure (see under Pneumatic). In old organs the resistance of the keys was often excessive; in new ones it is practically like that of the best pianos. The stop-action has for its object to push in or pull out a particular slider, or to actuate some analogous mechanism, so as to admit wind to the pipes of a certain set or stop. Its operation may be either direct (as above) or pneumatically or electrically managed. To bring 'on' several stops at once combination-pedals or pistons are now usually provided, which may be fixed (invariably effecting the same result) or adjustable (open to alteration in various ways). Such devices vary considerably in detailed method of operation, but they all have the purpose of facilitating large and rapid changes of registration. There are also usually added a crescendo-pedal, bringing on the stops of the whole organ in some progressive order, and a sforzando-pedal, giving the full organ on once.

The coupler-action in the older organs was mostly limited to providing for the union of the several keyboards with each other. Now, in addition, it provides for adding upper or lower octaves on each manual and also from the great- to the swell- and choir-organs. Usually, also, the unison tone of the keyboards may be cut off by a separation or similar device, leaving the couplers in action. The opening and closing of the several swell-boxes is effected by swell-pedals, now made in such form as to remain fixed in any position. Tremulants are provided to modify the steadiness of tone at least in the swell-organ, if not in others.

The early organs were solely intended as supports for unisonous plain-song. Their compass was therefore limited, there were but few stops and the keys or levers for playing were often big and clumsy. From about the 13th century, however, interest began to develop in making the instrument serviceable independently of voices. The church-organ gradually took on some of the features of equipment now universal, though several of these (including the addition of a pedal-keyboard) did not appear till the 15th century and then only sporadically. But, for a time perhaps more important, there were various kinds of smaller organs for use outside the church, including positives, that were set up somewhat permanently, and many small portatives, which were sometimes small enough to be carried on the arm and played while walking in procession. These latter were often called regals and sometimes, being made to fold up like a book, Bible-regals. These smaller forms were highly important because in them was perfected the modern arrangement of the keyboard and on them were first tried out the experiments with chords that led to the modern art of harmony.

Organ-playing and organ-music upon a large scale did not become at all significant until the 17th century, but then, especially in Germany, advanced with rapidity and power, coming to its first culmination in the towering genius of J. S. Bach in the 18th. After a time of sluggish advance, a second period of strong development set in with the early 19th century, partly in the form of a Bach-revival, but soon in fresh and ingenious progress. In this later development players and composers of many countries have participated. Perhaps in originality and flexibility of conception the French masters have been most striking. But to-day organ-music stands as one of the significant elements in the influence of musical art, its exercise extending much beyond the limits of church-music, since large organs are common in concert-halls and also in theaters and opera-houses.

Inasmuch as organ-making involves extensive problems of erection, it is usually called organ-building, and one who pursues it as a business is then an organ-builder. One who makes a specialty of caring for organs is an organ-tuner or repairer. As the traditional place for the organ in many cathedrals and churches is elevated and apart, terms like organ-gallery or organ-loft are frequent; in some English cathedrals the organ is set over the rood-screen, which is then sometimes termed the organ-screen. One who plays an organ is an organist, occupying an organ-bench or seat in front of the organ-desk or console containing the keyboards. The characteristic diapason-tone is often called organ-tone. Organ-tableture was one of the earliest varieties of notation; see Tableture. For organ-point, see Pedal-point.

For American, cabinet-, parlor-, and reed-organ, see Reed-Organ. For barrel- or hand-organ, see Automatic Appliances. For mouth-organ, see under Harmonica.

Organistrum. See Hurdy-gurdy.

Organ-Stop. Properly, in an organ (normally a pipe-organ), a graduated set or series of pipes having the same form and tone-quality. This meaning is transferred to the reeds or vibrators of a reed-organ. But in both kinds of organ the mechanism of control is through devices at the keyboard called stop-knobs, tablets or keys, which are also usually called 'stops,' and since various other parts of the apparatus of the instrument are controlled by similar knobs, tablets and keys, it is usual to distinguish between speaking stops (that is, stops proper) and mechanical stops (such as couplers, the tremulant, etc.). Either of these, when in action or operative, is said to be 'on' or 'drawn,' but otherwise to be 'off' or 'retired.' All of them may be subject to various forms of collective control by means of combination-pedals or pistons. Also called register.

Speaking-stops are mechanically separated into those which are complete or 'run through,' having at least one pipe for every key of the keyboard to which they belong, and incomplete or partial, having pipes for only part of those keys; they may also be divided, if what would be a complete stop is made in two partial sections for separate use. Stops are also separated by reference to the section of the organ in which they are placed, as great-organ stops, pedal-stops, etc.

The pipes of a stop are ranged in a row upon the top of the wind-chest of the 'organ' or keyboard to which it belongs, paralleling the pipes of other stops of the same 'organ.' The order in which the several stops are disposed and also in which the pipes in any one stop are arranged is covered by the term plantation. With most stops the plantation is alternately on one side and the other for the larger pipes (so as to distribute the weight more evenly).

Stops are further classified according to the pitch of their tones in relation to the normal pitch of the keys. Some are unison-stops, the tones corresponding exactly to the keys (in the same way as on the piano). Others are made to give tones an octave lower or an octave or two octaves higher, transferring the normal tone to one of its upper or lower replicates. All such stops are usually called foundation-stops. In contrast are some mutation-stops, the tones of which are otherwise related to the normal tone, as a quint or a tierce (giving a fifth or a third from one form of the normal). All these varieties prove important in building up the composite tone-effects that are characteristic of the instrument.

Unison-stops are commonly called 8-foot stops, because their longest pipe (♯), if an open pipe, is about 8 feet long. Stops sounding an octave lower are 16-foot stops, those an octave higher 4-foot stops and those two octaves higher 2-foot stops, while a lower quint is counted as 10 2/3-foot, a normal quint as 5 1/3-foot, etc. Any stop (or coupler) adding the lower octave of the normal tone may be designated by the prefixed double, contra- or suboctave, while one adding the octave above may be called superoctave- or simply octave.

It should be noted that some stops are compound, having two or more differing pipes for each key. The chief of these are the many varieties of mixture-stop, with at least three such pipes (3-rank, 4-rank, etc.), the purpose of which is to strengthen the upper partials of the fundamental tones. These are now less common and much less conspicuous than was once regarded advisable. In addition, under this head come some stops of very delicate tone having two pipes to the key, tuned just enough apart to give a wavy, pulsating effect (like the so-called unda maris and the vox celestis).

Still more important is the distinction of stops according to whether their tone belongs to the diapason, flute, string or reed order. The diapason-tone is the most characteristic of all, having a breadth and solidity, even in its lighter varieties, that no other instrument can duplicate. The flute-tone sometimes resembles that of some member of the flute-family, but often much transcends this, while maintaining a general relation to it. The string-tone, by contrast, is incisive and thin, but also full of individuality and flexibility. The reed-tone often resembles that of various members of the reed-class or of the brass-wind. This latter tone is produced by reed-pipes, while all the others come from flue-pipes; collective names for these are the reed-work (or the reeds) and the flue-work (or the diapasons, the flutes or the strings). The diapasons have open pipes, mostly of metal, the flutes tend to have stopped pipes, mostly of wood, and the strings have open metal pipes of narrow 'scale' (width in proportion to length) and mouths of special form. See Pipe.

In addition, there are some stops whose quality is hard to assign to either of these classes absolutely, and many stops called by the same name are sometimes so made or so voiced as to belong to different classes in different organs. In recent instruments percussive stops have been introduced, especially for the sake of bell-effects. Also, in organs for theaters, various other sound-devices are found, imitating drums, cymbals, etc. (such devices are commonly named traps).

The names of stops are mainly of two classes, those designating the pitch-relation of the tones to the normal and those derived from the instrument which the tone imitates or at least suggests. But these names come from four or five languages, representing the practice of different countries and of many distinct types of manufacture. Hence it is not strange that the nomenclature is irregular and even contradictory. In many actual cases it is curiously inaccurate verbally as well as otherwise misleading.

Without attempting the hopeless task of enumerating all the names of Latin, Italian, French, German and English form that have been used, it is enough here to specify some that are in more or less common use, with a few words of characterization.

The typical diapason is the open diapason, 8-ft. (in Germany called prinzipale), of broad 'scale,' heavy metal, liberally winded, so as to have a rich, sonorous and noble tone. In large organs this is often in duplicate or triplicate, so as to present varieties of intensity and size of tone. It also appears as the double open diapason, 16-ft. or 32-ft., as the octave or principal, 4-ft., as the fifteenth or superoctave, 2-ft., and in several mutation- or mixture-stops (with many different names). The stronger diapasons are massed in the great-organ, but the family is represented in the other sections, usually with much reduction in volume and often with mixed quality (as in the violin-diapason or geigen-prinzipale). When solo-effects are magnified, a stentorphone is sometimes used, this being the most powerful member of the family. At the other extreme of intensity are the light stops known as dulciana, dolce, keraulophon, aeoline and dolcissimo (these last giving the most delicate tones in the instrument).

The typical flute is regularly called the stopped diapason, 8-ft., the name of which is due to its having stopped (wooden) pipes and a broad, round and mellow tone of so much nobility that it merits being set side by side with the more masculine open diapason. Close relatives are the melodia, the clavabella and a long list of flute-like stops of varying timbre, like the grossflöte, hohflöte, doppelflöte, rohrflöte, flauto traverso, flûte harmonique, flautino, flageolet, etc. (some 4-ft. or 2-ft.).

The 16-ft. form is usually called bourdon. The German gedeckt (or gedackt), meaning 'stopped' or 'covered', appears as an element in names like lieblich gedeckt. The term tibia has recently been used extensively for powerful solo-stops of this general family.

The typical string-stop is the viola da gamba or gamba, 8-ft., with the violoncello, 8-ft. (pedal-organ), the violone, 16-ft., the viola d'amour, the viola d'orchestre, the viola, all 8-ft., the violina, 4-ft., etc. A valuable relative of these is the salicional or salicet, 8-ft., which is not so 'stringy' as most of the foregoing, but has the same insinuating value, and the fugara, 4-ft. More distantly related is the gemshorn, 8-ft., which is not a true 'string,' but often combines as such. A solo-stop of this family is the gross-gamba, 8-ft.

The reeds vary much in character as well as intensity. One type is represented by the oboe, 8-ft. with the contrafagotto or bassoon, 16-ft.; another by the full-toned clarinet, 8-ft.; and a third by the cornopean and the trumpet, both 8-ft.; the trombone, 16-ft., and the clarion, 4-ft., all powerful and massive. Among many other timbres, that of the free-reed stops euphone and physharmonica stands apart, as still more that of the so-called vox humana, 8-ft. Solo-stops of this family often bear the name tuba.

Of the percussive stops it is enough to specify what are usually called chimes, the tones produced by hammers upon graduated tubes of metal, and carillons or the celeste, the tones similarly produced from bars of metal or glass. Though essentially diverse from typical organ-tones, these introduce pleasing effects on occasion.

The general name for the art and practice of choosing and combining stops in the performance of pieces or passages is registration. Since it is analogous with the art of coloring in painting and in architecture, it presents an artistic range that is almost without limit upon an organ of fair dimensions and thoroughly modern voicing. Older instruments, as a rule, lack distinctiveness of tone-color in the individual stops, but modern practice is continually refining and beautifying the distinctions between them, sometimes making them resemble orchestral instruments, sometimes developing tones that no such instrument can match.

Organum. Apparently the earliest and crudest attempt at a systematic form of part-music, consisting, as reported by Hucbald (9th century), of parallel fifths and octaves added above the cantus. Later the term was transferred to more than one variety of discant, especially, as organum purum, to two-part writing in which a free, rhythmical counterpoint is added to a slow and even unmeasured cantus. G.

The term may be connected with the organ, but more likely comes from organon in the sense of a rule or fixed method (like canon).

OrguINETTE. A small mechanical reed-organ, sounded by means of a paper-roll punched or slotted to correspond with the orifices leading to the reeds. The roll is advanced and the bellows operated by turning a hand-crank. It was one of the early forms of the present much more efficient devices.

Ornaments. See Embellishments.

Ornamental counterpoint, same as florid counterpoint. Ornamental note, same as accessory or auxiliary note.

Orpharion, Orpheorion. One of the many forms of pandora or bandora, having 6-7 pairs of strings, tunings for which are given by Prætorius (1619). G.

Orphéon. The name of an extensive French association for promoting choral singing, somewhat analogous to the German Liedertafel, but with marked differences. Its germ lay in the introduction of music as a study in some of the city-schools of Paris in 1818 and the appointment of Wilhem as chief instructor. His success ultimately led to the extension of his methods to all the schools and to higher institutions in 1835-38 and the holding of public contests and demonstrations by choirs of young people. Meanwhile he also started adult classes for working-men, which supplied tenors and basses that could be combined with the sopranos and altos of the schools in choral concerts. The name Orphéon was used at first for such performances, but was later transferred to the men's societies as they multiplied not only in Paris, but in the provinces. Finally, in 1852, when the number of Orphéons and Orphéonistes had become considerable, the movement was definitely organized with Gounod as conductor. It prospered greatly until checked by the Franco-Prussian War in 1870-71, but subsequently resumed advance and spread into Belgium. G.

Gounod continued in charge till 1860, being followed by Bazin and Pasdeloup (for the south and north sections of Paris respectively). From 1873 Bazin was sole conductor, followed in 1878-96 by Danhauser.

Orthography, Musical. The art and practice of using the staff-notation with accuracy and propriety, so as not only to represent the tones intended, but to show their grammatical relations with reference to both harmony and form. See Musicography.

O salutaris hostia. A stanza from a hymn by Thomas Aquinas which in the Roman Catholic Church is usual as part of the office of Benediction and often appended to the Benedictus in the Mass. It has received numerous musical settings. G.

The original hymn begins 'Verbum Supernum prodiens' and the last stanza is 'O salutaris hostia, quæ celi pandis ostium, bella premunt hostilia, da robur, fer auxilium.'

Oscillation. In acoustics, same as vibration. Also rarely applied to the phenomenon of beats.

Ostinato. See Ground-bass. G.

Ottavina. A small spinet, tuned an octave above the ordinary form. Also, in the harpsichord, a stop enabling the player to play an octave higher than the usual pitch of the keys.

Ottavino, the piccolo or octave-flute.

Overblowing. In playing various wind-instruments, applying the breath so strongly as to cause the instrument to sound one of the upper partials of its fundamental tone. G.

Brass-wind instruments are almost always overblown, their effective scale being made up of upper partials of the tube-pitch, but wood-wind instruments are overblown only to extend their scale into the upper octave. In the pipe-organ overblowing is avoided.

Over-chord, Over-phone. See under Phone.

Overspun. In the making of strings for several instruments, denoting strings having a core of wire (on the guitar and zither of silk) around which is coiled a fine silver or copper wire, so as to increase their weight or mass and lower their pitch; also called covered. G.

Such strings are used for many of the lower strings of the piano, for the lowest string of the violin, for the lowest two of the viola and the cello, for usually three of the guitar, for variable numbers in the zither, etc.

Overstringing. In piano-making, an arrangement of the strings in two sets, one crossing the other obliquely, an arrangement that is more compact and brings the strains into better opposition than setting all side by side. G.

Overstringing seems to have been first tried in 1835 by Theobald Boehm, but its invention is claimed for others. It is sometimes called cross-stringing.

Overture. The technical name for an orchestral prelude or introduction to an opera, oratorio or similar complex vocal and instrumental work; originally called sinfonia or even toccata, now sometimes prelude or vorspiel.

The earliest Italian operas had but brief and unimportant introductions. The first formal overtures to acquire influence were those of Lully in France (from about 1670), who adopted the plan of three movements, the first slow and stately, the second a rapid and dashing fugato and the third usually a minuet or similar slow dance. This type was soon widely accepted in Germany (Kusser and Keiser) and in England (Purcell and Handel), though the English treatment was free and original in details. On the other hand, Alessandro Scarlatti in Italy (from about 1690) chose to use another form, also in three movements, but the first a bright and figured allegro, the second a slow melodic number and the third a rapid presto or similar quick movement. This was not generally followed outside of Italy. In both the French and the Italian types the influence is seen of the prevailing interest of the time in sets of pieces analogous to the dance-suite. It was from the overture and the suite taken together that the sonata and the symphony derived their general movement-plan (from about 1750).

With Gluck and Mozart the overture begins to assume its more modern aspect, being now usually in one movement, though often more or less divided into contrasted sections. Sometimes it has adopted the sonata-form in developing two subjects in contrasted keys. Sometimes it has been more contrapuntal. Sometimes it has sought to introduce a series of the airs later to be used in the main work. Sometimes it has contented itself with furnishing a general emotional setting either for the play to follow or for its opening scene. In value it has varied greatly, sometimes rising to great eloquence and sometimes falling to the level of a noisy and vapid theatrical medley.

From the time of Weber the independent interest of the overture began to be appreciated, so that overtures were detached for concert-production from the works to which they belong. In time this gave rise to the concert-overture, written with a play or dramatic subject in mind, but not as part of an opera. This type has now become widely recognized, taking as its basis of suggestion the themes of stage-plays or imaginative poems or individual characters in history or literature. The concert-overture, then, affiliates itself with the symphonic poem and, like the latter, has no fixed plan of treatment. Its elasticity and the value of its mental basis in a title or program of feeling have made it a favorite form for orchestral creation.

P. As an abbreviation, p stands for piano, pp for pianissimo, pf for either più forte or poco forte, mp for mezzo piano, fp for forte piano, and P. for pedal and P.F. for pianoforte.

Pace. See Tempo.

Pæan. An ode or song of victory or exultation.

Pageant. Specifically, a half-dramatic spectacle, usually in the open air, intended to celebrate or illustrate local history, an anniversary or even a fanciful conception, and usually including vocal and instrumental music. Sometimes it has a text and the general plan of a play; sometimes it is largely or wholly made up of tableaux and pantomime. See under Masque.

Such spectacles have been frequent in England and America since about 1905.

The term comes from the movable or temporary stages erected for medieval plays of similar character.

Palestrina Style. A general name for the a cappella style of polyphonic composition that was perfected in the 16th century and of which Palestrina was the ablest example.

Pandora, Pandura. See Bandola. G.

Panharmonion. A form of automatic orchestration, invented by the mechanician Maelzel of Vienna about 1800.

Panmelodion. A keyboard-instrument, resembling a piano, but sounded by the friction of wheels upon metal bars. It was invented by Leppich in 1810.

Panorgue. A small reed-organ attachment for a piano, invented by Jaulin of Paris.

Pan's-pipes. A wind-instrument consisting of a graduated set of small reeds or wooden tubes which are sounded by blowing across the open ends; also called syrix. G. (Pandean Pipe).

Instruments of this general sort are found in many parts of the world. It was well-known in Greek rustic life and is traditionally associated with shepherds.

Pantaleon, Pantalón. A very large form of dulcimer, having nearly 200 strings in two sets, one of metal, the other of gut, stretched over two soundboards, placed back to back, and sounded by hammers in the player's hands. It was invented by Pantaleon Hebenstreit of Merseburg about 1700 and later exhibited by him on concert-tours with remarkable skill. It was one of the precursors of the piano. G.

Pantomime. The general name for a theatrical entertainment or play performed by action, gesture, mimicry, dancing, etc., without words, but often with accompanying or incidental music. G.

Parallel. See Motion and Key (tonal).

In part-writing of every sort the use of motion in parallel octaves and fifths (if perfect) has been regarded objectionable. Octaves (or unisons) in progression cause the parts to merge and become mere duplicates—a surrendering of the principle of part-independence. To some extent all parallels, particularly if the intervals remain precisely alike (both perfect, both major, both minor), are open to the same objection, and a chain of thirds or sixths, even if major and minor be mingled, becomes at least weak. But parallel fifths has the added difficulty of either attracting the ear to the peculiarily 'hollow' sound of the interval or of suggesting a rather bald sequence of chords. Parallel dissonances, especially the harsher ones (like seconds or major sevenths) are objectionable both because of their roughness and because of the unstable harmonic poise involved, but diminished sevenths form chains that are useful in modulation.

As applied to keys and tonalities, parallel is used in two senses, equivalent either to tonic (having the same keynote) or to relative (standing in the relation of c to a, etc.)

In the analysis of forms, two strains or phrases (or even two figures within a phrase) are often said to be parallel when they are constructed on the same metric pattern or even when they follow similar harmonic formulæ.

Paraphrase. An arrangement, transcription or imitation of a vocal or instrumental work in a form or for voices or instruments other than what was originally intended.

Properly, a paraphrase differs from an arrangement in being less literal. It usually implies a considerable latitude in the treatment of thematic and other material; thus it is often synonymous with transcription or even with variation.

Parody. A piece in which the form and style of some other work is closely imitated, but with such differences of effect that the result is a satire or caricature; a travesty.

Very rarely the word has been used seriously, as, for example, in the a cappella period, for a mass the theme of which is borrowed from a motet.

Occasionally, also, it is applied to the resetting of a libretto by a second composer.

Part. (a) In an extended and complex work, one of the two or more main divisions into which the whole is divided. It is most used for the larger choral works, but sometimes for part-songs and songs. The parts of an opera are usually called acts, and those of a sonata movements.

(b) Any one of the constituent melodic elements in vocal or instrumental composition, regarded as a consecutive series or chain of tones; a voice or voice-part (so called even when given to an instrument or performed through a keyboard). Also the voice, instrument or other agency to which the rendering of such a melody is assigned. Also the written or printed score of such a melody for the use of a singer or player. Most music except that which is absolutely solo is conceived as being laid out in parts, so that nearly all composition involves part-writing. Where performance requires the distribution of the parts among different performers, it is part-music or concerted or ensemble-music. G.

In part-singing, the parts are designated as soprano (or treble), alto, tenor and bass (when the voices are mixed), or as first and second soprano and alto or first and second tenor and bass (when all women's or all men's). Similar terms are used for duets, trios, quintets, etc. An added solo-part may be called an obligato part (soprano obbligato, tenor obbligato, etc.). Even an absolute solo may be spoken of as a solo-part. If there is an accompaniment, the vocal part may be designated collectively, as well as the instrumental part (piano-part, organ-part, etc.).

In part-playing for solo instruments (as in a chamber-ensemble or an orchestra), the parts are designated by the instrument to which each is assigned, as violin-part, trumpet-part, harp-part, etc. In music for keyboard-instruments, the parts are more or less distinguished by the terms of part-singing (soprano, alto, tenor, bass, etc.), but those parts assigned to the two hands are often called collectively right-hand or left-hand parts (or, more loosely, treble- and bass-parts). Intelligent part-playing on the keyboard depends largely upon mental analysis and attention, so that the hand-action individualizes the parts as far as necessary.

A part-book is either a book giving the score for a single part or, as was common in early part-singing, a book on which the parts are printed separately, but on facing pages, so that singers can sit about a table and each have his own part before him.

A part-song is distinguished from a chorus by being meant for but one or a few voices to the part. The typical example is the true glee which differs from the madrigal in being meant for solo-voices.

Part-writing, in harmony, is the art, process and result of conceiving and forming the chord-progression out of three or more melodic elements or parts, regarded both individually and in due relation to each other; cf. Galanter and Gebundener Stil.

When all the parts required in a concerted work are written or printed together, they form a score.

Partial, Partial-tone. See Acoustics. G.

In organ-making, a partial stop is a stop that does not have pipes for the entire compass of the keyboard (does not 'run through'); see Organ-Stop.

Participant. In Gregorian music, the fourth of the regular modulations in each mode; see Modulation. In authentic modes it is usually next above or below the mediant and in plagal modes usually the lowest tone in the mode. G.

Participating Tone. In trills, same as accessory tone.

Particular. In naming meters in English hymnody, noting a stanza-form in triplets instead of couplets, as common particular meter, with the syllable-scheme 886, 886 (in place of common meter, 6 lines, 86, 86, 86).

Partimento. A given bass-part, usually with thorough-bass figures, used in exercises in florid counterpoint or in learning to play at sight from a figured bass. G.

Partita, Partie. A name used from the early 17th century for sets of two or more dances, intended to be played in succession, that which was later called a suite. Also rarely applied to a set of variations. G.

Partition, Partitur. See Score. G.

Party. A small group of instrumentalists, as a quartet-party; see Quartet.

Paspy. See Passepied.

Passacaglia, Passecaille. See Dances. G.

Passage. A general term for any relatively short section or division of a piece, from a period down to a figure. Specifically, a melodic figure that is repeated or imitated, especially a rapid run or roulade. Also applied to the transition from one key (tonality) to another in modulation. G.

Passamezzo. See Dances. G.

Passepied. See Dances. G.

Passing-tone, Passing-note. In harmony, a tone or note that is itself unessential or dissonant, but serves diatonically to connect essential tones in the preceding and following chords. Properly, it is always unaccented. G.

The term is often extended to include a tone or note next above or below an essential tone through which the melody rises or dips incidentally; a by-note or alternating-note.

When what would otherwise be a passing-note occurs under an accent, it is usually called a changing-note or an appoggiatura-note.

Passion, Passion-Music. A more or less dramatic treatment in recitation, verse and song of the narrative of the death of Christ and the events immediately preceding. The form of such representations has varied greatly. The germ of the practice lies in church-offices appointed for Holy Week or for Good Friday in particular. These early acquired traditional settings in plain-song, which in the 16th century were augmented by polyphonic settings of certain utterances. During the Middle Ages, at first under ecclesiastical auspices, but soon freely as well, the story was extensively used as a 'mystery,' indeed, as the typical 'mystery.' The accent in these passion-plays was upon the dramatic effect through the dialogue and action of personages, music being irregularly applied and kept incidental. Of these a remarkable illustration survives at Oberammergau.

In the 17th century German Protestantism introduced new elements and new methods. To the words of the Gospels were gradually added independent verses expressive of devout contemplation or direct worship, and before 1700 recitative and solo began to be employed as musical means, as well as church-chorales. In both these directions the form in Germany tended toward that of the oratorio. Many poets undertook to provide special texts, based now on one of the Gospels, now on another (occasionally on a combination of parts from all), and these were put to music, after 1700 usually with organ and orchestra, by various composers and brought into use at Good Friday services. Together with the multitude of church-cantatas and the analogous oratorios for festivals like Christmas, Easter and Whitsunday, they established a type of church-oratorio somewhat distinct from the concert-oratorio. But, like masses and other church-works, these Passion-oratorios have not seldom been reproduced as concert-works. Most of all is this true of Bach's Passion according to St. Matthew (1729), which is generally regarded the greatest of its class. G.

Following the Gospel narratives, it is usual in a Passion-oratorio to distinguish especially the Evangelist or Narrator, Christ, the Disciples, the Jewish crowd and two or three individuals, besides the contemplating congregation collectively or in individual expression.

Originally, the narratives of the different Gospels were used on four days in Holy Week, beginning with Palm Sunday. Any one of them might be used for Good Friday. That from Matthew offers the fullest material for musical treatment.

Among the many Passions are those of Schütz (4 works, 1665-66, with a Seven Words, about 1645), of Sebastiani (1672), of Keiser (1704), of Handel (1716), of Kuhnau (1721), of Bach (5 works, especially those from John, 1724, and from Matthew, 1729), of Telemann (45 works, especially one on a composite text), etc.

Pasticcio. A bastard form of opera or similar extended work, consisting of a medley of numbers taken from various existing works by the same or different composers and strung together in any effective order. Usually some sort of libretto was made for the whole. G.

Works of this class were common during the 18th century, but ceased with the overthrow of the concert-opera. Sometimes pasticcios were arranged by composers themselves, as often by Handel (1730-47) and by Gluck (Pyramo e Thisbe, 1746).

Pastourelle, Pastorale, Pastoral. Names for works of a pastoral or rustic character, such as (a) certain songs of the Troubadours or in similarly idyllic style, (b) a dramatic scena or cantata relating to country-scenes and characters, or (c) an instrumental piece suggesting the piping of shepherds, traditionally in sextuple rhythm and often on a drone-bass. G.

In the 17-18th centuries such pieces as the last were common in connection with Christmas music. The Pastoral Symphony in Handel's Messiah or in Bach's Christmas Oratorio are illustrations.

Patter-Song. In comic or burlesque entertainments or operettas, a song fitted to a rapid and wordy text that aims at jocose nonsense. G.

Pause. In notation, either a rest or a hold, the former meaning cessation of sound, the latter suspension of progress (usually with prolongation of tone). G.

Pavan. See Dances. G.

Pavillon Chinois. See Crescent.

Peal. A set of bells tuned to go together; a chime or carillon. Also a ringing of such a set either in order or in a melodic figure.

Peal-ringing is often used for change-ringing, though peals may be rung without changes.

Pedagogics, Musical. Attention to music-teaching as a specialty dates from about 1800, when general pedagogy began to take shape. Its emphasis then fell upon methods and appliances for the instruction of school-children in classes. Such instruction has now become widespread in the elementary and secondary schools of many countries, constituting the well-organized interest known as school-music. But this remains more or less distinct from the traditional methods of individual teaching that have been the main means of transmitting technical knowledge and skill from one generation to another. Within the last half-century there has been a growing tendency to analyze these methods with reference to their scientific improvement. No consensus of theory has been reached, but every branch of instruction has been benefitted. Practical pedagogy is more and more seen to be vitally connected, on the one hand, with an accurate and systematic analysis of just what it is proposed to teach (rudiments, vocal or instrumental technique, interpretation, répertoire, harmony, counterpoint, composition, general or special history, etc.) and, on the other, with musical psychology (the mental processes involved in conceiving and producing music and the whole problem of music as an experience). The tendency of technical pedagogy is always to exalt mere method without due attention to content and purpose. Musical pedagogy has not always struck this balance justly or fruitfully. But its advance in these directions is already noteworthy.

Pedal. In general, a lever operated by the foot; opposed to digital, one operated by the finger. In musical instruments, two kinds of foot-levers are used (a) in the organ, as keys in a special keyboard, which is of the same general form as the keyboard for the hands, but much larger in scale (pedal being here opposed to manual), and (b) in all keyboard-instruments and in the harp, as means for effecting certain mechanical changes in adjustment and operation (pedal here being opposed to manual appliances like stop-knobs, stop-keys or tablets, pistons and the like). G.

The pedal-keyboard of the pipe-organ (with analogous keyboards applied to reed-organs or to pianos and made separately as a pedalier) is an apparatus that has had a long and varied history. In old organs, not only was there no fixed practice as to what scale of notes was to be represented, but the disposition and dimensions of the individual keys varied widely. During the last half-century there has been steady progress toward a standardized form, prescribing not only the size, separation and dip of keys, but the exact placing of the pedal-keyboard with relation to the manual-keyboards. Furthermore, the better instruments now have the pedals set in a radiating arrangement (the rear ends close together and the keys spreading fanwise) and also in a concave curve (so that the keys are equidistant from the center of the player's body). The scale is now always carried down to c and usually up to f, giving a compass of 2½ octaves. The stops that belong to this keyboard constitute the pedal-organ. In addition, the pedals may be coupled to each of the manuals.

In the piano, three sorts of pedal are common, the loud or dampener-pedal, which raises all the dampers and not only prolongs any tones sounded, but allows the vibration of other strings in sympathy, the soft-pedal, which either interposes some deadening material between the hammer and the string or reduces the distance and force of the hammer-blow or shifts the key-board so that the hammers do not strike all of the unisons, and the sustaining or prolongment-pedal, which holds up whatever dampers are raised at the moment of its application. Occasionally other forms appear.

In the pipe-organ, two sorts of pedals are common (exclusive of pedal-keys above), those which act in various ways to draw groups of stops on one or more of the manuals (combination- or composition-pedals) and those which open the shutters of a swell-box and thus increase the loudness of the tones there produced (swell-pedals). Combination-pedals are single- or double-acting according as they only draw stops or alternately draw and retire them. They are variously adjusted, as to draw combinations on a given manual that are piano, mezzo and forte or that have some one character, etc. The crescendo-pedal draws all or most of the stops progressively. The sforzando-pedal draws the full organ at once. A swell-pedal is provided for each division of the organ that has a separate swell-box. Swell-pedals and the crescendo-pedal are usually balanced and have a rocking foot-piece that can be set at different angles by the toe and heel. In addition to these there is often a special pedal operating the great-to-swell coupler and this is properly double-acting. Combination-pedals and the sforzando-pedals are commonly made with a lock or catch that holds them when depressed until released.

In the harmonium and reed-organ (and occasionally in small pipe-organs in the past), pedals are used as treadles to operate the feeders that supply air to the bellows or exhaust it, as the case may be.

In the harp, pedals are used to operate some form of mechanism that shortens the effective length of certain strings. In modern instruments there are often seven pedals, each affecting strings of the same letter-name and each capable of raising their pitch either a half-step or a whole-step, as desired. As the strings are tuned diatonically in the scale of c-flat, any other scale can be obtained by combinations of pedals. If, however, the instrument is tuned chromatically, no pedals are required.

In any instrument, the total mechanism of which pedals are a part is the pedal-action. In many older organs, when the pedal-keyboard was not in use, its keys were held by a pedal-check, so that they could not be depressed.

In piano-playing, the use of the pedals, especially the damper-pedal, is an important branch of interpretative technique, requiring both judgment and accuracy. In organ-playing, the mastery of using the two feet upon the pedal-keyboard is still more important and difficult. One who is expert in pedalling or pedal-playing is sometimes called a pedalist. A passage to be played on the pedals is often indicated by Ped. or pedaliter; opposed to Man. or manualiter.

Pedalion, Pedalion. Any apparatus with a pedal-keyboard like that of an organ which can be used in conjunction with a piano, either by simply coupling to the lower keys of the latter or by operating a separate action of its own. Also such a pedal-keyboard used separately for practice. G.

Pedal-Point. In harmony, a sustained tone, usually in the bass, which is continued while the other parts move freely without regard to it (except at the beginning and end of the passage); also called organ-point. If such a tone is in an inner part in the harmony, it may be called an inner pedal, or if in the upper part, an inverted pedal; but all such tones (not in the bass) are sometimes called simply sustained or holding-notes. A pedal-point is usually the tonic or the dominant of the main key, or sometimes both together, being then called double or pastoral. G.

A prolonged pedal-point is a usual feature in fugues and is frequent in larger instrumental works, like symphonies and concertos. A similar effect is frequent in piano-music where a tone is persistently repeated as a pedal-note or tone while the harmony moves independently. Such a pedal-tone may even be varied into a small figure without quite losing its value.

Peg. See Tuning-Peg.

In many instruments of the lute- and viol-classes the peg-box is that part of the head which is left open so that the tuning-pegs may be inserted laterally across the opening.

Pennant. See Notation.

Pentachord. Either an instrument with five strings or a series of five tones.

Pentatone. In ancient music, an interval equal to the sum of five 'tones' or whole-steps, that is, an augmented sixth in modern reckoning.

Pentatonic Scale. See Scale. G.

Percussion, Instruments of. All instruments in which the sound is produced by a blow or stroke, whether by clashing together (as in cymbals and castanets) or by means of a hammer (as in bells, gongs, drums, all members of the dulcimer-class, including the piano, etc.); also called percussive or pulsatile instruments or percussives. G.

In some varieties of reed-organ the percussion is a device whereby a tap is given to a reed at the moment when it is sounded, so as to make it speak promptly, and the stop-knob controlling this is called the percussion-stop.

For percussion as a term in harmony, see under Preparation.

Perfect. Those intervals recognized as consonances are divided into two grades or orders, the perfect, including the prime or unison, the octave, the fifth and the fourth, and the imperfect, including both major and minor thirds and sixths. Hence the standard prime, octave, fifth and fourth are each called perfect as contrasted with any like-numbered interval that is longer or shorter (as an augmented prime, a diminished fifth, etc.), all these latter being imperfect. Furthermore, a cadence is perfect when it gives the sense of complete finality (as in the case of the authentic cadence), but imperfect otherwise. The term is sometimes used, also, of triads and chords when in their original or inverted position and when not defective. G.

In the mensural system of the Middle Ages the terms perfectum and imperfectum were used of the time-relation between longer and shorter notes when used together, the general terms for such relations being modus, tempus and prolatio. In general, any one of these was perfect when the long note was regarded as equal to three of the short notes, but imperfect when the long was equal to two of the short (to some extent the terms major and minor were used for the same opposition in time-value). Since the longer notes were used as rhythmic units (like the modern measure), triple rhythm was perfect and duple or quadruple rhythm imperfect. The sign for the former was a circle O, and for the latter a half-circle, C. From this sign, for the rhythm now called 'common' comes the rhythmic signature . The medieval preference for triple subdivisions of time and of notes was sometimes connected with the theological dogma of the Trinity. Its actual genesis may be from prevailing rhythms in the Latin verse of the period. It is noteworthy that full provision was made for the use of duple subdivisions, even though denominated imperfect. Precisely the same acceptance of duple and triple is made in modern theory and notation, but the order of preference is reversed. (If a note is to be regarded equal to three, instead of two, of the next species, it is now followed by a dot, which was originally called the point of perfection.) See Notation and Rhythm.

Perielesis. In Gregorian music, an extended note-group, or the ligature representing it, sung to a single syllable and occurring at or near the close of a phrase; cf. pneuma and jubilatio. G.

Périgourdine. See Dances. G.

Period. In formal construction, a division that has a high degree of completeness, its end being marked by a positive cadence. The term is usually used as superior to phrase, so that two or more phrases unite to form a period, but as inferior to some other larger unit, such as section (in one of its meanings). G.

Periodicals, Musical. The journalistic impulse has entered the musical field along several distinguishable paths. Articles contributed to journals of general character can be traced in the later 17th century in both France and England. Such articles have naturally been annalistic or critical in aim. From 1722 various scattered musical periodicals appeared, gradually advancing in quality until from about 1800 they begin to assume a more permanent character. Since then they have multiplied by the score, if not the hundred, some being short-lived, but others attaining a steady circulation. Criticism of works and artists and reports of musical happenings supply contents for most of them, but there has also been a notable growth of journals devoted to special subjects, like church-music, school-music, teaching-methods and certain forms of research, which have contained both history, aesthetics and pedagogical discussion. G.

In Germany the earliest undertakings were by Mattheson (1722), Mizler (1736), Scheibe (1737) and Henke (1741). Some other early dates are those of Marburg's successive ventures at Berlin (1750-78), brief issues at Amsterdam (1756) and Liège (1758-66), Framéry's Journal at Paris (1764-68) and Hiller's Nachrichten at Leipzig (1766-70). Even in Russia musical journals began in 1774.

Out of the multitude of German periodicals mention should be made of the Allgem. Musikal. Zeitung, in 1798-1848 conducted by Breitkopf & Härtel (editors, Rochlitz till 1818, G. W. Fink in 1827-41); the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, founded in 1834 by Schumann as the organ of the progressive party (editors, Schumann till 1844, Brendel in 1844-68, Schering and W. Niemann in 1903-06, Brandes in 1911-19 and then Max Unger); the Signale für die musikal. Welt, founded in 1843 by the publisher Senff (editors, Spanuth in 1907-20, then Chop); the Musikal. Wochenblatt, founded in 1870 by O. Paul (editors, Fritzsche till 1902, Frankenstein since 1907); the Allgem. Deutsche Musikzeitung, later the Allgem. Musikzeitung, started in 1874 (editors, Tappert in 1878-80, Lessmann in 1881-1907, then Schwerts); Die Musik, in 1901-15 brilliantly edited by B. Schuster; besides Gottfried Weber's Cäcilia, 1824-48 (after 1839 edited by Dehn); the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, 1847-96, the Niederrheinische Musikzeitung, 1853-67, etc. The venerable Allgem. Musikal. Zeitung was revived in 1863, but after 1865 passed into new hands and under Eitner and Chrysander continued till 1882 as a medium for historical studies; more important in this field were the Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte, 1869-1905 (editor, Eitner) and the Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft, 1884-94 (editors, Spitta, Chrysander and Adler).

The many English journals have included Ayrtton's ably edited Harmonicon, 1823-33; The Musical World, 1836-91, not entirely confined to music (editors, J.W. Davison in 1844-85, Hueffer in 1886-88, then E.F. Jacques); the famous Musical Times, begun by Mainzer in 1844 and taken up by Novello in 1846 (editors, H.C. Lunn in 1863-87, W.A. Barrett in 1887-91, E.F. Jacques in 1891-97 and then F.G. Edwards); The Musical Standard, founded in 1862 by A.W. Hammond, who was the first editor (others include T.L. Southgate, Broadhouse and Turpin); The Monthly Musical Record, started in 1871 by Augener & Co. (editors, Prout till 1874, C. A. Barry in 1874-76, W.A. Barrett in 1874-87, later J.S. Shedlock); The Musical Herald, started in 1853 as The Tonic Sol-fa Reporter and enlarged in 1889 under the editorship of J.S. Curwen (till 1916); etc. Several enterprises of high quality were not long-lived, such as The Musical Review (1883), The Meister (1888-95, edited by W.A. Ellis, devoted wholly to Wagner), The New Quarterly Musical Review (1893-96, edited by Bantock), The Quarterly Musical Review (1885-88, edited by Hiles), etc.

In France the place of honor belongs to the Revue et Gazette Musicale, formed in 1835 out of two earlier journals and continuing till 1880; Le Ménestrel, founded in 1835 by Heugel; La France Musicale, 1837-70, conducted by the Escudier brothers, with its successor, L'Art Musical, 1860-81; Le Courrier Musical, since 1898 edited by Albert Didot; besides others, ranging from high scholarship down to theater-news.

In Belgium Le Guide Musical, founded in 1855, early took rank as important (among the editors are Kufferath in 1887-1900, Imbert in 1900-05, then De Curzon).

In Italy mention should be made of Ricordi's Gazzetta Musicale, 1845-1903 (then becoming Musica e Musicisti), and the remarkable Rivista Musicale Italiana, founded in 1894 (editors, Torchi till 1904, then Torrefranca). There are also energetic journals at Turin, Florence, Rome, etc.

To this slight list might be added examples from Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, several Balkan states, Poland, Russia, Finland, all the Scandinavian countries, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, etc.

In the United States reference is due to Dwight's Journal of Music, 1852-81, Mathews' Music, 1891-1902, and the far more significant Musical Quarterly, founded in 1915 (editor, O. G. Sonneck), with The Musical Courier, started in 1880, The Etude, founded in 1884 by Presser, Musical America, founded in 1898, and The Musical Observer, founded in 1910. See extensive lists in Riemann's Musiklexikon, art. 'Zeitschriften.'

Most of the journals of which the above are illustrations devote themselves to items of musical news, criticisms of performances and works, contributed articles on current topics and correspondence. Some of them range higher into the field of historical and theoretical scholarship. But, besides such periodicals of popular appeal, there are many of special character, dealing, for example, with church-music, Catholic and Protestant, with dramatic music, with the orchestra and the specialty of conducting, with choral societies, with the organ and its music, as well as several other particular instruments, with problems of teaching (piano, singing, etc.), with instrument-making, with military music, with musical bibliography, etc. The most ambitious international publication of high scholarship was the Zeitschrift (monthly) and Sammelbände (quarterly) issued by the Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft in 1899-1914, with the allied French publications. Analogous with this in some respects are the Proceedings of various learned societies, such as the Musical Association of London (from 1874).

Perpetual Canon. See Canon.

Perpetuum Mobile. See Moto Perpetuo.

Pes. In the famous rota or double canon Sumer is icumen in, the name given to the 2-part canon for basses that forms a ground-bass for the main 4-part canon above.

Phantasia, Phantasy. See Fantasia.

Phonation. See Vocalization.

Phonautograph. An acoustical apparatus designed to make a visible record of the vibrations of any sounding body. It was first made about 1858 by Léon Scott and has repeatedly been modified or improved.

In principle it consists of a drum or horn for receiving the vibrations, a delicate membrane bearing a projecting stylus and a revolving barrel covered with blackened paper on which the motions of the stylus are recorded.

The name has also been applied to more than one form of melograph or music-recorder.

Phone. In general, a tone, especially when produced by the voice in the act of phonation. It properly includes both the fundamental tone and its upper partials, like Klang and clang. Also, in speech-analysis, any element that is tonal as distinguished from those that are noises (clicks, flates and glides).

The term has also been extended by Baker (in his Dict. of Musical Terms, 10th ed. 1900) as an equivalent for the German Klang as applied by Riemann in acoustics and harmony. The basis of the latter's theory is the assumption that every tone has associated with it an over-phone (its major triad) and an under-phone (a major triad taken downwards, forming a minor triad with the original tone as its fifth, and also that tone-relation is to be counted primarily) within a circle of six phones, three major and three minor, in which the original tone appears either as root, third or fifth. This circle, if c is the starting-point, includes the major triads of c, f and a-flat and the minor triads of f, c and a-natural. On this basis an extensive theory of chord-progression and of modulation can be built up that helps to explain procedures instinctively adopted in modern composition.

The term phonic is used to denote various elements in the above scheme and its extensions.

Phonetics. The science of speech-sounds; phonology. It is that part of the general science of vocalization or vocalics that regards the analysis and classification of the sounds of language, whether spoken or sung.

All languages are alike in utilizing certain adjustments of the vocal apparatus so as to produce certain classes of vocal sound. Phonetic systems differ much in detail and in terminology, but they all have to deal with common phenomena and problems.

For practical purposes, a rough classification distinguishes four kinds of elements: (a) phones, true tones, having a positive and tunable pitch, (b) clicks, noises produced by checks to the breath-stream and quick motions of tongue or lips, (c) flates, unvoiced breath, whether escaping vaguely or directed against some obstacle, and (d) glides, the vague sounds or delicate modifications of adjacent sounds that occur in shifting the vocal apparatus from one position to another. Thus, in English, the general grouping may be put as follows: phones (pure or accompanied only by glides or a certain amount of flate), the vowels oo, o, aw, ah, ü, ö, ä, ë, ä, the diphthongs i, oi, ou, ai, etc., the liquids m, n, l (and, with qualifications, r and ng) and the continuant sonants v, th (as in thy), z, zh (as in azure); phones with click, ng and the explosive sonants b, d, g (hard), j; flates, the continuant surds f, th (as in thin), s, sh and the aspirates h, wh (really hw); and clicks, often with a flate, p, t, k, ch.

All analysis and classification, however, must give due regard to variations produced by what is called the placing of the sound, that is, the real or apparent location of the center of resonance in the pharynx, mouth or nose-cavities, and also any other features derived from the elusive and variable phenomena of resonance as determined by the muscular adjustment of the cavities and their walls and parts.

Phonikon. A brass-wind instrument with a globe-shaped bell, invented in 1848 by Čzerveny of Königgrätz.

Phonograph. The general name for the reproducing-instrument invented by Edison in 1876, or its subsequent modifications. It was originally devised to reproduce speech, but was promptly applied to song and instrumental music. See Automatic Appliances.

Phonometer. An acoustical instrument for recording the vibrations of a sounding body with reference to a time-unit, like a second. Also an instrument for producing and grading sounds of varying intensity or loudness. Cf. phonauto-graph and siren.

Phorminx. One of the older forms of the Greek kithara or lyre.

Phrase. In general, a portion of a melody that is performed without pause or break. Specifically, in formal construction, a division of a composition having some degree of independence and completeness and closing with a cadence of some sort. As a unit, it is smaller than a period, but may itself be divisible into half-phrases or phraselets and may contain various figures. See Form and Rhythm. G.

Phrasing. A general term for the art, process and result of grouping and otherwise adjusting tones in a figure, phrase or passage so as to embody its musical form and meaning with accuracy, clearness and æsthetic effect. It includes not only the due connection of tones within natural groups and the due separation of one group from another, but also the dexterous use of those gradations in pace or intensity (nuances) whereby the composer's intention is fully disclosed. G.

Phrasing-marks are any signs or directions that aid in indicating what is intended. They include especially sweeping curves over or under the notes to be regarded together, breath-marks and similar signs for the divisions between phrases, and also various signs marking the treatment of details. Notation is often unable to follow the refinements and niceties of phrasing, so that much depends practically upon the intelligence and genius of the performer.

Physharmonica. A small form of reed-organ, invented in 1818 by Häckel of Vienna, and designed to be used as an attachment to the piano. It was one of the experiments that led to the perfected harmonium. G.

Pianette, Pianino. A small piano; other names are cabinet- or cottage-piano, piccolo piano, etc. G.

Pianoforte. A keyboard-instrument, invented in 1709 by Bartolommeo Cristofori of Florence, which, after being developed by others, about 1770 began to displace the harpsichord and the clavichord and by 1800 had become the leading instrument of its kind for both public and private use. It is essentially a keyboard-dulcimer, the tone being produced by the impact of padded hammers on tightly-stretched metal strings. Because of its capacity for producing gradations in loudness, it was originally called gravicembalo col piano e forte and sometimes forte-piano; now commonly shortened to piano (in German, Klavier). G.

There is an unexplained reference as early as 1598 to two instruments at Modena called 'piano e forte,' but the meaning is unknown. Cristofori's invention much later may have been quickened by some knowledge of Hebenstreit's notable use of his pantaleon from 1705; the latter certainly suggested a similar idea about 1720 to C. G. Schröter of Dresden, as possibly to Marius of Paris somewhat earlier (in neither case carried out into actual manufacture). Two specimens of Cristofori's pianos are extant, one (1720) in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, the other (1726) acquired from the Kraus collection in Florence by the Heyer Museum in Cologne. A harpsichord attributed to him (though probably wrongly) is in the Stearns collection at Ann Arbor, Mich.

The earliest shape was derived from that of the harpsichord (wing-shaped, with the strings extending away from the keyboard), but later it was also made like the clavichord (rectangular, with the strings parallel to the keyboard). The former is preserved in the modern grand-piano (or grand), the latter in the modern, but almost obsolete, square-piano (or square). The upright form began to be made as early as 1780, but was not mechanically successful till much later. The German name for the grand is flügel and for the upright pianino. A grand of the largest size is known as a concert-grand.

Although the pianos made by Cristofori and by the German Silbermann, who imitated him, were reasonably successful, more than a century of painstaking improvement was required to attain the perfection of the modern form. The first marked advances were made mainly by two schools of makers, the one founded by Stein of Augsburg and from about 1790 centered at Vienna, and the other initiated by other German workmen and from about 1775 rapidly developed at London, especially by Broadwood. The Viennese action was light and the tone sweet and refined, analogous to that of the clavichord, while the English action was strong and the tone more sonorous, analogous to that of the harpsichord. The former was associated with a line of piano-players deriving their tradition from Mozart. The latter is associated with the Clementi line. Just before 1800 the elder Erard began piano-making at Paris, becoming equally famous with Broadwood, and several makers became notable in Germany. In addition, several ingenious inventors appeared in America, leading to the founding of the Chickering business in Boston in 1823. The great Steinway firm in New York was not established until 1848. By about 1860 all the elements of the modern form had been perfected.

THE MINSTRELS' GALLERY, EXETER CATHEDRAL

The mechanical problems of the piano lie mainly in the action and in the stringing and its attachments. Although the piano outwardly resembles the harpsichord and inherited from it its general frame and its broad soundboard under the strings, yet the method of tone-production raised serious mechanical questions. Part of the problem could not be solved until altogether new materials were available.

From the first it was clear that the action required a hinged hammer so adjusted to the key-tail as to be thrown freely against the string and to rebound instantly, whether or not the key is at once released. This involved the delivery to the hammer-shank of a thrust proportionate to the pressure at the key and some form of escapement by which the hammer should free itself from that thrust. At first hammers were tried striking from under the strings, with later experiments with over-striking; the latter was soon given up, but reappeared in the later uprights. The Viennese action had the hammer-butts at the back and the heads toward the keyboard, while the English action reversed this arrangement (as is now universal). The nicest ingenuity has been required to perfect the escapement and its connections, including (from 1821) the double form that permits repetition of the tone without fully releasing the key. When one considers the enormous increase in strain upon the action involved in the advance from the light demands of 18th-century playing to the ponderous effects of modern pianism, the question of making the action fully responsive is seen to be extremely intricate.

But the problem of the stringing was even more difficult. If a tone is to be elicited from a string by a hammer-blow, the string must not only be of metal, but must be under high tension. The early strings were made of iron, whose tensile strength could not be increased beyond a certain point. Piano-making was revolutionized from 1835, when steel wire began to be made. To-day the wire made for pianos is the finest product of its kind, both in strength and in texture. But improving the strings and raising their tension involved endless experiments with a framework strong enough to hold them, with bridges properly disposed to raise them above the soundboard. All the early frames were made of wood, iron bars not being introduced till 1803. Only after 1820 was a rigid plate for carrying the strings perfected, soon followed by a frame cast in one piece. This use of metal in the frame, combined with the use of steel wire in the strings, was the basis of the universal gain in both tone and durability from 1850 onward.

Incidentally, various other details were perfected, the compass of the keyboard being extended to six octaves in 1794 and to seven in 1824, the 'loud' and 'soft' pedals being introduced in principle before 1790, but later improved in action, and the 'sustaining-pedal' appearing in one form in 1862, etc. Most important of all were the improvements in the making of the hammer-heads, which now include layers of special felt, laid on under tension.

Among the parts of the action and frame are the following. The raising of the key-tail by the pressure of the finger actuates a complex mechanism known as the hopper, which both delivers the thrust to the hammer and lifts the damper from the string, besides having a check to catch the hammer on its rebound. For each key of the keyboard there are 75-100 distinct pieces of wood or metal required. The number of strings in a grand or upright is now usually about 225, since all the main portion of the compass is trichord; in a concert-grand their united pull on the frame amounts to nearly 30 tons. To withstand this pull and distribute it advantageously, the lower strings are now arranged to cross part of the others (overstring), while long braces extend above them from end to end to counteract a tendency in the plate to buckle. At their further ends the strings are hooked about pins in the string-plate, while at their forward ends they are fastened to tuning-pins set in the wrest-plank, at both ends their vibrating-length being fixed by their passing over bridges most carefully disposed. Underneath them is the soundboard, which in modern pianos is elaborately constructed so as to have the maximum of strength and sonority, since upon this depends the essential quality of the tone. The pedals usually provided are the loud or damper-pedal (holding the dampers up so that tones are prolonged and also reinforced by sympathetic resonance), the soft or shifting-pedal (making the tones less intense by interposing a soft substance between hammer and string, or decreasing the play of the hammers or shifting the keyboard so that the hammers strike only one or two of the unisons) and the sustaining-pedal (holding up such dampers as happen to be raised at the moment when the pedal is applied).

Pianos have probably always been tuned in equal temperament.

The piano stands with the organ and the violin as one of the instruments of highest importance in the development of musical art, besides being the chief means by which music has attained its extraordinary popular dissemination. Since 1800 piano-music has been the most frequent form of composition. Virtuosity upon the piano is more common than upon any other instrument. The piano-recital or concert is one of the most frequent forms of musical entertainment.

Although the piano-tone is essentially a percussive tone and diminishes if prolonged, yet its quality has been so greatly enriched and given so much sustained sonority that it has extraordinary value in blending with the voice and in simulating orchestral effects. It is therefore infinitely useful in vocal accompaniments and in all sorts of instrumental ensembles (as in piano-trios, piano-quartets, etc., as well as in concerto-form with the orchestra).

One who plays upon the piano is a pianist, and the art of such playing, or its practice or method, is often called pianism. A small piano is a pianette or pianino, sometimes a cottage- or cabinet-piano. One who manufactures pianos is a piano-maker and one who cares for their tune and repair is a piano-tuner. A school where piano-playing is taught is a piano-school.

For piano-player, player-piano, and street-piano, see Automatic Appliances.

Pibcorn, Pibgorn. An old Celtic instrument of the clarinet-class, with a cylindrical tube of bone, a bell at each end of ox-horn and a small reed of straw. There are usually 7 finger-holes. Its popular name is hornpipe, whence possibly came the name for the dance so called. G.

Pibroch. An irregular set of variations developed from a theme or melody, executed on the bagpipe, usually to excite the martial spirit. The term is sometimes given to the bagpipe itself in poetic allusion. G.

The theme is called the urlar. The 3-4 variations properly increase in floridness and difficulty, culminating in the quick creanduidh at the close. Sometimes they embody a sort of program of topics taken from battle-experiences.

Picardie, Tierce de. A major third in the final chord of a piece or period in a minor key. G (Tierce).

The custom of making such a close began early in the polyphonic period, but the exact reason for the name is not known. Probably it is connected with the derivation of the style and forms of the time from the region of Flanders and northern France.

Picco-pipe. A very small flageolet or direct flute, used with extraordinary skill by a blind Sardinian peasant named Picco who appeared in London in 1856. G.

The pipe is only  $3\frac{1}{2}$  inches long, with a whistle-mouthpiece that occupies nearly half of the length, a very short tube with 3 fingerholes and a small bell. Picco secured a scale of over two octaves, with chromatics, by using the pipe sometimes open and sometimes closed with the hand and by overblowing.

Piccolo. The octave-flute; see Flute. G.

Piccolo may be added as a diminutive to the name of any other instrument, as oboe piccolo, violino piccolo and violoncello piccolo. It has also been applied to the smallest member of certain groups of brass-wind instruments.

Pick. See Plectrum.

Piece. A loosely-applied term for a composition, usually instrumental, or for a movement or number taken from an extended work. Also an instrument regarded as a member or part of an orchestra (often plural, as an orchestra or band of 25 pieces). G.

Piffero. A small oboe or flageolet, used by strolling players in Italy and the Tyrol. G.

Such pifferari in many places play melodies at Christmas-time before pictures of the Virgin in imitation of the shepherds at the Nativity. These airs are usually in a pastoral style like a siciliano.

Pin. See Tuning-pin.

Pipe. In general, any small tubular instrument, usually of wood, such as a whistle or oboe. Pipes of simple form are among the most universal of primitive and rustic instruments; from them have been evolved several families of woodwind instruments, including flutes, oboes and clarinets, with all their relatives.

Specifically, one of the tubes of metal or wood from which the tones of a pipe-organ are produced; an organ-pipe. It is by its use of pipes, usually of considerable size, that the pipe-organ is distinguished from the reed-organ. G.

Organ-pipes are made either of carefully-selected wood or of metals like tin, zinc or lead (sometimes pure, sometimes combined in the alloy known as pipe-metal). Wooden pipes are usually square in section (occasionally triangular), while metal-pipes are cylindrical. They vary greatly in size, the largest being 32 feet long and perhaps 2 feet across, the smallest somewhat like an elongated lead-pencil. The total number in a single organ varies with the size of the instrument, in rare cases rising to over 10,000.

Organ-pipes belong to two main classes: flue-pipes and reed-pipes. The principle of the former is that of the whistle or flageolet, the tone being produced by the impact and fluctuation of a flat stream of air driven against a sharp edge, while the principle of the latter is that of the clarinet, the tone being produced by the vibration of a metal-tongue or reed under the impulse of a stream of air. In both cases the quality, pitch and volume of the tone are principally determined by the shape and dimensions of the pipe itself. Quality depends mainly on material, shape and scale (the proportion between length and width). Pitch depends mainly on length. But both quality and pitch are much affected by whether the top of the pipe be open or closed. Volume depends on details in the tone-production, on the size of the pipe and the amount of air admitted.

Flue-pipes consist of two main parts, the foot and the body, at the bottom of the latter being the mouth, which is an opening in the side of the tube. The foot serves as the passage-way through which compressed air enters the pipe. Its top is a block or shelf called the language or languid (a corruption of languet), which closes it save for a narrow slit in front called the flue or wind-way. This, with the shaped surface below it, forms the lower lip of the mouth. The slit-like flue is so made as to direct a flat stream of air against the sharp edge of the mouth's upper lip and thus throw the air into vibration. The action of this stream is further controlled by projecting ears on the sides of the mouth. The variation started in the mouth is taken up by the whole volume of air in the pipe. The character of the tone is greatly influenced by delicate adjustments in the mouth. Its pitch depends on the effective length of the air-column and whether the top of the pipe be open or stopped with a plug (an open pipe giving a tone an octave higher than a stopped one of the same length). An open pipe about 8 feet long gives the tone c<sub>2</sub>, one 4 feet long the tone c<sub>1</sub>, etc., so that a set of pipes of the same sort ranges (for a keyboard of five octaves) from 8 feet to 6 inches. Precision in tuning is secured by devices at the top of the pipe for increasing or diminishing its effective length. Adjustable flaps or tongues for this purpose are called turners. Stopped pipes are tuned by raising or lowering the plug or tampon at the top.

Reed-pipes consist of two main parts, the boot and the body, separated by a circular block of metal. In the center of this is set the reed or shallot (projecting into the boot below), which is a tube, at the top opening into the upper part of the pipe, at the bottom forming a box-like end, one side of which has an oblong opening that is covered or filled by a metal tongue. This tongue is fixed at its upper end, but free and slightly curved outward below. The compressed air in the boot causes it to vibrate over or in the opening and thus produces tone. The pitch of the tone depends on the effective vibrating-length of the tongue, which can be adjusted by means of a sliding tuning-wire in the block. (For the distinction between free and beating reeds, see Reed.) The body above the block varies greatly in shape and size, according to the quality of tone desired. The pitch of the tone can be somewhat modified by similar adjustments to those in flue-pipes.

Normally, there is a pipe for every key of the keyboard in each set or kind of pipes included in the instrument (in some cases 2-5 pipes to the key). Such a set of similar and graduated pipes is called a stop or register. The several sets of pipes or stops belonging to any one division of the organ are ranged in rows across the wind-chest of that division, the top of which is pierced with holes to receive them. For further details, see Organ and Organ-stop.

When a pipe is sounded, it is said to speak and the character of its tone is called its speech. If it sounds improperly or when not wanted, it is said to cipher.

Pirouette. A conical cup of ivory or wood found in some old instruments of the shawm- and pommer-families, designed to cover the lower part of the double reed and afford a brace for the player's lips. G.

Piston. In brass-wind instruments, see Valve. In the pipe-organ, a knob or plunger by which some change in registration is effected either pneumatically or electrically; often called a combination-piston.

Pitch. As a physical characteristic of tones, see Acoustics. Differences of pitch and the relations of different pitches constitute a large part of the artistic resources of music. They underlie all scales, intervals and the applications of these in melody and harmony. For both practical and theoretic purposes it early became customary to designate pitches by means of letter-names, at first taking a as the assumed tone of reference and using the series a, b, c, d, e, f, g. The absolute pitch of a doubtless fluctuated widely in practice, but the relative pitches of tones with reference to it could be estimated with some accuracy. In modern usage, the common tone of reference is c (usually that c known as middle c), but for certain precise purposes a is also used. At any period the pitch-relations of tones called by particular letter-names depend upon the theory or practice of tuning adopted. Thus until the 16th century the Pythagorean tuning of major thirds and sixths was so much in vogue that it delayed the acceptance of their modern values and the recognition of the triads now fundamental to harmonic theory. Thus at present the theoretic pitch of tones in their interval-relations is computed in just or pure intonation, while their practical use is widely carried on in tempered intonation. Pitch, then, is not only either absolute or relative, but also either theoretic or practical. G.

For purposes of reference, it has long been customary to use a system of pitches derived from the organ-key-board. In this the second c below middle-c is called C or 8-foot c and all tones in the octave above by similar names, constituting the great, first or 8-foot octave; the next c below middle-c is called c or 4-foot c and its octave the small, second or 4-foot octave; middle-c is called c' or 2-foot c and its octave the once-accented, third or 2-foot octave; the next c above middle-c is called c'' or 1-foot c and its octave the twice-accented, fourth or 1-foot octave; etc. This system is extended downward by calling the third c below middle-c, C, or CC and the fourth c C' or CCC. Sometimes instead of superior and inferior figures accents above or below are used, and sometimes horizontal lines above or below.

In the present volume, middle-c is called c (with all pitches in the octave above), the next c below is called c, and the next c above c', etc. (in each case with the octaves above). This makes clear the relation to the tone of reference.

In acoustical discussions more elaborate systems of pitch-designation are used, as by A. J. Ellis in his translation of Helmholtz' Tonempfindungen or by Riemann in various manuals.

Absolute pitch can always be stated by giving the vibration-number of the tone in view. The assumed pitch of middle-c is often put at 264 (German usage) or 256 (English usage). The former is deduced from a standard adopted by a congress of physicists at Stuttgart in 1834, when, on Scheibler's suggestion,  $a=440$  was thought desirable (hence called the Stuttgart or Scheibler's pitch). The latter is often called the philosophical pitch, because 256 represents the eighth octave above a hypothetical tone with but one vibration per second.

The actual pitch of musical instruments and performances is known to have varied greatly at different periods and may differ at any time in particular cases. In 1859 the French diapason normal of  $a=435$  (at 59° Fahr.) was adopted by a governmental commission and made legal. This has been generally taken elsewhere as standard (often called French or international pitch). But for a time it was so much below the standard of usage that it was called low pitch in distinction from concert-pitch or high pitch (orchestras then using  $a=450-455$ ). Investigation shows that in the early 18th century the usual pitch was as low as  $a=405-415$ , low pitch then being Chorton as opposed to Kammerton or high pitch. The question of actual pitch is of importance not only as regards the convenience of vocalists, but as regards the tuning of instruments generally, particularly those of fixed intonation (like the piano and the organ).

In many wind-instruments the members of a particular group or family are named by the pitch of the fundamental tone of the tube, as a cornet in b-flat or a b-flat cornet. In some cases an instrument can be set in different pitches by adjusting movable crooks. In either case the instrument is said to be pitched in such and such a key. In unaccompanied vocal music some pitch must be assumed at the outset, whether the one indicated or another. This process is giving, taking or setting the pitch, and the piece is then said to be pitched in this or that key. Similarly a piano or an organ may be pitched high or low as well as by standard or French pitch.

The two instruments most used for fixing pitch for tuning instruments or for singing are the tuning-fork and the pitch-pipe. The former gives but one tone; the latter may be made to give one or more than one.

Pizzicato. See Terms of Performance. G.

Plagal. See Authentic, Gregorian Music and Cadence. G.

Plain-Chant, Plain-Song. Same as Gregorian music. G.

Plaint. See Lament.

Plantation. In organ-making, the method used in arranging the pipes of a stop upon the wind-chest.

It is always in a straight line or a narrow zig-zag, but in old instruments the series ran from the largest pipe to the smallest, whereas in modern instruments the largest is at one end, the next largest at the other end and so on alternately, so that the small pipes are in the middle. This distributes the weight better.

Player-Piano. See Automatic Appliances.

Plectrum. Any hard substance, like wood, ivory, shell or metal, held in the fingers or hand or fastened in any way to a finger, by which the strings of instruments of the lute-, harp- or zither-classes are sounded by plucking or twanging. G.

Most plectra are small and light, but that of the Japanese samisen is an ivory-tipped wooden wedge nearly 10 in. long.

Plectra serve both to save the wear on the finger-tips by direct playing and to produce a keener and louder tone.

Pneuma. Same as jubilatio. Also sometimes a variant form for neume. G.

Pneumatic. Denoting an instrument that is sounded or played upon by means of the breath or air artificially compressed, that is, any wind-instrument. G.

In organ-making, extensive use is made of a pneumatic action, often of great extent and complexity. The essential principle of this is that if a small diagonal bellows is placed in a chamber filled with compressed air, it will instantly collapse if its vent be opened and, as it collapses, its movable side may be used to exert energy or pull. Such a collapsible bellows is called a pneumatic. An early application of pneumatics was to relieve the excessive strain of playing on the manual-keyboards when these were connected with the valves by direct tracker- and lever-action. With a pneumatic in the interposed, the key simply opens the vent in the appropriate bellows and the necessary force is exerted by air-pressure. The same principle is now employed for the stop and coupler-action. To increase efficiency, the stops are arranged in series, one of small size starting one larger and so on, until one large enough to effect the result is put in operation. The almost inconceivable rapidity and certainty of the mechanism are due to the properties of air as a gas. The same principle is used in the action of automatic players of all sorts, though usually it is reversed, the pneumatic standing in a vacuum.

Another form of pneumatic action is the tubular, in which operating a key or stop-knob by means of valves exhausts or compresses the air at one end of a slender metal-tube, resulting in a corresponding action at the other end of the tube, wherever it is. This uses air as a means of connecting parts that are widely separated. The same result is now reached by means of electricity.

Pochette. A pocket-violin; see Kit. G.

Point. In notation, same as note or as dot. and also sometimes as staccato-mark; see Notation. Also, in thematic music, the entrance of a figure or subject after a pause. Also, in the bow of a violin and similar instruments, same as head; opposed to heel. G.

The modern dot, by which the time-value of a note is increased one-half, is a vestige of a system of points used in mensural music. One of these, the point of augmentation, had exactly the same significance, that is, it changed a note from duple to triple value (from imperfect to perfect). The three other points used had to do with similar or allied rectifications required under certain circumstances to keep the rhythm complete.

For organ-point and pedal-point, see Pedal-point.

Polacca, Polonaise. See Dances. G.

Polka and Polska. See Dances. G.

Polychord. That which has several or many strings (both adjective and noun), including instruments like the harp, most lutes, dulcimers, zithers, the harpsichord and piano, etc. The clavichord, based on the principle of the monochord, is practically a polychord with a keyboard.

The name was applied in 1799 by Hillmer of Berlin to a 10-stringed instrument, shaped like a double-bass and played either with a bow or by plucking. The fingerboard could be lengthened or shortened to facilitate varied tunings.

Polymorphous. In counterpoint, denoting a subject or theme that can be or is treated in several forms, as by augmentation, inversion, etc.

Polyphony. That type or method of composition in which two or more voice-parts are combined harmoniously, but without losing their melodic individuality and independence; counterpoint; opposed both to monophony or homophony and to harmony. A work or passage in polyphony is polyphonic or polyphonous. G.

The polyphonic period in music-history is usually taken to cover the time when a cappella music was the dominant style, namely, the 15-16th centuries. In a broader sense it extends to 1750.

Pommer. See Bombard and Shawm.

Ponticello. See Bridge. Also used for the break or transition between the upper and the lower vocal registers. G.

Port. A Gaelic term for an air or tune. G.

Portamento. An effect in performance with the voice or on certain instruments of free intonation (like the violin or the zither) in which two tones of different pitch are connected by a rapid and delicate glide or gradation covering the interval. G.

It is distinguished from the simple legato by the fact of its touching upon pitches intermediate between the limiting tones. Though often used excessively or with exaggerated emphasis, it is a valuable element of melodic expression. It may be executed either with or without a slight anticipation of the second tone.

Portative. That which can be carried from place to place (both adjective and noun); opposed to positive. Used specially of the small organs or regals that were common in the 16th century, but applicable to many small instruments in distinction from those of such size and weight that they are relatively fixed.

Portative organ, see Organ and Regal.

Posaune. See Trombone.

Position. In harmony, either (a) the disposition of the tones of a triad or chord with reference to which of them is in the lowest voice-part (usually the bass), the first or a-position having the root of the triad or chord in the lowest part, the second or b-position the second tone of the triad or chord, etc.; or (b) the disposition of the voice-parts with reference to each other, close position being with such intervals between any parts (except bass and tenor) that outer parts, if transposed an octave would not fall between the others and open or dispersed position being the reverse of this. Chord-positions are also called inversions. Also, in violin-playing (and the playing of other instruments of the same family), the location of the left-hand on the fingerboard; see Shift. Also, in piano- or organ-playing, the attitude or method of holding the hand, the arm or even of the upper part of the body with reference to executive efficiency. G.

In sight-singing, one who follows the movement of the notes of his part up or down without a precise sense of the tones or intervals indicated is often said to sing by position only.

Positive. That which is fixed or stationary (both adjective and noun); opposed to portative. Used specially of large or built-in organs in distinction from small and portable ones, but also sometimes of those which were semiportable. In French and German usage, specifically, the choir-organ or a similar main division of the instrument. See Organ. G.

Post-horn. An instrument of the bugle-class, used originally by the guard of a mail-coach as a signal and still somewhat employed by postmen or in coaching as a diversion. It has occasionally been introduced as an orchestral accessory. G.

Postlude. In church-music, an organ-piece after the benediction; a nachspiel; opposed to prelude or vorspiel (also to interlude). Sometimes called a concluding voluntary or sortie. G.

Pot-pourri. A loose chain of airs or scraps of various pieces strung together without much artistic skill or plan; a medley; cf. quodlibet. G.

Præambulum. See Prelude.

Praller, Pralltriller. Same as inverted mordent; see Embellishments. G.

Precentor. In English cathedrals and collegiate churches, an official deputed to have charge of the choir; the English equivalent of the German cantor. Hence the term cantoris, for the precentor's side of a divided choir (the left side, facing the altar). Also extended to any choir-leader or choirmaster. G.

In the older foundations the precentor ranked next to the dean and was often charged with duties of school-instruction. In recent foundations he may be only a minor canon. The term is not uncommon in various ecclesiastical connections on the Continent. One who assists him is sometimes called a succentor or subcantor.

Also sometimes extended to one who leads congregational singing.

Preface. In the Roman Catholic Mass and all analogous forms, the declaration following the Sursum corda and leading into the Sanctus. Its text usually varies with the season. G.

Prefect. In certain German choirs, as those of the old communal schools, like the Thomas-schule in Leipzig, one of the singers deputed to act as leader and as assistant to the cantor.

Prelude. In general, an instrumental movement of any kind designed or used as an introduction to something else. Specifically, the introductory number in the old sonata da camera or suite (usually in dance-form), the introductory movement usually prefixed to a fugue (often more or less of a fantasia), the instrumental introduction for an opera, oratorio, cantata or other choral work, or the organ-piece that introduces or begins a church-service. Sometimes applied to an instrumental piece that is wholly independent or detached, as the Préludes of Chopin. Among the older names also used are præambulum, intrada, sinfonia, etc. An opera-prelude is more commonly called an overture, but Wagner prefers the term vorspiel. A service-prelude may also be called a vorspiel, an introductory voluntary or simply a voluntary; it is opposed to postlude, nachspiel, etc. There is no customary form in which preludes are written, except that in some way they shall serve as a preparation for what is to follow. G.

Première. The first performance of an opera or similar extended work; it may be absolute, the first anywhere, or local, the first at a particular place. The former is sometimes called a world-première.

Preparation. In composition, especially of a strict sort, the approach to a discord and the tone by which this approach is made are both called its preparation; opposed to resolution (its later merging in a concord) and percussion (its sounding as a discord). G.

Discords were first employed as suspensions, the tone about to become dissonant appearing in a chord where it is consonant, then held over into a second chord where it is dissonant and finally dropping one degree into consonance again. The next step was to allow the discord to be approached from the degree above or below and to be resolved upward as well as downward. Then certain discords were allowed to be taken without preparation, that is, by a skip, with some relaxation as to the method of resolution. In free writing this latitude is extended to all discords, particularly in instrumental composition. Under certain circumstances the resolution may be delayed or obliterated in several ways.

Presa. See Notation. G.

Pressure. In organ-making, the tension of the compressed air or 'wind' in a wind-chest; it is usually stated in terms of inches (see below). Also, in singing and sometimes in using certain instruments, a median or swelling stress, a tone with such stress being a pressure-tone.

Air-pressure in an organ is determined by means of a wind-gauge or pressure-gauge, a tube twice-bent, with water in the U-shaped part. This is inserted in a hole in the wind-chest and the air-pressure drives the water up in the tube, the amount of displacement being taken in inches. Old organs were adjusted and tuned on a pressure of 3-4 inches. As much as 6, 8 or 10 is now not unusual.

Presto. An indication of very quick tempo; see Terms of Performance. Also a work or movement in such a tempo and usually in an excited or agitated style. The augmentative is prestissimo. G.

Prick. The old name for a written note; hence prick-song for written music as distinguished from that which is extemporized, and also for a counterpoint as distinguished from the cantus. G.

Prima Donna. The leading female singer in an opera, the leading male singer being the primo uomo (a term now obsolete).

Singing correctly at first sight is a prima vista.

Primary. First, chief or principal; as primary accent, one of the chief stresses in a rhythm, that which in notation is marked by a bar, primary triad, one of the chief triads in a key or tonality (that is, either the tonic, dominant or subdominant triad), primary section or period, one of the chief component divisions in a movement or piece, etc.

Prime. See First or Unison. Also the third of the Canonical Hours (6 A.M.).

Primo. In a duet, especially for the piano, the first or leading performer or the score or part which he uses; opposed to secondo.

Principal. See Primary and Organ-Stops. Also the name once applied to one of the larger trumpets. Also a leading performer in an opera or concert.

Printing and Engraving, Musical. Until about 1400 all drafts of notated music were made by hand, often with extreme care and beauty. But these were almost always made for special uses, not for circulation, so that many works existed in but a single copy and were unknown away from their place of origin. Hence, when, in the 15th century, the art of printing began to be undertaken, questions immediately arose as to its practical application to music. The successful working out of this problem proved the most important step in the popularization of the art. G. (Music-Printing, Engraving).

From about 1400 some music was printed from wooden blocks, engraved page by page. In service-books, after the words began to be printed from movable type (about 1450), the music was still thus added till about 1520. From 1476, however, experiments began in printing music from type, but with two impressions, one for the staves, one for the notes, the former in red, the latter in black; but these were concerned with plain-song only. Contrapuntal music was similarly printed in 1501 by Petrucci of Venice, in 1507 by Oeglin of Augsburg and in 1512 by Schöffer of Mayence. Not till 1525 was one-impression printing begun by Haultin and Attaignant, followed soon by a rapid growth of the industry at Venice and other centers of the new business of publishing. Before 1600 the making and sale of music-books had become notable in Italy, southern and western Germany, France, Belgium and England.

Two distinct processes were used, the one from movable type, the other from engraved copperplates. Music-topography presents special difficulty in that the various characters need to be located upon staves. By the device of casting the characters with small bits of staff attached to them in all desired ways and then fitting them together with other pieces of staff in a complex mosaic a satisfactory result was at length attained. But this process is only really adapted to certain kinds of music, especially those that are made into books. Detached pieces (what is now called sheet-music) are better made from engraved plates. The copperplate process (first brought into use by Verovio of Rome about 1585) was laborious and expensive, besides never being uniform in details. From about 1700 this began to be replaced by the use of soft-metal plates, the various characters being inserted by means of punches (making all characters uniform). Before 1800 this was further developed by the addition of lithography. During the 19th century both methods were carried to an extraordinary degree of perfection, so that the production of manifold cheap editions of music of every kind became possible. The music-printing establishments in cities like Leipzig, Paris, London and New York are not only extraordinary from the mechanical point of view, but highly significant in their relation to popular musical culture.

Prizes and Scholarships. A large number of special funds exist from which awards are made annually or otherwise to competitors in composition. In addition, certain governmental stipends are available for those who show special promise. Most of the principal conservatories offer prizes and medals in many different subjects. No comprehensive list of these various incentives and helps is possible, but some notes may be made regarding a few that are most famous.

The oldest and best-known of all is the Grand Prix de Rome, instituted under Napoleon in 1803, which is given annually by the French government through the Académie des Beaux-Arts (as a division of the Institut de France). The holder is technically entitled Lauriat d'Institut and is expected to study for three years under the Académie de France in Rome. The usual competing work is a dramatic cantata. There is both a first and a second prize; if in any year the first is not awarded two firsts may be given the next year. The full list of winners from the beginning is given in Grove, ii. 215. Those since 1900 include these:

1900 Schmitt	1909 Mazellier
'01 Caplet	'10 Gallon
'02 Kunc	'11 Paray
'03 Laparra	'13 Lili Boulanger, Delvincourt
'04 Pech	'14 Dupré
'05 Gallois	'19 Delmas, Ibert
'06 Dumas	'20 Marguerite Canal
'07 LeBoucher	'21 De la Presle
'08 Gailhard

The name Prix de Rome belongs also to a somewhat similar honor conferred through the conservatories of Brussels and Liège in Belgium. Among the holders are the following:

1841 Soubre	1879 Tinel
'45 A. Samuel	'81 S. Dupuis
'47 Gevaert	'85 L. Dubois
'49 Stadtfeldt	'89 Gilson
'51 Lassen	'97 J. Jongen
'57 P. Benoit	1903 A. Dupuis
'59 T. Radoux	'07 C. Radoux
'65 Huberti	'11 L. Samuel
'73 F. Servais	'13 L. Jongen

Another governmental stipend is the Ancker Scholarship annually awarded in Denmark, sometimes to young aspirants, sometimes to mature workers. Among the holders have been

1861 J. Malling	1888 A. Enna
'62 J. G. Matthison-Hansen	'89 C. Nielsen
'74 Krygell	'90 Danning
'79 Lange-Müller	'92 V. Rosenborg
'81 L. Rosenfeld	'93 Toft
'82 V. Bendix	'96 Carlsen
Kalshauge	'98 Hoeborg
'87 R. Henriques	1907 L. Nielsen
	'12 Gram

The leading English honor is the Mendelssohn Scholarship, funds for which began to be collected soon after the composer's death (originally with the idea of forming a joint fund in London and Leipzig). The holders have included

1856 A. Sullivan	1884 Marie Wurm
'65 C. S. Heap	'91 S. P. Waddington
'71 W. Shakespeare	'95 C. Wilson
'75 F. Corder	'99 P. H. Miles
'79 Maude V. White	1904 G. Dyson
'81 E. d'Albert

Among the coveted French prizes is that of the City of Paris (since 1877), given for a symphonic work with chorus or an opera, among the winners being Th. Dubois and Godard, 1878, the Hillemechers, 1884, d'Indy, 1887, L. Lambert, 1896, etc.; the Prix Cressent, awarded triennially for an opéra comique, first winner, Chaumet, 1875; and the Prix Chartier (since 1861), given for work in chamber-music.

From the long list of prizes or stipends offered in Germany it is enough to mention those bearing the names of Mozart (Frankfort, since 1838), among the winners being J. J. Bott, K. J. Bischoff, Max Bruch, K. J. Brambach, L. Wolf, A. Krug, L. Thuille, G. Trautmann, O. Urbach, A. Weidig, etc.; of Meyerbeer (Berlin, since 1867), among the winners being W. Claussen, 1867, J. Butts, 1871, O. Dorn, 1874, A. Krug, 1877, E. Humperdinck, 1881, B. Köhler, 1897, F. Nowowiejski, 1902, '04, F. Schirmer, 1911, W. Mehrl, 1913, etc.; and of Mendelssohn (Leipzig, since 1861).

In Austria the semiannual prize for composition offered by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde is specially important.

Procession. In church-music, an office or an exercise within or in connection with an office which is partly or wholly recited or sung while the officiant, the choir and perhaps the congregation progress through or around the edifice.

A manual containing vocal settings of litanies, hymns, antiphons, etc., to be sung during processions is a processional. An organ-piece for similar use is a procession or processional.

In some American churches the clergy and choir enter before service and retire after it during the singing of a hymn, the former exercise being called the processional, the latter the recessional.

Professor of Music. In a general and loose usage, one who pursues music as a profession or means of livelihood, or one who is technically expert in it; a professional musician; opposed to amateur and dilettante. In somewhat better usage, one who teaches music as a vocation; a music-teacher. More strictly, one appointed to teach music in a college, university or other institution of higher education, usually with somewhat permanent status as a member of the faculty. In Germany, a title conferred by governmental authority in recognition of eminent accomplishments in composition, leadership or interpretation; it is superior to the title of Musikdirector, but entirely distinct from that of Doctor, which is conferred by universities (regularly in the form of Ph.D., not Mus.D.). See Director and Degrees. G.

In Great Britain the academic title has been used at Oxford from 1626, at Cambridge from 1684, at Dublin from 1764, at Edinburgh from 1839 (professorship founded in 1807), at Durham from 1897 and at London, Manchester and Birmingham since 1900. The so-called Gresham Professorship (lectureship) in London dates back to 1596.

In Germany the title of music-director has been used since late in the 18th century and is now common in universities, but that of professor has been rare until recently. It is found at Berlin from 1830, at Munich from 1865, at Erlangen from about 1870, after 1880 at Heidelberg, Rostock, Leipzig, Göttingen and Kiel, after 1890 at Bonn and Tübingen, and after 1900 at Münster, Jena, Halle and Breslau. In 1861 it began to be used at Vienna, in 1875 at Strasburg, in 1874 at Upsala, in 1885 at Prague, in 1897 at Helsingfors and in 1908 at Zurich.

In the United States the title has been used somewhat indiscriminately in connection with the development of musical instruction in colleges as well as universities. Its earliest official appearance seems to have been at Oberlin College in 1841, but more strikingly at Harvard University in 1862. Before 1880 it had been applied in Vassar, Wellesley and Smith Colleges (all institutions for women). Since 1880 its use has become widespread, including Yale, Columbia and many state universities. As a rule, the functions of a professor correspond largely to those of a director in Germany.

Program, Programme. A written or printed list of the pieces or selections that make up a given concert or similar entertainment, or the music itself. The items are known as numbers, whether actually numbered or not. G.

It is usual to indicate the title and composer of each number, often with additional data as to the movements in extended works, the date of composition, the birth- and death-dates of the composer and details as to structure or history. Where the last are carried out somewhat fully the program is called analytical. In the case of songs the entire text is often given. See Analytical Program.

The text of an opera, oratorio or cantata is usually known as a libretto or program-book.

Program- or Programme-Music. A term that was first used in connection with instrumental works appearing about the middle of the 19th century (especially by Berlioz and Liszt), in which a suggestive title, motto or foreword was used to direct the hearer's imagination in listening. It was then placed in opposition to pure or absolute music, in which no such direction was given or would be appropriate. In later usage, the term has been applied also to all imitative, delineative and descriptive effects where any object of thought or feeling external to the tones themselves is introduced to give or add value to the purely tonal impression. G.

It is clear that all vocal music, where the relation between text and music is at all organic, is in a sense program-music. Indeed, the same is in a measure true where any title is given, since even the naming of a form like sonata, fugue or rhapsody creates a mental preconception. But these are seldom so considered.

The application of the term is closer, perhaps, to imitative effects—those in which sounds are represented (bird-song, hoof-beats, the whistle and sigh of the wind, falling water, etc.) or visible motions (ascents and descents, coming and going, speed or slowness, etc.). It is closer yet to effects of mingled description and suggestion—those in which tonal contrasts and gradations are used to bring out antitheses between light and darkness, warmth and chill, rest and action, peace and turmoil, joy and sorrow, even life and death.

The general outcome of the extensive debates to which program-music has given rise is that it is not possible absolutely to rule out even definite material allusions, but that artistic interest cannot be made to depend on these or even upon much explicit emphasis on suggestion. The highest musical values inhere in the tone-fabric itself and in whatever symbolism it may carry to the individual hearer's mind and emotion. The appeal should be to powers of appreciation as found in the cultivated intelligence that finds mere imitation and mechanical suggestion crude and banal.

Progression. In composition, the advance or motion from one tone or one chord to another tone or chord. It is melodic if only the succession of tones in single voice-parts is considered, but harmonic if the succession of chords is considered. The former is usually called motion or voice-leading; the latter is often called chord-succession. See Motion. G.

Chord-progression is practically determined by combining or balancing the natural relationships between chords as such with the melodic tendencies of the principal melody, if there is one, or of the other voice-parts. Two chords are related if they have one or more tones in common, and one such chord may usually progress into the other. The several inversions of a triad have certain aptitudes within themselves that tend to fix how they shall be used. All dissonant chords have tendencies derived from the tendency of the dissonant tone in them. Various considerations derived from the part-motion involved may make one progression more feasible than another. The progressions natural to one style of writing or some particular form may not be as suitable for another style or form. Hence it follows that a large part of practical discipline in harmony consists in mastering the art of choosing and handling progressions with propriety and effectiveness.

Prolation. In mensural music, the relation in time-value between a semibreve and a minim, being major if the semibreve was considered as equal to three minims, but minor if it was equal to two. See Notation and note under Perfect. G.

Promenade Concert. An entertainment at which those present promenade or dance while music is provided, instead of sitting as at an ordinary concert. G.

Proportion. Same as ratio, as applied to the acoustical definition of intervals. G.

In mensural music, proportion was the general term used when diverse combinations of the time-values represented by modus, tempus and prolatio were compared or actually combined in composition. At least eight varieties were possible and even more with certain extensions of the system. Practically all of these are covered by the modern system in a simpler way.

Proposta. The Italian term for subject or dux in a fugue or canon; opposed to riposta. G.

Prose. See Sequence.

Prospect. In organ-making, the visible front or façade of the instrument, including the case and such of the pipes as are displayed.

Psallette. See Maltreise.

Psalm. In general, a sacred song or hymn (etymologically one sung to an instrumental accompaniment). Specifically, one of the 150 poems that constitute the book of Psalms in the Old Testament (usually known in some translated form) or any musical setting of it. The total book or collection of poems, whether with or without music, is known as the Psalter, and the general term for the use of the Psalter in public worship with the aid of music is psalmody. G.

The standard Latin translation used in the Roman Catholic Church is, of course, that known as the Vulgate. The English translation still used in the Anglican Church is that of the so-called Great (or Cranmer's) Bible of 1539. Other English translations are those called Authorized (1611) and Revised (1885). In English, also, there are numerous translations or paraphrases in metrical form, the earliest now in use dating from about 1547. [The numbering of the Psalms is not exactly the same in the Vulgate as in the English versions.]

Christian usage very early adopted the Psalms as a stated part of common worship, regarding them as an ordained form of praise, to be said or sung in order or serially. In the Breviary offices of the Roman Catholic Church the Psalms are thus repeated every week and in the Morning and Evening Prayer of the Anglican Church every month. Similar serial usages have at times obtained in many other Protestant communions.

Being constantly used, the Psalms have been specially treated under each successive style of composition. In the Gregorian system provision is made for singing them in responsory, antiphonal or direct fashion. The melodies for these differ, but in each case the successive verses of the Psalm are sung to the same melody. The established forms are called Psalm-tones or simply tones, of which there is one for each mode, each with variations in ending and in adaptation to other texts than the Psalms. In the Anglican system either these tones are used or settings to Anglican chants chosen at will.

Under the polyphonic system the Psalms were frequently used individually for motet-texts and occasionally a composer undertook the task of setting the entire series. Various other Biblical texts of similar general form were likewise treated, notably the poems in Ex. xv, Deut. xxxii, I Sam. ii, Lam. i-v, Hab. iii, Luke i. 46-55, 68-79, ii. 29-32, all of which are Psalms outside of the Psalter. The same practice was repeated in a different way when the harmonic style replaced or mingled with the polyphonic.

With the rise of Protestantism psalmody was diligently maintained in many branches of the movement, especially in the Churches technically known as Reformed, primarily in Switzerland, France, western Germany, the Low Countries, Great Britain and America (after 1620). But to meet the new craving for forms suited for popular or congregational singing versified or metrical versions began to be made in France (about 1535) and England (about 1545), adapted to be sung to melodies of a folk-song type, harmonized in 3-4 parts, which soon came to be known as psalm-tunes, hymn-tunes or chorales. Of the many metrical versions in English the most influential were that of Sternhold and Hopkins (English form, 1562, Scottish form, 1564), the Scottish (1650), that of Tate and Brady (1696) and that of Watts (1719). Notable musical editions were those of Day (1563), Este (1592), Ravenscroft (1621), Playford, (1671), etc. All such books are called Psalters or psalm-books. See Hymn.

In more modern times the treatment of Psalms has been frequent in motet- or anthem-form and as cantatas.

Psalm-Melodicon. A wood-wind instrument with 8 finger-holes and 25 keys and a compass of four octaves. It was so made that 4-6 parts could be played upon it simultaneously, so as to accompany psalm- or hymn-singing. It was invented in 1828 by Weinrich of Heiligenstadt and improved in 1832 by L. Schmidt, who called it Apollo-Lyra.

Psaltery, Psalterion. A name applied to several medieval instruments, mostly of the zither-class, but sometimes probably dulcimers, played either by twanging or by striking. G.

The term is used in the English versions of the Bible as a translation of nebel, which was probably a lute. See Nebel.

Psychology, Musical. That branch of psychology that concerns itself with the mental processes involved in the apprehension, coördination and application of musical phenomena in appreciation, composition and performance.

Beginning at first in connection with investigations in acoustics and aesthetics, this special science has of late been greatly expanded, especially by experimental psycho-physicists, in the direction of estimating inherent musical ability, the precise analysis of mental elements in the acts of performance, improved methods of technical instruction, etc.

Pulsatile. See under Percussion.

Pulse. See Beat.

Punctus. Same as note or dot; see Notation.

The medieval phrase punctus contra punctum, note against note, is the source of the term counterpoint.

Pure Music. See Absolute Music.

Purfling. In lute- and viol-making, the inlaid border of wood or bone along the edges of the belly and back, designed both for ornament and to prevent chipping and cracking. G.

Pycnon. In ancient music, one of the short intervals in the chromatic or enharmonic genus. Occasionally applied to the modern semitone.

Pyrophone. An instrument, invented by the physicist Kastner in 1875, in which tones are produced by the vibrations set up by gas-jets in graduated tubes, the jets being controlled by means of a keyboard. The compass, as at first made, was 3 octaves.

Pythagorean Tuning. See Tuning.

Qanun. See Kanoon.

Quadrate. In notation, same as breve or as natural (the latter being derived from B quadratum); see Notation.

Quadricinium, Quatricinium. A composition for four parts; a quartet (usually contrapuntal).

Quadrille. See Dances. G.

Quadrivium Academicum. In early universities, the group of studies or disciplines constituting the higher arts, including arithmetic, geometry, music and astronomy, as distinct from the trivium or lower arts, including grammar, dialectic and rhetoric. The tendency to regard music as a branch of mathematics persisted till the 18th century.

Quadruple Counterpoint or Fugue. See Counterpoint and Fugue.

Quadruple Rhythm or Time. See Rhythm and Time.

Quadruplet, Quartole. A 4-note group occupying the time of 3 or 6; see Note-Groups.

Quality. As a characteristic of tones, see Acoustics. Same as timbre or tone-color.

Quantity. Same as duration; see Acoustics and Meter.

Quart. The interval of the fourth or a tone at that interval.

As a prefix (in German), denoting an instrument pitched a fourth higher (as quartflöte, quartgeige), or a fourth lower (as quartfagott, quartposaune), than the usual form.

Quarter-note. Same as crotchet; see Notation.

Quartet, Quatuor. A group of four performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quintet, etc. G.

Since four-part writing offers the most compact medium for harmonic expression, quartets of either voices or instruments have always been numerous. The commonest vocal form is for soprano, alto, tenor and bass, for two tenors and two basses (male or men's quartet) or for two sopranos and two altos (female or women's quartet), but in the second form the first tenor is often replaced by an alto (either male or female). The majority of choral works or movements are written in quartet-distribution. In many choral works and also operas the principal soloists constitute a quartet and are used as such.

The quartet is the chief type of chamber-ensemble, especially the string-quartet, which normally consists of two violins, viola and 'cello, but occasionally with two violas. The piano-quartet usually consists of piano, violin, viola and 'cello, but sometimes with two violins and no viola. Quartets are frequent in which one violin is replaced by a flute or an oboe. Wind-quartets may be made up in various ways, as for wood-wind (some combination of flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, etc.), for brass-wind (some combination of horn, trumpet, trombone, etc.) or for wood-wind and horns. In each prominent family of instruments a quartet may be formed, so as to make, for example, a flute-, oboe-, clarinet-, horn-, trumpet-, trombone-quartet, etc.

The term was once used collectively for the whole body of strings in the orchestra, especially when it was still customary to use but one part for both 'cellos and double-basses. It also occurs as the equivalent for a chest or set of violis.

The members of a string-quartet that regularly play together are sometimes called a quartet-party. A church-choir composed of four soloists only is a quartet-choir. A work in eight parts or a combination of eight performers, vocal or instrumental, may be called a double quartet instead of an octet if the parts are paired or if the two sets of four are used in contrast.

The string-quartet is held to be one of the finest types of modern composition. It did not begin to be fully developed until late in the 18th century (especially by Mozart). In the best examples such quartets present an almost equal distribution of thematic interest between all the parts. In form, quartets are usually laid out on the sonata-plan; see Sonata and Symphony.

Quartole. See Quadruplet.

Quaver. See Notation. G.

Quickstep. See Dances (under March). G.

Quint. The interval of the fifth or a tone at that interval. Also a viol with five strings (either a tenor or a high treble). Occasionally also the upper string on the lute or the violin; cf. quart. G.

Quinta Falsa. See under Tritone. G.

Quinterne. An intermediate form of instrument between the lute and the guitar, having a body somewhat like the latter and 3-5 pairs of strings, sounded by plucking with the fingers.

The name is a corruption from one of the early terms whence gittern and guitar come.

Quintet, Quintuor. A group of five performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quartet, etc. G.

Vocal quintets are usually for two sopranos, alto, tenor and bass or for soprano, alto, tenor, baritone and bass. String-quintets are mostly for two violins, two violas and 'cello, but sometimes for two violins, viola, 'cello and double-bass. Piano-quintets are almost always for piano and the usual string-quartet. A great variety of other combinations have been used. For the usual form of composition, see Sonata and Symphony.

Quinton. The high treble viol, so named because having 5 strings.

Quintuple Rhythm or Time. See Rhythm and Time. G.

Quintuplet, Quintole. A 5-note group occupying the time of 4 or 6; see Note-Groups.

Quintus. In the cappella music of the 16th century, a fifth part added to the usual four, having no fixed usage as to the species of voice and sometimes in a way wandering from one kind to another (whence the name quintus vagans). G.

Quire, Quirister. Obsolete spellings for choir and chorister.

Quodlibet. A facetious combination of incongruous melodies into a kind of polyphonic arrangement or a stringing of such melodies in succession, as in a pot-pourri, but without connecting passages; also called fricassée. G.

R

R. As an abbreviation, r. stands for right, R for response (in liturgical service-books); also, in Tonic Sol-fa notation, r stands for ray (re).

Racket, Ranket. An old instrument sounded by a double reed, resembling the bombard, but with a cylindrical body in which is cut a small cylindrical bore much doubled upon itself, so as to be over 3 feet long, with about 8 fingerholes. The reeds were enclosed in a pirouette. Although its total size was small (less than a foot long and 2-4 in. in diameter) the long bore gave low tones, like those of the later bassoon, but weak in intensity. It was made in several sizes so as to form a family. Also called cervelas and wurst-fagott. G.

Radiating Keyboard. See under Pedal.

Rag-time. A popular term for dance-music in which 'snaps' are frequent or which makes much more of rough accent and rapid movement than of melody and harmony. Often used indiscriminately of all sorts of crude, noisy music. G.

Rank. In organ-making, a row or set of pipes, especially one of the several rows that are combined in mixtures; see Organ-Stops.

Rant. Same as reel or as country-dance; see Dances.

Ranz des Vaches. A melody or signal played on the alpenhorn by Swiss herdsmen or occasionally sung. Its form varies in the different cantons, the most famous being that of Appenzell. Also called kuhreigen. G.

Rastral, Rastrum. A five-pointed pen for ruling staves; a music-pen.

Rataplan, Rat-a-tat, Rat-tat-too. Imitative terms for drum-sounds. G.

Ravanastron. A very ancient Hindu viol with usually but one string.

Re, Ray. See Solmization. G.

Real Fugue. See Fugue.

Rebec, Rebeck. A small viol with a pear-shaped body, tapering to a short neck, and 3 gut-strings. The body was solid except toward the lower end, where it was hollowed and fitted with a belly. G.

The form is of Oriental origin, introduced into Europe by way of Spain at least as early as the 8th century. It was the parent of various medieval forms. The name appears in many guises, such as rebab, ribeba, ribeça, ribble, etc.

Recall. The demand by an audience for the reappearance of a performer or the repetition of a number, effected through some form of applause; see Encore. Also one of the bugle-signals used in military manoeuvres.

Recessional. See under Procession.

Recapitulation. Same as reprise.

Recital. An entertainment or exposition somewhat less elaborate than a concert, usually by a single performer or devoted to works by a single composer or in a single form. The performer is often called the recitalist. G.

Recitation, Reciting-tone or note. In both Gregorian and Anglican chants, one of the two tones on which several or many syllables are sung in monotone. In Gregorian forms it is the same in both halves of the chant and is the dominant of the mode used. In Anglican forms it may be any tone and not the same in the two halves. G.

Recitative. Vocal declamation with the singing-voice, but without the fixed rhythm or the balanced phrases of formal song, usually without much accompaniment. G.

Recitative first appears about 1600 as the original type for dramatic utterance by an actor in the opera or the oratorio. In its forms then, as well as much later, it was mostly supported by occasional chords or simple harmonies on a basso continuo. It thus became a customary element in both opera and oratorio, especially as a kind of prelude to arias. To it was allotted the dialogue or monologue needed to advance the story, while to the aria was given the more ample lyric expression of emotion. If but lightly accompanied, it was called secco, but if with a fuller accompaniment, stromentato. In the latter case it tended to pass over into an intermediate form known as the arioso or into the aria parlante. In the modern opera the sharp distinction between recitative and aria is usually avoided, but passages in recitative are not infrequent.

The original recitative was evolved during attempts to recover the lost art of dramatic declamation as practiced in ancient Greece. Much of the free declamation in Gregorian music doubtless embodies features derived from Greek song. Rude recitative is also found in ethnic music in various parts of the world.

Recorder. An important form of direct flute in widespread use until the 18th century. It was made in at least six sizes, the largest over 8 feet long, the smallest about 1 foot. In the large sizes there was an attached metal crook for blowing. The number of finger-holes was normally 8. The tone was mellow and capable of much variety. Often called flûte à bec or flûte douce.

Recte et retro. Same as cancrizans. G.

Redowa. See Dances. G.

Redundant. Same as augmented.

Reed. A thin, elastic strip or tongue of cane, wood or metal, fixed at one end and capable of being thrown into vibration at the other end by a stream of air, so as to produce tone. This device is characteristic of numerous musical instruments, called reed-instruments or simply reeds. The principle involved also appears in some forms of tone-production where there is no reed apparent in the above sense. G.

The typical reed is single and may be either free or beating (or striking). In either case the reed is adjusted to a slot-like aperture through which the air-stream passes, the balance between the current and the elasticity of the reed causing it to vibrate. A free reed is smaller than the aperture and swings freely in it, while a beating reed is larger and strikes against the edges. In a double reed two reeds are opposed and each is in a sense beating with reference to the other, the aperture between them. Double reeds are found in shawms, bombards, oboes, bassoons, etc.; almost all other reed-instruments have single reeds. Free reeds are not found in any important solo-instruments, but their application is notable in all varieties of reed-organ and in accordions and concertinas. They have but rarely been applied in the pipe-organ.

The pitch of the tones produced from a reed may be determined by the mass and vibrating-length of the reed itself or by the length of an air-column in a tube with which the reed is connected, or even by a combination of both processes. In instruments of the reed-organ class pitch is determined by the reed, so that there must be a separate reed for every pitch required. In the pipe-organ most reed-pipes use both processes of pitch-determination and there is a separate pipe for each tone (see under Pipe). But in almost all other reed-instruments the pitch is fixed by manipulating the vibrating-length of the air-column, so that a single mouthpiece, with either a single or a double reed, suffices for all tones. In these latter, also, the range of pitch may be greatly widened by increasing the pressure in blowing, which may be managed so as to cause the air-column to vibrate in the upper octave or even at the twelfth.

For instruments blown by the breath reeds are made almost always of cane or some similar substance. In both kinds of organ the usual material is brass.

In instruments like the oboe and bassoon the term reed is applied to the entire setting of the reeds. So in both kinds of organ. In the orchestra the reed-instruments collectively are called the reeds, as also all the reed-stops in the pipe-organ.

It should be noted that brass-instruments generally are sounded by a reed-like action of the player's lips within the mouthpiece. Still more obviously the vibration of the vocal cords in the larynx is essentially that of a double reed which is composed of soft and adjustable tissue. In explaining the sound-production of all instruments of the whistle-kind, including all flutes and most pipes in the pipe-organ, it is also argued that the initial vibration is that of a flat jet of compressed air, which is sometimes called an air-reed. The reed-principle, then, is utilized in all music produced by the voice or by instruments, except those with strings and those sounded by percussion.

Reed-Organ. A keyboard-instrument, the tone of which is produced by means of a graduated set of small free reeds through which air can be caused to pass. Two main classes are distinguished, the harmonium and its relatives, in which the reeds are sounded by an outward current from a compression-bellows, and the so-called American organ, in which they are sounded by an inward current induced by an exhaust-bellows. G (Harmonium, American Organ).

The principle of all instruments of this class is supposed to have been derived from the Chinese cheng. Such an instrument was seen in Russia by the organist Volger about 1790. Soon after he became eager to introduce free-reed stops into organs. These never became common. But the minute brass reeds of the cheng became the model in 1810 for the orgue expressif of Grenié, followed by a host of forms under various names and leading to the harmonium of Debain (1840), which is the parent of later varieties of that class. Meanwhile the differences of detail that distinguish the American organ had been at least forecasted (about 1835) by an employee of Alexandre in Paris who removed to America. There several forms were made, at first under the name melodeon (corrupted into melodium), but finally brought to decided efficiency (about 1860) by Mason & Hamlin of Boston under the name cabinet-organ. The differences between the European and American types lay in many details besides the form of blowing. The former excelled in delicacy of quality and in capacity for fine gradations of intensity, but the latter had far more sonority and value for use in small halls or churches.

In both cases the blowing is effected by two diagonal bellows operated by foot-treadles or pedals, combined with a reservoir-bellows (in the harmonium) or an exhaust-chamber (in the American organ). The reeds or vibrators (consisting of the reed proper and the brass-frame to which it is fastened) are placed over grooves or channels into which the air can be directed by depressing the keys. Ordinarily there are several sets of reeds, with varying qualities, which are controlled by means of stop-knobs, as in the pipe-organ. Several special devices include the expression (connecting the air-pressure directly with the feeders), the percussion (starting the speech of the reeds by little hammers), the several forms of swell (in America controlled by a knee-lever), the tremulant (a rotary fan affecting the air-current), the prolongement (continuing tones after keys are released), etc. But more important than any of these was the gradual discovery of how to secure contrasted qualities of tone by modifying the form of the reeds or by adjusting resonators to them. Thus in the same instrument there might be many distinct stops, as in the pipe-organ. These might be associated with two manual keyboards and a pedal keyboard besides. Such large instruments naturally required to be blown by other means than the player's feet.

A striking extension of the reed-organ principle was made in the vocon of J. B. Hamilton of London (first patent in 1872), using uncommonly large reeds and adding ingenious resonators.

Many composers have written music for the harmonium either alone or in combination with other instruments.

Reel. See Dances. G.

Refrain. A line, couplet or quatrain recurring again and again in a lyric poem, usually at the end of stanzas, or its musical setting; a burden or (in popular usage) a chorus. G.

Regal. A small form of pipe-organ with one or two ranks of reed-pipes and a short keyboard, especially when made so as to be carried on the player's arm or placed on a table, his left hand operating the bellows and his right the keys. It was sometimes made to fold up in covers like those of a book; whence the name Bible regal. It was single if there was but one set of pipes and double if there were two. In any case, however, often called a pair of regals. G.

This is the smallest variety of the class of organs called portatives. It was much used in the 16-17th centuries as a form of keyboard-instrument for private or personal use, helping to advance the recognition of instrumental styles in general and also of the modern conception of harmony.

The term has also been applied to a form of xylophone.

Register. In a general sense, same as compass or range. Specifically, (a) a series of tones in either the voice or an instrument that are produced in the same way and have a similar quality, and (b) in the organ, same as stop. G.

The vocal registers are the several kinds of tone produced instinctively or deliberately by varying the action of the larynx or the adjustment of the resonance-cavities, usually with some special application of the breath-stream. Their name comes from the fact that particular kinds of tone are most easily used with particular ranges of pitch and have even been regarded as normally belonging to them. Hence the terms high, middle and low registers. But the contrasts of quality can be effected at almost all pitches of the given voice. Hence the terms chest-register and head-register for tones that evoke sympathetic resonance in chest and head respectively. The terms thick, middle and thin are also somewhat used, referring either to the size and sonority of the tones or to the conjectured condition of the vocal cords in phonation.

Register-differences are usually conspicuous in the untrained voice, often with one or more marked breaks where one quality is exchanged for another. They are more striking in the adult male voice, but they are at least latent in all voices. The so-called falssetto, which is the thinnest and most flute-like quality, is often quite unused, though in some cases it offers the means for valuable training for the whole voice. The object of discipline is to bring all the registers under easy control, to blend and unify them and to secure perfect enunciation in all.

Analogous to the above are certain instrumental registers, such as the chalmereau register on the clarinet (the lowest octave) or the flageolet or flautato tones on the violin and its relatives.

Registration. In organ-playing, the act, process or result of selecting and combining stops and all other devices for securing tonal effects, so as to give due expression to a given piece. The name comes from register in the sense of stop. G.

Organ-playing is far more intricate than any other form of instrumental performance because the organ, if it be of fair size, offers so many possibilities of treatment. In modern usage it is customary to mark the intended procedure to some extent, but this cannot take account of the great differences between particular instruments. Older music contains very little of such indication.

Registration properly extends to the choice of manuals, the employment of couplers, the application of the swell, etc.

Regulate. Specifically, in keyboard-instruments, to adjust all parts of the action so that it shall be prompt, sensitive and noiseless. For this purpose at certain points regulating-screws are provided.

In the pipe-organ such screws are usually installed to determine the dip of the keys in the manuals. In the piano this regulation is not so important after it has once been made, but in the piano-action lost motion and the like often require regulating at points nearer the hammers.

Rehearsal. The process or act of preparing concerted music for performance by means of actual trial under a leader or conductor, usually with repetitions, corrections and verbal directions, as for an operatic representation, a concert, a church-service, etc. The object is not simply to secure accuracy in details, but to blend all parts into the solidity and unity that belong to a true ensemble. As applied to a chorus or choir, often called drill. G.

A full rehearsal is one at which all the performers are present; sometimes called a dress rehearsal. A public rehearsal is a preliminary performance of a concert, either for a limited audience or open to the public like the concert itself.

Relation, Relationship. In harmony, either the general fact that between tones, chords and keys (tonalities) there exist degrees of kinship or inherent connection, by which their association may be governed, or the particular form of this that is exemplified in any given case. Tone-relation is the foundation of chord-relation and key-relation, and its basis is in acoustical facts and principles that may be objectively examined. But the experience of tone-relation is a part of the mental apprehension of tonal effects and may be entirely disconnected with a knowledge of its physical character. The intricate and elaborate fabric of modern musical art is built up on the basis of this experience in some of its manifold ramifications. In general, relations are described as close or remote. G.

Tone-relation as between any two tones depends primarily upon the amount of identity between their respective series of partial-tones. Its closeness is expressed through the simplicity of the ratio between their vibration-numbers (see under Acoustics). It may depend, further, in some cases upon a common relation to a third tone and, perhaps, to recondite phenomena of combinational-tones.

Modern music dates from the time when a perception of tone-relation began to assume control in the theory of chords, scales and keys. This process became apparent in the 16th century, but did not reach a secure position until the 18th. Upon it rests the central place now given to the major scale and the major triad in the entire system of tone-arrangements. To the statement of the matter it may be that considerable additions should be made in accordance with the theory of under-scales and under-triads as well as over-scales and over-triads (as advocated especially by Riemann and his school). These latter seem to explain some facts not well covered by the simpler theory. See Phone, Scale and Triad.

The sequences of melody are largely determined by the unity or contrast of tone-relations, those of harmony by the unity or contrast of chord-relations and those of modulation by the unity or contrast of key-relations.

Related, Relative. In harmony, denoting a tone, chord or key (tonality) that has a marked relation or kinship with another tone, chord or key. Either member of such a pair is called a relative (noun) of the other. G.

The relative minor of any major scale or key is one based upon a tone two degrees below its key-note; the relative major of any minor scale or key is one based upon a tone two degrees above its key-note. In modulation, the most closely related keys are those given under Modulation. For relative pitch, see Acoustics and Pitch.

Relish. See Embellishments.

Remote. In harmony, denoting a chord or key that has slight relation with a given chord or key; opposed to close; see Relation. G.

Rendering. Same as performance. Sometimes called rendition (more or less objectionable).

Repeat. In notation, a sign that a passage or section is to be performed again. Also the passage or section thus indicated; also called replica and reprise. See Notation. G.

For repeating-action, see Repetition.

Repercussion. In Gregorian music, same as dominant (the tone most often repeated). Also, in fugue-writing, the reëntrance of the subject and answer after an episode or after the development-section. Also any immediate repetition of a tone or chord.

Repetition. In piano-making, a form of hammer-action that permits the renewal of the stroke without a complete release of the key and without the fall of the damper; also called repeating-action. It was first perfected by the Érards about 1820. G.

Repetitor. A trainer or coach, especially for an opera-chorus.

Replicate. A tone one or more octaves above or below a given tone; a repetition at a higher or lower octave.

Reply. Same as answer or comes.

Reports. A term sometimes used to describe harmony in which the part-writing is somewhat free or imitative rather than plain; as a psalm-tune in reports. G.

Reprise. In general, the repetition of a passage or the revival of a work that has been forgotten. Specifically, in a fugue or sonata, the final section, in which the subject or theme is taken up for statement in the original key; the recapitulation. G.

Requiem. The Mass for the Dead or Requiem Mass; see Mass. G.

Its name comes from the opening antiphon, 'Requiem æternam dona eis, Domine.' Its principal divisions are Requiem and Kyrie, the sequence Dies Iræ (18 stanzas) and Requiem, Domine Jesu Christe, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Lux Æterna.

Resolution. In harmony, the act or process of passing from a dissonance to a consonance, or the consonance itself that follows a dissonance; applied either to a particular voice-part in which the dissonance occurs or to the chord-succession as a whole. In either case the dissonance is said to resolve in the following consonance. Cf. preparation and percussion. G.

Resonance, Resonation. See under Acoustics and Vocalization.

Resonance-box, in instruments, same as body, at least when the substance of the body and the air contained within it are important factors in determining the sonority and character of the tone. The term is used technically of many forms that are not obviously box-like. In the voice there are several resonance-cavities, such as the pharynx, the mouth and the nose, the shape or adjustment of which can be altered at will in connection with phonation and articulation; in addition, the cavity of the chest, with its residual air, exercises a large influence upon the tone.

Resonator. Same as resonance-box or resonance-cavity.

In acoustical investigation, a special form of hollow metallic sphere, made in different sizes and carefully adjusted to respond to particular pitches. It is used in the analysis of compound tones to determine their constituents.

Respond, Response, Responsory. In church-music, a sentence, verse or Psalm either regularly coupled with a preceding sentence or verse or interjected during or after the reading of a lection. All such formulæ are more or less taken for musical settings. G.

In the couplet-forms the first member is the verse or versicle and the second the respond; often marked V and R respectively.

Rest. See Notation. G.

Resultant Tone. See Combination-Tone. G.

Retardation. See Anticipation and Suspension. G.

Retrograde. See under Imitation.

Reveille. The military signal at daybreak.

Reverie, Revery. An instrumental work of a dreamy or contemplative character.

Reversion. See Imitation.

Reversed motion, same as contrary motion; see Motion.

Rhapsody, Rhapsodie, Rapsodie. A term introduced by Liszt for an instrumental fantasia based upon national melodies. It has not always been used exactly in this sense. G.

In ancient Greek usage a rhapsody was a poem or ballad sung by a rhapsode; out of a chain of these an epic like the Iliad was composed. This narrative sense is somewhat reflected in modern musical usage.

Rhythm. Music is emphatically a time-art rather than a space-art, like architecture or painting. But it is analogous to the space-arts in depending for the intelligibility and grace of its constructions upon elements of proportion and grouping. Indeed, since time is never static and cannot be viewed as a fixed object, music, like dancing and versification, requires the more careful organization of its time-structure if its processes are to have order and balance.

Modern music rests on the assumption that for its artistic purposes the indefinite lapse of time is to be regarded in small equal portions (very much as a jeweler's clock breaks up a minute into seconds or half-seconds). Only so can the fact of advance or progress be mentally realized. What is thus felt is not duration as such, but its on-go or flow, its momentum and the energy that it expresses. This is shown by the fact that the rate or rapidity of the time-portions may be made greater or less without much affecting the sense of steady, resistless progress. It is this characteristic common to music, dancing and versification that is best called by the term rhythm, which means 'a steady flowing.' G.

The unfortunate confusion between the terms rhythm and meter in current usage has been mentioned under Acoustics and Meter. It is largely a question of nomenclature. The phenomena are the same, whatever one chooses to call them, but if Greek words are used, the sense of their Greek stems should be respected.

In music, then, as in dancing and (less obviously) in verse, time is first of all regarded as broken up into a series of equal beats or pulses, quick or slow. These are then differentiated and gathered into groups by means of an extra stress at equal intervals, such groups in music being called measures (in verse, feet). Where stress falls is the accented beat as opposed to unaccented ones or the strong beat as opposed to weak ones. If every second beat is accented, the rhythm is duple; if every third beat, triple; if every fourth beat, quadruple; and so on. Practically, primary or simple rhythms are best regarded as either duple or triple, since all others tend more or less to resolve into derivatives of these.

In 'counting time' it is usual to call the accented beat '1' ('12' or '123'), and in 'beating time' to mark the accented beat by a 'down-beat' (down-up or down-side-up). In written music the place of the accented beat is now always marked by a bar just before it.

But it is important to note that each of these primary forms of rhythm varies according to how the group is formed about the accent. Thus in duple rhythm two varieties are possible, one with the accented beat first ('1 2'), and the other with the accented beat last ('2 1'), the measure in the former case having an initial stress, in the latter a terminal stress. Thus in triple rhythm three varieties are possible ('1 2 3' or '3 1 2' or '2 3 1'), the measure-stress being respectively initial, median or terminal.

It is unfortunate that the traditional notation and its use tend to obscure this point, giving the impression that 'measures' always begin with an accent. Hence come needless explanations of 'incomplete measures' at the beginning and end of phrases.

The working of the general principle of simple or primary rhythm may be graphically represented in many ways. For example, indefinite time may be shown as a line which the imposition of beats breaks up into small equal portions, these latter being the r gathered into groups duple or triply by accents in five ways:

The operation of this principle of grouping or integration around an accent is extended much beyond the above simple forms.

In the first place, it governs the subdivision of beats into small portions analogous in structure to measures. Indeed, if the tempo is not too quick, subdivided primary rhythms tend to become what are called compound rhythms, that is, measure-patterns of more than three beats and with both primary and secondary accents. The form of these depends on their constituents, the possible forms being (a) two beats duple divided, making quadruple or march rhythm, (b) two beats triply divided, making the commonest variety of sextuple or waltz rhythm, (c) three beats duple divided, making the other variety of sextuple rhythm, and (d) three beats triply divided, making nonuple rhythm. Quadruple rhythm is so common that it is widely felt to be a primary form and as such adds two further compound forms, (e) four beats duple divided, making octuple rhythm and (f) four beats triply divided, making dodecuple rhythm. These comprise all the types of fundamental rhythm that are ordinarily used in modern music. But, to secure particular melodic effects the process of subdivision is constantly carried further, so as to effect any of the small elements or 'beatlets' noted above. These lesser subdivisions, however, seldom persist from measure to measure in exactly the same form and so do not establish a controlling and conspicuous effect. They rather belong under the head of what are called 'note-patterns' below.

It should be noted that each of the compound rhythms is theoretically capable of as many varieties as it has beats, according to where it is assumed to begin. Not all of these, however, are in practical use.

It should be added that pentuple and septuple rhythms are quite conceivable. The former is not without practical exemplification as a persistent primary rhythm or as an irregular compound rhythm (the five beats being treated as two-three or three-two capriciously). Both are used in small subdivisions to some extent.

For some irregular subdivisions of parts of measures, see Note-Groups.

In the second place, the principle of grouping works in the other direction as well, that is, it tends to a combination of successive measures, however constructed, into larger units of twos, threes or fours. For these there is no established name, since their importance depends upon the disposition of the tonal materials within them. It is out of this grouping that what is called form in the primary or elementary sense takes its rise. Where equal groups of measures succeed each other in symmetrical balance, a large rhythm is set up entirely analogous to the measure-rhythm except that its scope is fixed by mental acceptance rather than by the force of a single dominant accent.

The general principle of the organization of time by means of rhythmic units, with their subdivisions and their combinations, is common to music, dancing and versification. Through it these three have always been drawn together. But in delicacy of effect and in capacity for elaboration in detail music goes far beyond what is possible for either of the other two. When music is united with dancing or with verse, however, it often imparts its own rhythmic richness to the step-patterns of the one or the word-patterns of the other.

In notation, as now used, any species of note may be taken as corresponding to the rhythmical units or beats, the most common being half-notes, quarter-notes or eighth-notes. At the head of each piece or movement (or section where the rhythm changes) a special sign called the time-signature is placed (following the key-signature). This sign consists of two numerals, one above the other, the upper indicating the number of beats in the measure and the lower indicating the note taken as a unit ('2' standing for a half-note, '4' for a quarter-note, etc.). Instead of  $\frac{4}{4}$  the sign  $\text{C}$  is rather frequent in certain kinds of music, and instead of  $\frac{2}{2}$  the related sign  $\text{C}$ ; both of these are derived from the half-circle used in mensural notation as the sign of tempus imperfectum. (It may be remarked that much of the awkward complication in the mensural system was due to attempts to combine the facts of rhythm with the notation at hand.)

As commonly used, the time-signatures do not form a consistent system, though clear enough for most purposes. They include

Simple duple	$\frac{2}{2}$	$\frac{2}{4}$
Compound duple	$\frac{3}{4}$	$\frac{4}{4}$ or $\frac{6}{8}$
Simple triple	$\frac{3}{4}$	$\frac{3}{8}$
Compound triple	$\frac{3}{2}$	$\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{9}{8}$
Simple quadruple	$\frac{4}{4}$	$\frac{4}{8}$
Compound quadruple	$\frac{4}{4}$ or $\frac{12}{8}$

The basal rhythm thus far described is that which persists unchanged throughout a given piece or movement. But its artistic effect is often highly diversified by the various note-patterns or metric figures that are imposed upon it or made to grow out of it. When one 'counts' or 'beats time' he is emphasizing only the basal rhythm. But when he sings or plays he finds himself using all sorts of combinations of longer and shorter tones, some filling the time of two or more beats and some dividing a beat here and there without formal regularity, while at points there may also be silences or rests. In study and drill these schemes of long and short time-portions are often drummed or monotoned to fix their form on the attention. They always fit the basal rhythm exactly, so that they may be said to be derived from it, and yet in effect they serve to give that rhythm a special character that by itself it does not have. It is not strange that many musicians prefer to apply the term 'rhythm' to these patterns, though in essence they correspond to the patterns of long and short syllables that the Greeks called 'meters' (see Meter).

Even in a small form (like a hymn-tune) each phrase may have a distinct note-pattern. In part-music the note-patterns of the voices may be distinct in the same phrase. A theme may appear now in one pattern and now in another. In parallel phrases there may be a rhyme of note-patterns, with or without a distinct rhyme of melody or harmony. A climax may be built up by advancing from one pattern to another of greater complexity or agitation, just as the descent from a climax may be made evident by the reverse process. Under many circumstances, also, particular note-patterns come to possess decided physical and even moral suggestiveness. Here lies the power of the so-called 'leitmotif' and of many devices used in the higher grades of program-music.

One of the marked features of the 'romantic' style as contrasted with the 'classical' was its eagerness to explore the field of fresh and powerful note-patterns. This impulse continued to be extremely fruitful throughout the 19th century. It is now seen to be one of the main sources of the impression of active and dynamic vitality in musical creations, just as it is also apt to be reflective or expressive of the individuality of both composer and performer. In this field lies part of that which gives 'character' to many practical effects (see Character).

It is needless to more than remark that in this matter of patterns of action based upon a continuous rhythm the evolutions of artistic dancing and the declamation of verse offer innumerable analogies with musical effects, though at most points the latter are the more free and elastic.

Rib. In the making of violins and similar instruments, one of the upright strips that form the sides of the body, joining the belly and the back. Ordinarily they are 5-6 in number, carefully moulded to the exact contour of the body. The joints between them and the belly and back are strengthened by the linings. G.

Ribeba, Ribeca, Ribible. See Rebec.

Ricercare, Ricercata. In the 16th century, an instrumental composition upon original themes, analogous to the motet, and sometimes, like some motets, on a succession of themes. It became practically synonymous with the fantasia or fancy. In the 18th century, a fugue of the most elaborate and learned description; see Fugue. G.

In connection with his Musikalisches Opfer (1747) Bach uses the inscription Regis Jussu Cantio Et Reliqua Canonica Arte Resoluta in acrostic reference to the fact that the main theme was suggested by Frederick the Great and that he has treated it in a variety of ways.

Ricochet. In violin-playing, a staccato produced by means of a loose, bounding stroke of the bow. G.

Riddle-Canon. See Canon.

Ridotto, Redoute. A ball or masquerade; hence redoutentänze, dances for such a ball. G (Redoute).

Rigadoon, Rigaudon. See Dances. G.

Ripieno. That which supplements, as a ri-pieno part in a concerted composition (as opposed to one that is solo, concertante or obligato) or a ripieno player or singer in an orchestra or chorus (as opposed to principal or leading). Such assisting performers are ripienists. G.

As a direction, ripieno or col ripieni is the same as tutti, that is, with all the players.

Risposta. Same as answer or comes; opposed to proposta. G.

Ritornello. In accompanied vocal music, a prelude, interlude or postlude on the instrument or instruments; formerly called sinfonia. In many formal arias the vocal phrases are constantly separated by such interludes. G.

Originally, the term was the name of a short popular song, possibly with a refrain; probably same as stornello. In the early opera it was applied to instrumental interludes between scenes.

Roi des Ménestriers ('king of the minstrels'). A title in France held from the 14th century by the superior of the Confrérie de St. Julien des Ménestriers, established in 1321. From 1407 this body was given a monopoly of professional music, all vocalists and instrumentalists being required to hold a licence from it, at first in Paris, but after 1514 throughout the kingdom. From 1658 the title was changed to Roi des Violons and the monopoly restricted to instrumentalists. After 1695 the monopoly came to an end, but the title of Roi was continued till 1773, with spasmodic attempts to enforce some degree of monopolistic authority. G.

The most famous of the 'kings' were Louis Constantin (1629-55), the two Dumanoirs (1655-68, 1668-93) and Pierre Guignon (1741-73).

Roll. A prolonged tone on a drum, produced by a rapid succession of blows. Applied also to an analogous effect on the tambourine. The long roll is a military signal for attack. G.

Roller. Same as barrel in a barrel-organ or similar apparatus; see Automatic 'Appliances. Also, in organ-making, a mechanical device for transferring tracker-action from one direction to another. It consists of a hinged rod or staff with two projecting arms, one for receiving motion, the other for giving it. See under Tracker.

Romance, Romanza. A ballad or song. Also an instrumental piece of lyric character; a romance sans paroles or song without words. G.

Romanesca. See Dances.

Romantic. A term chiefly used of composers, works and styles in the early 19th century, when, under the influence of the so-called 'romantic' movement in German literature, an effort was made to break away from the rigidity and formalism of the later 18th century. In this application it was opposed to classical as that was represented by the Viennese school of Haydn and Mozart. But it has also been extended to cover various impulsive or novel efforts that seem irregular, if not lawless, at least for the time being; opposed in this sense to classical in its most general meaning. G.

The tendency of the romantic movement that set in soon after 1800 was not iconoclastic, but constructive. The object was to infuse more of imaginative vigor and of emotional warmth into musical expression, especially by exalting its subjective side. The urgency of its spirit led it to seek new forms simply because the established forms were inadequate for its purpose. The movement declared itself strongly in Beethoven and Weber, though the statement of its aspiration was not made till Schumann appeared and declared war against the 'Philistines' of mere pedantry and mechanicalness. Weber established the type of German opera known as romantic, which differed from the earlier types not only in topic, but in the plastic adaptation of its form to the characters and the plot—thus pointing the way toward the much more radical and powerful creations of Wagner. Beethoven introduced a strongly romantic quality into music for the piano and the instrumental ensemble, especially as the impulse grew upon him to give outlet through music of his inner spirit and experience. Schubert, though clinging usually to classical forms, was essentially a romanticist in the quality of his poetic sympathy. It was reserved for Schumann to analyze more deeply the nature of the tendency thus already made manifest and through his own work to give it still further embodiment in almost all forms of composition. By contrast Mendelssohn, though possibly fitted to join in the new movement, more and more turned back to the cultivation of that which was rather classical than romantic.

The same struggle between old and new ideals has been illustrated more than once since. In each case the terms classical and romantic may be used. But their exact meaning in any case can be determined only in view of the given case. What is called romantic is soon called classical—exactly as was the case with the style of the Mannheim-Vienna school in the later 18th century.

Rome, Prix de. See Prizes.

Rondeau, Rondo. Originally, a dance-song adapted to a round- or circle-dance, characterized by some fixed order of couplets or triplets and a recurrent refrain. Such songs were common in France and Italy from the 13th century, though under various names. Hence in the 18th century was derived the name rondo for an instrumental piece in which a theme is presented at the outset and recurs at intervals afterward, with episodes or digressive passages between. The dance-origin of the form is maintained partly by the character of the theme and the movement and partly by keeping the recurrences of the theme always in the original key. In the classical sonata the final movement was often a rondo. G.

Root. In harmony, the lowest tone of a triad or chord when in its original and simplest position. Sometimes also applied to the fundamental tone in a series of partial-tones. G.

Rosalia. A melodic figure that is repeated two or more times, but beginning one degree higher (or lower) each time. Occasionally extended to repetitions at some other interval. G.

Rose. In many instruments, especially of the lute- and dulcimer-classes, an ornamental border or inset for the sound-hole in the belly or front. It was often used by older makers as a trade-mark. Sometimes called knot. G.

Rosin, Resin. A special distillate from turpentine that is used upon the bows of violins and similar instruments to increase their friction. The French and German terms are colophane and colophonium respectively. G.

Rota, Rotula. See Rondo and Round. G.

Rotta. See Chrotta and Crwth. G.

Roulade. A rapid vocal run or other figure, sung to a single syllable; cf. division.

Round. A vocal canon at the unison, properly without coda and therefore infinite. It differs from the catch in not being necessarily humorous or involving plays on words. The theme or subject usually has the lilt and swing of a song-phrase. G.

The earliest example is the famous rota Sumer is icumen in, dating from about 1225, which is a round for four voices, besides a canonic burden or pes for two voices. This seems to have come from Reading Abbey (35 miles west of London). Rounds have always been extremely popular in England. The first printed collection was made by Ravenscroft in 1609, with many others in the 17-18th centuries. The Round, Catch and Canon Club was founded in London in 1843.

Round Dance. Either a ring-dance or one in which a circling movement occurs; see Dances.

Roundel, Roundelay. Same as rondeau, as round or as round-dance.

Rovescio, Al. A direction signifying either (a) imitation by inversion (see Imitation) or (b) a piece so constructed that it may be performed backward as well as forward, that is, cancrizans (see Canon). G.

Row of Keys. Same as keyboard, especially in harpsichords or organs with more than one keyboard. G.

Rubato. A term properly meaning a slight distortion of strict rhythm during a measure for the purpose of emotional expression, but often applied to a loose and irregular treatment of rhythm and meter in general. G.

Rule of the Octave. See under Octave.

Run. A rapid succession of tones in consecutive order, as in a scale; cf. roulade.

Running. In organ-making, a term applied to a leakage of the wind into a channel, so that a pipe sounds when it should be silent; also the sound thus produced.

FAMILY OF OPICLEIDES

FAMILY OF SAXHORNS

S. As an abbreviation, S. stands for segno, sinistra, solo, soprano, sordini and subito, and, in Tonic Sol-fa notation, s stands for sol (soh).

Sabot. In the modern harp, if provided with pedals, one of the revolving disks by which the strings may be temporarily shortened and their pitch raised either one or two semitones; see Harp.

Saccade. In playing the violin and allied instruments, a pressure-stroke of the bow that affects two or more strings at once.

Sackbut, Sacbut, Sagbut. A medieval instrument of the trumpet-class, having a slide like that of a trombone. G.

The word in Dan. iii which in the English versions is rendered 'sackbut' is Greek and certainly does not mean a trombone; see Sambuca.

Sacred Music. Music designed or fitted for use in connection with church-services or at least dealing with sacred topics or expressing devotional feeling; opposed to secular music. As church-music it may be adapted to use by the congregation, the choir or the organ. Other sacred music includes most oratorios, many cantatas, part-songs and songs with religious words and many instrumental works in which religious sentiment is embodied. See Church-Music.

Sacring-Bell. A bell rung at certain points in the Roman Catholic Mass, especially at the Elevation or the Sanctus.

Sacrist. In some cathedrals, one deputed to copy and care for the music for the choir.

Saitenorgel. A keyboard-instrument, invented by Gumbel of Kroffdorf (near Giessen) in 1890, which unites features from the piano and the harmonium in a novel way.

To the stringing of a grand piano a supplemental string is added for each key and with this is connected a harmonium-reed (tuned in unison) carrying a leather-head that serves as a small hammer, so that so long as the reed sounds the tone of the string is produced and the tone of the other unisons excited sympathetically. By mechanical adjustments the instrument may be used simply as a piano, simply as a harmonium, and as both together, with several varieties of tone-color.

Salon-Music. A term introduced in the 19th century for music designed for the drawing-room rather than the concert-hall and appealing more to the dilettante than the connoisseur. It is applied chiefly to instrumental pieces of a sentimental or merely 'pretty' kind, but can be used of many popular songs. Usually it carries an implication of inferiority, though properly many short works by undoubted masters belong to the class thus designated. As a term, it resembles chamber-music in its original sense and also the German Hausmusik, though not the same in meaning with either.

Saltarello, Salterello. See Dances. Also the note-pattern , which is characteristic of the dance. Also a counterpoint moving in sextuple rhythm. Also a harpsichord-jack. In the second sense also spelled salteretto. G.

Sambuca, Sambuke. An ancient instrument of Oriental origin, probably a harp of some kind. In medieval usage the term was applied to a variety of forms, sometimes of the psaltery-class, sometimes wind-instruments.

In Dan. iii this word in the English versions is unfortunately translated 'sackbut.'

Samisen. A Japanese instrument of the lute- or banjo-class, having a rectangular body with belly and back of parchment and 3 strings, played by means of a large wooden plectrum tipped with ivory. It is one of the commonest and most popular of Japanese forms.

Sampogna. See Zampogna.

Sanctus. In the Roman Catholic Mass, the ascription, or its musical setting, that concludes the Preface and precedes the Benedictus; also called Tersanctus and Seraphic Hymn.

The text is 'Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus, Dominus Deus Hostium; pleni sunt cœli et terra gloria tue; hosanna in excelsis.' G.

Sängerbund. A name used for many German clubs for the practice and promotion of part-singing; see Liedertafel.

Saraband. See Dances. G.

Sarrusophone. A complete family of about eight brass-wind instruments, sounded by means of a double-reed mouthpiece, like that of the oboe or the bassoon, and with 16-20 keys arranged on the Boehm principle. The tube has a conical bore and in the larger varieties is much convoluted because of its extreme length. The type was invented in 1856 by the French band-master Sarrus and later improved by the instrument-maker Gautrot. Its plan resembles that of the saxophone. Its use is in military bands. G.

Saxhorn. An extensive family of seven or more brass-wind instruments of the key-bugle class, but greatly improved in proportions and accuracy of intonation. The cup-mouthpiece is broad and the scale of the tube wide toward the bell. There are usually 3 rotary or piston-valves, occasionally more, giving a range of about 2 octaves. The original form was direct, but one modification is reversed so that the bell is 'over the shoulder,' directing the sound backward. The type was perfected by the Belgian instrument-maker Adolphe Sax about 1845 and then adopted by the French military bands, followed by those of many other countries. Sometimes also called saxcornet or saxotromba. G.

The different sizes are known by various names, including (for the lower forms) baryton, euphonium, and bombardon. Saxhorns have been made of wood as well as metal.

Saxophone. A complete family of about eight brass-wind instruments, sounded by means of a single-reed mouthpiece, like that of the clarinet or the basset-horn, and with 18-20 keys so disposed as to give a range of 2-3 octaves. The tube has a conical or parabolic bore and in the larger varieties is bent upward in a U. The type was invented by Adolphe Sax about 1840, but the essential principle was known earlier. In military bands it is much used in place of the more difficult clarinet. G.

Saxotromba. Either a name for the saxhorn or a parallel form intermediate in character between the saxhorn and the French horn. In the latter case it is made in several sizes, so as to form a complete family. This was one of the inventions of Adolphe Sax in his revolutionary improvement of military music about 1850.

Scald, Skald. The Scandinavian name for tribal poet-singers analogous to the bards of the Britons and Kelts; see Bard.

Scale (literally, a stairway or ladder). In general, a method of regarding some large interval, like an octave, as subdivided at definite points so as to provide a series of tones suitable for melodic or harmonic use; practically the same as mode, but less abstract. Specifically, such a series of tones in order of pitch, laid out according to a designated method (as a major scale) or beginning with a designated tone (as the scale of g); practically the same as key, but with emphasis on the serial arrangement. The successive points of division or the tones at those points are called degrees and the intervals between them steps; for reference, both are usually numbered from below upward. G.

Tones of varying pitch are extensively used in practical speech, but music as a tonal art is differentiated from speech by its tendency to select pitches that are definite and distinguishable, so that both the tones used and the intervals between them have individuality and character. Hence scale-formation, which is the unconscious or deliberate choice of such tones and intervals, lies at the foundation of practical song and tends to govern in the construction of instruments. Primitive music, it is true, proceeds without having a scale in mind, though examples often show that it is unconsciously conceived. Artistic music, on the other hand, tends to adopt a standard system so as to make practical effects uniform and intelligible.

The natural limiting interval is the octave, since whatever partition of it is made can readily be repeated in octaves above or below; but other units have been used, such as the tetrachord (in Greek music) and the hexachord (in medieval music). The process of tone-selection seems to be mainly directed by two impulses, (a) to take tones near enough together to make easy melodic steps and (b) to take tones that are acoustically related. The number of distinct degrees recognized depends on the length of steps preferred.

Pentatonic scales are those in which the shortest step adopted is what we call a 'tone' or 'whole-step.' Many spontaneous instances of such scales are found, as among the Chinese, the Kelts, etc., and they have also been experimented with by some recent composers.

When both 'tones' and 'semitones' are adopted scales tend to be heptatonic. This is the form belonging to the historic development beginning with the Greeks (or perhaps the Egyptians) and issuing in modern music. But modern music also recognizes an extension of these in which semitones prevail throughout. The former are called diatonic, the latter chromatic or dodecatonic.

In some Oriental systems scales with more than twelve degrees are recognized.

Modern music is mostly laid out upon one of two standard scales, both having seven degrees in the octave (hence diatonic), the one called major and the other minor. The first or starting-tone is known as the key-note or tonic. If a major and a minor scale that have the same key-note be roughly compared, they will be found to coincide at two other points regularly, but they may differ at some or all of the others, the tones of the minor series, so far as they are different, being a semitone lower than the corresponding tones in the major series. Hence the sequence of long and short steps in the two scales is different. The two coincident tones are the fourth and the fifth (technically known as the subdominant and the dominant). The major scale, at least in its theoretical form, is distinctively modern, but the minor scale has many features that recall both medieval and ancient scales.

For convenience of reference, three different methods of naming the scale-degrees are in use, by numerals, by solmization-syllables and by the letter-names as applied in the keyboard (usually assuming c as a starting-point). In addition, the exact placing of each tone may be indicated by giving the ratio of its vibration-number to that of the tonic. The scheme of the major scale is then as follows (arranged so as to show the long and the short steps):

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
do	re	mi	fa	sol	la	ti	do'
c	d	e	f	g	a	b	c'
1	$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{8}{7}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{3}{2}$	$\frac{5}{4}$	$\frac{7}{6}$	2

The corresponding scheme of the full minor scale is

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
do	ra	me	fa	sol	le	te	do'
c	d♭	e♭	f	g	a♭	b♭	c'
1	$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{7}{6}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{3}{2}$	$\frac{5}{4}$	$\frac{7}{6}$	2

This full form of the minor is sometimes called the Doric minor because its succession of long and short steps is the same as in the famous Dorian octave-species of Greek music (though theoretically the tuning was not precisely the same).

The long steps in the above schemes are of two kinds (greater or lesser tones), namely.

Greater (9/8), 1-2, 4-5, 6-7; 2♭-3♭, 7♭-8
Lesser (10/9), 2-3, 5-6; 3♭-4, 6♭-7♭

The simplest way of analyzing the structure of the major scale is to note that its three foci are the tonic, the dominant and the subdominant (the two latter being the closest relatives of the tonic within an octave) and that all the other tones belong to similar triads based on these tones (1-3-5 = 5-7-2 = 4-6-8). A scale so made up affords more resources for practical harmony than any other that can be devised, besides being melodically convenient.

In practical composition the minor scale is hardly ever found in the full form given above. The form that has the widest use (because facilitating harmonic combinations) is that often called the harmonic or instrumental minor. But this involves an awkward melodic step between 6♭ and 7, and, to avoid this, two variants appear, facilitating downward and upward melodic passages. The schemes of the three are as follows:

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	Harmonic or Instrumental
c	d	e♭	f	g	a♭	b	c
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	Descending
c	d	e♭	f	g	a♭	b♭	c
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	Ascending
c	d	e♭	f	g	a	b	c

Partly in consequence of the use of these forms, one theory of the structure of the minor scale is that it is practically a modification of the major scale, designed to take advantage of minor triads and intervals in contrast with major ones. There is no doubt that this is a fair way of analyzing the use of the minor in many cases. On the other hand, however, many theorists believe that the minor embodies a process that is the reverse of that embodied in the major, so that the true or ideal minor scale has exactly the same intervals serially as the major, but starting at the top and proceeding downward. The placing of the tones is then fixed by means of three similar downward triads just as the tones of the major are fixed by three similar upward ones. This is the basis of the general theory of harmonic dualism that has had many able advocates. Historically, it has the advantage of offering an alluring explanation of the apparent contradiction between modern music and what preceded it, since it suggests that while in ancient and mediæval music the minor or downward conception was uppermost, in modern music the major or upward conception has taken its place in part—the two conceptions being complementary and to some extent always operative. Whether or not this dualistic conception of scales and relations can be absolutely demonstrated, it would seem to offer enough to be used provisionally.

The strongest and most thoroughgoing treatment of the dualistic theory is found in the works of Riemann (from about 1880). But the basic principles of it are traceable in works by Zarlino (1558), Salinas (1577), Rameau (1737), Blainville (1746), Tartini (1754), Vallotti (1779), Hauptmann (1853) and Von Oettingen (1866).

Whatever be the theory of their origin or derivation, it is toward these two scales that unaccompanied singing and such instrumental ensembles as a string-quartet tend to conform, at least until extensive modulation takes place. Every modulation introduces one or more new tones into the system, besides changing the harmonic center or key-note. Modulations may be arranged in two progressive series, each introducing extra or intercalary degrees into the standard scales. One series has an upward tendency (like that of 7 or ti in the major scale) and its extra tones are known as sharps. The other series has a downward tendency (like that of 7<sub>b</sub> or te in the minor scale or of 4 or fa in the major) and its extra tones are known as flats. These intercalary degrees fall primarily within the longer steps of the original scales. But the so-called sharps and flats do not exactly match with each other in their position in those intervals. Furthermore, as modulation is extended, it proves that some of the original degrees are not precisely correct with reference to the new key-notes; and if twelve progressive modulations are made in either direction from a given starting-point, they do not come out precisely an octave above or below as they might be expected to do. These discrepancies were realized as early as 1700 and, to avoid them on instruments with a keyboard (that is, with fixed intonation), the system of tuning in equal temperament was devised, the principle of which is that the octave is divided arbitrarily into 12 equal semitones and the degrees thus obtained are assumed to represent the original or ideal tones falling nearest to them. Although no one of the correspondences is perfect, most of them are fairly close. And the convenience of the system came to be felt to outweigh its inaccuracy, so that by 1800 it was in general use for keyboard-instruments.

This system sets up a 12-tone or chromatic scale, as follows:

1#	2#	3	4#	5#	6#	7	8
1	2 <sub>b</sub>	3 <sub>b</sub>	4	5 <sub>b</sub>	6 <sub>b</sub>	7 <sub>b</sub>	8

Obviously, on the keyboard any digital may be taken as the starting-point and, if the instrument be correctly tuned, the tonal results will be equivalent or analogous. Hence come the so-called keyboard-scales, differing in their succession of white and black keys, each requiring its own signature in the standard staff-notation. Since the form of minor scale most in use is thus most simply indicated, it is understood that each signature may be used either for a major scale or for a minor scale beginning two degrees lower (called the relative minor of that particular major). If this minor uses a leading-tone, its seventh degree is sharpened by means of an accidental (not indicated in the signature).

The keyboard-scales are best arranged in a series, the key-notes being uniformly a fifth above each other. To save complication, at the midway point in the series the 'sharp' names and signs are exchanged for the 'flat' ones (f# being on the keyboard identical with g<sub>b</sub>).

		C major or A minor
c	d	e	f	g	a	b	c
		G major or E minor
g	a	b	c	d	e	f#	g
		D major or B minor
d	e	f#	g	a	b	c#	d
		A major or F# minor
a	b	c#	d	e	f#	g#	a
		E major or C# minor
e	f#	g#	a	b	c#	d#	e
		B major or G# minor
b	c#	d#	e <sub>b</sub>	f#	g#	a#	b
		{ F# major or D# minor G <sub>b</sub> major or E <sub>b</sub> minor }
{ f#	g#	a#	b	c#	d#	e#	f# }
{ g <sub>b</sub>	a <sub>b</sub>	b <sub>b</sub>	c <sub>b</sub>	d <sub>b</sub>	e <sub>b</sub>	f <sub>b</sub>	g <sub>b</sub> }
		D <sub>b</sub> major or B <sub>b</sub> minor
d <sub>b</sub>	e <sub>b</sub>	f	g <sub>b</sub>	a <sub>b</sub>	b <sub>b</sub>	c	d <sub>b</sub>
		A <sub>b</sub> major or F minor a <sub>b</sub>	b <sub>b</sub>	c	d <sub>b</sub>	e <sub>b</sub>	f	g	a <sub>b</sub>
		E <sub>b</sub> major or C minor
e <sub>b</sub>	f	g	a <sub>b</sub>	b <sub>b</sub>	c	d	e <sub>b</sub>
		B <sub>b</sub> major or G minor
b <sub>b</sub>	c	d	e <sub>b</sub>	f	g	a	b <sub>b</sub>
		F major or D minor
f	g	a	b <sub>b</sub>	c	d	e	f
		C major or A minor (as above)

The relation of the major and minor scales to each other, with the intercalary degrees required for modulation, and also the relation of all these to the tempered or keyboard-scale, can be shown in diagrams of various form (dimensions being made proportional to the logarithms of the ratios of the intervals). One of the most compact is that of concentric circles, as below (major scale and sharps outside, minor scale and flats next, tempered scale inside, with indications of its deviations from the others):

Major Scale (outer zone), the diatonic steps laid out in three equal triads and the sharps inserted as leading-tones in each case. Minor Scale (middle zone), the diatonic steps laid out in reverse order from that of the major. Tempered Scale (inner zone), laid out in twelve equal semitones. Note that none of the tempered degrees exactly correspond with those of the major or minor scales, though serving well as compromises.

Outside of the circle of modern music and its historic development scale-forms are hard to observe and analyze. It is evident that some of them contain elements similar to or cognate with points in our modern system. But they also often present features that to us are irrational as well as strange. Much folk-music and most music among primitive peoples is so far controlled by melodic considerations that its effects seem to us lawless and unaccountable. Yet they remind us that in our eagerness to work out a rational system that is dominated by harmonic requirements we have laid aside a certain freedom of melodic action and even of melodic sensitiveness.

The term scale is also sometimes used of the range or compass of tones in a voice or instrument. Also, in organ-making, it is the technical term for the ratio between the width and the length of pipes, those of broad scale giving richer and more sonorous tones, while those of narrow scale give keen, incisive tones. Similarly, in piano-making, it is the technical term for the relation of dimensions and dispositions in the stringing to the quality of the tones.

Scena. Same as scene. Specifically, also, an independent dramatic work, almost always for a single singer, in which a text that might have formed part of an opera-libretto is somewhat elaborately treated in recitative, arioso or aria so as to make a striking concert-piece. Sometimes, if a full aria is included, called scena ed aria. G.

Scenario, Scenarium. Any abbreviated presentation of the personages, plot and outline of a dramatic work, such as a play, an opera, a dramatic oratorio or a cantata. It may be little more than an abstract or argument, but is more commonly a skeleton libretto. G.

Scene. In a play or opera, one of the divisions of an act, usually one that takes place without much or any change of scenery or personages. Sometimes applied more narrowly to the enactment of a particular incident. Also used in the specific sense of scena.

Schablone. A critical term for music constructed without inspiration in accordance with a mere model or stencil-pattern; cf. Kapellmeister-Musik. G.

Scherzo. A passage or piece of a playful, piquant or humorous character. Specifically, such a movement as one of the constituents of a sonata, symphony or similar complex work. The term was first used in this way by Beethoven for the bright, rapid and even fiery form that he introduced in place of the older minuet. From the latter it often takes a triple rhythm, as well as the form of a dance (including a trio or alternativo). G.

Schisma. In acoustics, the smallest interval recognized as a unit (not perceptible by the ear), being that between the pure third above the eighth fifth of any tone and the octave of that tone (represented by the difference between b-sharp and c), having the vibration-ratio 32805:32768.

This minute interval, which is less than a hundredth part of a major second or whole-tone, nearly corresponds to the difference between the tempered and the true fifth; hence the latter is also sometimes called a schisma.

Schleifer. See Ländler under Dances.

Schola Cantorum. A name originally applied to a singing-school connected with a cathedral, monastery or church; a choir-school or maîtrise; see Maîtrise.

Scholarships. See Prizes.

School. Either an institution like a conservatory or music-school, or a method of teaching, especially when expressed in a text-book for students, or a style of composition or performance, such as may be taught or acquired by study.

School-Music. A general term for the application of music as part of the discipline in a school of elementary or secondary grade. It necessarily involves instruction by classes instead of individually and is primarily vocal, though not necessarily debarred from extending to the use of instruments. It may include not only the rudiments of sight-singing, but the groundwork of harmony and form, besides practice in part-singing and orchestral playing.

The clear recognition of this specialty in musical pedagogy came early in the 19th century in connection with the development in several countries of organized systems of public schools. Among the pioneers were the Swiss publisher Nägele, the Lutheran pastor Natorp, the university director Naue, the French leaders Choron and Wilhem and the English organist Kemp. All these were active from about 1810. Before long more or less effective methods were in use in Switzerland, Germany, France, England and the United States. In France the Galin-Paris-Chevé method reached its full statement about 1850. In England Hullah's classes and the Tonic Sol-fa method were under way from soon after 1840. In America Lowell Mason had secured recognition in Boston as early as 1837. All these early efforts were much influenced by the pedagogical ideas of Pestalozzi, whose experiments with free schools had begun in Switzerland as far back as 1775 and were well established before 1800.

For two or three decades advance was slow and often hindered by ignorant prejudice. In the last half-century, however, the magnitude and significance of the movement have been shown not only in various extensive associations of specialists in this field, but in an accumulating body of literature, including textbooks, manuals of method and collections of many grades.

Schottische. See Dances. G.

Science of Music. See Musicology and Theory.

Scordatura. In stringed instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, any irregular or unusual series of pitches to which one or more of the strings are tuned; opposed to accordatura. As such special tunings are generally adopted by individual players for their own effects, they are sometimes called collectively solo-pitch. G.

Score. A written or printed draft of any work in which the several parts are arranged one above another on two or more staves that are braced together and barred so as to match vertically. G.

Piano-music is written thus on two staves, one for the right hand, the other for the left. Organ-music is similar, but usually has a third staff below for the pedal-part. A vocal or instrumental solo with accompaniment for piano or organ likewise has three staves, the solo-part being at the top. Plain 4-part vocal harmony, as in a hymn-tune and some part-songs, is often written in short, close or compressed score, that is, with the two upper parts together on one staff and the two lower parts together on the other. But all more elaborate choral music, with that for a chamber- or orchestral ensemble, is properly written in long, open or extended score, that is, with a staff for every part, vocal or instrumental. In the case of a large concerted work, with vocal soloists and chorus as well as orchestra, the total number of staves is very large, the customary order (from the top) being wood-wind (flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons), brass-wind (horns, trumpets, trombones, percussives), the upper strings (violins, violas), solo-voices and chorus-parts, the lower strings ('cellos, basses) and the organ (if used). Such a score is a full orchestral score or conducting-score. If there are too many parts to be got into a page, some may be added in a supplementary score or partitino. When a complex work like an opera or oratorio is published in condensed form for private use, the vocal parts are usually given by themselves, but the accompaniment is transcribed and arranged in short score for the piano; such an edition is called a vocal score or piano-score (though the latter is sometimes used for a piano-transcription without separate vocal parts).

The art of using extended scores is known as score-reading. It involves not only great quickness of eye, but usually skill in interpreting more than one kind of clef. In much vocal music a different clef is used for each voice and in the orchestra the clarinets and several brass-instruments are written in the key of C, but sound in various keys according to the pitch of the instrument, while the viola-part regularly uses the alto-clef (see Clef).

The term scoring is used for the physical process of preparing a written score in full form or for the allotment and adjustment of materials to instruments and voices (partly equivalent to instrumentation), or for the modification of details required in making an arrangement or transcription.

Scotch Catch or Snap. The note-pattern  in a melody; so called because occurring in the strathspey and in some Scottish songs. It has been used somewhat widely since the 18th century. G.

Scroll. In instruments of the viol-class, especially the violin and its relatives, the convoluted top in which the head or peg-box terminates. In the older viols a carved human head or face was common in this position.

Sea-Trumpet. See Tromba Marina.

Second. The interval between the first and second degrees of the major scale or any similar interval, having the vibration-ratio 9/8 (but see below); also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point; in a standard scale called the supertonic. G.

The above standard interval is called the major second. Other intervals are the minor second, which is a semitone shorter, and the augmented second, which is a semitone longer. But it is necessary to distinguish two forms of the major second, the greater (9/8), as above, and the lesser (10/9). In the standard scale the steps 1-2, 4-5, 6-7 are examples of the former, while the steps 2-3 and 5-6 are examples of the latter. Either form of major second is also called a whole-step, whole-tone or simply tone, while a minor second is one of the forms of the half-step or semitone.

For chord of the second, see under Thorough-bass.

The term is also used in its ordinary sense in various ways, as of a voice or part (lower than first), of a string on a stringed instrument (also lower than first) and of a line or space in a staff (higher than first).

As a noun, second may designate the alto in either vocal or instrumental combinations or any other part subordinated to another, as in a duet; in the latter sense often secondo (opposed to primo).

Section. Usually, in a general sense, one of the chief divisions of a movement or piece, possibly including two or more periods. Sometimes, however, applied instead to a subdivision of a phrase (otherwise known as a half-phrase or phraselet).

In sonata-form, the three main divisions are often called the exposition-section, the development-section and the recapitulation-section. The same usage is applied to the three main divisions in a formal aria of the da capo variety or in a fugue. So, in an overture, fantasia or symphonic poem, each division that has some degree of independence may be called a section.

Secular Music. All music that is disconnected with religious worship and associations; see Church-Music and Sacred Music.

In the formal development of music as an art the bulk of effort was at first given to sacred music. It was not until the 16th century that secular music began to assume parallel importance. After 1600 secular music became increasingly predominant.

Seguidilla. See Dances. G.

Selah. A Hebrew term often occurring in connection with the Psalms and in Hab.iii. Its meaning is unknown, but it is evidently some sort of a note or direction, possibly regarding the musical rendering.

Its root probably signifies 'lifting up,' and hence the conjecture that it may mark the place for a choral or instrumental response.

Semi-. A prefix meaning 'half-' in many names of notes, like semibreve, semiquaver, semitone, etc. (see Notation); but meaning 'lesser' or 'diminished' in several Greek names for intervals, like semidiapason, semidiapente, etc. G.

Semitone may be used in more than one sense, including (a) the diatonic (ratio, 16/15), as between the leading-tone and the upper tonic, (b) the chromatic, which may be either lesser (ratio, 25/24) or greater (ratio, 135/128), as between any scale-tone and its flat or sharp, (c) the tempered or mean (ratio, the 12th root of 2), as between any two consecutive tones on the piano or (d) the Pythagorean (see hemitone, under Hemi).

A semichorus is either one part of a chorus used in alternation with another part or a part of a chorus used in contrast with the whole.

Sennet. Some sort of figure played on trumpets, as used in connection with old plays; cf. flourish. G.

Sensible Note or Tone. Same as leading-tone.

Separation. An old term for a passing-note.

In organ-making, a mechanical device, usually controlled by a piston, by which the stops of a particular keyboard may be prevented from sounding while that keyboard is being used in couple with another.

Septave. See Septonate. G.

Sept-Chord. See Seventh-Chord.

Septet, Septuor. A group of seven performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quartet, etc. G.

Septimole, Septole, Septuplet. A 7-note group occupying the time of 4 or 6; see Note-Groups.

Septonate, Septave. Terms of limited usage for the scale-series usually called the octave, but not including the upper replicate of the starting-tone or key-note.

Such terms, like pentatonic and heptatonic scale, emphasize the number of distinct tones included in the series rather than its total span or interval regarded as a unit.

Sequence (in hymnody). In medieval liturgics, a hymn sung in the Mass after the Gradual to prolong the interval between the Epistle and the Gospel; also called prose (because at first such hymns were in rhythmical prose and, even when cast in verse of the accentual type, they were always different from the form of ancient Latin verse). G.

The introduction of the sequence is attributed to Notker Balbulus (d. 912), a Benedictine of St. Gall (Switzerland), who from about 860 prepared a large number of texts (over 115 sometimes named, of which perhaps 70 are probably his).

The prose form was long adhered to, but with a growing tendency toward lines of somewhat equal length, of course without rhyme. Thence after about 1100 the transition was easy to symmetrical verse with rhyme, adapted to the general form of popular or secular poetry as it was beginning to take shape. In this style many hundreds of sequences were written, constituting the great bulk of Latin hymnody. Of this vast literature the Roman Catholic liturgy, as finally settled, retained in prescribed usage only five, namely, Victimæ Paschali (Easter), Veni, Sancte Spiritus (Pentecost), Lauda Sion Salvatorem (Corpus Christi), Dies iræ, dies illa (Mass for the Dead) and Stabat mater dolorosa (Friday before Palm Sunday). Some others were retained in the Breviary. For extended lists, see Julian, Dict. of Hymnology, arts. Latin Hymnody, Sequences and Notker.

The Sequence is the one point at which hymnody in the sense of verse has had a foothold in the Mass. How popular it was for a long period is attested by the number of texts extant. A few of the Latin sequences were early paraphrased in German, French and English in connection with the rise of vernacular hymnody for congregational use in the 16-17th centuries. But the more general recognition of them in this way was delayed until the 19th century.

Sequence (harmony). In harmony, the repetition three or more times of the same series of melodic and harmonic progressions, but each time at a degree uniformly higher or lower than in the first or preceding instance; a progressive harmonic imitation or reiteration of a formula. Occasionally extended to a melodic imitation, especially when the form of the phrase suggests a chordal basis. The type or pattern is usually not more than a few notes long or perhaps a measure. Cf. rosalia. G.

Seraphic Hymn. See Sanctus.

Seraphine. One of the early forms of the harmonium, invented in 1833 by John Green of London and in 1841 improved by W. E. Evans (as organo harmonica). G.

Serenade. Originally, an evening-song; opposed to aubade; sometimes in the form serena. Specifically, a song for a lover at the window of his lady or any vocal or instrumental piece of the same general character; the German term is ständchen. Also, but inaccurately, used for serenata. G.

Serenata. A species of dramatic or imaginative cantata, akin to the pastorale, which was somewhat common in the 18th century, sometimes for soloists, sometimes also utilizing the chorus, but in any case not usually intended for stage-presentation. Also, an instrumental form somewhat intermediate between the suite and the symphony, having five or more movements, part of which were dances like minuets and marches. Such works were frequent in the later 18th century, being usually written with reference to performance by the ensembles of particular courts or patrons. It was not sharply distinguished from the cassation and the divertimento. G.

Serinda, Sarinda. A Hindu viol with a body of wood or gourd, often with a parchment-belly, and 3 strings, besides several sympathetic strings. An allied form is called seringa or saringa.

Serio, Seria. Denoting that which is serious dramatically; opposed to buffo; as opera seria, the serious or tragic opera, or tenore serio, a tenor who takes serious or tragic parts.

Serpent. A derivative from the bass of the old family of cornets or zinken, called sometimes cornon, having a long S-shaped tube of wood with conical bore, a cupped mouthpiece on a projecting metal-crook and usually 6 fingerholes. It was invented by Edmé Guillaume, canon of Auxerre, in 1590, and was long used in connection with church-music. Its place in the orchestra was taken by the ophicleide. G.

The names serpent and ophicleide both refer to the serpentine convolutions of the tube, but the serpent was not bent upon itself so closely as the ophicleide.

Service. In general, any regular gathering for or series of exercises in public worship. Specifically, the order or formulary for such a gathering and series of exercises, particularly when prescribed and drafted in full for use at a given time; an office; as a morning or evening service, a communion service, an Easter service, a burial service, etc. Also extended to a series of musical settings of certain exercises in such an order (not including variable elements like anthems or hymns). G.

In the Anglican Church a full Service includes the Venite, Te Deum, Benedicite, Benedictus (Dominus), Jubilate, Kyrie, Nicene Creed, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, Benedictus (qui venit), Gloria in excelsis, Magnificat, Cantate, Nunc dimittis and Deus misereatur. These are usually grouped according as they belong to Morning Prayer, to the Communion or to Evening Prayer. The Communion Service has close likeness at many points to the Roman Catholic Mass.

Any book that contains the formulæ, with or without music, that are required for certain services or parts of services is a service-book, book of offices, or prayer-book. In the Anglican Church a plain service is one that is read or simply cantillated; opposed to a full or choral service.

Sesqui-. A prefix meaning 'a half more,' as in sesquialtera for the interval of the fifth (ratio,  $1\frac{1}{2}=1$  or a change in time where three minims equal a preceding two, and sesquitone for the minor third (i. e.,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  'tones'); and also meaning 'greater' in several medieval names for intervals, like sesquialtera, sesquiquarta, sesquiquinta, sesquioctava and sesquinona. G.

Seventh. The interval between the first and the seventh degrees of the major scale or any similar interval, having the vibration-ratio 15/8 (but see below); also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point; in a standard scale called the leading-tone, sensible tone or sub-tonic. G.

The above standard interval is called the major seventh. Other intervals are the minor seventh, which is a semitone shorter, and the diminished seventh, which is two semitones shorter. But it is often necessary to distinguish between three forms of the minor seventh, the greater (9/5), the lesser (16/9) and that derived from the seventh partial-tone (7/4)—the last being not often considered in theoretic harmony, though often heard in chamber-music and a cappella singing. The most typical of the minor sevenths in harmony is that between the fifth and the upper fourth, called the dominant seventh (16/9).

Chords of the seventh, seventh-chords or sept-chords are 4-tone chords made up of a triad with the seventh of the root added. They are major if the seventh is major, minor if the seventh is minor and diminished if the seventh is diminished. A seventh-chord may be based on any tone of either a major or a minor scale and takes its characteristic name from its root. Major seventh-chords, being highly dissonant, are little used except in certain suspensions and transient effects. But minor seventh-chords are extremely useful as well as agreeable, especially the dominant seventh-chord, which was the first dissonance to escape from the strict rule against unprepared discords. All seventh-chords tend to resolve by means of a downward step from the seventh itself. For the inversions and their names, see under Thorough-bass.

The diminished seventh-chord, as it appears when based on the leading-tone of the minor scale, is not only an effective element in many connections where flexible harmony of the dominant class is required, but (if interpreted in terms of the keyboard) also serves as means for almost unlimited modulation, owing to the fact that it can be enharmonically regarded as belonging to four tonalities that are noted differently. Any diminished seventh-chord, moreover, can be merged directly in another a semitone lower and so on, so that a pivot for any modulation can be secured almost immediately from any given harmonic situation.

Sext. The fifth of the Canonical Hours (noon). Also the interval of the sixth. G.

Sextet, Sestet, Sextuor. A group of six performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. trio, quartet, etc. G.

Sextole, Sextolet, Sextuplet. A 6-note group occupying the time of 4 or 8. Properly, its notes should be grouped in three pairs; otherwise it amounts only to a double triplet. See Note-Groups. G.

Sextus. In the a cappella music of the 16th century, a sixth part added to the usual four and to a quintus; cf. quintus. G.

Shade. See Shutter.

In organ-making, the pitch of any open pipe may be affected by the proximity of any object to its top and is then said to be shaded. See also tuners under Pipe.

Shake. Same as trill; see Embellishments. G.

Shallot. In organ-making, the metal-tube in the reed of a reed-pipe to which the vibrating-tongue is attached and in the side of which is the aperture against whose edges the tongue strikes. The shallot is the passage through which the air passes from the boot to the body or horn above. It is set in the center of the block.

Sharp. The sign or character # (originally derived from b cancellatum, that is, b), used in notation to indicate that the pitch-significance of the staff-degree on which it stands (and hence of any notes on that degree) is raised a half-step or semitone; opposed to b or flat; see Notation. Hence, as a noun, a tone or note a half-step higher than a given tone (as the sharp of g or g-sharp), or, on the keyboard, a key (digital) next to the right of a given key (yielding a tone a half-step higher than that of the latter); as an adjective, of tones, above a given or intended pitch, or, of intervals, major (as compared with minor) or augmented (as compared with perfect), or, of keys or tonalities, having sharps in the signature; or, as a verb, to produce a tone higher than the given or intended pitch, or, in notation and nomenclature, to attach a sharp to a degree, note or note-name (often incorrectly written sharpen). Opposed in almost all senses to flat. G.

In the alphabetic or letter-notation, following the analogy of the flats, the half-steps gradually recognized as falling within the longer steps of the scale were sometimes regarded as variants of or substitutes for those just below them; thus came the names a-sharp, c-sharp, d-sharp, f-sharp and g-sharp, all of which, on the modern keyboard are represented by black keys. This usage was extended to include b-sharp and e-sharp, which on the keyboard are represented by white keys. As black keys also bear names of flats they are often popularly called sharps and flats.

The double-sharp, × (formerly ✕), has twice the value and effect of a sharp, raising the significance of a staff-degree two half-steps and, on the keyboard, referring to a key next but one to the right of a given key; it is virtually the sharp of a sharp.

Shawm, Shalm. A complete family of about six wood-wind instruments, sounded by means of a double-reed mouthpiece enclosed in a pirouette, with 6-10 finger-holes (in the larger varieties partly operated by a lever-mechanism within a wooden sleeve). The tube is conical, with a flaring bell; in the longest cases as much as 10 feet long, in the shortest about 2. On the Continent the lower members of the group were usually called pommers or bombards and pommer is often extended to all. The family is the direct forerunner of the modern oboes, English horns and bassoons, besides being related to the older clarinets. G.

The name shawm comes from the Latin calamus, pipe, whence also are the French chalumeau and the German schalmel. In the version of the Psalms included in the English Prayer Book it is incorrectly used for cornet or horn in xviiii. 6.

Shepherd's-Flute or Pipe. See Musette. G.

Shift. In playing the violin or similar instrument, any placing of the left hand on the finger-board (for the purpose of stopping the strings) except that close to the nut. When placed next to the nut, the hand is said to be in the first position; when moved down so that the first finger falls where the second did before (raising the stopping-pitch by a semitone), in the second position or at the half-shift; and so on for the third position or whole-shift and the fourth position or double-shift. When out of the first position the hand is said to be on the shift. See Position. G.

It is not likely that shifts were used in playing the older viols until after 1600 and were not generally adopted for the violin till late in the 17th century. Their use was delayed by the fact that many players continued to hold their instruments upright in front of the body instead of extended horizontally as now.

In trombone-playing, any extension of the effective length of the tube by means of the telescopic slide. When the slide is not extended, it is said to be in the first position; when moved out so as to lower the pitch by a semitone, in the second position; and so on for the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh positions, the last lowering the pitch by three whole-tones. Any one of the movements between these positions is a shift; often transferred to the positions themselves.

Shofar, Shophar. An ancient Hebrew trumpet of horn or wood, used for signals and in connection with the Temple and synagogue ritual. It was probably derived from a primitive ram's-horn, being distinct from the longer chatzotzerah, made of metal. G.

Short Meter or Measure. In hymnody, an iambic stanza-form having the syllable-scheme 6-6-8-6, with alternate rhymes. Abbreviated S.M.

Short meter double (S.M.D.) has two quatrains instead of one. Short particular meter (S.P.M.) has the syllable-scheme 6-6-8, 6-6-8.

Short Octave. See under Octave. G.

Shutter. In organ-making, one of the hinged or pivoted blinds or lids in the front of a swell-box, operated by means of a swell-pedal or, in the reed-organ, by a knee-lever.

Si. See Solmization. G.

Siciliana. See Dances. G.

Side-. For side-beat, see Beat. For side-drum, see Drum. In wind-instruments, side-hole is used in general for holes in the side of the tube, whether operated by the fingers direct or by means of keys; often called finger-hole.

Sight. An old term for voice or part; see under Faux-Bourdon.

Sight-Reading. The act or process of interpreting written or printed music with the voice or on an instrument without previous inspection or practice; usually equivalent to sight-singing, but applicable to sight-playing as well. One who is expert in the process is a sight-reader, sight-singer or sight-player.

Sight-reading involves an accurate knowledge of and familiarity with the system of notation used, the power to form quick and correct mental conceptions of the tonal effects which the notation represents, sufficient technical readiness with the voice or the instrument to be able to realize those effects and a general alertness of mental and physical action to bring all these elements of the process into quick and sure coordination. Sight-singing forms a leading part of school-music and is often emphasized in the systems of music-schools and conservatories under the name of solfeggio.

Sign. Any one of the arbitrary or conventional characters or marks used in noting music or musical effects, usually exclusive of verbal or literal abbreviations; see Notation, Tablature and Abbreviations.

Signal. Any brief rhythmical or melodic combination of tones that is used to convey information or direction, especially such conventional sounds as are used in military and naval drill and tactics (usually given by drum, bugle or trumpet), but including also calls used by herdsmen and the like.

In conducting, various motions on the part of the leader are often called signals, such as an upward movement of the baton as a sign to players or singers that a piece is about to begin, etc. Many leaders use special motions of their own for certain purposes.

In older organs, the bellows-signal is a mechanical device to call the bellows-blower into action.

Signature. See Notation and Scale. G.

Similar Motion. See Motion.

Simple. Denoting that which is relatively plain, pure or lacking in complexity. Thus a simple tone is one without perceptible over-tones or upper partials, occasionally one that is not duplicated or reinforced; a simple interval is one not greater than an octave; simple measure, rhythm or time refers to a rhythm in which the measure is not subdivided by secondary accents (that is, undivided duple or triple rhythm); simple harmony or counterpoint is harmony or counterpoint without elaboration or figuration, sometimes also without much modulation; in brass-wind instruments, a simple tube is one without finger-holes, keys or valves (as in the plainer forms of bugle, trumpet and horn).

Simplification-System. A name used by Vögler for a method of rearranging and condensing the parts of a pipe-organ so as to reduce space, avoid intricacy in connecting parts and lower the cost of manufacture.

It included the omission of some stops (such as mixtures) and many details in the plantation of the pipes with reference to the keyboard. During the last quarter of the 18th century this system exercised considerable influence on organ-making. G.

Sinfonia, Sinfonie. The old term for the forms later called overture or symphony. The diminutive sinfonietta remains as the name for a short or small symphony.

Singing. See Voice, Vocalization, Song, etc. G.

Singing-School. A popular class for the study and practice of plain church-tunes and some secular part-songs, such as was frequent in England and especially America for a century or more from about 1740. Such schools played an important part in fostering musical interest in some localities.

Singspiel. The form of song-play that is indigenous to Germany and Austria, properly consisting of spoken dialogue with interspersed songs and part-songs of a type more or less akin to the folk-song, but at times somewhat influenced by the more dramatic style of the prevalent Italian opera. The singspiel is obviously analogous to the English ballad-opera and somewhat so to the Italian opera buffa. It finally was merged into the general advance of the comic opera and operetta. G.

The germ of the form was in the medieval plays, especially as secularized in the 15th century. In the later 16th century Sachs and Ayer at Nuremberg were leaders in redeeming song-plays from vulgarity, but without welding them into much unity. The stimulus received from Italy after 1600 was evidenced by Schütz' Dafne and Staden's Seelewig in 1627 and '44 respectively. But the first established interest in the singspiel as a national type was at Hamburg during the half-century from 1678, the chief composers being Strunck, Theile, J.W.Franck, Conradi and Krieger. Some offshoots of this interest appeared elsewhere, but for a time after about 1730 it died out under the competition of the Italian opera-troupes. It was revived on a finer plane after about 1765 by J.A.Hiller, Joh. André, Reichart, J.A.P.Schulz and Zumsteg, all of whom were active in the establishment of the true lied as an artistic type of dignity and value. After 1800 the singspiel lost itself gradually in the operetta.

Sink-a-pace. Same as cinque-pace; see Dances. G.

Siren, Sirène. An acoustical instrument for the production of tones at some desired pitch as measured by vibrations or for determining the vibration-rate of given tones. It was invented by Caignard de la Tour in 1819 and later improved by others. G.

It consists essentially of two circular disks of metal, pierced with small holes in one or more circular rows, the upper disk being on a spindle so that it can revolve freely and the lower disk forming the top of an air-chamber into which compressed air can be driven. The holes in the disk match exactly, but are opposed in direction enough so that the air-pressure sets the upper disk in revolution, the speed of which can be registered by means of dials. Tones are produced by the air-puffs as the disk holes coincide and their exact number per second can be taken by inspection. By varying the air-pressure the pitch of any given tone can be imitated and determined. The delicacy of the method is increased by arranging to propel the revolving disk by outside means instead of by the inner air-current.

Sir Roger de Coverly. See Dances. G.

Sistrum. An Oriental instrument consisting of a loop-shaped metal-frame carrying several transverse rods, with or without attached disks or rings. It is sounded by shaking, producing a jingling noise rather than a tone. It was particularly associated with the temple-ritual of Isis in Egypt.

Sixteenth-Note. Same as semiquaver; see Notation.

Sixth. The interval between the first and the sixth degrees of the major scale or any similar interval, having the vibration-ratio 5/3 (but see below); also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point; in a standard scale called the submediant. G.

The above standard interval is called the major sixth. Other intervals are the minor sixth, which is a semitone shorter (ratio, 8/5), and the augmented or extreme sixth, which is a semitone longer (ratio, usually 125/72, but sometimes 225/128). The Pythagorean sixth was perceptibly sharper than the modern major (ratio, 27/16).

Chord of the added sixth, a subdominant triad with the sixth of the root added (equivalent to a seventh-chord on the supertonic in the first inversion). Chords of the extreme sixth, chords of disputed derivation that appear in three forms in minor keys, all having the sixth of the scale in the bass, the keynote (third from the bass) and the sharp of the subdominant (augmented or extreme sixth from the bass), but differing in name if other tones are added; the plain form (without an added tone) is called the Italian sixth, the form with the second of the scale added is the French sixth and the form with the third of the scale added is the German sixth. A chord consisting of the subdominant of a minor key, its minor third and its minor sixth is called a Neapolitan sixth. In all these cases it is possible to explain the forms in different ways (as by the theory of melodic substitution, or by a transient compounding or mixture of tonalities, or by supposing a vestige of the full or Doric minor, etc.).

For chords called of the sixth, of the sixth and fourth, of the sixth and fifth, of the sixth, fourth and third and of the sixth, fourth and second (often called briefly of six, of six-four, of six-five, of six-four-three and of six-four-two), see Thorough-bass.

Sixty-fourth-Note. Same as hemidemisemi-quaver; see Notation.

Sketch. Either a tentative outline of a composition or a slight instrumental piece that is designedly left unelaborated in detail or that contains some kind of pictorial or delineative suggestion of an object or scene. G.

Skip. In a melody, motion or progression to a tone more than one degree distant; opposed to step. Such motion may be called skipwise (opposed to stepwise), or disjunct (opposed to conjunct).

Slide. See Embellishments; also see Slur and Portamento. Also, in some brass-wind instruments, a U-shaped section of tubing so adjusted as part of the main tube that it can be pulled out telescopically, thus lengthening the effective length of the tube and lowering its pitch; such a slide is the characteristic feature of the trombone and is somewhat used in the trumpet and the horn; its principle is the same as that of the crook, but differs in being momentarily adjustable. Also, in such instruments, a small section used similarly to make small adjustments in the pitch of the instrument; a tuning-slide. Also, in the organ, same as slider. G.

Slide-horn, slide-trombone, slide-trumpet, etc., terms for instruments played by means of a slide rather than by keys or valves.

Sliding relish, see Embellishments.

Slider. In organ-making, a wooden strip, perforated with holes corresponding with the pipes in a stop and movable sidewise in the top of a wind-chest so as to either admit or exclude the air to or from the stop, its position being controlled by a stop-knob at the console. It is virtually a general valve or gate for a stop. There are as many sliders as the instrument has stops. See Organ.

Slow. Of tempo or pace, denoting that which has relatively long pulses; opposed to quick or fast. Thus, in a sonata or symphony, the slow movement is the andante, adagio or largo that usually constitutes the second (rarely the third) movement. Slow music is music of a solemn-or pathetic kind that accompanies a tragic or sad situation in a play or a funeral occasion. G.

Slur. In singing, the union of two or more different tones on a single syllable or the notes so united; also see Notation. G.

Small Chorus, Small Orchestra. A chorus or orchestra of limited size, either less than the usual number of performers or a section of a full chorus or orchestra used in contrast with the entire number.

For small octave, see Pitch and Octave.

Snap. See Scotch Snap.

Snare. See side- or snare-drum under Drum. G.

Socket. In the clarinet, the metal-ring by which the mouthpiece is fastened to the upper joint of the tube.

Soft Pedal. See under Pedal.

Soggetto. In counterpoint, same as subject or theme, especially when of moderate length (less than an andamento and more than an attacco). G.

Sol, Soh. See Solmization. G.

Sol-fa. See Solmization and Tonic Sol-fa. Also an old name for the roll of paper used in directing a cappella singing. G.

Solfeggio. The use of syllables in vocal study; see Solmization. Also a vocal exercise based upon vowels, syllables or words (when employed simply as forms of vocalization). Also extended to the general rudimentary discipline in sight-reading, vocalization and part-singing that forms part of technical training under a teacher or in a music-school or conservatory. See Sight-Reading. G.

Solmization, Solmisation. The act, process or general system of using certain syllables as symbols and names for the degrees of a scale or for the tones of a particular key or tonality, whether as a help in elementary study of intervals and of sight-reading or as a sort of generalized notation. The most-used system is that attributed to Guido d'Arezzo (11th century), though with many extensions and special applications not originally contemplated. But various similar systems have been proposed, and the principle seems to have been applied in ancient times. G.

The Guidonian or Arctinian syllables, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, are taken from the initial syllables of a hymn to St. John the Baptist—'Ut Sueant laxis | Resonare fibris | Mira gestorum | Famuli tuorum, | Solve polluti | Labii reatum, | Sancte Johannes.' These were used for the successive tones of each of the hexachords in the system of the Middle Ages (see table under Hexachord), the short step or semitone being always mi-fa. In the 16th century the system began to trend away from the hexachord-plan and to adopt the modern octave-conception (properly a heptachord-plan). So before 1600 si was added to the earlier series for the seventh tone of the major scale (si possibly taken from the initial letters of the last line of the above hymn). About 1670 do was suggested in place of ut (probably as more singable), making the series ut or do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si. In this form it passed into modern use.

The original principle of the syllables was to designate tones and intervals in an abstract series, without regard to absolute pitch. But, when they were applied to the major scale, which was at first specially represented by the series having the letter-names c, d, e, f, g, a, b, the tendency set in, particularly in Italy, France and Belgium, to treat the syllables as names for these particular tones—as a duplicate notation. This usage, which is essentially unfortunate, has persisted till the present in those countries, and the characteristic value of the syllables as designations of relations rather than of pitches has been lost. This method of solmization and nomenclature is known as that of the fixed do, and the historic method, by way of contrast, is known as that of the movable do.

From time to time other sets of syllables have been advocated for one reason or another. Thus Waelrant of Antwerp in the late 16th century proposed bo, ce, dî, ga, lo, ma, nî (later called bocedization or voces belgæ), Hitzler of Stuttgart in 1628 incorporated the first seven letters of the alphabet in la, be, ce, de, me, je, ge (called bezbization) and Graun of Berlin in the early 18th century tried do, me, nî, po, tu, la, be (called damenization). Even before this all such novelties were classed together under the name bobization. None of these gained much currency.

In England from early in the 17th century and thence in America during the 18th century a reduced system came into general use, employing only mi, fa, sol, la (mainly the last three) in a way that slightly recalls the tetrachord plan of ancient Greek music.

As the original diatonic scale was expanded through the introduction of intercalary tones in the longer steps, the seven syllables proved increasingly inadequate to represent tones and intervals other than the diatonic. As early as 1746 it was proposed in Italy to adopt five supplementary syllables, namely, pa, bo, tu, de, no, for the five 'black' keys (from c-sharp to b-flat), and not long afterward appeared the first suggestion of a system in which chromatic tones should have syllable-names in some way derived from the diatonic tones which they may replace and from which they may be said to be derived. This recognized the possibility that a chromatic tone might be either of two tones according to harmonic conditions. Thus, exactly as was done with the letter-names, the syllable-names became double as far as chromatics were concerned. The method that has had widest use is that which changes the vowel to -i whenever the syllable represents what on the keyboard is called a 'sharp' and to -e whenever it represents what is called a 'flat.' An upward chromatic scale would then read do, dî, re, rî, mî, fa, fî, sol, sî, la, tî, si, do and a downward scale si, se, la, le, sol, se, fa, mî, me, re, re, do. Both of these have the infelicity of duplicate syllables (si in the one and re in the other). The most complete development of this method (that of the Tonic Sol-fa system) obviates both of these by making the seventh of the basal syllables tî (with the flat te) and the flat of re rah.

The recognized spelling for the syllables is that given above and all the vowels are pronounced after the 'Italian' or 'Continental' fashion. To adapt the method to English use, the Tonic Sol-fa system uses the spellings doh, ray, me, fa, soh, lah, te, with de, re, fe, se and le for sharps and ta, la, sa, ma and rah for flats. In this system, also, notation is simplified by representing do by d, re by r, mî by m, fa by f, sol by s, la by l and tî by t.

Solo. As an adjective, denoting that which is intended for or is performed by a single singer or player, either absolutely alone or with a subordinated accompaniment; opposed to concerted or ensemble and also to tutti. G.

In many extended works, like oratorios, cantatas, etc., the portions assigned as solos are called solo-numbers, solo-parts, etc., and those who sing them are solo-singers or soloists. A chorus or orchestra may include performers who regularly perform solo-passages as they occur; such performers are known as soloists or as solo-soprano, solo-tenor, solo-violin, solo-horn, etc., as the case may be. In the organ, a stop usually used for solo-effects is a solo-stop; in large instruments several such stops may be grouped in a separate solo-organ, with its own keyboard (usually the fourth, above the others); sometimes, however, that which is properly the choir-organ is called the solo-organ. Solo-pitch is a scordatura or special tuning (of an instrument like the violin) adopted by a solo-player for special effects.

As a noun, any piece or passage intended to be performed by a single singer or player, either with or without accompaniment.

It was the recognition of the solo and its development into artistic expressiveness that brought about the revolution in musical style from 1600 onward, with the rise of the opera and the oratorio.

Sommerophone. A form of euphonium or bass-saxhorn invented by Sommer of Weimar in 1843.

Sonata. A term which at first, like several others, had a vague general meaning, but which gradually acquired a special and technical sense. Originally (from about 1580) it meant any composition to be played ('sounded') on instruments; opposed to cantata (a piece to be sung). Sometimes it referred to a work for an ensemble (like sinfonia), but it also attached itself to pieces for the violin with continuo or for organ. When these tended to be arranged in two or three separate sections, the terms sonata da chiesa and sonata da camera became common, the former designating a set of polyphonic movements, the latter usually a set of dances (what was later called suite). But these forms were not rigidly defined. The violin-sonata became before 1700 the common name for such more elaborate pieces as later came to be called concertos. Sonatas for the harpsichord seem to have been first so named by Kuhnau (1696). Sonatas for violin with a full harpsichord-part were first written by J. S. Bach (about 1720). The term was used by Domenico Scarlatti for pieces in a song-like form, with repeated sections. In various works before 1750 may be seen a tendency to develop two themes in contrasted keys in addition to the prevalent tendency to use two or three contrasted movements. But there was no consensus as to style or method.

After 1750, however, as one of the salient features of the organizing influence of the Mannheim school, the form became more definite and constant as one of the chief expressions of the new homophonic style of composition. In the development K. P. E. Bach doubtless exercised a special leadership, though the perfecting of the type waited for the work of the Viennese circle. G.

The two characteristic aspects of the completed type may be designated by the terms movement-plan and sonata-form proper. The movement-plan included three or four distinct movements, the first an allegro in sonata-form, the second an andante or other slow movement in song-form (or something similar) and the third either a minuet or a brisk allegro (usually in dance-form, but sometimes in reduced sonata-form); if four movements were used, the third was usually a minuet and the fourth an allegro. Beethoven often substituted the more dashing scherzo for the rather stately minuet and also made the fourth movement a rippling rondo. Thus the plan derived elements from several sources, including the overture and the suite. For sonata-form, see article below.

The term sonata gradually became restricted to pieces in the above plan and form for some solo-instrument, such as the violin, the flute, the harpsichord or the piano. Sonatas for the chamber-ensemble came to be called trios, quartets, quintets, etc., as the case might be. Sonatas for the orchestra were entitled symphonies, or, if for orchestra and solo-instrument, concertos.

Throughout the 19th century the term sonata continued to be used, sometimes with a somewhat close following of the classical type, sometimes with much freedom of treatment. But the traditional movement-plan can usually be traced in its alternation of the quick and the slow and its studied contrast of forms of internal structure.

Sonata-Form. The name applied to the developed form of the first movement of a sonata; hence often called first-movement-form. It includes (a) a division of the movement into three main parts or sections, the exposition, the development or free fantasia and the recapitulation or reprise (cf. the analogous sections in the fugue and, less notably, in the aria); (b) the systematic use of two themes in contrasted keys and usually in contrasted style. The second theme is regularly in the key of the dominant or, if the first is in minor, in the key of the relative major.

In the exposition—sometimes prefaced by a slow introduction—the first theme is promptly presented and usually repeated, constituting a strain of some length in the original key. The second theme is then presented in a similar way in the contrasted key, often with a coda, and the section ends in the key of the second theme. This section is almost always repeated in full.

For the development (as for the development in the fugue) there is no established rule. In general, it is understood that the tonal materials in the two main themes will be employed in such way as to bring out or 'develop' their latent possibilities. This may be accomplished more or less contrapuntally or by melodic or harmonic extension and modification, almost always with a free use of modulation. In the development, as also in the exposition, episodes may occur that decidedly influence the treatment, even to the point of supplying further thematic material. The development properly leads up to a considerable climax in the key of the dominant, preparing the way for the conclusion.

The recapitulation properly presents again both the main themes, but the second is now in the same key with the first. The end is usually marked by an extended coda.

In general, the two themes are contrasted in vigor and style, the first being sharp-cut and animated, the second flowing and often distinctly song-like. The one is often said to supply an element that may be called 'masculine,' while the second is more 'feminine.' But both are essentially homophonic and harmonic in nature and each constitutes a full strain of several measures, defined by cadences.

Sonatina. A short or simple sonata, usually in not more than three movements and without an elaborate development. G.

Song. In general, the process, act or result of vocal utterance in the tones and forms of music; opposed on the one hand to speech (which is non-musical) and on the other to instrumental music (which is non-vocal). The term is also extended to the sounds made by certain birds (see Bird-Song). G.

The line between speech and song is ordinarily obvious, though technically it sometimes seems arbitrary. Both use language in conjunction with tonal sounds and shifts of pitch, but with speech the conveyance of thought by means of the words is practically the whole object, whereas with song the attention is so far transferred to the tones and their relations in melody and rhythm that the words may be neglected without wholly impairing the general effect. Indeed, this possible independence of words is implied in the instrumental form called a song without words or any similar lyric form.

Specifically, a short poem, or a musical setting of it (normally for a single voice), in which the verse-form is rhythmically and metrically regular, with lines equal or in some way commensurate and usually grouped by length and rhymes into couplets, triplets or quatrains, so as to form stanzas of similar structure. The term may be extended to a prose text or its vocal setting (as in terms like plain-song, prick-song, etc.), but the typical song is in verse of the distinctive species known as lyric (as opposed to epic or dramatic), so called because of its obvious kinship with music. For details about musical song-form, see art. below. Cognate terms are the German lied, the French chanson, the Italian canzona, etc.

The term is somewhat extended to harmonic music for more than one voice, but a song for two voices is usually called a duet, one for three a terzet or trio, one for four a quartet, etc. A song set for three or more voices may be called a glee, part-song or chorus, according as there are one, several or many voices to the part. In distinction from all these a song for one voice is a solo-song.

Songs are the most spontaneous of musical forms and hence are found among all peoples. Those that are adopted into usage and preserved as common possessions in a tribe or nation are known as folk-songs (q. v.). These are not so much the production of an individual as in some degree the joint production of many users, their exact form being determined by merely oral tradition. In distinction from such instinctive creations a song that is deliberately composed under cultured conditions is an art-song. Such a song, however, may be cast in a form that has the simplicity and naïveté of the folk-song and is then called folk-like (volkstümliches). An art-song composed with reference to production in concert may be called a concert-song, especially if provided with orchestral accompaniment.

The typical folk-song is strophical, in that the same melody recurs for a succession of stanzas. A multitude of art-songs are similarly constructed, as are such part-songs as psalm- and hymn-tunes (for which at the first folk-songs furnished the pattern). Many an art-song, however, is 'through-composed' (durchkomponiertes), in that the melody varies for successive stanzas. Such a song may approximate what is usually called an aria. Many folk-songs, further, are really dance-songs, being designed to accompany and direct folk-dances. The same style often appears in art-songs, even though they are not to be used with actual dancing. On the other hand, both species of song may have a contemplative or sentimental quality, even to the pitch of melancholy or pathos. Whatever color of emotion the verse may have is apt to be matched by appropriate expression in the melody.

With reference to both topic and style songs are often described by qualifying terms like rustic, pastoral, domestic, nature-, love-, patriotic, national, martial or war-, work-, hunting-, nuptial, funeral-, festal, bacchanalian, comic, satirical, nonsense-, etc. In popular entertainments the topical song and the patter-song are common, the one turning on jocose reference to things and persons, the other utilizing some catching collection of words. Many trivial songs are known as jingles.

Although the song is plainly the source from which the whole art of music was derived, it is notable that the professional pursuit of music has often seemed to lie far away from its point of origin. The song itself as a special object of attention and cultivation can hardly be said to have been recognized until just before and just after 1800. Then, but not till then, composers of the highest ability began, especially under the leadership of geniuses like Schubert, Loewe, Schumann, Franz and Brahms, to disclose its wealth of artistic possibility. Since about 1850 practically all composers have sought to express themselves in songs as well as in the grander and more discursive types of composition and public interest in the song-recital and in song-literature has grown apace. Thus the lyric miniature has found its place alongside of the heroic portrait and the dramatic canvas. In all this modern treatment of the song there is a marked tendency to elevate the accompaniment on the piano or by the orchestra into full parity of interest with the vocal melody and thus to make the whole more or less an ensemble-form.

The historic subject here touched upon is of too vast extent to be even summarized in a few sentences. But some rapid notes may be added.

It may be that at the start Gregorian melodies were adapted from the forms of song common in the post-classical age; but in its medieval development, and still more in its modern survival, plain-song stands alien and distant from ordinary feeling as a piece of ecclesiastical archaism.

When composition in parts began to take shape, secular song as then practiced was somewhat influential in helping to fix methods and in supplying some themes for treatment; but the course of contrapuntal development rapidly swung away into an increasing maze of scholastic intricacy or mystic abstraction. Against this there were some reactions, as in the successive movements of the Troubadours, the Trouvères, the Minnesinger and the cultivators of the so-called ars nova in the 14th century. But these did not at once secure leadership.

In the 16th century secular music began to compete on more equal terms with sacred music. But the effect of its character was at first greatest in stimulating the polyphonic madrigal and in bringing instrumental music to life. At the end of the century it suddenly branched off into the field of dramatic music. Here, although the vocal solo soon became supreme, the emphasis was given to forms of theatre song on the ornate or grand scale which were again removed from the simple directness of the song proper. Throughout the period of the concert-opera it was left for instrumental music to serve as the avenue by which the sense of rhythm, melody and harmony as known in popular song and dance was gradually introduced into the changing spirit of professional method and style.

By the middle of the 17th century the force of this pressure became sufficient to bring about a revolution. The widespread adoption then of the homophonic style was virtually the coming to the throne of a new dynasty, one arising from the people and speaking the language of rhythmic melody as they knew it. But the first applications of the new authority were in the field of the instrumental ensemble or the keyboard sonata. Not till late in the century, in the revival of the German singspiel and in the new attention to the folk-song, were there clear signs of the song-renaissance of the 19th century.

Song-Form. It is evident that no generalized statement can be made as to the form in which all songs are made. But there are prevailing tendencies that can be identified and described. In particular, in contrast with the rhythmic formlessness of Gregorian cantillation and with the web-like structure of counterpoint, there is a type of form which is characteristic of many true songs, as well as of many dances. This is known as song-form, which is essentially the musical analogue of lyric verse-form as found in modern poetry and hence characterized by accentual and rhythmical uniformity rather than by the metrical schemes of ancient poetry.

The primary rhythm may be duple or triple in any of their varieties. The measures thus formed tend to group themselves in pairs (more rarely in threes) and thus to constitute phrases parallel to the verse-lines. These tend to unite into couplets, triplets or quatrains so as to make a period, usually parallel to a stanza. The stanza may be simply repeated as many times as the words require or fresh stanzas may be made on the same model as the first. The commonest type is one made up of measures grouped in twos, fours, eights and sixteens, each larger unit being defined by a positive cadence. In other words, song-form, like dance-form, tends to follow a regular rhythm of measures as measures follow a rhythm of beats. See Rhythm.

Songman. Same as gleeman or, sometimes, as vicar choral (choirman).

Song-School, Sang-School. The English or Scottish analogue of the schola cantorum or maîtrise of the Continent. Such schools were common in connection with monasteries, collegiate churches and cathedrals prior to the Reformation, but were then mostly discontinued. See Maîtrise. G.

Sonometer. An instrument for acoustical experiments and measurements; usually some form of improved monochord.

Soprano. The highest variety of the female or the boy's voice; also called treble; see Voice. Also a voice-part for such a voice, or one who uses it. Also any instrument whose range corresponds to the soprano-voice (in this sense treble is more common). A soprano-voice whose range and quality are somewhat intermediate between a true soprano and an alto is called mezzo-soprano. G.

The term is akin to 'sovereign' in the sense of highest or supreme, referring to the place of the soprano as a part in harmonic combinations.

Soprano-voices are variously designated by qualifiers that define their special character, as dramatic, coloratura-, lyric, etc. In part-music they may be divided into first and second. Adult male singers who sing soprano are either natural (falsest) or artificial (castrati).

For soprano-clef, see Notation. Soprano-string, in the violin, same as chanterelle or e-string.

Sordellina, Sourdellina. A small form of musette or bagpipe.

Sordine, Sordino, Sourdine. Same as mute. Also extended to devices in the piano or the harmonium whereby the tone is made less intense, as by means of the soft pedal in the piano and a check upon the wind-supply in the harmonium. G.

Sordino is also used for pochette and sourdine for a muffled lute or spinet.

Sordono, Sordun. A form of bombard or pommer with 12 finger-holes; it was made in four or five sizes, so as to form a family; see Bombard.

Sortie, Sortita. Same as postlude. Sortita is also used for the first or entrance-aria of a leading singer in an opera; cf. entrée.

Sostinente Pianoforte. A piano provided with any device whereby the tones can be prolonged at will, as in the many forms of piano-violin, piano-harmonium, etc. G.

Soubrette. Properly, an actress in comedy who plays the part of a waiting-maid, but extended to any one who excels in parts requiring pertness, tricky by-play and coquetry.

Sound. Any state of vibration in a solid or a gas which, when conveyed to the ear, produces the sensation of hearing; see Acoustics. For musical purposes those sounds that are called tones are of chief importance, but noises are also considered so far as they are effective with tones in certain instrumental combinations and in the details of speech and song; see under Percussion-Instruments and Phonetics.

Soundboard. In various stringed instruments, a thin sheet or plate of sonorous wood so placed behind or beneath the strings as to intensify and enrich their tone by sympathetic vibration. In the various lutes and viols this is the front or belly of the body itself. In the piano it is a large and distinct member of somewhat intricate construction (sometimes called belly, after the analogy of the violin). In the organ it is the top of the wind-chest, in which the pipes are inserted. Sometimes called sounding-board. G.

Regarded as a resonator, the soundboard of a piano, for example, performs a phenomenal variety of functions. If well made, it responds at once to tones of every grade of intensity and becomes inactive the instant they cease. It reinforces with equal readiness tones of a wide range of pitch, including not only those sounded from the keyboard, but whatever overtones these evoke in any way. And it adjusts itself perfectly to the most intricate mesh of competing and conflicting counterpoint and to the impact of extended and massive chords. Its action, then, is multiple and complex to an incalculable extent, and this action within its molecular texture can be kept up for a long period of constant use without rapid deterioration. Much the same can be said of the soundboard of a violin, except that the strains to which it is subjected are very much less.

Sound-Body, Sound-Box, Sound-Chest.

Names applied to the solid structure, usually hollow, which constitutes the main or central portion of many instruments and by the sympathetic vibration of which (with that of its contained air) the general sonority and character of the tone are determined; also called resonance-box or resonator. The shapes employed vary indefinitely, as well as the materials, fittings and decorations, and there are usually one or more sound-holes. Specially conspicuous are the numerous varieties of circular or elliptical contour found in most members of the lute- and viol-classes, with the rectangles and trapezoids common among the dulcimers, zithers and most keyboard-instruments. In many ethnic examples natural objects are utilized, such as gourds, tortoise-shells, etc. It is upon the sound-box that the instinct for carved, painted or inlaid decoration is apt to expend itself, often producing results more extraordinary as beautiful handiwork than as purely musical implements.

Sound-Bow. In bells, the thickened lower portion, against which the clapper strikes; see Bell.

Sound-Hole. In almost all instruments of the lute-, viol-, dulcimer- and zither-classes, an opening in the face or front of the body which tends to increase its elasticity and responsiveness as a resonator, to render the total tone clear and incisive and, incidentally, to add to the generally decorative appearance. In many cases such holes are single and circular; in others they are paired and have peculiar shapes (as the f-holes in the violin and its relatives). The exact placing of the sound-hole or holes is often of much importance to the tone-quality. G.

Sound-Post. In instruments of the viol-class, a small wooden prop or brace placed vertically between the front or belly and the back, close to the treble-foot of the bridge. It withstands the crushing pressure of the strings, transmits their vibration to the back and adds to the rigidity of the body as a whole. So important is its function to the tone-quality that it is often called the 'soul' of the instrument. Also sounding-post. G.

Sound-Wave. A zone of alternate condensation and rarefaction in a gaseous medium like the air, by which sounds are produced and propagated. It is analogous to the vibration of solids, but the latter is usually transverse, while the motion of the air-particles is longitudinal (with reference to the line of propagation).

Space. See Staff and Notation. G.

Speak. Of a wind-instrument, to sound or emit tone when blown. Its sound is often called its speech, especially in the case of organ-pipes. These terms are occasionally extended to the sound of instruments of other kinds, as to those played by means of a bow. G.

In reed-instruments like the oboe and the clarinet, speaker-keys are keys opening small holes in the tube that are so placed as to facilitate producing tones on the basis of one of the overtones of the tube instead of its fundamental tone. They tend to establish a loop in the air-column at the point opened.

In tubular wind-instruments, the speaking-length of the air-column is measured from the place where the vibration is set up (the mouth or mouthpiece, the reed, etc.) to the first point where the continuity or integrity of the tube is interrupted (the end of the tube, a side-hole, etc.); also called vibrating or effective length. The speaking-length of wood-wind instruments is mostly varied by the opening of side-holes, but that of brass-wind instruments mostly by changing the total length of the tube by means of crooks or slides. In both these cases the tube is thus enabled to yield tones of many different pitches. An organ-pipe, on the other hand, yields but one tone, so that its speaking-length is determined by the process of tuning.

Specification. An enumeration and detailed description of the several items of structure and arrangement to be incorporated in the making of a given pipe-organ. This is required as for no other musical instrument, since such organs are not as a rule made in quantity, but with reference to a specific purchaser and place. Cf. disposition. G.

Spinet. The name most used for early or small forms of the harpsichord; also virginal and couched harp. Its outer form was either rectangular, polygonal or (in later models) harp-shaped, in either case with the keyboard set into the long side, so that the general disposition was transverse to the player. The compass was usually about 4 octaves, but the lower octave was often 'short' (lacking some tones). There was ordinarily but one string to the key, so that the tone was not loud. In all these respects it differed from the developed harpsichord. The latter was intended specially for public use, while the spinet was a private or domestic form. A few examples are extant with two keyboards side by side (for duet-playing). Most spinets, like clavichords, were made without legs and set upon a table or frame. G.

Spitzharfe. A small triangular harp or, better, psaltery, made to be set upright on a table. The strings were in two sets, with the soundboard between, so as to be played by the two hands like a lyre. Also called arpanetta, flügelharfe, etc.

Springing Bow. In violin-playing, a term covering two or three uses of the bow for producing a series of short or staccato tones. It involves letting the elasticity of the bow throw it off the string. Its varieties are indicated by the terms spiccato (picchetato, piqué), saltato and ricochet.

Spun String. See Covered String.

Square Piano. See Piano.

Stabat Mater. The sequence (probably by Jacobus de Benedictis, 13th cent.) which is sung in the Roman Catholic Church on the Friday before Palm Sunday and the third Sunday in September, being a contemplation of the Virgin at the Cross, or any musical setting of it. G.

The text is in 10 stanzas of which the first is Stabat mater dolorosa

Juxta crucem lacrymosa,
Dum pendebat filius.
Cujus animam gementem,
Contristatam et dolentem,
Pertransiit gladius.

It has been elaborately treated by many composers, not only in form for ecclesiastical use, but also as a cantata or lyric oratorio.

An imitation of this, contemplating the Virgin at the Manger, is another poem, possibly by the same author. This has never come into liturgical use. Its opening lines are

Stabat mater speciosa
Juxta fœnum gaudiosa,
Dum jacebat parvulus.

This has been incorporated in Liszt's Christus.

Staccato. See Terms of Performance. G.

Stadtpeiffer. See Town-Musicians.

Staff, Stave. See Notation. G (Stave).

Stahlharmonika. A keyboard-instrument in which the sound was produced from graduated series of small steel-bars by the friction of little bows. It was invented by Nobe in 1796.

Ständchen. See Serenade.

Stanza. In versification, a group of lines organized into a unit by a more or less complete uniformity of meter and some obvious scheme of rhymes, so that it serves as a type or pattern for repetition throughout a poem; often called verse and sometimes (though not quite properly) strophe. It is usually at least three lines long, and may be made up of couplets, triplets or even quatrains.

The stanza-plan in verse corresponds to the favorite song-form in music. Indeed, the two have a common origin and history. In its simplest form it is the basis of dance-songs, ballads and folk-songs generally. The reiteration of a single pattern of structure from stanza to stanza produces the effect of a large rhythm both of sound and of thought. See Song.

Staple. In the oboe and related instruments, the metallic ring or tube binding the reeds of the mouthpiece together and attaching them to the tube.

Stem. Same as tail; see Notation.

Step. As one of the constituent elements of a scale or staff, see Degree. Also the interval between two successive degrees in a scale or represented by successive degrees in a staff or successive keys (digitals) of the keyboard. As to length, it may be a whole-step or a half-step, according as it is a major or a minor second (a tone or a semitone). Thus in the standard major scale the whole-steps are 1-2, 2-3, 4-5, 5-6, 6-7 and the half-steps 3-4, 7-8. Such regular steps in either the major or the minor scale are termed diatonic. By contrast, steps that involve tones not in these scales are chromatic (as the half-step between 4 and 4# or between 7 and 7b). Melodic motion by either diatonic or chromatic steps is stepwise (opposed to skipwise) or conjunct (opposed to disjunct or discrete).

Sticker. In organ-making, a slender rod of wood between the arms of two levers in the action that serves to transmit the thrust of one to the other. By means of trackers, stickers, squares and rollers the motion of the keys is conveyed to the valves. G.

Stone-Harmonicon, Stone-Piano. See Lapideon.

Stop (verb). In playing instruments of certain classes, to change the effective length of the vibratile body by some action of the hand and thus to alter the pitch of the tones produced. Such action is called a stop or stopping and the tone produced in consequence is a stopped tone (opposed to open tone). G.

In all instruments of the lute- and viol-classes, with some of the zithers, stopping is effected by pressing the strings against the fingerboard so as to shorten their effective length. A double-stop or double-stopping is the use of two or more fingers in this way on as many strings. For terms used in violin-playing, see Shift and Position.

In most tubular wood-wind instruments stopping is effected by closing a side-hole in the tube with the finger or by means of a key so as to change the location of the nodes in the vibrating air-column. Its result may be to alter the pitch diatonically or, by changing the register, to move the range of tones up or down.

In many brass-wind instruments stopping is effected by inserting the hand or a cone into the bell so as to shorten the effective length of the air-column; see under Mute.

In the pipe-organ a stopped pipe is one closed by a plug or tampion at the top so that its tone is an octave lower than that of an open pipe. This difference is due to the fact that the plug forces a node to form at the top, whereas an open pipe has a loop at the top.

Stop (noun). See under the verb above. Also same as organ-stop (q. v.). In the organ the total mechanism that controls the use of the various stops (sets of pipes) is the stop-action, operated by stop-knobs or stop-keys.

Stornello. See Ritornello. G.

Strain. In general, a poem, song, tune or melody as a whole. Specifically, a division or part of a piece or passage that has some degree of completeness; sometimes equivalent to phrase or period.

Strathspey. See reel under Dances. G.

Stretto. In counterpoint, especially in a fugue, a passage in which the subject and answer are introduced in close succession, so as to overlap and crowd upon each other, usually in repeated enunciations. Such a passage is customary after the development as a part of the final recapitulation. Also, in various vocal forms, a final section in quickened tempo and intensified style as a means of effecting climax (usually written stretta in this sense). G.

Strict. In counterpoint, denoting that which is precise or according to rule, as a strict canon, strict imitation, etc.; opposed to free. G.

String. In numerous instruments, a tightly stretched cord of gut or silk or wire of brass, iron or steel that can be thrown into vibration by some means so as to produce musical tones. Instruments whose tone-production is effected by means of strings are known collectively as string- or stringed instruments. The process or method of applying strings in instrument-making is called stringing. Various parts connected with the affixing of strings are called by names with the prefix string-, the exact meaning varying with the instrument. The number of strings in a given instrument may range from one to over two hundred; those with few strings are sometimes designated by terms like monochord, bichord (dichord), trichord, etc., while those with many may be called polychord. In many cases two or more strings are used as mere duplicates or replicas of each other (so as to make the tone more sonorous); such duplicates are called unisons and an instrument with two or three such unisons to the note or tone may be called bichord or trichord. Stringed instruments are broadly divided into those having but one string (or set of unisons) for each pitch desired and those having comparatively few strings, any or most of which can be made to yield more than one tone by 'stopping,' that is, by shortening their effective or vibrating-length by pressing them against a fingerboard with the finger (or some similar process). Stringed instruments may be classified in several ways; the most useful method is by reference to the manner of stringing and the method of sounding (see below). G.

The material used in making gut-strings is usually called 'catgut,' which seems to imply that it comes from the prepared intestines of the cat, though it may be a corruption of 'kit-gut' (i. e., 'fiddle-gut'); commercial catgut is a preparation made from sheep- or horse-gut. If silk is used, it is but lightly spun into cord; silk is often taken as the core or basis for wound- or spun-strings, in which a fine silver or copper wire is more or less tightly coiled about the core, making a compound structure. In many old instruments, as well as in popular forms in countries all over the world, strings of iron or brass are common, drawn with more or less care. In the modern piano steel wire has replaced softer and weaker materials, the so-called 'piano-wire' of present commerce being the finest product of its class, so extraordinary in tensile capacity that it is used for many other purposes besides piano-making (as in deep-sea sounding). Metal strings are not seldom made larger by being wound or spun with an outer wire-coil. It should be added that in some ethnic instruments materials like plant-fibres and muscular tendons from animals are found. For string-gauge, see Chordometer.

A string does not become tone-producing in a practicable sense unless it be stretched somewhat tightly and also unless it be connected with some resonator. The pitch of the tone it produces depends on its mass (size and density), its tension and its vibrating-length. In all instruments with several or many strings the strings are graduated so as to have different pitches and they are adjusted for use by being tuned (usually by altering the tensions). When a string is sounded in any way it tends to vibrate entire (giving its fundamental tone) and also (because of its high elasticity) in its aliquot parts (giving a series of partial-tones of diminishing intensity). Its normal tone, then, is a more or less compound one, ideally containing a full series of partials up to some point where they become negligible. But its precise character or quality depends on the influence of the resonator or sound-box attached.

A convenient classification of stringed instruments recognizes six main classes—harps, lyres, zithers, dulcimers, lutes and viols. In harps and lyres the strings are ranged in an open series, so that the player's hands can reach them on both sides, the sound-box being at or near one extremity of the series, at a right angle in harps proper and more or less parallel in lyres. In both cases the strings give each but one tone and are sounded by plucking or twanging. In zithers and dulcimers the strings are ranged in series over the face of the sound-box, so that they can be reached from but one side. They yield mostly only one tone to a string, but in many zithers one or more of the strings may be stopped against a fingerboard, so as to give many tones. Zithers are played by plucking, but dulcimers by the blows of hammers. In lutes and viols the strings are ranged not only over the face of the sound-box, but also over a slender neck projecting upward from the body and carrying a fingerboard, against which they can be stopped, so as to yield many tones. Lutes are played by plucking, but viols by the friction of a bow. The device of a keyboard has been added to some varieties of the above classes. Thus the harpsichord is essentially a keyboard-psaltery or zither and the piano a keyboard-dulcimer, while the hurdy-gurdy and many so-called violin-pianos are keyboard-viols. A simpler classification, based on the method of sounding, makes only three classes, those that are plucked or twanged (harps, lyres, zithers and lutes), those that are struck (dulcimers) and those that are bowed (viols)—the last two being also called percussive and fricative respectively.

In ancient music harps and lyres were prominent. Throughout the Middle Ages a great variety of forms were in use, including harps, zithers and lutes, with some dulcimers and viols. In the 16-17th centuries lutes were finely developed and were extensive favorites, but in the 17-18th they were far outstripped by the viols, especially those related to the violin. In the modern orchestra the only stringed instruments are viols (except as a harp is introduced incidentally). The violins, violas, 'cellos and double-basses are there known as the strings or the string-orchestra (or string- band). Most chamber-music is now written for ensembles of viols, as for string-trio, string-quartet, etc., with or without the addition of the piano.

CONSOLE OF THE ORGAN, EASTMAN THEATER, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

For each kind of stringed instrument there is some customary way of tuning the several strings; this is the accordatura, any deviation being called a scordatura. Any particular string may then be known by the letter-name of the tone it is tuned to give, as (on the violin) the g-string or the e-string. The latter, like the principal melody-string on several other forms, is also sometimes called the chanterelle.

In the piano, as now made, there are three strings to the key throughout most of the compass, making a total of over 230. As their tension is high and their combined pull amounts to many tons, special provision has to be made for their anchorage to the frame. At one end they are looped about pins in the string-block, which in turn is attached to the string-plate; at the other end they are wound around tuning-pins that are set in the wrest-plank. In comparing the size of piano-strings, as for other instruments, a string-gauge is used. A string that gives its intended tone and is susceptible of satisfactory tuning is called true, but otherwise false.

On instruments where the strings may be stopped, one that is played without stopping is said to be open, but otherwise stopped. Some lutes and viols have sets of sympathetic strings added, which are not directly sounded, but are called into action by resonance.

In the pipe-organ, a stop whose pipes give tones that simulate those of bowed instruments is called a string-stop and such stops collectively are called the strings. But a string-organ is a reed-organ having strings that vibrate sympathetically with the reed-tones.

Strophe. In the Attic drama, the combined song and evolution of the chorus in one direction, followed by a corresponding antistrophe in the opposite direction, with an epode at the end—the whole forming one act or ode in the choric action. Also, in modern poetry, either a main section in an irregular ode or one of the stanzas in a poem of cyclic form. Also extended to the larger divisions of a movement in a musical work, somewhat equivalent to period or section. Such a movement or plan may be called strophical.

Study. A piece, usually instrumental, which combines artistic value with usefulness as a discipline in technique or interpretation; an étude. An elaborate and specially effective example may be called a concert-study. Occasionally applied to an elementary exercise.

Style. In general or specifically, the manner characteristic of a method of composition, of a period, of a composer or performer, etc.; as in contrapuntal, monophonic or operatic style, in the Palestrina or a cappella style, after the style of Mendelssohn or Wagner, in organ-style, etc. Cf. Galanter and Gebunder Stil.

Sub-. Denoting that which is lower in pitch or less in importance, as subbass, suboctave, subprincipal (an octave lower), subdiapente, subdominant, submediant, subtonic (measured downward), subcantor (deputy or assistant), etc.; opposed to super-.

Subject. In counterpoint, the melodic figure or phrase taken as the theme for treatment throughout a composition; opposed to answer; see Counterpoint, Canon and Fugue. Also extended to all other styles of composition, though with less formality. See Theme. G.

A short contrapuntal subject is sometimes called an attacco, one that is extended, an andamento. Occasionally an acrostic subject is adopted, as upon the letters B-A-C-H, etc.

Subordinate, Subsidiary. Denoting that which is not fundamental or principal; as subordinate chords, all chords in a key except the tonic, dominant and subdominant triads and the dominant seventh-chord, subsidiary note, in a trill or similar embellishment, any note except that which is essential to the harmony, subsidiary subject or theme, a subject or theme taken for incidental treatment in connection with others that are principal, etc. G (Subsidiary).

Suite. See partita and suite under Dances. The modern use of the name sometimes signifies a set of dances in the old style devised for the sake of their quaint effect. But the name is more commonly employed to cover a series of brief instrumental sketches or tone-pictures having something of a 'program' to connect them, without necessarily using any dance-forms or preserving identity of key. G.

Summational Tone. See Combination-Tone.

Super-. Denoting that which is higher in pitch, as superdominant, supertonic (next above in the scale), superoctave (an octave higher), etc.; opposed to sub-. G.

Superfluous. Same as augmented.

Suspension. In harmony, a temporary dissonance in a chord (under an accent), produced by making a voice-part prolong a tone that was consonant in the preceding chord and later progress one step downward into consonance again. The first sounding of the tone is the preparation of the suspension, its dissonant continuance is the percussion and the following tone is the resolution. If the suspension is in two or three parts at once, it is double or triple. If the resolution takes place upward instead of downward, the effect is called retardation. Either suspension or retardation is opposed to anticipation. If an effect like a suspension occurs without preparation (by motion to the dissonance instead of mere prolongation), the term appoggiatura is sometimes used, though only by some licence. See under Syncopation. G.

Sustaining-Pedal. See under Pedal.

Swell, Swell-Organ, Swell-Box, Swell-Pedal. See under Organ. G.

Syllable. An arbitrary letter-group adopted as a symbol for a tone either as related to other tones or as to its actual pitch; when applied to a particular tone it becomes its syllable-name; opposed to letter-name or any other designation; see Solmization. Also any purely nonsense-syllable adopted to aid in the study of vocalization.

Sympathetic. In acoustics, denoting that which vibrates and gives forth sound not because directly affected by an original tone-producing agency, but in response to vibrations in another body which are conveyed to it by the air or some other connecting medium; thus a sympathetic string is one that vibrates by induction after another string has begun to sound in its neighborhood. Also denoting a sound produced thus in a sympathetic body, as a sympathetic tone or harmonic. The relation between two vibratile bodies that react in this way is said to be one of sympathy. See Resonance, Acoustics, String, Soundboard, Voice, etc. G.

Symphonia. In ancient usage, same as concord or consonance; opposed to diaphonia. In medieval usage, the name for a variety of instruments, including the bagpipe, the hurdy-gurdy, the virginal, etc. In the 17-18th centuries, a composition for a group or ensemble of instruments; also sinfonja. In all meanings the notion of 'sounding together' is present.

Symphonic. Denoting that which resembles or is associated with the symphony as a form, as a work of symphonic dimensions or scored for the symphonic orchestra.

Symphonic Poem. A term first used by Liszt and later widely adopted, denoting an orchestral work of large size, but usually in one continuous movement, based upon the use of one or more principal themes, which are developed or treated with much freedom of form and style. The aim is always to present an imaginative picture of a historical or fanciful subject in the general spirit of program-music and at the same time to construct a tonal effect with coherence, progress and climax irrespective of the subject. G.

In the strict sense it is not a definite form, because there is no one method in which the work is laid out and handled. But by many it is regarded (as by Liszt himself) as the natural successor of the classical symphony. By others it is thought to be better described by terms like tone-poem or tone-picture. Many works that are somewhat akin, but laid out in a succession of detached movements, are often now called suites, though quite distinct in detailed form from the typical dance-suite.

Symphonie Concertante. A form used by composers of the Mannheim school in which a general symphonic plan is followed, but with solo-passages for one or more instruments; cf. concerto.

Symphonion. A piano provided with a harmonium attachment, invented by F. Kaufmann of Dresden in 1839, being one of the precursors of the orchestrion. Also a form of music-box, in which the teeth of the steel comb are engaged, not by pins set on a cylinder or barrel, but by studs on small wheels rotated by projecting points on a metal disk (like that of a phonograph). The advantage of this arrangement is that the disks are indefinitely changeable.

Symphony. Originally (under the name sinfonja), an instrumental passage or number in an extended and complex work, like an opera, including ritornelli, incidental pieces and even the overture; this usage, though belonging properly to the 17th century, lingered more or less on into the 18th. Meanwhile the term tended to become more usual for orchestral pieces in three movements either intended to serve as overtures or made for independent use as concert-pieces (hence often also called concerti). In either case they differed from the suite in not being confined to dances (perhaps avoiding them altogether) and in aiming to secure effects by dexterous alternations of larger and smaller combinations of instruments.

In the classical period (beginning even before 1750) the term becomes more definitely restricted to what amounts to a sonata for orchestra, having the same three or four movements and the same use, in the first movement at least, of sonata-form. Throughout the 19th century this usage continued to obtain more or less, but with a constant tendency to break away from the regularity of the sonata-plan, without wholly abandoning it. The two strongest impulses toward novelty as compared with the classical type were the vastly increased sense of the tonal possibilities of the orchestra as an instrument and the growing desire for a series of effects embodying a 'program' idea. Hence the modern symphony, while retaining many characteristics of its earlier treatment, is apt to present a total impression that is radically different. G.

The orchestra employed by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven did not much exceed 15 parts, with a very moderate number of ripieni in the strings. The advance in complexity and sonority in recent years has been extraordinary, more than doubling the number of parts and trebling the total number of players. This fact alone is sufficient to explain why the symphony has changed much more than the sonata for a solo-instrument from an emphasis on tonal design to a pageant of tonal color. But the change in emphasis has brought with it also a prodigious increase in the elements of design, since every amplification for purposes of utilizing and exploiting the resources of timbre involves adding to the thematic and figurative material. The consequence is that the more modern symphonies present a degree of intricacy in construction not matched by any other form of composition except the most elaborate operas. To make the complexity greater, in not a few cases a chorus or the organ, or both, have been added to the full modern orchestra. The indescribable opulence of effect is due to a combination of every achievement in the perfecting of the individual instruments in the orchestra and every gain in their manipulation, with that imperial handling of themes of every kind in their rhythmic and harmonic relations which the later masters have made customary. The only question is whether the intellectual and emotional content has kept pace with the amazing evolution of the tonal splendor as such.

Syncopation. In harmony, a special effect produced by uniting a tone having naturally a weak accent with one that would be accented if it were separate and transferring the accent back to the place of the tone's entrance. It results in temporarily upsetting the place of the accent, though usually only in one voice-part at a time, occasionally in more, so that two contrasted systems of accent appear together. It may be considered as a kind of suspension or anticipation, though not requiring regular preparation or resolution. Sometimes the effect is treated without much transfer of accent. It was extensively, even excessively, used by Schumann. G.

Syrinx. See Pan's-Pipe.

System. A term that has been variously used at different times, as for a tone-series like a tetrachord, scale or mode, for the total range of tones regarded as constituting the apparatus of practical music, and, in notation, either for a staff or for two or more staves braced together.

The tone-system of Greek music was two octaves long, that of medieval music two and a half octaves and that of modern music six or seven octaves. See under Greek Music, Hexachord and Pitch.

T

T. As an abbreviation, t. or T. stands for tasto, tempo, tenor, toe (in organ-music), tre and tutti, also, in Tonic Sol-fa notation, t for ti or te (7th scale-tone).

Tablature. A general name for the system of rules adopted by the Meistersinger guilds in the 15-16th centuries, governing the construction both of texts for musical setting and of that setting itself. In part they embodied principles of universal application, but in part they were finical and even grotesque. Also, and more commonly, any system of arbitrary signs or notation designed to record music with reference to its performance upon particular instruments, especially such systems as were in use during the 15-18th centuries for the organ, for lutes and for viols. In one sense, the regular staff-notation and even the notation of chords used in thorough-bass are examples of tablature, but they are usually considered by themselves. See Notation. G.

For details, see art. 'Tablature' in Grove's Dictionary. In general, the pitch of tones was shown by letters, numbers or marks showing the string and finger to be used, while time-values were indicated by signs like those of the staff-notation (but without note-heads) or by strokes corresponding to the number of beats. In many cases a staff was used, either to carry letters or other signs in a way more or less like the placing of notes in the staff-notation, but also as a way of indicating strings (each line corresponding to a particular string) or some similar mechanical detail. In the effort to accomplish the notation of counterpoint and of chords many special marks were evolved.

The whole movement of thought and practice embodied in the historic tablatures testifies to the feeling in the 15-16th centuries that music for instruments was distinct from that for voices. The staff-notation had been devised for singers and had been developed in accordance with the advancing needs of vocal counterpoint. For a time it was not seen that it was perfectly applicable to instruments, even though it did not indicate to the eye the exact mechanical processes to be employed in playing.

Tablatures continued to be used to some extent far into the 18th century. At many points of detail they influenced the final form of the staff-notation. In the 19th century, the Tonic Sol-fa notation has been called a new form of vocal tablature, and several slight systems have been tried in connection with instruments like the guitar, the mandolin, etc.

Table Entertainment. A miscellaneous congeries of stories, jokes and songs, popular in England from about 1750. The name came from the fact that the performer usually sat at a table, facing the audience. G.

Famous entertainers of this sort were Charles Dibdin in 1789-1801, Charles Mathews from 1816, and many others.

Table-Music, Tafelmusik. Music sung by a group seated about a table; see Part-Book.

Tabor, Taborine. A small drum or tambourine (but without jingles), especially such as was used by medieval pipers. The diminutive is tabet or tabret. Often used interchangeably with timbral. G.

Tactus. One of the medieval terms for time-value, more or less like tempus, covering relations between breves and semibreves. Also sometimes same as a beat.

Tail. Same as stem; see Notation. In piano- and organ-making, the rear end of a key or digital; usually key-tail.

Tail-piece. In instruments of the viol-class, a triangular piece of wood, usually of ebony, to which the lower ends of the strings are attached and which is itself attached to the button.

Taille. Same as tenor, especially the tenor-violin or viola. G.

Tambour, Tanbur. Same as drum, especially one of large size; cf. tabor.

Tamboura, Tambura. An Oriental instrument of the lute-class, having a circular body, a long fretted neck and 3-4 strings. G.

Tambourin. See Dances. Also applied to varieties of drum used in Egypt, Provence, etc. G.

Tambourine. A small drum, consisting of a shallow hoop or ring of wood or metal and a single head of parchment. In the hoop are set several pairs of metal-jingles shaped like castanets. It is played by striking with the hand or arm, by shaking or by drawing the finger across the head. It is Oriental in origin, but especially common in Spain; whence the name tambour de Basque. G.

Tampion, Tampon. In organ-making, the plug or stopper inserted in the upper end of certain sets of pipes, as in those of the stopped diapason.

Tam-tam, Tom-tom. A popular name for an Oriental gong or drum. G.

Tangent. In the clavichord, a brass wedge inserted in the rear end of a key and by its impact on a string both causing it to sound and determining the pitch of the tone. See Clavichord. G.

Tango. See Dances. G.

Tantara. A signal or flourish on a hunting-horn or bugle. G.

Tantum ergo. A hymn often used in the Roman Catholic Church at the office of Benediction, at the Elevation in the Mass and when the Host is carried in procession, or a musical setting of it. G.

It consists of the last two stanzas of the hymn 'Pange lingua gloriosi corporis mysterium' of Thomas Aquinas (13th cent.).

Tar, Thari. An Oriental instrument of the lute-class, having a body of hollowed wood, with a parchment front or belly, and usually 5 strings, played by means of a plectrum. It is common in the Caucasus.

Tarantella, Tarentelle. See Dances. G.

Tattoo. In military music, the signal at night for retiring to quarters or tents. As now used, it is given both by bugles and drums. G.

The old name was taptloo, taptloe, taptlow, which is explained as meaning that the taps at public houses are to be closed. It is likely that the signal was first given by drums alone.

Technic, Technique. A general term for method or style of performance, vocal or instrumental, especially regarded from its mechanical side rather than from that of interpretation; execution.

Technicon. An apparatus for the muscular training of the hands for piano-, organ- and violin-playing, invented by J. Brotherhood of Canada and patented in 1885.

Techniphone. See Practice Clavier.

Tedesca. See Allemande under Dances.

Te Deum. A famous hymn or canticle used in the Western Church at Matins and other morning services, as well as separately as an office of thanksgiving, or a musical setting of it. G.

The text begins 'Te Deum laudamus, te Dominum confitemur.' The Latin text is probably derived from a Greek original, though this is not certain. The earliest reference to it is from the early part of the 5th century, which is now assumed to be the period of its origin. But there are several traditions connecting it with various persons of an earlier time, as with Hilary, Ambrose (and Augustine), Nicetus, etc. Often called the Ambrosian Hymn.

It is likely that the present text has been somewhat expanded from the original version, especially by the insertion of a Trinitarian doxology and the incorporation of a chain of antiphons from the Psalms at the end. The basis is a poem addressed to Christ, not to the Father or the Trinity, and closing with the prayer 'Aeterna fac cum sanctis tuis gloria munerari.'

The traditional English version is open to many serious objections in details.

Telharmonium. A very elaborate apparatus, invented by Thaddeus Cahill about 1900 and exhibited in New York in 1907, whereby the tones of many instruments were synthetically produced from tuning-forks, reeds and strings by means of electrical currents. Its purpose was to provide for the reproduction of orchestral effects in such way that they could be distributed telephonically.

Temperament. The theory, process or result of tuning an instrument of fixed intonation or of modulating the voice or an instrument of free intonation so as to effect a reasonable compromise between the pitch-relations that are acoustically ideal and those that are both mechanically feasible and adapted to the exigencies of advanced composition, especially on the side of modulation. Temperament is the meeting-ground between theoretical acoustics and the practical art of tuning certain instruments and of handling the voice and certain other instruments. See Acoustics, Scale and Tuning. G.

Ancient acoustics assumed the intervals of the octave and the fifth as primary measures or determinants, but early recognized the fact that even these do not agree perfectly with each other, since a series of octaves and of fifths taken from the same starting-point do not match exactly and several smaller intervals deduced from octaves and fifths present slight deviations from each other (see Comma).

The tendency of modern acoustics has been to add the major third as a supplementary measure, because of its value in establishing the harmonic unit of the major triad. Using this discloses many additional discrepancies at various points that are more or less analogous to those which ancient theory recognized. And the modern demand for freedom in modulation brought the theoretical difficulties into the field of practical procedure. By way of illustration it is enough to cite but a single case. If one who sings in just or pure intonation begins a song in the key of C and presently passes into the key of G, he not only finds himself using f-sharp in the place of f, but also using an a which is not identical with the a which he used before. Every additional step of modulation introduces a new discrepancy. When this familiar instance is applied to making a keyboard-instrument like a piano, the magnitude of the practical problem speedily becomes infinite. Hence in the 17th century, when both instrument-making and the practice of modulation began to advance to modern proportions, how to reconcile the ideal with practical simplicity became an urgent question. It became customary to call the harshness of effect that tuning attempted to avoid 'the wolf.' Temperament was then the use of some plan of tuning that would 'drive out the wolf' as far as possible or at least as far as was deemed necessary.

The first plan to be widely adopted was that of mean-tone temperament. This derived its name from its aim to make the whole-tone halfway (or a 'mean') between its two theoretical values (half-way, that is, between 9/8 and 10/9). In application, this method aimed to make certain keys good, while others were unusable. The good keys were usually those with not more than three flats or sharps in the signature, if major, and three or four of the possible minor keys. Free modulation was out of the question and most minor keys were unsatisfactory. The prevalence of this method is reflected in the fact that the bulk of 18th-century music is written in a limited range of keys, as well as in some terms (like 'extreme' keys).

From even before 1700, however, another method began to be suggested, that known as equal temperament. This takes its name from its aim to make all semitones equal, so that an octave shall comprise twelve equal half-steps. When this plan is carried out, not only is any one scale fairly correct, but modulation to any other possible key leads to another scale that is equally correct. Once the ear is accustomed to the major or the minor as thus represented, it finds that changing the key-note has no disturbing effect. This method of tuning the conventional twelve keys of the keyboard has become so universal that upon it as a basis has grown up a widespread conception of scale- and key-relations, so that now the 12-toned scale is by some adopted as ideal. The only recourse for the purist is to devise some form of keyboard that shall have more than twelve keys to the octave. Various experiments of this sort have been made (even to the point of 53 keys), but none has proved to have practical applicability. They involve too many intricacies for both the performer and the instrument-maker.

Unaccompanied part-singing and instrumental ensembles like the string-quartet are measurably free from the problem of temperament. The tendency of the best performers is to use pure intonation so long as modulation does not occur, and, when it does, to make some slight accommodation to suit the needs of the immediate case, but without adhering to any fixed system. In most actual instances it is likely that effects are unconsciously borrowed from the equal tuning that is in vogue upon keyboard-instruments.

The temperament used in a complex aggregation of instruments like an orchestra undoubtedly fluctuates somewhat according to the intricacy of the music attempted and the predilections of the players engaged. An orchestra includes many instruments whose intonation is at least partially fixed, and all others must accommodate themselves to these fixed points. When a piano is used with an orchestra, the amount of accommodation required is usually much greater than when the orchestra is by itself.

Some further practical points are noted under Tuning.

Tempête. A lively variety of quadrille, which see under Dances.

Tempo. In general, the intended or actual rapidity or pace at which a piece or passage is to be or is performed; the duration of the time-units in the rhythm or movement. Also, in expressions like tempo di minueto or tempo di ballo, a direction as to both pace and style. G.

For various specific indications of absolute or relative pace see Terms of Performance and Notation. The established method of indicating intended tempo is by a metronomic mark, showing the number of rhythmic units per minute; see Metronome.

It has been urged that the normal physical standard of tempo is the average pulse-beat, that is, 70-75 strokes per minute, whatever rate is less or more than this being properly reckoned as either 'slow' or 'quick.'

Tempus. In mensural music, the relation in time-value between a breve and a semibreve, being perfect if the breve was considered as equal to three semibreves, but imperfect if it was equal to two. See Notation and note under Perfect. Sometimes called tactus.

Tenebræ. In the Roman Catholic Church, a special office for the afternoon or evening of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of Holy Week, consisting of Matins and Lauds for the following day (including the Lamentations), or a musical setting thereof. G.

In the usage of the Sistine Chapel the 15 lights on the great candlestick are one by one extinguished (except the last) as the service proceeds, so that the close is in almost complete darkness. In old English usage the number of candles was 24.

Tenor, Tenore. The highest variety of the adult male voice or its voice-part; see Voice. Also any instrument whose range corresponds to that of the tenor-voice, including the tenor-viol or violin (viola), the tenor-trombone, the tenor-drum, etc. G.

The name comes from the Latin tenere, to hold, recalling the fact that early part-singing was for male voices, so that the tenor was the leading part, the one, therefore, to which in early contrapuntal music was assigned the enunciation of the cantus firmus, as well as the predominant melody when harmonic writing began to be practiced.

Tenor-voices are variously designated by qualifiers that define their special character, as dramatic (robusto, helden-), lyric (leggiero), etc. In part-music they may be divided into first and second.

In a peal of bells the lowest in pitch is often called the tenor-bell and this usually serves as the hour-bell if the peal is connected with a clock.

Tenor-C, the c next below middle-c; see Pitch. For tenor-clef, see Notation.

Tenorino. A tenor whose voice is developed in the falsetto range, so that he can sing the soprano- or treble-part; or an artificial male soprano.

Tenoroon. See oboe di caccia under Oboe.

Tenth. The interval of an octave and a third or a tone or note at that interval; a compound third.

Teponatzli. An ancient Aztec instrument, essentially a peculiar form of drum. It consisted of a hollowed wooden cylinder, in the upper surface of which was an H-shaped orifice, the two projecting tongues of which, when struck by mallets, yielded two distinct tones that were more or less consonant with each other.

Terce. The fourth of the Canonical Hours (9 A. M.). G.

Terminology, Musical. A collective name for the technical terms used in defining and describing musical conceptions, procedures and implementations, as well as in connection with its notation and the mechanical incidents of performance.

In one sense terminology and nomenclature are synonymous, though the distinction is sometimes made that nomenclature should be used for the special names applied to objects like instruments and perhaps to some of the abstract conceptions employed in harmony, while terminology should be limited to usages of words for descriptive purposes that music shares with other subjects and applies technically for its own purposes. This distinction is so difficult to enforce that it is better to regard terminology as including the entire vocabulary of the art.

Terms of Performance. Verbal indications of the composer's or editor's intention as to the details and style of rendering and interpretation; directions added to the characters and signs of notation for the guidance of singers, players and conductors. Terms of this class include (a) those indicating absolute or relative rapidity or intensity, (b) those indicating practical procedure or manipulation either in following the score or in using the particular instrument in view (or, to a limited extent) the voice, and (c) those suggesting the desired emotional attitude and thus the general style of delivery. The first two groups are not large and are as a rule fairly precise. The third group is almost indefinitely large and at the same time rather vague. The subjoined lists aim to present the commonest and most essential terms in each group, but without attempting to mention all the variants in the third group.

For obvious reasons, the Italian terms are taken as the most representative. The technical language of music as an art of cosmopolitan character was first settled while the art was dominated by leaders and styles belonging in some way to Italy. After two or three centuries of expansion in other countries, music still chooses to use these Italian forms more than any others, though most of them are now paralleled by others in several languages.*

Terms relating to Tempo or Rhythm

Indicating regular or strict rhythm; a tempo, im Takt, a battuta, en mesure, in time, with the beat, in regular rhythm; tempo giusto, in strict time, ben rythmé, with rhythm well marked; con rigore, with accuracy (of rhythm), severamente, severely, precisely. In passing from one section to another, l'istesso (lo stesso) tempo, in the same time or rhythm. In returning to an earlier section, a primo tempo, in the first time or rhythm.

Indicating irregular or varying rhythm: ad libitum, a piacere, all' arbitrio, at pleasure or discretion; senza tempo, tempo perduta, without fixed rhythm; con alcuna licenza, with some licence; tempo rubato (literally, robbed), with an irregular distribution of the smaller rhythmic units within a measure or similar group. In regard to other performers, colla parte, colla voce, with the part or voice (in rhythmic adaptation thereto).

* A note about the formation of Italian words may be useful. Terms of style or manner are mostly adverbial in force, but they are in form often adjectives, participles or nouns with a preposition. Adjectives regularly end in -o, -a (plural, -i, -e) or, expansively, in -oso, -osa, (Eng. -ous). Adverbs are generally made from adjectives by changing -o to -e or by adding the suffix -mente (this often also with the stem of past participles). Any verb-stem may yield either a present participle or gerund in -ando or -endo (Eng. -ing or -ingly), a past participle in -ato, -ito or -uto (Eng. -ed or -edly) or an infinitive in -are, -ere or -ire (serving as a noun). Adverbial expressions are constantly made out of nouns with prepositions prefixed, especially con, with a, al, all', alla, to, at, by, da, dal, from, connected with, dei, del, di, of, from, etc. Many nouns and adjectives appear with diminutive endings like -ino, -ello, -etto, -uzzo, the corresponding augmentative endings being -one, -otto.

Indications of the general pace of a work, movement or section are usually the same terms as are used for suggesting its general character. Originally style was probably more considered than pace as such. Modern music tends to give minute attention to the precise rapidity intended (see note below on metronomic marks). A medium pace is indicated by tempo moderato, ordinario or commodo, at a moderate, ordinary or convenient pace. The term andante (literally, going) has a somewhat similar meaning, though in earlier usage it probably implied a movement somewhat faster than moderato, whereas it now means somewhat slower (the older sense lingers in andante con moto); its diminutive, andantino, less fast or less slow, plainly stands for some medium pace. Rapidity is marked by allegro, vivace and presto (each stronger than the preceding), as well as by the less usual vivo, rapido, veloce, etc. Slowness is correspondingly marked by adagio, lento, largo and grave (each stronger than the preceding), with a few others, like tardamente. All or most of these may be intensified by the superlative suffix -issimo, -issime or by adding molto, much, or be made less intense by the diminutive suffix -etto, -ino. They may also be softened by prefixing un poco, a little, or quasi, as if, or by adding ma non troppo, but not too much.

Since about 1820 all kinds of music have been more and more accompanied by a mark to show the precise pace desired, indicating how many notes of a given species should occur in a minute of time. Thus,  $\text{♩} = 60$  means 60 quarter-notes to the minute (one per second), or  $\text{♩} = 44$ , etc. Often M.M. is prefixed to such signs, referring to Maelzel's metronome as a standard instrument for time-keeping (see Metronome).

In connection with particular phrases or passages within a section or piece whose general movement has been thus defined, many terms are used to indicate modifications of the pace. Gradual or progressive alterations are usually shown by terms in -ando or -endo, while relatively immediate or abrupt alterations are shown by terms in -ato, -ito or -uto. Thus quickening of pace is marked by accelerando, stringendo and più mosso, as well as by affrettando, calando, incalzando, pressante, etc., while its slackening is marked by ritardando, rallentando, allargando and meno mosso, as well as by allentando, lentando, rallentando, ritascando, remittendo, slargando, stentando, stentando, tardando, etc. Ritenuito is an example of those terms that properly signify an abrupt instead of gradual change of pace. Several terms calling for a decreasing force (like morendo, mancando, etc.) are usually felt to imply also decreasing rapidity or at least to permit it.

The term doppio movimento indicates a shift from a given tempo to one twice as fast, even though the same species of note remains as unit. A shift from a given tempo to one twice as slow is sometimes indicated by doppio valore, since the note used as unit takes on a double time-value.

Terms relating to Force and Duration

The general degree of intensity in a phrase or passage is indicated by forte, loud, or piano, soft, which may be made stronger in the superlatives fortissimo or pianissimo, or weaker by prefixing mezzo. Many other terms that indicate style imply loudness or softness, as forzando, sforzando, rinforzando, marcato, pesante, energico, insistendo, enfatico, intenzionato, inciso, etc., all calling for persistent and emphatic loudness, or as lontano, as if at a distance, morando, murmuringly, legere, lightly, sofvo voce, aside, estinto, almost inaudible, etc., all calling for reduced intensity.

The leading terms for a steady increase of loudness or a steady decrease are crescendo and diminuendo. Other terms for increase are acrescendo and aumentando and for decrease decrecendo, calando, accoppiato, definendo, diluendo, estinguendo, mancando, morendo, perdendo, sminuendo, morendo, smorzando, etc., with some variants.

To emphasize giving to notes their full time-value terms are used like legato, sostenuto and tenuto, thus producing a continuous, connected effect, while cutting off part of their time-value, so as to produce a detached effect, is indicated by staccato. Legato and staccato are sometimes intensified as legatissimo or staccatissimo.

Terms relating to General Procedure

In providing for the translation of a written or printed score into actual performance various mechanical directions or rubrics are useful or necessary, some of which are here summarized.

When a passage or section is to be rendered more than once, the fact is indicated either by repeat-marks (see Notation) or by terms like repeat, ripresa, reprise, bis, twice, ter, thrice, di nuovo, anew, da capo, ab initio from the beginning, dal segno, from the sign ♯ and if the repeated rendering is to differ in part from the original, the one is designated by prima volta, first time or turn, and the other by seconda volta, second time or turn. If the repeat is not to be complete, the point at which it ends is marked by fine, end (whence sometimes da capo or dal segno al fine) or if it is to extend only to a certain point before proceeding, the mark is da capo al segno (♯). Where one section is to be followed immediately by another, the fact is often indicated by attacca, attach, go on, attacca subito, andare diritto, go on at once. But if there is to be an interval of silence, this is sometimes shown by pausa, silence, or (especially in certain parts) by tacet or contano, 'they count.'

Where a voice or instrument (occasionally a cadenza, etc.) is required for the full effect, its part is marked obbligato, but where it may be omitted or something else substituted, it is marked ad libitum, a piacere, a bene placito, at pleasure or discretion.

If voices or instruments that normally perform together are temporarily to be separated into two groups, the fact is shown by the term divisi, and the point where they reunite by a due or unisono. If a written part is to be performed in octaves, it is marked coll'ottava (usually the octave above) or doppio (usually that below). If the written part is to be transposed an octave higher, it is marked all'ottava and the end of such transposition loco, in place.

Where an accompaniment is to proceed in a certain uniform way, but is not written out in full, it may be indicated by an abbreviation-mark and the term simile or suivez. Occasionally, where an alternative and easier version of a difficult passage is provided, the mark facilité is used. At the end of a page, if the next passage is to follow suddenly, the reader is often warned by verte or volti subito, turn over quickly.

In concerted music, the intended distribution of forces is indicated by solo, alone, for a single voice or instrument (or but one performer to a part) or tutti, together, colli ripieni (ripieno), with the additional performers, or chorus. In English church-music, solo-passages are usually marked verse and tutti-passages full, while the two halves of the choir are designated cantoris and decani respectively, on the precentor's or the dean's side (left or right, looking toward the altar).

In piano-music, a phrase or note-group may be specially assigned to one or the other hand by mano destra, main droite, right hand, or mano sinistra, main gauche, left hand. Crossing the hands is indicated by volteggiando, the one underneath by abbassamento, the one over or above by alzamento. In organ-music, a passage without the use of the pedal-keyboard may be marked manual or manualiter, but one for the pedals alone is marked pedal or pedaliter.

In piano-music, the use of the loud or damper-pedal is indicated by pedale (Ped.) or rarely aperto, and the use of the soft pedal by una corda, with one string only, and its release by tre corde, with all three strings (a half-way use of this pedal is also marked by due corde, with two strings). Sometimes senza sordini, without dampers, marks the use of the damper-pedal and con sordini, with dampers, marks its release.

In piano-music, playing the notes of a chord successively (from below) is marked arpeggio or arpeggiando, harp-wise, but playing them simultaneously by concerto. Playing chords or notes with a heavy pressure (usually somewhat staccato) is marked martellato. Playing a rapid run (on white keys) with the back of the thumb or finger is marked glissando.

In violin-music, playing by plucking the string instead of with the bow is marked pizzicato or pinché, pinched, or by striking them with the back of the bow by col legno, with the wood, the resumption of the bow being shown by coll' arco or arcato. The use of the mute is shown by con sordino and its removal by senza sordino.

Every instrument has its own signs for the use of particular attachments or effects. In vocal music, also, many terms are in use either for the method of vocalization or for the exact treatment of passages. Space forbids the listing of these.

Terms relating to Feeling or Style

Music being eminently an art of self-expression, it is inevitable that an effort should be made to suggest by terms the emotional attitude or mood in mind and by these or by signs to give a hint as to the tonal nuances intended. Out of scores and even hundreds of such terms only a small selection can be given here, omitting many that are obvious from their similarity to English. Only a few terms outside of Italian are included, though their number and use are increasing rapidly.

Acciaccato, with vehemence; adriato, as if angry; affanato, as if restless, in distress; agevole, lightly, easily; con alterezza, with dignity or haughtiness; amarevole, bitterly; mit Andacht, as if in devotion; ängstlich, anxiously, fearfully; anmüthig, gracefully, suavely; all' antico, in a quaint, old-fashioned style; appanato, as if in distress; arioso (instrumental music), like a song; con asprezza, with harshness; mit Ausdruck, with expression, emotionally; beklemmt, as if anxious or oppressed; con bellezza, with grace or daintiness; con bravura, with dash or brilliantly; con brio, with animation or spirit; buffo, droll, comic; con calore, with warmth or passion; cantabile, in song-style, with marked melody; chiaramente, clearly, limpidly; concitato, in excitement; con desiderio, with longing, yearningly; disinvolto, freely, easily; disperato, as if hopeless, in despair; dolce, sweetly, softly; dolente, sadly, plaintively; con durezza, with sternness; ebollimento, with an outbreak of feeling; eguale, with even smoothness; erhaben, exalted, lofty; facile, easily, fluently; fastoso, in a stately, pompous style; feierlich, as if at a solemn festival; feurig, with fire or passion; fieramente, boldly, fiercely; flebile, as if in tears; francamente, ingenuously, frankly; freddo, with cold haughtiness; frisch, briskly; fröhlich, gaily, gladly; funebre, as if at a funeral; con fuoco, with fiery spirit; galante, with elegance; mit Gefühl, with feeling or emotion; geistlich, in sacred, churchly style; ghiribizzoso, whimsically; giocoso, jocosely, in banter or play; gradevole, complaisantly; gravemente, heavily, seriously; heftig, with impetuous vehemence; heimlich, stealthily, mysteriously; innig, as if revealing one's inmost feeling, with sincerity; istante, with urgency, con ira, with anger; lagrimoso, as if in deep sorrow; lebhaft, with liveliness; leggiere, with swift lightness; leidenschaftlich, passionately; lusingando, as if coaxing or in caress; lustig, merrily; luttuoso, as if mourning; maestoso, with majesty or dignity; mesto, pensively, sadly; minacciole, menacingly; mollemente, softly, gently; munter, with animation; netto, neatly, clearly; patimento, as if in suffering; piangendo, as if wailing; posato, with sedate dignity; ruhig, calmly, restfully; scherzando, playfully, sportively; schmerzhaft, as if in pain; con sdegno, with scorn or disdain; semplice, without affectation; con slancio, with impetuous vehemence; sospirato, as if sighing or mourning; spianato, smoothly, calmly; susurrando, as if whispering; svegliato, briskly, with animation; tepidamente, coolly, without excitement; tostamente, with rapid boldness; trionfale, as if in triumph, exultingly; con tristezza, with sadness; veemente, vehemently; vezzoso, with vigor or energy; vistamente, with brisk animation; vivo, with life or spirit; mit Wehmuth, sadly, plaintively; zärtlich, with tenderness.

Many of the above appear in variant verbal forms.

Ternary. Denoting anything consisting of three parts or elements; specifically, ternary measure, a measure or foot with three beats (triple rhythm), and ternary form, a form of composition divided into three sections (often applied to the rondo).

Terpodion. A keyboard-instrument, invented by J. D. Buschmann of Berlin in 1816, which resembled Chladni's clavicylinder except that strips of wood were used instead of glass. G.

Tersanctus. See Sanctus.

Terzet. A vocal composition for three voices; a vocal trio. Occasionally, also, same as triolet. G.

Tessitura. Of a melody, especially for the voice, the range of pitch within which most of the tones lie; the average compass or ambitus. It does not include occasional extreme tones. G.

Testo. In counterpoint, same as subject or antecedent. Also same as text or libretto.

Tetrachord. As an adjective, denoting an instrument with four strings. As a noun, either the interval of the fourth or, more commonly, a tone-series within that interval, which was the characteristic unit in Greek music. G.

Three general varieties of tetrachord were recognized, the diatonic, made up of two 'tones' and a hemitone, the chromatic, made up of a minor third and two hemitones, and the enharmonic, made up of a major third and two quarter-tones. Of diatonic tetrachords there were three forms, differing in the place of the hemitone, namely, the dorian (roughly like e-d-c-b), the Phrygian (like d-c-b-a) and the Lydian (like c-b-a-g). When tetrachords were joined together in forming octave-scales (species) or the longer system, they were called conjunct if the upper tone of one was the lower tone of the next, but disjunct if a disjunctive tone intervened. See Greek Music.

The tetrachord is still somewhat used as a unit in modern theory, though usually regarded upward instead of downward (as in Greek music).

Tetrachordon. The name of one of the forms of violin-piano, its tones being produced by pressing the strings against a revolving wheel.

Tetralogy. A series of four dramas upon related themes and intended to be given in succession.

The most famous example in music is Wagner's Das Ring des Nibelungen, consisting of Rheingold, Die Walküre, Siegfried and Die Götterdämmerung.

Tetraphony. In medieval music, a work for four voices.

Tetratone. An interval equal to the sum of four 'tones,' that is, an augmented fifth; cf. tritone.

Text. The words sung in vocal music, as the text of a song or of an opera. When the words of an opera are printed separately they form a text-book or libretto.

Theater, Theatre. A building intended for dramatic representations, whether spoken or sung, but in English usually applied mainly to buildings for the spoken drama and as such opposed to opera-house.

Thematic. Denoting whatever pertains to themes or subjects in the technical sense, especially thematic catalogue, a catalogue of works (usually by a single composer) in which, besides other designations, each work is specified by giving the opening measures or the characteristic themes, and thematic composition, composition in which the more or less contrapuntal treatment of specific themes is conspicuous. What is called counterpoint is always thematic, but thematic passages may occur in all sorts of writing. G.

Theme. Same as subject in either the strict or the general sense. Specifically, the subject taken for treatment in variation-form, as a theme and variations. G.

Both theme and subject are often used of the general topic of thought or imagination in a work, without reference to the music as such, as an oratorio on the theme of the Nativity or a symphonic poem on the theme of the mountains.

Theorbo. One of the large instruments in the lute-class, having about 14–20 strings, of which 6–8 were open (lying off the fingerboard and used for accompaniment), and two peg-boxes, one at the head of the neck and the other offset on an arch beside and above the first; in some of its forms also called archlute or archilute. G.

It differed from the chitarra in that the latter was much longer and had the second peg box on a direct extension upward of the neck. All these forms were important in the 16–17th centuries as supplying the bass in instrumental ensembles as well as serving for solo-effects.

Theory. A general name for the science of composition, regarded as an intellectual or pedagogical pursuit. One who is expert in it is a theorist or theoretical musician; often more or less opposed both to composer and performer, who may be termed practical musicians. G.

The distinction between theory and composition as technical terms is vague, though theory usually implies rather an intellectual or speculative interest, while composition implies the groundwork or basis for creative production. They both include harmony, counterpoint, form and usually orchestration.

Theory and musicology, on the other hand, are quite distinct, though either may be referred to as the science of music, since theory deals with the principles of making music, while musicology deals with questions in the history and social applications of music.

Thesis. See under Foot. G.

Third. The interval between the first and third degrees of the major scale or any similar interval, having the vibration-ratio  $5/4$  (but see below); also a tone or note at that interval from any starting-point; in a standard scale called the mediant. G.

The above standard interval is called the major third. Other intervals are the minor third, which is a semitone shorter (ratio,  $6/5$ ) and the diminished third, which is two semitones shorter (ratio,  $256/225$ ). The Pythagorean third was perceptibly sharper than the modern major (ratio,  $81/64$ ).

Thirteenth. The interval of an octave and a sixth or a tone or note at that interval; a compound sixth. G.

Thirty-second-note. Same as demisemiquaver; see Notation.

Thorough-Bass. Primarily, a bass-part for an entire piece accompanied by numerals that indicate the structure of the intended harmony; also called basso continuo, figured bass or (in German) Generalbass. Hence the system of numeral-notation employed in this way, including the theory of chords which it involves. Hence, though loosely, same as harmony or the science of chords and their succession. G.

The system first appeared in Italy about 1595 as a sort of short-hand method of writing music for the organ, but proved so convenient that it was soon in use for all kinds of keyboard-music. It became so universal that expertness with it was considered a part of good musicianship generally. In essence it was a form of tablature, in that it aimed simply to indicate in outline what a player was to do mechanically, without embodying any particular theory or system of harmony. Its interpretation in accordance with the modern doctrine of chords was not made until long after its first adoption. Though in itself fairly precise and simple, its application was open to considerable freedom, especially in the exact disposition of the tones indicated and in the expansion of details. In cases where the bass was to proceed alone the mark tasto solo was used.

In all cases the numerals used indicated the intervals of the unwritten notes from the notes of the written bass, it being assumed that all notes were those of the given key without alteration unless specially marked. The numerals were usually ranged one above the other in connection with each bass-note in order of size (the larger above), but as a rule this order had no bearing on the actual arrangement of the parts, which were adjusted so as to make smooth and lawful progressions. Ordinarily the only numerals used were 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, signifying the diatonic second, third, etc., from the bass. If a note chromatically different was required, a #, b or k was added to the plain numeral; but the # came to be marked by an oblique stroke through the numeral (as 6~). Either one of the chromatic signs standing alone was understood as applying to the third. Dashes were used to mark the continuance of upper notes over a moving bass.

Where the chord intended was the ordinary triad of the bass, numerals were not given, except sometimes to indicate the desired melody-note. Shortened forms of the full figuration were employed as far as possible, so as to simplify the process of reading. Suspensions and other melodic deviations from plain chords were shown by appropriate extra numerals.

Interpreted in the light of the chord-classification that came into use during the 18th century, the system may be summarized as follows: any triad in its original position (with the root in the bass) was marked 5<sup>8</sup> or simply 3 (usually left unmarked); in its first inversion (with the third in the bass) 6<sup>5</sup> or simply 6; and in its second inversion 6<sup>4</sup>. Any seventh-chord in its original position was marked 5<sup>7</sup> or simply 7 or 7; in its first inversion 6<sup>5</sup> or simply 6<sup>5</sup>; in its second inversion 4<sup>3</sup> or simply 4; and in its third inversion 4<sup>2</sup> or simply 2.

A ninth-chord in its original position was usually marked simply 9.

From these numerals have come several popular names for chords, such as chord of the sixth or of six (first inversion of a triad), chord of the sixth and fourth or of six-four (second inversion), chord of the sixth and fifth or of six-five (first inversion of a seventh-chord), chord of the fourth and third or of four-three (second inversion) and chord of the fourth and second, or of four-two, of the second or of two (third inversion).

On the basis of the system several extended methods have been developed for indicating not only the structure of chords as related to the bass, but their key-relations. The most used of these indicates major triads by Roman numerals in capitals and minor triads by such numerals in small capitals, the numeral in each case denoting the place of the triad-root in the scale (tonic = I, dominant = V, subdominant = IV, mediant = III, etc.). To these the thorough-bass figures are added as required. Seventh-chords are similarly designated by their roots. Where a triad is augmented or diminished the fact is usually shown by a + or °.

Methods of this kind are in widespread use in the teaching of harmony and in discussions involving harmonic analysis.

In connection with the Tonic Sol-fa system a further application of the idea may be noted, though in its fullest form it dispenses with the thorough-bass figures entirely. In this the chord-root is indicated by an initial derived from its syllable-name (D for do, F for re, M for mi, etc.), seventh-chords are marked by a subjoined 7 and the several positions are indicated by the small letters a, b, c and d (a, as indicating the first or original position, being usually omitted). Thus the second position or first inversion of a dominant-triad would be marked Sb and its third inversion Sc, while the several positions of its seventh-chord would be marked S<sub>7</sub>, Sb<sub>7</sub>, Sc<sub>7</sub> and S<sub>7</sub>d respectively.

All systems of thorough-bass encounter difficulties in covering modulation, especially when it takes place rapidly or is carried to distant keys. To be sure, the original system of mere Arabic numerals can be extended for this purpose, but they may be hard to use practically. In all the derived systems it is customary to indicate the key at the outset and later to insert marks to show the nature of modulations as they occur, either by the letter-name of the new keynote or by a numeral-sign for it. But these, again, often present practical difficulties. In all such methods there are some chords encountered the derivation of which is disputed.

The most extensive system of signs of this class is that proposed by Riemann, but this has as yet not acquired general currency.

Three-lined or Thrice-accented Octave. See under Pitch.

Threnody. A song of lamentation; a dirge or funeral-song.

Thumb-Position. In 'cello-playing, a shift in which the thumb is used as a temporary nut.

Thumb-String. The melody-string in the banjo, so called because so placed as to be played by means of the thumb.

Tibia. The Latin name of the direct or vertical flute, whether single or double.

Tie. See Notation. G.

Tierce. Same as third. G.

Tierce de Picardie, a name long given to the effect of a major triad at the close of a piece in minor. That such a close gives a stronger sense of conclusion was felt in polyphonic writing as early as the 15th century and its use has been extended to all kinds of writing. The origin of the name is unknown, though it is natural to suppose that in some way it is connected with the derivation of contrapuntal styles from Flanders and northern France.

Timbalarion. A set of 8 drums of graduated size, each somewhat modifiable in pitch by means of a pedal, on which melodies and some chords can be played. Also called tambour chromatique.

Timbre. Same as quality or tone-color; see under Acoustics. Also sometimes applied to the glockenspiel, to a stationary bell that is sounded by a hammer, to a snare on a side-drum, etc. The original meaning of the word is drum; cf. timbrel. G.

Timbrel. A small drum or tambourine.

Time. In general, that side of the structure, procedure and effect of music which consists of durational elements in varying combinations; opposed in this sense to tune, which covers the elements associated with pitch. Specifically, such elements as found in a given work or passage, sometimes with the emphasis limited to one of them, as to rhythm, to tempo or to the relative duration of tones. Thus, in triple time means in triple rhythm, in quick time means in quick tempo and to give a note its full time means to extend it to its full duration or value. In addition, it is used to cover rhythm, tempo and movement in expressions like march-time, waltz-time, etc. To keep time is to mark both tempo and rhythm by beating or counting. In notation, the time-signature indicates both the rhythm and the species of note used as a unit. See Rhythm, Measure, Notation, etc. G.

In ancient prosody, time was the same as mora, both being analogous to beat in music. This usage is not preserved in English as regards music.

In mensural music, a time-table was often prepared to indicate the possible relative values of notes as fixed by the modus, the tempus, the prolatio, etc. Similar charts of modern notes are often used. Their object is to set before the eye the relative duration of different kinds of notes, that is, their time-value.

One who has a ready and accurate sense of tempo and time-values is called a good timist, as opposed to one whose rhythmic sense is uncertain.

Timpano, Tympano. See Kettledrum. G.

Tintinnabulum. A small bell or jingle (like a sleigh-bell); also a rattle made of bells or loose metal-plates.

Tirade. An extended slide or portamento between two tones.

Tirana. See Dances. G.

Tirasse. In organ-making, same as pedal-coupler; also applied to a pedal-keyboard that may be coupled to the manuals, but has no stops of its own and hence does not represent a true pedal-organ.

Toccata. A form of keyboard-composition in which there is usually a rapid, flowing and continuous succession of figures, passages and the like, devised so as to make a brilliant and showy effect and to give opportunity for executive display, thus justifying its name as a 'touch'-piece. But the term has also been extended to works that might be called fantasias, preludes or improvisations. The diminutive is toccatina or toccataella. G.

Tombeau. An instrumental piece, somewhat like a pavan in form, of an elegiac or mournful character; cf. elegy, lament, plaint, etc.

Tonal. Pertaining to tones, as the tonal aspects of composition. Also pertaining to tonality or key, as a tonal fugue or tonal imitation; see Fugue and Imitation.

Tonality. Same as key or keyship, when used abstractly or generally. G.

Since key is used both in the abstract and the concrete, it tends to be used in a limited sense, as covering the relations between the tones of a scale, but not further relations that develop as a scale is modified by the introduction of chromatic tones, although those further relations may be considered as belonging in some sense to the original key. If a distinction is here required, tonality is the more general term, covering all relations connected with a tonal center.

Tonarion. A sort of pitch-pipe used in ancient oratory.

Tonarius, Tonarium. A service-book containing the Gregorian Psalm-tones.

Tone. As a general physical term, see Acoustics. Specifically, the interval of a major second, as between the first and second degrees of the standard major scale; often called whole-tone (as opposed to semitone) or whole-step (as opposed to half-step). In Gregorian music, one of the melodies traditionally associated with the rendering of the Psalms; a Psalm-tone. G.

Tone and note are often used more or less interchangeably, though in strictness tone refers to the sound and note to the written symbol; in many connections, however, the distinction is either immaterial or impossible to carry out.

The pitch of a tone is defined either by giving its vibration-number (the number of vibrations per second required to produce it) or by using a letter- or syllable-name that serves to relate it to some recognized system or schedule of tones; sometimes, also, by means of a technical name fixing its scale-relation (such as tonic, dominant, etc.). In general, tones are called high or low, acute or grave, especially in defining relative pitch.

The quality or timbre of a tone depends on the character of the vibrations that produce it, it being simple if the vibrations are pendular, but compound otherwise. In all cases the main sound, that by which pitch is defined, is the fundamental tone, while other components are harmonics, overtones or partial-tones (the fundamental being counted as the first partial). When tones are sounded together, they tend to generate combinational or resultant tones, which may be further distinguished as differential, summational, etc.; such tones are also often called Tartini's tones, because early observed by him.

In practical reference tone-quality or tone-color is usually defined by qualifiers, as vocal or instrumental, choral or orchestral, organ-, piano-, violin-, flute-, horn-, etc. Vocal tones are classified by register (chest-, head-, falsetto-, etc.), by form of mouth-resonance (open, covered, nasal, cramped, etc.) and by many other aspects of delivery. Some instrumental tones are distinguished as open (made from an untouched string or from an unbroken air-column) or stopped (made from a stopped string or by closing a side-hole). In the organ, the main kinds of tone are called diapason- (or typically organ-), flute-, string- and reed-.

Regarded as an interval, the greater tone is that between the first and second scale-tones (ratio, 9/8), the lesser that between the second and third (ratio, 10/9). The former is also the Pythagorean tone. The tempered tone in the mean-tone system lies halfway between the above values, but in the equal system somewhat nearer the greater. Besides semitones, smaller intervals, like quarter-tones, are sometimes considered.

In harmony, tone and note are both used in naming various constituents of scales, chords and procedures, such as key-tone for tonic, leading-tone for seventh, fundamental tone for root, passing-tone for a melodic connection between two chords, suspended tone (see Suspension), syncopated tone (see Syncopation), etc.

In embellishments, tone and note are both used in names like accessory tone, participating tone and the like.

Tone-Color. Same as timbre; see Acoustics.

Tone-Deafness. Inability to discriminate differences of pitch or quality; one of the elements of the morbid condition now known as amusia.

Tone-Determination. In acoustics, the theory or process of ascertaining the pitch of tones or the size of intervals by comparison with exact standards.

In connection with investigation of this kind various instruments are employed, called by names like siren, monochord, tone-variator, tone-tester, etc. Some of these are also employed in making psychological tests as to tone-sensitiveness or discrimination.

Tone-Formation, Tone-Production. The manner in which a performer, vocal or instrumental, produces or qualifies the tones he uses in a given case or habitually.

Tone-Master. A popular term for one who is highly expert as composer or performer.

Tone-Painting, Tone-Picture. Terms mainly used in regard to music that is pictorial or descriptive of objects or incidents, arousing images of things by means of suggestion.

Tone-Physiology. That part of physiology which deals with the vocal organs and their use.

Tone-Placing. In vocalization, the adjustment of the resonance-cavities so as to concentrate or focus the tone at various places in the mouth.

Tone-Poem. One of the forms of program-music in which the progress of the music resembles that of a lyric or descriptive poem, sometimes adjusting itself to the scenes and moods of a specific text; cf. symphonic poem.

Tone-Psychology. That part of experimental psychology which deals with the processes of mental receptiveness and discrimination as applied to various phenomena of tone, especially as these are employed in music.

Tone-Relation, Tone-Relationship. See Relation.

Tongue. Same as reed or clapper (of a bell).

Tonic. As a noun, same as key-note. As an adjective, pertaining to or associated with the key-note, as tonic triad or chord, tonic cadence, etc. G.

Tonic Sol-Fa. An elaborate method or system of teaching sight-singing, the germ of which was conceived about 1840 by Sarah Ann Glover, a teacher in Norwich (England), and developed from about 1850 by Rev. John Curwen of Plais-tow. In essence, it is an application of solmization, but embodying practical devices that are unique. Although long bitterly opposed, it has been generally adopted throughout England in elementary school-teaching and, by means of highly-organized methods of teacher-training and extensive publication of text-books and apparatus, has secured a place of honor as a positive factor in English musical culture. G.

The Guidonian syllables were used from the start of the movement in their historic sense, as a generalized symbol of scale-tones, without reference to the pitch of the key-note. Hence, as the system arose at a time when England was affected by French and Italian practice, it was dubbed the 'movable-do system.' But, for practical reasons, the syllables were spelt according to their English sound, sol was changed to soh and si to te (to avoid having two syllables begin with the same letter), giving the series doh, ray, me, fah, soh, lah, te, doh. These are presented, entirely without reference to the keyboard or to letter-names, by means of a chart called a modulator, in which the steps or degrees are arranged according to their true acoustical relations and the tone-series is carried out somewhat into the octaves above and below, as well as into the scales of soh and fah (on the sharp and the flat side respectively), by means of initial-letters representing the syllables. These initials furnish the staple of a special notation, printed in horizontal lines for whatever voice-parts are required and spaced so as to show the relative time-value of the tones, the measures and beats being marked by special signs. Provision is made for introducing chromatic steps and for symbolizing the process of modulation to any required extent. See Modulator.

In teaching, the primary effort is to locate in the pupil's mind a sense of the individuality of the scale-tones, with visual guidance from pointing to them on the modulator, until each acquires a character that is distinctive and is always associated with its letter-symbol. To aid in this process ingenious hand-signs are used, as well as various adjectives to define tone-character. Rhythm and time-patterns are early brought into connection with scale- and interval-practice, so that the pupil is gradually introduced to the fundamental elements of actual musical structure, including the use of the minor mode and of the simpler modulations. Ease with the notation is secured by incessant reference of effects perceived to appropriate symbols for them. Neither the staff-notation nor the nomenclature of the keyboard is used (except for some pitch-references) until an advanced stage and then only for general information.

The success of the system was due to the remarkable intelligence, devotion and organizing ability of John Curwen (1816-1880), followed by his talented son, John Spencer Curwen (1847-1916). The Tonic Sol-Fa Association was formed in 1853 and the Tonic Sol-Fa College (London) established in 1863. As early as 1851 the Tonic Sol-Fa Reporter began to be published and the firm of Curwen & Son ultimately became an extensive publishing-house. The College is largely devoted to maintaining a vast system of examinations, the total number of certificates granted now numbering more than a million. A very extensive literature has been built up, including not only apparatus and textbooks for various grades of teaching, but Tonic Sol-fa editions of vocal music of every degree of difficulty up to the standard oratorios. Innumerable clubs and societies have been organized to sustain interest in part-singing and oratorio-music.

For a time zealous advocates of the system went to the extreme of claiming that its notation would supplant that of the staff, even for instrumental music. Later it was realized that both forms have their uses and in teaching various combinations of the two are now in general use. The teaching-methods of Tonic Sol-faists have proved a valuable help in school-pedagogy generally and their handbooks of choral training are everywhere useful.

applies primarily to the initial impact by which the key is depressed so as to produce sound, but includes also the finger-action in holding the key and in releasing it. The term is also extended to the manner of using the feet on the pedal-key-board of the organ and even to the hand-action on instruments like the harp, the lute and the zither. See Fingering. G.

On the piano, much more than on its predecessors, great differences of tone-quality as well as of force are obtainable by means of variations in finger-action. Special adjustments are required to meet the requirements of connected melody, of chords, of octave-effects, of rapid or involved passages or figures, of the contrasts and interweavings of thematic material, etc. Some differences depend on the period, style or particular form of the music, while some depend on the player's conception or intention in interpretation. Details are hard to analyze or describe, since they involve the whole intricate mechanism of the hand and arm and since the action of this mechanism is vitally connected with mental processes. Even personal individuality plays a part, so that one player's touch is often clearly distinguishable from that of another.

Key D. M. 60.

THOMAS FORD

TREBLE.	p :d	d	: - . r	m	: f
ALTO.	1. Since :d	d	: - . d	d	: d
TENOR.	2. The :m	m	: f	s	: l
BASS.	:d	d	: - . d	d	: l

s	: f . m   r	: l	rf s	: - . s   f	: m face	I re - solv'd To		hon	- our and re -
r	: r . r   r	: r	m	: - . d   t,	: d
t	: t . t   t	: l . t	d'	: - . s   s	: s glo - ri - ous are,	Re -		ject	- eth no be -
s,	: s, s   s	: f	m	: - . m   r	: d

r	: -   d	: d	cres. d	: - . r   m	: f
now	you, If		d	: - . d   d	: d
d	: t,	d	d	: - . d   d	: d
s	: -   m	: m	m	: - . f   s	: l
hold	- - er, And		your	sweet beau - ty
s,	: -   d	: d	d	: - . d   d	: l

s	: f . m   r	pp : l	s	: - . s   f	: m
dain'd I	wish My		heart	had ne - ver
r	: r   r	: r	m	: - . d   t,	: d
t	: t   t	: l . t	d'	: - . s   s	: s past com - pare, Made			my	poor eyes the s,	: s,   s	: f	m	: - . m   r	: d r	: -   d		d

known	you
d	: t,	d
s	: -   m		m
bold	- - - er.
s,	: -   d

Touch. A general term for the manner in which the fingers are used in manipulating the keys or digitals of the piano and the organ. It

In the effort to designate varieties of touch, distinctions are often made between legato- and staccato-touch, between hammer- and pressure-touch, between a singing- and a pearly touch, between touches produced solely by flexing the finger-joints and those in which the wrist, the fore-arm or even the whole arm participate. The early pianists cultivated a quiet, even and almost motionless position of the wrist and arm, whereas the tendency of modern pianism has been to utilize many intricate coordinations as well.

On the older organs the problem of touch was almost exclusively that of exerting enough force to get the valves open, though staccato-effects required special care. But on modern instruments differences of touch may usually be applied to a considerable extent.

For touch-piece, see Toccata.

Tourdition, Tordion. See nach Tanz under Dances. G.

Town-Musician, Town-Piper. Names applied from the 15th century in many German towns and cities to players on instruments who constituted the town-band, available for municipal and social functions and often employed in the town-churches. Originally they formed a kind of guild. Such local organizations were often influential in promoting popular musical culture. The office of town-musician or town-organist still exists in many German municipalities, usually involving duties of choral leadership. See Cantor.

Toy Symphony. The English term corresponding to the German Kindersinfonie and the French Foire des Enfants. It was first used in connection with a jocose work by Haydn, written in 1788 for some children's toys and 2-3 strings. The term has since been applied to several similar works. G.

Tracker. In organ-making, a slender strip or ribbon of wood by which a pulling motion is transmitted from one point to another in the action; cf. sticker, which operates by pushing.

Tract, Tractus. In the Roman Catholic Mass, a Psalm or portion of a Psalm that is used during Lent in place of the Alleluia or the entire Gradual, or a musical setting of it. Its name comes from its being usually sung continuously (tractim, without antiphony). G.

Tractulus. Same as direct or guida; see Notation.

Tragedy, Tragic. Terms used of dramatic works in which the plot and incidents are not only serious, but more or less pathetic and calamitous, so as to arouse sentiments of poignant sympathy; opposed to comedy and comic. As applied to the opera, tragedy and comedy correspond roughly to the early contrast between the opera seria and the opera buffa, though a truly tragic denouement was generally avoided in the former. See Opera.

Trainer. One who prepares performers for appearance in public, especially an operatic instructor or coach. The German repetitor is often used in this sense, though usually applied to the trainer of an operatic chorus rather than of soloists.

Transcription. Either same as arrangement or, more specifically, an instrumental piece developed on the basis of a work written for another form of presentation, as a piano-transcription of an operatic aria or a violin-transcription of national songs. See Arrangement. G.

Transient. Denoting that which is connective or intermediate, but usually implying the suggestion of that which is foreign or extraneous. Thus a transient modulation is one which is begun as if to be positive and complete, but is so quickly given up that it hardly disturbs the original tonality. So with transient chord or transient tone, both of which imply a tangential effect which, however, is soon lost. Cf. Passing-Note.

Transition. Same as modulation. But sometimes applied specifically either to a modulation that involves no change of mode (so in the Tonic Sol-fa usage) or to a sudden shift from one tonality to another that is not related to the first (without going through any process of orderly progression of chords from one to the other). G.

Transposition. The act, process or result of changing a piece or passage from one key (tonality) to a different one, involving the use of a key-note that is higher or lower, with a corresponding change of all the other notes or tones. G.

In strictness, it is immaterial at what pitch a piece is performed, so that a piece obviously remains the same piece even if the key be altered. But practically transposition may involve collateral results of importance. A vocal piece, if transposed, may be much easier or harder with reference to the range or capacity of given singers. An instrumental piece, if transposed, usually offers a distinctly different mechanical problem for the player, especially on a keyboard-instrument. And, in either case, in the staff-notation, at least, a transposed version looks different from the original. Furthermore, to those whose sense of absolute pitch is acute and who associate a piece with its sound at a given pitch, any alteration of pitch produces a new effect.

In the orchestra, transposing instruments are those wind-instruments the actual pitch of whose tones is fixed by preliminary adjustments that establish the fundamental tone of the air-column in the tube, so that all tones produced bear definite relations to that tone. Such instruments are said to be 'pitched' in this or that key. Music for such instruments is regularly written in the key of C, but with a mark to show in what key the instrument is expected to play. The fingering and other manipulation remain the same whatever the key of the actual tones. Among such instruments are the clarinet, the horn, the trumpet, etc. The name is somewhat erroneous, since the assumed key of C is imaginary.

Transposing keyboard, a keyboard on which transposition can be effected mechanically. Experiments of this sort began as early as 1511 and have reappeared at intervals as regards the organ, the harpsichord and the piano. In most cases the keyboard itself is made to shift from side to side; in others the strings are shifted; and in Wolff's transpositeur (1873) two keyboards are provided, one over the other and movable to any desired point.

The practical ability to transpose keyboard-music readily is of great importance to the accompanist. It largely depends upon a quick apprehension of notes in their tonal relations to a key-note.

Transverse Flute. Same as cross- or German flute; see Flute.

Treble. Same as soprano. G.

The term is derived from triplum, the third part (in part-writing), the tenor being counted the first and the alto the second.

Tremolo. In vocalization, a wavy or oscillating tone, sometimes due to faulty breath-management and sometimes cultivated for its supposed emotional value; it differs from the vibrato in involving an unsteady pitch rather than a pulsating application of the breath, but the two terms are often confused. Also, on the piano, a rapid alternation of part of a chord with the rest (usually two tones against one), producing a sort of slow trill and sustaining the chord-effect as long as the alternation continues. Also, on the violin and its relatives, a sustained tone produced by the rapid alternation of down- and up-bow strokes. Also, on the organ, same as tremulant or the tone-effect which it produces. See Vibrato. G.

That there is emotional and artistic value in a certain amount of deviation from a perfectly steady vocal tone is obvious. Where this results from the aroused sentiment of the singer, instinctively expressed, it is plainly legitimate. But most of the two or three distinct sorts of tremolo that are artificially manufactured are deformities of song, especially when they involve such unsteadiness of pitch as to make it impossible to say what tone is intended.

Tremulant. In the organ, any mechanical device whereby a wavy character is imparted to certain tones. It may be an attachment to a wind-trunk that is so balanced that the air-pressure sets it oscillating, thus imparting a certain degree of intermittency to the pressure itself, or it may be a revolving fan near enough to the pipes to affect their tone. In either case its use is controlled by means of a stop-knob, piston or tablet. It is usually applied to the swell-organ, but sometimes also to the choir-organ, to the echo-organ, etc. Also called tremolo. G.

Trenchmore. One of the varieties of English country-dance; see Dances. G.

Triad. In harmony, a chord of three tones consisting of a root, its third and its fifth. The standard triads are either major or minor according as the third is major or minor; both have a perfect fifth. Other triads are diminished, with a minor third and a diminished fifth, and augmented, with a major third and an augmented fifth. Triads are named by whatever tone is taken as root, as the triad of G or of the dominant. In any key, the normal triads are those formed on the successive tones of the scale, with thirds and fifths taken from the scale-tones. Thus, in the major scale, the triads on the first, fourth and fifth degrees (tonic, subdominant and dominant) are major, those on the second, third and sixth degrees (supertonic, mediant and submediant) are minor, and that on the seventh degree (leading-tone) is diminished. In the minor scale (so-called 'instrumental' form) diminished triads occur on the second and seventh degrees and an augmented triad on the third degree. G.

The recognition of the major and minor triads as primary units was the foundation of the modern harmonic system. They form the basis or nucleus of chords of the seventh and of the ninth, both of which are extensions of the principle of chord-building by superposing thirds. The diminished triad is usually regarded as a seventh-chord with its root suppressed. The augmented triad usually appears as a melodic distortion of an ordinary major triad.

For triad-inversions and their notation, see Inversion and Thorough-Bass.

Triangle. An instrument consisting of a steel-rod bent into triangle-form (with one angle slightly open), which is sounded by being struck with a metal-rod. It is used in the orchestra both for the brilliant marking of accents and for prolonged series of rapid tones. G.

Trichord. Denoting an instrument with three unison-strings for each tone or key, as in various forms of lute, in the harpsichord, in most modern pianos, etc.; cf. bichord.

Tricinium. A composition for three voices; a vocal trio (usually contrapuntal).

Trill. See Embellishments. G.

Trilogy. A triad of dramas on related themes and intended to be given in succession.

Trine. See under Duodene.

Trio. A group of three performers or music for such an ensemble; cf. quartet, quintet, etc. Also, specifically, a contrasting section or alternativo in a minuet, march or scherzo; so called because once often performed by three instruments or parts. G.

A vocal trio is often called a terzet. A common type is for two sopranos and alto.

String-trios are usually written for two violins and 'cello or for violin, viola and 'cello, and piano-trios for piano, violin and 'cello—this last being by far the most common type. Various other species of chamber-trio are found, often for flute and strings or for wood-wind entirely. The form of composition is usually analogous to that of the quartet; see under Sonata and Symphony.

Organ-trios are properly works with the parts independently distributed between two manuals and the pedal.

Triole, Triolet, Triplet. A 3-note group occupying the time of 2 or 4; see Note-Groups. G.

Triple Concerto. See Concerto.

Triple Counterpoint or Fugue. See Counterpoint and Fugue.

Triple Rhythm or Time. See Rhythm and Time. G.

Triplum. In medieval music, a third part added above the tenor and alto; the term whence the modern treble is derived.

Tritone. An interval equal to three 'tones' or whole-steps, as between the fourth and seventh degrees of the major scale; an augmented fourth. G.

In the older contrapuntal writing this interval was carefully ruled out, not only as a direct melodic progression, but also in various situations where it was felt to be remotely suggested. Hence came the dictum, 'Mi contra fa est diabolus in musica' (mi in the hexachord-solmization standing for the seventh and fa for the fourth). The objection obtained also to the inversion of the interval (the diminished fifth), which was called quinta falsa. This general prohibition still persists in strict writing.

Troll. Same as round or catch.

Tromba. See Trumpet. The diminutive is trombetta. G.

Tromba Marina, Marine Trumpet, Sea-Trumpet. A unique instrument of the viol-class, having a long, rather slender body that is built up of several strips into a tapering, polygonal, pinnacle-shape, resting with a flat, usually flaring, end on the floor, and surmounted by a small neck and head somewhat like that of an ordinary viol. It has but one string, which is its harmonic tones (not by 'stopping' in the true sense, but by touching nodes). Also called nun's-fiddle, trumscheit, etc. G.

The name has caused much discussion. 'Trumpet' may have come from its general likeness to a large straight horn; it is to be noted, also, that its scale of tones is exactly like that of a trumpet (without valves).

'Marine' has given rise to the guess that it was used for naval signals; it is more plausible to associate it with a trumpeter named Marin (16th cent.). 'Nun's-fiddle' comes from the fact that it was much used in connection with women's voices, with which its scale agrees. 'Trumscheit' refers to its strong resonance.

A peculiarity is the form of the bridge, which is rather broad and so placed that all the strain is on one foot, while the other vibrates loosely on the belly, adding an element of readiness to the tone.

Tromba Spezzata. See under Trombone.

Trombone. A large instrument of the trumpet-class, distinguished by having one portion of the tube a movable U-shaped crook or slide that can be pushed out or in telescopically so as to lengthen or shorten the effective length by various amounts and set the fundamental pitch at different tones. When the slide is pushed completely in it is said to be in its first position. Extending it so as to lower the pitch a semitone gives the second position and so on semitonically up to the seventh position. In each position about seven of the partials are available, beginning with the octave of the fundamental, so that the total compass is about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  octaves. A full family of five sizes is made, but in the orchestra three only are ordinarily used (alto, tenor and bass), forming the richest group in the brass-wind section. Trombones are often made with valves instead of slides, but the tone-quality is not so pure, though the manipulation is easier. G.

When trombones were first used is not known. Under the name of sackbut they are traceable as far back as the 14th century (Spanish sacabuche, 'draw-tube,' French sacqueboute). An early Italian name was tromba spezzata ('broken trumpet').

In the orchestra trombones are usually combined with the tuba.

Trope. A general name for a great variety of melodic figures, with or without special texts, which from the 8-9th centuries were interpolated at different points in the Mass and other offices. In the 16th century these irregular usages were excluded in the revision of the service-books. G.

In a true sense, the sequence was originally a trope, through ultimately sanctioned as an independent element in the service. Certain elaborate tropes were preserved in connection with particular hymns, as the melodies for 'Corde natus ex Parentis' and for 'O filii et filiae.'

Troubadours and Trouvères. General names for the classes of poet-singers who flourished during the 12-13th centuries, the former in Provence, the latter in northern France, both, however, with imitators in neighboring countries (Spain, Italy, England, etc.). The Troubadours were of the noble or royal class, but the Trouvères were drawn from other classes as well. Both made use more or less of jongleurs or professional singers and players, who acted as servitors in performance and later as popular disseminators of the songs that proved most attractive. The Troubadours were somewhat organized as a sort of fraternity, holding frequent competitions or 'tournaments of song,' but the Trouvères represented a movement more diffused and widespread. The Troubadours magnified love-songs, often of a decidedly fantastic type of sentiment and embodied in several studied verse-forms, while the Trouvères generally magnified heroic epics and ballads, with many religious lyrics. Their conjoint activity is of great importance in the development of lyric and epic poetry, as well as in stimulating interest in secular music at a time when that of the Church was generally considered the only valuable form. They also directed attention to some of the portable instruments that could be applied in accompaniment. See Minnesinger and Jongleurs.

Both names are derived from the stem trov- or trop-, meaning originally 'find' or 'invent' and, by extension, 'compose.' They are therefore analogous to 'poet' in its original sense.

Among the verse-forms of the Troubadours were the canzon or stanza-song in general, the tenso or dialogue and the sirvente or narrative, with more special species like the alba or morning-song, the serena or evening-song, the balada or dance-song, the planh or complaint, etc. Extreme ingenuity was often expended on working out intricate stanzas, with reiterated and interlocking rhymes, studied points of assonance and the like. The music tended to swing away from the austere style of plain-song toward the free grace and movement that later was characteristic of folk-songs and popular music generally. It was the impetus of this movement that probably gave rise to the so-called Ars Nova at Florence in the 14th century and thus ultimately brought about the reaction toward secular styles in the 16th century.

The Troubadours were practically extinguished in connection with the fierce religious war in 1208-29 that was occasioned by the so-called 'heresy' of the Albigenses and which devastated the whole of southern France.

The Trouvères worked over an area where there were many monasteries and religious houses, in which music was cultivated and taught. Hence their lyric impulse tended to affect the style of polyphonic music much more than did that of the Troubadours. Doubtless they set patterns of melody and form that influenced the advance of the early contrapuntists of the Flemish or Gallo-Belgian school.

It is mainly through the jongleurs that these early movements are to be connected with the prominence during the Renaissance of the minstrel class. Neither Troubadours nor Trouvères proper, however, were itinerant musicians, using song as a means of livelihood; they were rather those who cultivated poetry and music as an elegant accomplishment and an adornment of private leisure. But the spirit involved was that exuberant expression of taste and feeling that gave character finally to the rich period of the Renaissance.

The most famous of the Trouvères was Adam de la Halle (1240-1287), whose roving career took him to Paris and Naples.

Troupe. A company of singers, instrumentalists or dancers that is organized to perform together either at certain fixed places or on tour; especially an opera-company.

Trumpet. The typical brass-wind instrument, differing from the horn in having a cupped mouthpiece, a tube with a bore that is mainly cylindrical and a bell more conical than flaring. In some older forms the tube was straight, but is now usually more or less coiled upon itself. It differs from the bugle and its relatives in the length of the tube in proportion to its diameter. In the natural trumpet the compass comprises the harmonic series from the third to about the fifteenth or even the twentieth, the fundamental tone being fixed in advance by means of crooks in any required key. The valve-trumpet (also called chromatic) accomplishes the same results with but little use of detachable crooks, but its tone is not always equal to the form with an unbroken tube. Side-holes and slides (as in the trombone) have also been used to a limited extent. Slide trumpets are practically treble-trombones, though the slide is usually not used to the same extent. G.

The ancient trumpet proper was the curved lituus, but the straight tuba was closely akin to it. In the 18th century the trumpet is usually called tromba or clarino, both of which names are still much used in scores. At one period the term principale was also common.

Tuba. The straight Roman trumpet; opposed to the curved lituus. Also any one of the largest and lowest-pitched members of the saxhorn-family, having usually four valves and a range of over 3 octaves. It is regularly combined with the trombones in the orchestra and supplies the chief bass for the military band. G.

The parent of the modern instruments was Wieprecht's bass-tuba, invented (with Moritz) in 1835.

Tuck, Tucket. A blast or flourish on the trumpet. Also once used of a drum-signal. G.

Tune. In general, a musical sound or a succession of such sounds, as in a melody or song. More or less extended to include any compact and obvious piece of composition. Specifically, a harmonic setting (usually in four parts) of a metrical hymn; a hymn-tune (in Germany usually called a choral). G.

Hymn-tunes divide more or less into several classes according to their construction. The form adopted in the 16th century was either derived directly from folk-songs (both in Germany and in the West) or composed in their general style. This type was varied in movement and pattern, with a simple and clear harmonization (the melody at first being in the tenor). During the 17th century it became customary to reduce all such tunes to a form with equal notes as far as possible, which then became the conventional type called choral or chorale. In this type solidity and weight of harmony are prominent, with a careful separation of the lines as units. During the 18th century, and much more in the 19th, the tendency to a type more akin to the part-song was manifest, particularly in England, where the part-song tune finally became characteristic. Furthermore, in connection with the development of music for the Sunday-school, for informal religious gatherings and for evangelistic meetings, still a third type gained importance during the later 19th century, which may be called the harmonized-air tune, since its form is determined almost wholly by a popular melody, to which simple harmonies are added. In this last class there is little of artistic value or significance. See under Hymn.

Any collection of hymn-tunes is a tune-book, especially when the aim is not to give the words in full. Such books were produced in large numbers during the 18th and early 19th century. They have been generally superseded by books giving both hymns and tunes in full. A.

Tune is also the general term for the elements of music that depend upon pitch, that is, melody and harmony; opposed to time, which concerns rhythm and meter. Also, specifically, the correct adjustment of pitch, especially with reference to a standard or to other voices or instruments, as to sing in tune.

Tuner. One who puts an instrument in proper tune; see Tuning. Also, in organ-making, an adjustable flap or other piece at the top of a flue-pipe whereby its effective length can be altered, so as to raise or lower the pitch of its tone.

Tuning. The act, process or result of adjusting the intonation or tune of an instrument. Its method varies according to the construction of the instrument, being most elaborate in instruments of fixed intonation, like the piano, the organ and the harp. In such instruments tuning involves the adoption of some principle of temperament; see Temperament. G.

In instruments with strings, tuning is effected by regulating the tension by means of tuning-pegs or pins, turned by the hand (in small instruments like the violin) or by means of a tuning-lever, key, wrench or hammer. In wood-wind and brass-wind instruments tuning is effected by means of some device that lengthens or shortens the effective length of the tube, as by a tuning-crook or slide. In the organ, tuning applies an analogous process in various ways according to the forms of the pipes. In bells, tuning is accomplished by varying the thickness of the sound-bow. In those stringed instruments that are played with the aid of 'stopping,' tuning consists only in setting the strings at the usual pitch or some other pitch specially chosen (accordatura or scordatura), the tune of all stopped tones being subject to the player's action. In wind-instruments tuning affects only the fundamental tone of the tube, the pitch of all actual tones being determined by the harmonic series of that tone, with some slight modifications induced by the method of blowing. In the case of the piano, organ and harp, however, every individual string and pipe calls for separate tuning (over 200 strings in most pianos, several thousand pipes in many organs).

On the piano and the organ the first step in tuning, after fixing one tone of reference that corresponds with the standard pitch to be used, is to tune at least one octave as accurately as possible in the temperament desired. This is called 'laying the scale' or 'setting the temperament.' From that primary octave the rest of the instrument can be tuned in octaves.

In organ-tuning several special tools are used, including especially a tuning-cone or horn, one end of which is a conical point by which pipe-tops may be spread and the other a conical socket by which they may be contracted (in the one case sharpening the tone, in the other flattening it), and a tuning-knife, a ruler-like piece of metal for reaching and moving the tuning-wires on reed-pipes.

Tuning either pianos or organs is a profession requiring considerable native endowment and also careful training, especially as much repair-work is naturally involved in it. The general introduction of player-mechanisms into pianos has added fresh mechanical problems.

Tuning-Fork. An instrument of steel, usually consisting of a U-shaped pair of prongs and a stem below them that can be held in the hand or set in a base or a resonance-box. G.

Its pitch depends on its size and mass and may be fixed with much precision without being subject to variation under ordinary changes of temperature. The tone is deficient in partial-tones, while the fundamental is strong and definite. It is therefore extremely useful as a practical guide for setting the pitch in tuning (giving usually a standard a or c) and for exact comparisons in the acoustical laboratory, where extensive sets of graded forks are often employed. It may be sounded by striking against a hard surface, by a violin-bow or by means of magnetic impulses. The last method makes sustained tones possible that are uniform in intensity.

Turba. In medieval mysteries and similar dramatic works, the name of the chorus that represents the populace or a crowd.

Turkish Music. See Janizary Music. G.

Turn. See Embellishments. G.

Tusch. A German term for a flourish of trumpets and drums, thrice repeated, or one in which all the wind-instruments join, used as a sign of welcome or applause. G.

Tutti. As an adjective, denoting that which is intended for or is performed by the whole body of singers or players; opposed to solo; see Ripieno. As a noun, any passage thus rendered. G.

Twelfth. The interval of an octave and a fifth or a tone or note at that interval; a compound fifth.

Two-lined or Twice-accented Octave. See under Pitch.

Tympan. An old Irish instrument, presumably allied to the crwth. Also same as tympano.

Tympano, Timpano. See Kettledrum.

Typphone. A keyboard-instrument like a piano, but with steel-strips instead of strings.

Tyrolienne. See Dances.

U

Ueberbrettl. See under Ernst von Wolzogen (in Part II).

Uilleann Pipes. The original name for the Irish bagpipe (literally, elbow-pipes); often incorrectly written 'union pipes.' G.

Shakespeare's 'woolen bagpipes' (Merchant of Venice, iv. 1) is doubtless a corruption of this.

Unaccented Octave. See under Pitch.

Unca. Same as hook or pennant.

Undecuplet. An 11-note group occupying the time of 6 or 8; see Note-Groups.

Under-chord, Under-phone. See under Phone.

Unequal Temperament. Any form of temperament other than that called equal; see Temperament. G.

Unequal Voices. Same as mixed voices. G.

Unessential Tone or Note. Same as auxiliary tone or note.

Unichord. Same as monochord or as tromba marina.

Unison. See First. Also, in the piano (or other stringed instrument), one of a group of 2-3 strings tuned in unison, so as to reinforce each other, and sounded together. G.

Up-bow, Up-stroke. In playing the violin and similar instruments, a motion of the bow from point to nut; opposed to down-bow, down-stroke.

Up-beat. In conducting, an upward motion of the hand to mark the last beat of a measure; opposed to down-beat (which it regularly precedes).

Use. In liturgics, the type or form of service, belonging to and used in a particular church diocese or region, as distinguished from that used elsewhere, as the use of Sarum (Salisbury), the use of Milan, the Roman use, etc. G.

Ut. See Solmization and Hexachord. G.

ALTO AND TREBLE VIOLS

VIOLONCELLO, TENOR, VIOLA AND VIOLIN

V. As an abbreviation, V. or v. stands for violino, voce (as m. v., mezza voce) and volti (as v. s., volti subito) and V for versicle.

Vagans. See Quintus. G.

Value. The relative duration of a note as compared with other notes in the same piece; usually time-value; see Notation and Time.

Valve. In wind-instruments, any device for controlling the air-current by either blocking it entirely or diverting it from one channel to another. G.

In the organ, the chief valves are those that control the admission of the wind to the pipes of a particular pitch, being operated by a key on the keyboard. In older instruments each key on every keyboard opens a hinged valve from the wind-chest of that keyboard into a groove under the soundboard over which stand all the pipes belonging to that key; whether any of them sound depends upon whether any stop-knob affecting them is drawn. In some newer instruments there is a separate puppet-valve for every pipe, but the principle of cross-selection remains the same (depressing the key produces tone only so far as stop-knobs are drawn). Other valves are those connected with the feeders, the bellows or the wind-trunks. These are of ordinary types. In addition, where any form of pneumatic action is employed, a large number of special valves are required according to the system chosen. In the mechanism of automatic instruments like piano-players the valve-apparatus is necessarily elaborate.

In tubular instruments of the horn- and trumpet-classes valves are often used to change the length of the air-column in the tube by adding to it the tube of a crook and thus lowering the fundamental pitch of the instrument (one valve dropping the pitch a semitone, a second a tone and a third a tone and a half, and these being operable singly or in conjunction). Such valves are usually of the piston- or the rotary type, the former having a plunger with a cross-channel and the latter being a four-way cock. A horn without valves is called a natural horn, but one with valves is a valve-horn; so with other forms. The total mechanism connected with the valves is the valve-action.

In tubular instruments of the flute-, oboe- and clarinet-classes (and to a limited extent also in a few brass-wind instruments) there are side-holes in the tube operated by means of keys, which open or close external valves (flat disks of soft material) in a way analogous to the opening or closing of such holes by the fingers. Such mechanism is usually called the key-action and the instrument designated as keyed or key.

Vamp. An improvised accompaniment. G.

Variant. A second (usually easier) reading of a passage that may be used instead of the main reading. Also extended to alternative versions of an entire number or pieces, as well as, in the case of folk-songs and the like, to transcriptions of differing usages of the same song. G.

Riemann also uses the term to designate abrupt changes from major to minor or vice versa where only the mode is altered without disturbing the tonal center.

Variation. A form of composition in which a theme, after having been stated simply, is repeated with amplification or modification. Usually such treatment is carried out in a series of differing repetitions; hence the common term theme and variations. G.

In strictness, the word may be applied to any form of thematic development, even such as is characteristic of counterpoint. It is usually reserved, however, for the treatment of dance- or song-like themes as elongated wholes, rather than merely in brief tonal phrases. As early as the 16-17th century composers began the practice of stating a dance-subject and then adding one or more doubles upon it, these being mere enlargements or embellishments, without essential changes of harmony or structure. In the 18th century and the early 19th variations were extremely common, tending more or less to follow a few beaten tracks of style, but sometimes attaining distinction in the hands of the greater geniuses. The conventional rigidity and monotony of the classical treatment of the form led to its being mostly abandoned in the early romantic period. But later it came back in fresher guise, without formality and occasionally without disclosing its identity at first sight, and is now not infrequent, sometimes not in independent form, but as the method for a section or movement in a complex work.

Varsoviana, Varsoviennne. See Dances.

Vaticana, Editio. The title of the complete revision of the Roman Catholic musical service-books in process since 1904 in accordance with the new light upon the historic plain-song resulting from the researches of the Benedictines of Solesmes; opposed to the Editio Medicea of 1614, which it is designed to replace.

Vaudeville. Originally, a popular song, usually satirical, or a play in which such songs were incorporated. It has now come to mean a miscellaneous stage-entertainment, with more or less light music, of a popular and amusing character. G.

Veil. In phonation, a pervasive obscuration of the tones, due usually to some peculiarity in the larynx or to fatigue or inflammation. Occasionally, however, a naturally veiled voice has a certain special effectiveness. G.

Veni, Creator Spiritus. A famous hymn of unknown authorship (probably 9th cent.) which is used throughout the Western Church at Pentecost, at ordinations and at other special occasions. It has received musical setting in many forms. G.

The popular attributions of the hymn to the Emperor Charlemagne, to Bishop Ambrose and to Pope Gregory the Great have no clear evidence in their favor. It may possibly be by Rhabanus Maurus, who was Archbishop of Mayence early in the 9th century.

It consists of six stanzas and a doxology, the first being

Veni, Creator Spiritus,
Mentes tuorum visita,
Imple superna gratia,
Quæ tu creasti pectora.

Veni, Sancte Spiritus. A famous sequence of uncertain authorship (not before 1200) which is appointed for use in the Roman Catholic Church at Pentecost and has been musically set in various forms. G.

Its common attribution to King Robert II of France has no adequate support. It seems much more likely that it is by Pope Innocent III.

There are ten stanzas, with ingeniously varied rhymes, the first being

Veni, Sancte Spiritus,
Et emitte cœlitus,
Lucis tuæ radium.

Because of its beauty it is often called 'the Golden Sequence.'

Venite. A canticle consisting of Psalm 95, or its musical setting, which in the Morning Prayer of the Anglican Church precedes the Psalms for the day; from its position there and in the Roman Breviary, as well as from its sentiment, often called the Invitatorium or Invitatory Psalm. G.

Its text begins, 'Venite, exultemus Domino.'

Vent, Ventage. Same as side-hole or finger-hole.

Ventil. In general, same as valve. In organ-making, specifically applied to a large valve or shutter in a wind-trunk whereby the wind can be admitted to or cut off from a section of the instrument by means of a stop-knob or piston. G.

Verism, Veritism. A term often applied to the operas and operettas by recent Italian composers in which the realistic impulse is indulged in an intense and even brutal way. Hence the term veristic school for this style in general.

Verschiebung. Same as soft pedal on the piano, when it acts by shifting the keyboard to one side so that the hammers do not strike all the unisons; see under Pedal. G.

Verse. Properly, a line or stich in poetry, but generally used as the same as stanza in poetry or as versicle in liturgical forms. G.

In English church-music a passage or movement designed for a solo voice or voices is marked Verse; opposed to Full or Chorus, designed for the choir as a whole.

Verset. A short organ-response, prelude or interlude in a church-service. Also sometimes same as versicle.

Versicle. In liturgies, the first of any pair of short sentences said or sung in alternation by the officiant and the choir or congregation; opposed to response. It is often marked with the sign V, corresponding to R for the response. G.

A common example is the formula often used in marking transitions in the service:

V The Lord be with you.
R And with thy spirit.

Vertical. In harmonic analysis, denoting chord-structure and progression as distinct from voice-leading or progression; opposed to horizontal. The harmonic aspects of composition are regarded vertically, while the contrapuntal aspects are regarded horizontally. The figure is obviously derived from music as notated. G.

In piano-making, vertical stringing is sometimes applied, especially in uprights, to stringing in a single plane; opposed to overstringing.

Vesperal, Vesperale. In the Roman Catholic Church, a service-book that contains the offices either for Vespers alone or for these with Compline, etc. G.

Vespers. The seventh of the Canonical Hours (6 P.M.); in England often called Even-Song. As a service, Vespers or Even-Song usually comprises more than the office for Vespers alone. G.

Vibration. In acoustics, the oscillation of the particles of a solid or gaseous body by which the phenomena of sound are produced. In some cases the term is applied to each movement of the particles, to or fro, but more commonly to the combined movement, to and fro; the former being a single and the latter a double vibration. As to direction, it may be transverse or pendular (across the main substance of the body, as in a string or reed) or longitudinal (in the line of the body's extension, as in the air-column of a pipe). The pitch of the tone produced depends on the rate or rapidity of vibration and is expressed by means of a vibration-number (vibrations per second). The intensity of the tone depends on the amplitude of the vibration (indirectly on the force exerted). The quality or timbre of the tone depends on whether the vibration be simple or compound and, if the latter, on the nature of the compounding.

All vibrating-bodies, by virtue of their elasticity, tend to vibrate more or less both as wholes (giving a fundamental tone) and also in their aliquot parts (giving overtones or harmonics). It is the superposition of these latter partial vibrations upon the principal one that produces the most striking differences of timbre.

Vibrato. In vocalization, a pulsating effect in which the tone comes and goes rapidly without change of pitch, as if under stress of emotion; cf. tremolo. Also, in playing the violin and related instruments, a tremulous effect produced by rapidly rocking the finger on a string while 'stopping' it—a device now rather constantly adopted as a means of imparting an emotional quality to the tone. In some ways this latter effect is analogous to the bebung as applied to the clavichord. See Tremolo. G.

It is curious that the terms tremolo and vibrato should be used contradictorily as regards voices and instruments, the vibrato on the violin being properly a tremolo, while the tremolo on both the piano and the violin is what is called vibrato in singing.

Vibrator. In the reed-organ, same as reed, including the metal-frame to which it is attached; see Reed and Reed-Organ.

Vicar Choral. Same as minor canon. G.

Victimæ Paschali. A prose or sequence, or its musical setting, used in Easter offices in the Roman Catholic Church and also frequent in medieval mysteries for Easter. G.

Its text, which is irregular in form, begins 'Victimæ Paschali laudes immolent Christiani.'

Its authorship is unknown. Among conjectures, that connecting it with the priest Wipo, in imperial service in the 11th century, is perhaps the most likely.

Vielle. Originally, same as viol, but finally applied mostly to the hurdy-gurdy. G.

Villancico. Originally, a Spanish popular part-song, analogous to the Italian villanella. In the 17-18th centuries applied specifically to a form of church-music, much like the English anthem, consisting of three sections, the first and third called estribillo and set for the chorus, while the second, made up of one or more coplas, was for solo-voices (cf. the full and verse sections of many anthems). The choral sections were often set for two or more choirs.

Villanella, Villota. A form of popular part-song to accompany dancing that was common in Italy during the 16th century. It was usually a slight harmonization of an air and sung without accompaniment. G.

Vina. A general name for several varieties of Hindu stringed instruments, usually with a body of gourd or wood, a broad neck with many adjustable frets and about 5 or 6 strings. In some cases a supplementary gourd-resonator is attached near the head and flung over the shoulder in playing. As a rule, these instruments are played by plucking, but a bow may sometimes be used. G.

Vinata. An Italian vintage- or drinking-song.

Viol. The general name for the extensive and important class of stringed instruments that is characterized by having a limited number of strings stretched over an elliptical or pear-shaped body and a slender neck, the sound being produced by the friction of a bow. The viol differs essentially from the lute only in the method of sounding, but it also has a smaller number of strings because of that fact. The pitch of the tones is determined by the method of tuning (or accordatura) adopted and by 'stopping' the strings against the fingerboard, which may be with or without frets. Their quality depends chiefly upon the materials and form of the body, but is also influenced by the way in which the bow is applied. Instruments of this class appear far back in European history, perhaps being originally suggested by Oriental prototypes. Their artistic importance rapidly increased during the 16th century and in the 17th the special form known as the violin was so far perfected as to become the leading solo-instrument and the center of ensemble-groups. Since then the violin group has maintained its place as one of the chief means of instrumental expression. G.

The English word viol and the Italian viola are derived from the Old German High fidula and the late Latin vitula, from which also the English fiddle comes. Its stem suggests the notion of merrymaking. The German geige (like its English relative jug) probably embodies reference to the up-and-down motion of the bow.

Bowed instruments appear in so many parts of the world that they may have sprung up anywhere without being derived from each other. Hence European viols may have been indigenous. On the other hand, the references to the rebec and the crwth in early times indicates that suggestion may have come either from the Orient direct or from the application of the bow to an ancient lyre. The rebec had a small pear-shaped outline, without a separate neck, while the crwth had a rectangular frame and a distinct neck and fingerboard in the center. The medieval viol may have combined elements from both types. Until about 1500 lutes and viols had much in common, both being flat in front and arched behind, but the viol was necessarily narrower and with fewer strings because of the difficulty of getting access to them with the bow. During the 16th century the differentiation set in whereby the violin became contrasted with the viol proper, the distinctions lying in the gradual alteration of the shape of the body by the development of a waist and the making of the back to match the belly, with sides or ribs vertical to both, as well as by the sharper separation of the neck from the body. Vestiges of the viol-form lingered long in certain instruments (indeed, are still visible in the modern double-bass).

The term violino is the diminutive of viola. The corresponding augmentative is violone, a big viol, and from this comes violoncello, a small big viol. The position of holding is indicated by the terms viola da braccio, arm-viol (whence comes the German name bratsche for the tenor-violin), viola da gamba, leg-viol (the predecessor of the violoncello) and viola da spalto, shoulder-viol, which was larger than the viola da braccio. Until even the 17th century viols were commonly held upright in front of the body. The term viola is now used specifically for the tenor-violin. One who plays this instrument is a violinist, while one who plays the violin or the violoncello is a violinist or a violoncellist; but the longer words are commonly abbreviated to cello and cellist, just as a player on the viola da gamba was often called a gambist.

The later viols, as they began to approach the shape of the violin, formed a family of four or five sizes. The body was elliptical, with indentations to facilitate bowing, but without a fully-formed waist, and the back was flat, sloping toward the neck and strengthened within by cross-bars and a center-piece that supported the sound-post. The sound-holes were usually shaped like a C. The strings numbered 5-7, tuned in fourths and thirds. The tone was keen, but lacking in sonority and sweetness.

Viola. The generic term in Italian for instruments of the viol-class. Specifically, in modern usage, the member of the violin-family between the violin and the 'cello'; commonly called tenor-violin or tenor (in German bratsche, in French sometimes taille). As now usually made, it is about a seventh larger than the violin and its strings are tuned a fifth lower ( $c_1, g_1, d, a$ ). Its tone is much larger and darker than that of the violin and somewhat apt to be gruff, but has great value in combination and contrast. G.

It is descended from the older viola da braccio. It is said that the name violino was first given to it (just before 1600), though later transferred to the treble form. To match its pitch, it should properly be made larger, but in that case would need to be held upright (like the 'cello'). Its present size is a compromise fixed after many experiments.

Viola Bastarda. A large variety of viola da gamba with sympathetic strings; often made in more than one size, so as to form a group. From it came the baritone or baryton that was common in the 18th century. Also called viola di fagotto. Cf. viola d'amore. G.

Viola d'Amore, Viole d'Amour. A variety of viola da braccio with sympathetic strings, like the viola bastarda. It had 5-7 strings of gut on the fingerboard and 7-14 of wire underneath. Its sweetness of tone kept it long in favor and it is still occasionally revived. Also called viola di bordone, violet and English violet. G.

It has been suggested that its name, otherwise unexplained, may possibly be corrupted from some form like viola da Mori, since analogous instruments occur in the Orient.

Viola da Gamba. The bass in the old violin-family, corresponding to the modern violoncello, which superseded it gradually during the 18th century. It had 6-7 strings (tuned  $d_2, g_2, c_1, e_1, a_1, d, g$ ). Though its tone was lacking in sonority in lower pitches and rather harsh in upper ones, it continued popular longer than the other viols; it has even been revived in recent times. Often called simply gamba. G.

Viola Pomposa. A variant of the violoncello, intermediate between it and the viola, having 5 strings (tuned  $c_2, g_2, d_1, a_1, e$ ). It was invented by J. S. Bach about 1720, but never came into general use. Also called violoncello piccolo. G.

Viol. Either the viola d'amore or a small viol or violin. The terms English violet and also violetta marina refer to the viola d'amore, the latter being a special variety attributed to Handel's concertmaster, Pietro Castrucci. The violetta piccola, however, seems to have been a small variety of the early violin. G.

Violin. The generic name for the viol as perfected during the 17th century and, specifically, for the treble member of the group or family, the other members being the viola (alto or tenor) and the violoncello (baritone or bass), with the bass-viol or double-bass added for orchestral effects (this latter not made after the violin-model). The type is distinguished from that of the 16th-century viol in a number of details, which, without radically changing the general appearance, wrought such an improvement in the mechanical and tonal character of the instrument as to set it at the head of all solo-instruments. The regular number of strings is four, tuned in fifths, the compass of the violin proper being  $g_1-e$ , that of the viola a fifth lower and that of the 'cello an octave below the viola. G.

The violin differs from the viol in having a smaller and shallower body, with both back and belly arched and the lines of the body not merged in those of the neck. The most important difference lies in the shaping and construction of the waist, which is more deeply incurved and joined to the sides by sharp, projecting corners, strengthened within by corner-blocks. This ingenious union of parts imparts a stanchness and unity to the body quite impossible in the viol. The bridge is lighter and finer in line, and it is placed relatively higher in the waist between f-shaped sound-holes. The adjustment of the bass-bar and sound-post is more exactly calculated for the maximum of strength and sonority.

The number of separate pieces in a violin is regularly about 70, including 2 each in the belly and the back (sometimes only 1), 6 sides or ribs, united with each other and with belly and back by means of 6 blocks and 12 linings, besides the fixed bass-bar beneath the belly and the movable sound-post between belly and back underneath the bridge, the neck and head, the latter containing the peg-box and tuning-pegs and terminating in the scroll, the fingerboard, the bridge, the upper and lower nuts, the tail-piece and its attachments and the four strings. No metal is used and all joints are made by gluing under tension. The edges of the belly and back are protected by delicate inlays of hard wood (24 pieces), called purflings. The whole is carefully treated with special varnishes. The woods used are maple, pine and ebony. The strings are of gut or sometimes wire (E-string), graduated in size.

During the 16th century the course of improvement was slow and tentative. It is probable that the characteristic waist of the violin was first tried in the form known as lira (q.v.) and the idea of the viola d'amore, with its sympathetic strings, was also carefully tested. Positive advance was rapid and sure during the whole of the 17th century, culminating in the first quarter of the 18th. The chief centers of manufacture were in northern Italy and southern Germany, especially at Brescia (Da Salò and the Maggini), at Cremona (the Amatis, the Guarneris, Stradivari, etc.), at other places in Italy and in the Tyrol (Stainer and the Albanis). These became the inspirers of a host of skillful workmen in all parts of southern and western Europe.

The characteristic violin-bow was not perfected till about 1775 (by Tourte of Paris).

The original impulse in the improvement of the viol was to secure greater sonority. But with this came a still more important refinement and flexibility of tone. Hence, as the violin became known it speedily took its place as the solo-instrument par excellence. Its use promptly affected every combination of instruments as well, pointing the way toward the true conception of the chamber-ensemble and the orchestra. Its superiority, with its singular capacity for sustained and graduated effects, soon influenced the trend of all instrumental composition, contributing visibly to the shaping of forms like the suite, the overture and the concerto. And its value was the reason for the rise of the instrumental virtuoso and incidentally of the institution of the instrumental concert. Even before 1700 founders of the art of violin-playing or violinism, like Corelli, Torelli and Vivaldi, begin to point forward to long lines of successors in all musical countries.

For a table of the main schools of violin-playing, see Grove's Dictionary, v. pp. 318-9. See also Bow, Shift and Position.

Violino Piccolo. A violin of smaller model and usually higher pitch than the standard violin, at first used (before shifts were common on the violin) to secure a higher compass and later sometimes employed for teaching purposes. G.

For the miniature or pocket-violin, see Pochette or Kit.

Violin-Piano. A general name for the many forms of instrument in which the keyboard and a large number of strings have been united with some mechanism for sounding the latter by friction instead of by plucking or hammer-blows.

Violoncello. The bass or baritone of the violin-family, having the strings tuned an octave lower than those of the viola ( $c_2, g_2, d_1, a_1$ ). Though it began to be made in the 17th century, it did not take the place of the viol da gamba till well into the 18th. Since then it has become one of the great solo-instruments and an indispensable member of all ensembles. Often abbreviated to 'cello. G.

Violone. The large or bass member of the viol-family, the precursor of the modern bass-viol or double-bass; see Viol and Double-bass.

Violotta. A form of the violin-family intermediate in size and pitch between the viola and the 'cello, invented about 1890 by A. Stelzner of Dresden.

Virgil Practice Clavier. A keyboard devised as a help in acquiring piano- and organ-technique by A. K. Virgil of New York (at first under the name techniphone). Though producing no tones, both the depression and the release of the keys produce slight clicks, which are used in acquiring both legato- and staccato-touches, and the resistance of the keys is adjustable in six different grades. It was first patented in 1892. G. (Gymnastics).

Virginal. A small form of spinet or harpsichord, usually rectangular in shape (like a clavi-chord) and without legs. The earliest reference to the name is by Virdung in 1511. G.

The name is said to have come from its use by girls and young women, but may have some connection with songs to the Virgin. The usual form in early writers was either 'virginals' or 'a pair of virginals'—'pair' referring to the 'set' of keys or of strings.

Virtuoso. A performer, usually an instrumentalist, who not only has remarkable or masterly command of technique, but uses his skill in public as a professional concertist. See Concert. G.

The gradual rise of virtuosity in the modern sense of the term began as soon as instrumental music acquired artistic standing in the 16th century. But it was not until the later 17th and the earlier 18th that the line of eminent violinists, followed by the harpsichordists, became conspicuous figures in the musical world.

To these were added after about 1770 the earlier of the many pianists who presently became the most prominent of all. Meanwhile virtuosi on other instruments, like the flute, the oboe and the horn, as well as the gamba and the 'cello, often secured much notice. In the field of church-music virtuoso-organists were known from before 1700. The only arena until after 1800 for the virtuoso-singer was the opera or its concert-counterpart, the oratorio, but from about 1850 such singers were everywhere known and applauded.

The word virtuoso often carries some implication that the performer is a dexterous executant without being a true artist or interpreter. This is doubtless true of many who are called by the name, but the word itself implies artistic mastery.

Vis-a-vis. Denoting a harpsichord or piano with two keyboards facing each other, for performance by two players.

Vocal. Pertaining to or produced by the voice, as vocal music, vocal score, etc.; opposed to instrumental.

Vocal cords (also written chords), the membranous flaps in the larynx whose approximation and tension in making the aperture of the glottis forms the marvelously adjustable double reed from which phonation is produced by the impact of breath from the lungs. The passages above the larynx form the vocal tube.

Vocalics. The science of the voice as an operative function and of vocal sounds as products.

Vocalion. A form of reed-organ gradually developed from about 1880 by James B. Hamilton and others of England, based on experiments reaching back to 1872. It was peculiar in being operated by compressed air (like the harmonium) with a tension much higher than in reed-organs generally, in using reeds of extraordinary size and weight and in combining with them ingenious resonance-cavities that aimed to make the tones resemble those of the voice (whence the name vocalion). By varying the reeds and cavities many distinct qualities of tone could be produced, so that each manual had several stops (like a pipe-organ). For a time the instrument was manufactured in both England and the United States, especially designed to supply the needs of small churches and halls with something far more effective than the common reed-organ.

Vocalization. The act, process or result of using the voice in speech or song; vocal action or utterance. Although analogous functions are strikingly illustrated in animals, especially in birds, there is nothing really comparable with the human voice as a medium of self-expression, of communication and of impression.

The organs and elements involved may be classified as follows: (a) Respiration, including especially breath-supply and breath-control, the organs concerned being not only the lungs, but more particularly the complex of muscles affecting the cavity of the thorax (diaphragm, intercostals, etc.); (b) Phonation or the action of the larynx in translating expired breath into tones, varying in pitch and in the fundamental characteristics usually denominated by the term register; (c) Articulation or the formation of every kind of speech-sound by the conjoint action of the muscles of the pharynx and mouth with the breath and the tone-producing agency of the larynx, including specific processes like enunciation or the delivery or emission of the sounds thus formed and pronunciation or the due accommodation of them to established standards of word-formation, inflection and grouping; and (d) Resonance or the diffused action of the chest, the pharynx, the mouth and other cavities of the head whereby volume or breadth of tone is secured, with an indescribable variety of tone-colors. Viewed as a mechanism, the voice is properly described as a wind-instrument with a double reed, but it differs enormously from all manufactured instruments in that every one of its main elements is made of or at least clothed in soft tissue and is minutely adjustable at the will or instinct of the mind.

All authorities agree that the fundamental problem in effective speaking and singing lies in the management of the breath, but its solutions cannot be concisely stated, not because the mechanical processes cannot be analyzed, but because every adjustment of expansion or pressure in the breathing-apparatus is accompanied by subtle reactions in the larynx and the upper resonance-cavities. It seems clear that the main effort should be not to expel breath with force, but to conserve, regulate and deliver it to the larynx with perfect steadiness, while at the same time maintaining a large body in the lungs for accessory resonance. In this general process the controlling factor is the diaphragm and its connections.

The detailed action of the larynx is almost wholly automatic, but the mind has large powers of general direction over it as to pitch and quality, subject, however, to certain coordinations with the hearing. Ordinarily the voice executes only what the ear discriminates, so that one who is deaf is vocally incapacitated. But the executive capacity of the larynx may be indefinitely perfected by conscious exercise in forming various sounds in certain ways. Hence the trained speaker or singer comes to have extreme technical skill, not by mastering the rationale of the muscular action involved, but by willing to produce tonal effects that the ear can estimate.

Every detail of adjustment above the larynx (in the pharynx, the back of the mouth and the handling of the tongue, lips and lower jaw) is relatively open to examination and discipline, though many of the phenomena of resonance, especially as concerns what is called tone-placing and the accessory or sympathetic action of the nasal and other head-cavities, are elusive and acquired only through experiment.

Certain points about enunciation are given under Phonetics. All languages are alike to a large extent in the sounds which they employ, though each is liable to contain one or more sounds not common to all. But the shadings and small modifications of even standard sounds are indefinitely numerous, both as between languages, between dialects of the same language and between individuals who use the same dialect. Furthermore, actual speech and song are open to wide variations of treatment according to emotional or voluntary conditions. Hence is derived their infinite capacity for becoming artistic media.

The perplexing topic of tone-quality in both the speaking- and the singing-voice has been touched upon under Registers. This term properly refers to certain differences of quality that are primarily due to changes of adjustment in the larynx, probably to alterations in the texture of the vocal cords. But they are intimately associated with changes of collateral resonance. In the effort to designate some of the varied effects that result, besides the terms of register, several other terms are used, such as the somber (dark) or bright voice, the covered or open voice, the dramatic or lyric voice, etc.

Vocalization is also sometimes used in a narrow sense, as of the production of vowel-sounds (as opposed to consonants) or of the use of bare vowels in vocal practice.

Vocalize, Vocalise. A vocal exercise or study, especially one set or sung to mere vowels. G.

Voces Aretinæ, Voces Belgicæ. The Aretinian or the so-called Belgian syllables; see Solmization. G.

Vogelflöte, Vogelpfeife, Vogelgesang. Small devices for producing piping or warbling sounds like the songs or calls of birds.

Voice. A general name for the faculty or function of speech and song or for the physical mechanism through which that faculty is exercised, or the audible product of that faculty and mechanism. Also, more specifically, the habit and method of speech or song as exemplified in the case of a particular person or of a class of persons. Also, in musical usage, one of the constituent parts or melodic strands out of which a contrapuntal or harmonic fabric is in a sense woven; a voice-part, including sometimes a written or printed transcript of such a part. Extended more or less, also, to the characteristic tone of an instrument. For notes on the technical operation of the human voice, see Vocalization, Phonetics, Register, Singing, etc. G.

In vocal music, voices are classified as to species into men's or male, women's or female, mixed (both men's and women's) and boys' (before mutation closely resembling those of women). As to range, they are further classified by terms like bass, baritone, tenor, alto and soprano, with many subdivisions or varieties under each. Of the four kinds of voice that are most commonly combined in harmony, each is usually considered to have a range of about an octave and a half, that of the bass reaching upward from about  $f_2$ , that of the tenor from about  $d_1$ , that of the alto from about  $g_1$ , and that of the soprano from about  $c$ ; but in the case of actual voices the range may extend practically to two octaves or even three. In Russian choirs basses reach to  $f$ . Phenomenal sopranos have touched  $c^3$ .

Vocal music for a single voice, with or without accompaniment, is a solo, if for more than one voice, a duet, terzet (or trio), quartet, quintet, etc., all these being normally for but one voice of a kind to each part; if several or many voices of the same kind are combined on a part, it is a chorus. Part-singing or chorus-singing without accompaniment is said to be a cappella. Vocal music combined with instruments, especially those of the orchestra, is called concerted.

The process or method of bringing a voice under control for purposes of artistic speech or song is voice-building, voice-training or vocal culture. See Phonetics and Singing.

Voice-Part. In composition, the part or series of notes that a particular voice or unison group of voices is expected to sing. Also extended to any similar series of notes, even in purely instrumental writing, that has a consecutive and individual character in constituting the total texture of the passage or piece. See Part. G.

The extended usage is due in part to the fact that vocal music preceded instrumental in development, so that the conception of contrapuntal and harmonic composition has always been dominated by traditions and predilections derived from experience with a cappella part-singing. But it is also somewhat necessary to avoid the confusion of using 'part' for a melody when it may be understood as meaning a section or division.

Voicing. In organ-making, the act, process or result of finishing a pipe or reed, or a whole set or stop of pipes or reeds, by regulating every detail of its structure and adjustment so as to produce the particular tone intended in the best possible manner. It is in the voicing that the fine art of organ-making culminates. The term is sometimes extended to the tonal adjustment of other instruments. G.

With flue-pipes the voicer attends especially to the amount of air let in through the foot, to the precise amount of opening in the wind-way and its pointing with reference to the upper lip, to the shape, height and surface of that lip and to the size, location and facing of every other component of the mouth (like the lower lip, the ears, etc.), always bearing in mind the principle that a flue-pipe is analogous to the tube of a flute and the adjustment of the wind-supply to the mouth corresponds to the application of the player's breath and mouth-position to the mouthhole.

With reed-pipes he regards the amount of air admitted, the placing of the reed, the minute adjustment of the tongue as to shape, graduated thickness and curve, and the relation of the upper tube or horn to the operation of the reed.

In reed-organs the chief point of attention is the exact adjustment of the small tongues as to shape and relation to the slots in which they play, with the regulation of the channels and resonators.

Volata. Same as roulade or division.

Volklied. See Folk-Song. G.

With reference particularly to German song-literature, a distinction is often made between the genuine Volklied, which is traditional in popular usage, the volkstümliches Lied or Lied im Volkston, which is a composed song in naive and artless style, and the Kunstlied, which more or less overpasses the limits of simplicity that are instinctive and necessary in the true folk-song and in which, as a rule, the accompaniment contributes largely to the total effect.

Volume. In acoustics, either same as intensity (loudness) or as fullness or roundness of quality (richness in overtones). A tone that has small volume in one sense may have large volume in the other. G.

Voluntary. In church-music, an organ-prelude, interlude or postlude, the first and last being called opening- and closing- respectively (or even in- and out-). The German terms are vorspiel, zwischen spiel and nachspiel; the French are prélude and sortie. G.

The term comes from the fact that organ-music is not rubrically required, but voluntarily added to the service. Hence in some cases the term voluntary is extended to a sentence or anthem by the choir.

Volute. See Scroll.

Vorschlag. Either same as appoggiatura or a melodic effect of the same general sort (as a changing-note or even a suspension). G.

Vorspiel. Same as prelude, introduction or overture. In modern operas, often applied to a form of overture that passes directly into the action.

Wait, Wayt [also, incorrectly, waight]. In medieval England, a night-watchman or the shawm which he carried for signaling. In the 15-18th centuries applied (in the plural) to bands of town-musicians (instrumental and vocal) who served at civic and social functions and furnished carols in the streets at Christmas-time. Also a piece played or sung by such popular musicians. G.

The word is akin to the German Wacht and Wächter, a watchman.

Waldhorn. See hunting-horn under Horn.

Waltz, Valse, Walzer. See Dances. G.

Warbler. A bagpipe-embellishment, usually some sort of appoggiatura.

Weight of Wind. See wind-pressure under Wind.

Well-tempered. Of instruments, tuned in equal temperament; see Temperament.

Whipping-Bow. In violin-playing, a more or less violent, sweeping application of the bow in rapid, staccato passages.

Whistle. A small instrument of wood or metal that utilizes the principle of the fipple or flageolet mouthpiece. G.

White. In notation, denoting a note with an open head; see Notation. On the keyboard, denoting a key or digital in the front or lower rank, topped with ivory or white celluloid; see Keyboard.

In many older keyboard-instruments the keys now colored white were black and vice versa. This device of color began on the organ about 1500. The modern usage did not become general till toward the end of the 18th century.

In vocalization, the term white tone is sometimes applied to a tone reflected from the soft palate and thrown out through the open mouth; see under Covered Tone.

Whole-Note. Same as semibreve; see Notation.

Whole-Shift. See Shift.

Whole-Step, Whole-Tone. See Step, Tone and Interval.

Wiegenlied. A lullaby, cradle-song or berceuse.

Wind. Either the breath of the player or the compressed air from a blower or bellows that is used in sounding various kinds of instruments. All instruments thus actuated by a stream of air are wind-instruments, as opposed to stringed instruments, etc. The term is used most specifically of the compressed air in an organ. G.

In the organ, the wind-supply is the total mechanism of feeders, bellows, etc., by which the air is gathered and stored under pressure. It is distributed to different parts of the instrument through tubes or conduits called wind-trunks. In each division these lead to a wind-chest, an extensive chamber underneath the pipes, where it is held for use as stops are drawn and keys depressed. The amount of compression is the wind-pressure or weight of wind, and is measured in inches by means of a wind-gauge (an S-shaped tube filled with water and placed in a pipe-hole in the wind-chest, the pressure displacing the water by a certain number of inches). Older organs were usually voiced to a wind-pressure of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 inches; 6, 8 and 10 inches are now not uncommon. Each pipe is connected with its appropriate wind-chest by a wind-hole, which is either the socket in which it rests or the orifice in the foot of the pipe. In flue-pipes the slit in front of the language through which the air-stream is directed against the upper lip is the wind-way.

Wind-instruments of the separate or portable kind, such as make up the orchestra, are broadly classified as wood-wind or brass-wind, according to the material of which their tubes are made. They are referred to collectively as the wind. Wood-wind instruments include: two main classes, those sounded by means of an air-stream directed against a sharp edge (flageolets and flutes) and those sounded by means of one or two vibrating reeds (clarinets, oboes and bassoons). Brass-wind instruments also include two main classes, those blown by means of a conical mouthpiece (horns) and those blown by means of a cupped mouthpiece (trumpets, trombones, saxhorns, etc.). Saxophones and sarrusophones combine clarinet- or oboe-mouthpieces with metal tubes like saxhorns. A band, such as is used for military purposes, that is made up of wind-instruments is a wind-band.

In modern pipe-organs and in such automatic appliances as piano-players a large amount of the mechanical operation is effected through pneumatics, which are actuated by compressed air from the general wind-supply.

Wind-Harp. Same as Æolian harp.

Winker. A small diagonal bellows, controlled by a spring, that is attached to the side of a wind-trunk in an organ for the purpose of counterbalancing slight variations in the wind-pressure; also called concussion-bellows.

Wolf. The harsh discord heard in instruments of fixed intonation (like the piano or the organ) when tuned on any other than the system of equal temperament; see under Temperament. G.

Wood-Wind. Denoting instruments made of wood (as opposed to metal), especially those like the flutes, oboes, bassoons and clarinets in the orchestra; these collectively are often called the wood (as opposed to the brass or the strings).

Work. A composition or piece; see Opus.

Working-out. See Development. G.

Wrest. A key or wrench for tuning the piano or the harp. G.

In the piano and the harp the movable pins at one end of the strings, by turning which the latter are tuned, are called tuning-pins or wrest-pins and the substantial piece in which these pins are set is the wrest-block or wrest-plank.

Wrist-Guide. See Chiroprast.

Wrist-Touch. In keyboard-technique, a touch that involves motion of the hand up and down at the wrist; see Touch. G.

X-Z

Xänorphica. One of the forms of violin-piano, invented in 1801 by K. F. Röllig of Vienna, in which the strings were seyerally sounded by means of a series of small bows.

Xylophone. A general name for an instrument in which tones are produced from a graduated series of wooden strips or bars by striking them with small hammers or mallets. One form has had considerable use in some modern orchestras. Cf. harmonica. G.

The type is rather widely found in different parts of the world, including the African marimba, the Burmese pattala, the Siamese ranat, the Javanese gambang, etc.

The bars need to be of a wood that has positive resonance, and the tone depends somewhat on whether they are supported in such way as to favor the formation of natural nodes of vibration. In large instruments bronze bars are sometimes used instead of wood. Resonance is provided either by the frame or box in which the bars are set, or by gourds or similar hollow bodies attached to or underlying the bars.

Xylosistron. A keyboard-instrument, invented by Utho of Sangerhausen in 1807, resembling Chladni's euphonium, but having wooden wands instead of glass rods. An improved form (1810) was called xyloharmonica.

Yodel. A variety of popular song, common in Switzerland and the Tyrol, in which frequent shifts to the falsetto-voice are used; also called warble or jodel.

Zampogna. Same as bagpipe or as shawm.

Zapateado. A Spanish dance in which the rhythm is marked by blows of the foot on the ground.

Zaramella. A rustic instrument used in Italy, having a double-reed mouthpiece and a tube with 7 finger-holes. It is often used with the accompaniment of the zampogna (bagpipe).

Zarzuela. The common name for a type of light dramatic work, varying in form from the vaudeville or farce to the operetta, that is extremely popular in Spain. G.

The name is said to come from plays given at the castle of Zarzuela (near Madrid) in the 17th century.

Zimbalon. A large variety of dulcimer (with dampers) that is popular in Hungary, especially among the Gipsies. It sometimes has a range of 4 octaves.

Zingaresca. A Gipsy song or dance or a piece in similar style.

Zink, Zinke. A mediæval form of trumpet, having a small cupped mouthpiece of ivory or wood and a straight or slightly curved wooden tube, usually with 7 finger-holes. It was made in two or three sizes, so that it could be combined with trombones into a wind-band. Also called cornett, a smaller variety being cornettino and a larger cornon. The serpent was properly the bass of the family. G.

Zither. The typical instrument having a series of strings stretched over a soundboard and played by plucking. It has no fixed shape or size, but usually there are two or more melody-strings over a fretted fingerboard and several or many accompaniment-strings that are sounded without stopping. Its modern use is most frequent in southern Germany and Austria, where highly artistic zither-playing is often heard. The best instruments have 5 melody-strings tuned in fifths from  $c_1$  and 30-40 other strings tuned in a peculiar sequence so as to facilitate chord-effects. To give additional resonance, the instrument is usually placed on a table. G.

The so-called bow-zither is really a form of viol, having varying shapes, but usually resembling the viola. It is played, however, with the head resting by a small foot on a table, while the body is held in the player's lap. The 4 strings are tuned like those of the violin.

Zoppo. Denoting a movement in which the rhythm is much distorted by irregular accents and syncopations, as in much Hungarian music. G.

Zortziko. See Dances.

Zufolo, Zufalo. A small flageolet used in the training of singing birds.

Zukunftsmusik. See Future, Music of the. G.

Zwischenspiel. Same as interlude or intermezzo. G.

APPENDIX A

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

The following condensed references are primarily designed to indicate the authors under whose names in Part II will be found book-titles relating to subjects named in Part I; in some cases still further authors and titles are added. It should be noted, however, that these lists do not include books relating to persons or places (biographies, critiques, accounts of institutions and organizations), all of which are entered according to subject in Parts II and III, and no attempt is made to indicate articles in periodicals, dictionaries and general works. Yet, in spite of their necessary limitation and condensation, these Notes will be found to be at many points far more extensive than anything now accessible in English, especially as regards recent literature.

The dates given simply indicate when the author began to publish on the subject or the period during which he continued to do so. As far as possible, each list is arranged chronologically. For full titles, see the names of authors in Part II.

ACOUSTICS. The pioneers include Sauveur, 1700-16; the Bernoullis, 1732; Serre, 1742-63; R. Smith, 1749; Tartini, 1754; J. H. Lambert, 1763; Chladni, 1787-1827; Savart, 1819-40; E. H. and G. Weber, 1820; E. G. Fischer, 1825; Delezenne, 1827-57; Schafhäütl, 1833; Scheibler, 1838; Zamminer, 1855; and Meerens, 1859-1902. To them succeeded Helmholtz, 1863; A. J. Ellis, 1864; Mach, 1865; Tyndall, 1867; Mahillon, 1874; Blaserna, 1876; Pole, 1879; C. Stumpf, 1883-1911; H. Riemann, 1891; H. A. Zellner, 1892; Zahm, 1892; L. Riemann, 1896-1911; A. Jonquière, 1898 (Grundriss d. musikal. Akustik); Polak, 1900-09; Wead, 1900; F. Krieger, 1901-10; K. L. Schaefer, 1902; Capellen, 1903; R. Klimpert, 1904-07 (Lehrbuch d. Akustik); H. Starke, 1908 (Physikal. Musiklehre); H. J. Moser, 1910; M. E. Sachs, 1910; F. Auerbach, 1911; Wood, 1913 (Physical Basis of Music); D. C. Miller, 1916; P. C. Buck, 1917 (Acoustics for Musicians); etc.

ÆSTHETICS. A term sometimes vaguely used and more or less entangled with what is now called Psychology, as well as with Criticism. Among the more general treatises are those by J. G. Sulzer, 1772; Eschenburg, 1783; Eberhard 1783-1805; 1800; Herder; Herbart, 1811-31; Schopenhauer, 1819; F. K. Griepenthal, 1827; Lichtenthal, 1831; Kahlert, 1846; K. R. Köstlin, 1858-69; Vischer, 1858; Lotze, 1868; Fehner, 1870; E. Hartmann, 1887; Pilo, 1892; K. Lange, 1895-1912; Gietmann, 1897; Volkelt, 1897-1910; B. Croce, 1902 (Estetica); Dessoir, 1906; Kulke, 1906; E. Neumann, 1912 (Ein- führung in d. Aesthetik d. Gegenwart). Those dealing more specifically with music are by J. J. Engel, 1780; G. C. Kellner, 1790; Michaelis, 1795; L. Schubart, 1806; Thibaut, 1825; K. C. F. Krause, 1830; Hand, 1837-41; Schilling, 1838; Hanslick, 1854-95; A. Kullak, 1858; Helmholtz, 1863; K. D. J. Fuchs, 1865; Fritz Stade, 1870; Küster, 1870-77; Langhans, 1872; G. E. Engel, 1872-92; Wundt, 1874-96; Hostinsky, 1877-90; Hirn, 1878; H. A. Köstlin, 1878; Reissmann, 1879; Polidoro, 1880; A. H. Ehrlich, 1881; C. Stumpf, 1883; Marmontel, 1884; F. Hauegger, 1885; Steinitzer, 1885; Lipps, 1885-1906; Wallaschek, 1886; H. Ritter, 1886-94; Arth. Seidl, 1887; Mantovani, 1892; Laroche, 1895; Villanis, 1895; K. R. Hennig, 1896; W. Wolf, 1896-1906; F. Marschner, 1899-1909; H. Riemann, 1900; Moos, 1902-14; Bonaventura, 1905; Siebeck 1906; Grunsky, 1907; Busoni, 1907; C. Lalo, 1908-21; C. H. Parry, 1911; R. Mayrhofer, 1911; H. Goldschmidt, 1915; Schmitz, 1915; Closson, 1921; etc. See also under Psychology.

APPRECIATION. See D. G. Mason and Surette, 1907; Scholes, 1919; C. G. Hamilton, 1920; W. R. Spalding, 1920; and works on the development of the musical ear by Mengewein, 1908; Schering, 1911.

BAGPIPE. Works by C. E. Borjon, 1672 (Traité de la Musette); T. McDonald, 1808; Thoinan, 1894; E. de Bricqueville, 1894 (Les Musettes); Flood, 1911; and art. by Fedeli, 1912 (in I. M. G. Sammelbde.).

BELLS. Works by A. Stierlin, 1858 (Die Glocken); Elewsky, 1862; Andries, 1868; B. Lomax, 1879 (Bells and Bell-ringers); Biehle, 1913-21; K. Walter, 1913; W. G. Rice, 1914-15; Löbmann, 1915; K. Thiel, 1918 (in the Kretzschmar Festschrift).

BIRD-SONG. Special studies by Savart, 1826; F. Lescuyer, 1878 (Le Langage et le Chant des Oiseaux); A. Voigt, 1906 (Zum Studium d. Vogelstimmen); L. Réthi, 1908 (Untersuchungen über d. Stimmen d. Vögel); B. Hoffmann, 1908 (Kunst u. Vogelgesang); Hornbostel, 1911 (in I. M. G. Zeitschr.).

BYZANTINE MUSIC. Works by Chrysanthos, 1821-32; Kiesewetter, 1838; Pitra, 1867-79; Christ, 1870-71; J. Tzetzze, 1874 (Ueber d. altgriech. Musik in d. griech. Kirche); Bourgault-Ducoudray, 1877; H. Riemann, 1882-1915; E. Bouvy, 1886 (Poètes et Mélodes); H. Reimann, 1890; -G. J. Papadopoulos, 1890 (in Greek); Hatherly, 1892; Widor, 1895; Vossnessensky, 1897 (in Russian); Gaisser, 1901; Tillyard, 1905; Gastoué, 1907; and others named in Riemann's Musiklexikon.

CANTATA. See monographs by Schmitz, 1914

(the secular solo-cantata), and Wustmann, 1913 (texts of Bach's church-cantatas).

CAROLS. For extensive lists of collections and discussions, see Grove's Dictionary, arts. 'Noël' and 'Song,' and Julian's Dict. of Hymnology, art. 'Carols.'

CATCH. See list of collections in Grove's Dictionary, art. 'Catch.'

CHAMBER-MUSIC. Works by Nohl, 1885; Sandberger, 1900; Torchi, 1901; Kilburn, 1904; Schering, 1905-14; Walthew, 1909; Altmann, 1910 (literature since 1841); and in Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Bayern, xv-xvi.

CHURCH-MUSIC. The literature is of indefinite extent and much complexity, not only viewing the subject in accordance with the genius, doctrines and liturgical traditions of one or another of the great branches of Christendom, but also, even within a given ecclesiastical field, adopting varied attitudes and methods, sometimes historical and descriptive, sometimes dogmatic and theoretic, sometimes disciplinary and pedagogic. In all its aspects the subject merges with the general subjects of Church History and Liturgies, as well as with the more special subject of Hymnology, all of which are essentially literary rather than musical.

As to the Greco-Russian Church, see references under Byzantine Music and National Music (subtitle Russia).

As to the Roman Catholic Church, see references under Gregorian Music, but note also general works by Félix Clément, 1861; Kothe, 1862; Kornmüller, 1868; Bäumker, 1883-1911; Weinmann, 1906; with lesser ones by I. Mayrhofer, 1896; Schnerich, 1902-11; Möhler, 1910; Griesbacher, 1912; etc.

As to the Lutheran and Reformed Churches, see works by Langbecker, 1830; Wackernagel, 1841-77; Winterfeld, 1843-52; Silcher, 1844; E. E. Koch, 1847; Tucher, 1848-67; E. Naumann, 1856-70; Schletterer, 1866-69; Max Herold, 1874-96; J. Sittard, 1881; Liliencron, 1881-90; H. A. Köstlin, 1882-86; F. Spitta, 1886-1912; Zahn, 1888-93; Kümmerle, 1888-95; Wolfrum, 1891-1914; Rietschel, 1893-1909; Zelle, 1899-1903; with many treatises on Liturgik and Hymnologie.

As to the English-speaking churches, see works by Jebb, 1843-57; Belcher, 1872 (Lectures on the History of Ecclesiastical Music); J. S. Curwen, 1880-85; J. Love, 1891 (Scottish Church Music); R. B. Daniel, 1894 (Chapters on Church Music); M. B. Foster, 1901; W. S. Pratt, 1901 (Musical Ministries); J. T. Lightwood, 1905 (Hymn-Tunes and their Story); J. S. Bumpus, n. d. (History of English Cathedral Music); Lutkin, 1910; H. W. Davies, 1913.

See also E. Dickinson, 1901; J. Julian, 1892 (Dictionary of Hymnology); L. F. Benson, 1915 (The English Hymn).

COMPOSITION. No satisfactory line can be drawn between this and subjects like Counterpoint and Harmony, but note may here be made of works by Mattheson, 1713-39; Marpur, 1753-60; Riepel, 1755-68; Kirnberger, 1774-82; Vogler, 1776-81; H. C. Koch, 1782; Albrechtsberger, 1790; F. X. Richter, 1804; Momigny, 1806-18; Reicha, 1814-33; G. Weber, 1817-33; F. J. Fétis, 1824-40; Santucci, 1828; A. B. Marx, 1837-47; Lobe, 1850-67; Sechter, 1853; Hauff, 1863-74; Reissmann, 1864-66; E. Prout, 1876-1903; H. Riemann, 1877-1913; Cornell, 1877-84; Skuhersky, 1881; Goetschius, 1882-1916; Jadassohn, 1883-1901; Ergo, 1887; Bannister, 1887; Wegelius, 1887-1906; Dechevrens, 1898-1911; Habert, 1899; Krehl, 1902-21; d'Indy and Sériex, 1903-09; Combarieu, 1906-15; Stanford, 1911; Krohn, 1914; Biernacki, 1922; etc. See Harmony, Counterpoint and Form.

CONCERTO. Works by Schering, 1905; Daffner, 1908; and da Motta, 1910?—the last two on the piano-concerto; Aug. Halm, 1919.

CONDUCTING. Works of various scope and calibre by Gassner, 1844; Zopff, 1861; R. Wagner, 1869; Deldevez, 1878; E. Blitz, 1887 (Sur l'Art du Chef d'Orchestre); K. Schröder, 1889; Weingartner, 1895; A. Dubois, 1898 (Sur la Direction de l'Orchestre); E. Vogel, 1898 (in Peters Jahrbuch); M. Kufferath, 1901; Arth. Seidl, 1902 (on conductors); A. Laser, 1905 (Der moderne Dirigent); Pembaur, 1907; Schwartz, 1907; Schünemann, 1908-13; Chybinski, 1909-12 (at first in I. M. G. Sammelbde.); Löbmann, 1913; Cahn-Speyer, 1919; Gehrken, 1919; etc. The earliest discussion of the subject was by Agostino Pisa, 1611.

COPYRIGHT, MUSICAL. Besides the older works of Vesque von Püttlingen, 1865, and Viotta, 1877, Riemann's Musiklexikon lists, pamphlets, etc., by Jos. Bauer, 1890; J. Schuster, 1891; M. Kufferath, 1897; R. Astor, 1904; E. Challier, 1905; W. M. Colles, 1906; W. d'Albert, 1907-08; G. Baudin, E. Eisenmann, Jos. Köhler and G. Sbriglia, all 1907; J. Bayer, E. Ibach, P. Daude and J. Schlittgen, all 1908; L. Volkman, 1909; F. Jansen, H. Kirchberger, K. Pannier and P. Wauermans, all 1911; R. R. Bowker, 1912; H. Nitze, 1912; P. Brün, 1913, etc., besides Hellmuth von Hase's more general work (1919).

COUNTERPOINT. Older treatises by Vicentino, 1555; Zarino, 1558-88; Artusi, 1586-1603; Zaccani, 1592-1622; Morley, 1597; Cerone, 1609; etc. The more modern list includes works by Fux, 1725; Marpur, 1753; Martini, 1757-76; Paolucci, 1765-72; Framery, 1786; Albrechtsberger, 1790; Sala, 1794; Sabbatini, 1802; Langlé, 1805; Fétis, 1825-46; Cherubini, 1835; Dehn, 1859; E. F. Richter, 1859-72; J. G. Belermann, 1862; Bussler, 1878; Tiersch, 1879; Kistler, 1879-1908; Rockstro, 1882; Jadassohn, 1884-99; Rischbieter, 1885; H. Riemann, 1888-91; E. Prout, 1890-92; Tanieiev, 1890?; B. E. Scholz, 1897; Norris, 1899; Gédalge, 1901; Loewengard, 1902; Goetschius, 1902-09; I. Knorr, 1903-12; Zelenski, 1905?; W. R. Spalding, 1904; Griesbacher, 1910; Stöhr, 1913; E. Kurth, 1917; Major, 1918; Fiebach, 1921; etc. See also Composition.

DANCING. Writing on this subject began in the 16th century and became frequent during the 17-18th centuries. Most of the books treat more of dancing as an art than of music in connection with it. They include works by Jacques Bonnet, 1723; L. de Cahusac, 1754 (La Danse); Noverre, 1760; Castil-Blaze, 1832; C. Compan, 1787-1802, and F. Fertiault, 1854 (both Hist. de la Danse); Czerwinski, 1862-79; F. L. Schubert, 1867, and O. Umgewitter, 1868 (both Die Tanzmusik); F. M. Böhme, 1886; Kidson, 1889 (old English); Desrat, 1896 (Dict. de Danse); H. de Soria, 1897 (Hist. Pittoresque de la Danse); G. Vuillier, 1897 (La Danse); P. Gavina, 1898 (Il Ballo); Storck, 1903; Ménil, 1904; Bie, 1906-20; Jaques-Dalcroze, 1907-21; B. Weigl, 1910; Prunières, 1914; Caroline Walker, 1915 (The Modern Dances); Narodny, 1917; etc.

DEGREES IN MUSIC. See C. F. A. Williams, 1893 (in Oxford and Cambridge).

DICTATION. The importance of this was recognized from the beginning of interest in school-music (as by Nägeli, 1810) and provided for in various systems of class-instruction (as by Plüger, 1853, and Dessirier, 1869), but its separate treatment is recent. Works by H. Götze, 1882; Lavignac, 1882; H. Riemann, 1889; F. L. Ritter, 1890?; R. Johne, 1900 (Musikdiktat); Sekles, 1905; Gédalge, 1922; etc.

DICTIONARIES. The first compendium of terms only was that of Tinctoris, 1474. Among more modern works are those of Janowka, 1701; Brossard, 1703; Grassineau, 1740; Barnickel, 1749; Rousseau, 1767; Busby, 1786; G. F. Wolf, 1787; Meude-Monpas, 1788; the musical division of the Encyclopédie Méthodique (vol. i, 1791, by Framery and Ginguené, vol. ii, 1818, by Momigny); Reijnvaan, 1795; Gianelli, 1801; H. C. Koch, 1802-07; Castil-Blaze, 1821; Lichenthall, 1826; Jousse, 1829; M. and L. Escudier, 1844; Dommer, 1865; Stainer and Barrett, 1876; Niecks, 1884; T. Baker, 1895; L. C. Elson, 1909; Duncan, 1913; etc., besides more or less important definitions and descriptions in every large general dictionary and encyclopedia. See also Gehrken's Music Notation and Terminology, 1914.

Among dictionaries of persons only are to be named those of Gerber, 1790-92, 1812-14; Choron and Fayolle, 1810-11, and, with Lefage, 1836-38; Fétis, 1835-44; J. D. Brown, 1886; Champlin and Apthorp, 1888-90; T. Baker, 1900 (3d ed. by Remy, 1919); Eitner, 1900-04; Saerchinger, 1918; etc. Works confined more or less to particular countries include F. J. Lipowsky, 1811 (Bavaria); Dlabacz, 1815 (Bohemia); Kosmaly, 1846-47 (Silesia); Wurzbach, 1855-61 (Austria); Sowinski, 1857-74 (Poland); Ledebur, 1860-61 (Berlin); Vasconcellos, 1870 (Portugal); Viotta, 1889 (Holland); Melchior, 1889 (Holland); Pedrell, 1894-97 (Spain); Crowest, 1895; Brown and Stratton, 1897 (Great Britain); Vieira, 1900 (Portugal); Ruiz de Lahory, 1904 (Valencia); W. Neumann, 1909 (Baltic Provinces); A. de Angelis, 1918 (Italy); etc. See also the many great general dictionaries of national biography (including the various manuals known as Who's Who and the like), many general encyclopedias and dictionaries of fine art.

The greater dictionaries of both terms and persons include the pioneer work of J. G. Walther, 1732; with Gianelli, 1822; Gathy, 1835; Schilling, 1835-38; Gassner, 1849; J. W. Moore, 1854; Bernsdorf, 1856-65; Gollmick, 1858; Mendel, 1870-83; Paul, 1873; Grove, 1879-89; Reissmann, 1882; Riemann, 1882 (translations or adaptations in English, French, Danish and Russian); F. C. Jones, 1889; Norlind, 1916; besides works containing both history and lexicography, like Lavignac's Encyclopédie (from 1913) and D. G. Mason's The Art of Music (1914-17).

For persons before 1800 Eitner's unique Quellen-Lexikon, 1900-04 (with the Monatshefte that preceded it and the extensions that have followed) is invaluable. Among other works the place of eminence is probably held by Fétis' Biographie Universelle, 2d ed. 1860-65 (with Supplément by Pougin, 1878-80), Mendel's Konversations-Lexikon (completed by Reissmann, 1883), Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 2d ed. 1904-10 (with American Supplement, 1920) and Riemann's Musiklexikon, 10th ed. 1922. Of these, the last is in many ways the most remarkable.

In addition, there are special dictionaries in the fields of church-music, liturgies, hymnody, dramatic music, dancing, etc., with summary lists of singers, pianists, organists, violinists, music-publishers, violin-makers, etc., besides numerous comprehensive studies in biography that are not in dictionary-form.

DUALISM, HARMONIC. Works by Hauptmann, 1853 (2d ed. 1873); Oettingen, 1866 (2d ed. 1913); H. Riemann, 1887 (6th ed. 1912), 1890 (5th ed. 1914), 1893, 1905; Ergo, 1891; Capellen, 1901, contra (in Neue Zeitschrift); Münich, 1909 (in the Riemann Festschrift); K. Stumpf, 1911-12.

EMBELLISHMENTS. Works by E. D. Wagner, 1869; Ziehn, 1883; E. G. Dannreuther, 1893-95; A. H. Ehrlich, 1896; J. L. Farrenc, 1897; Seifert, 1899-1901; Fr. Kuhlo, 1896 (Ueber melod. Verzierungen); M. Kuhn, 1902 (Die Verzierungskunst in d. Gesangsmusik d. 16-17. Jahrh.); H. Goldschmidt, 1907; Beyschlag, 1908; Lach, 1913 (of general scope). Among pedagogical manuals note those by L. Klee and Zwintscher. To the list of 18th-century authorities given by Baker perhaps there might be added Quantz, 1752, K. P. E. Bach, 1753-62, J. A. Hiller, 1780, and Tartini, 1782.

ETHNIC MUSIC. Works by K. Engel, 1864-83; Comettant, 1869; Al. Kraus, 1878-1901 (partly on Japan); A. J. Ellis, 1885; K. Stumpf, 1886-1911; C. R. Day, 1891 (on India); K. Hagen, 1892 (Ueber die Musik einiger Naturvölker); Wallaschek, 1893; Galli, 1898; L. Riemann, 1899; B. Ankermann, 1901 (Die afrikan. Musikinstrumente); O. Abraham and Hornbostel, 1903-09; Galpin, 1903-10; Tiersot, 1905-10

Chas. Myers, 1912 (The Study of Primitive Music in Musical Antiquary); K. Sachs, 1913-14; etc. Much of the most valuable material is in special articles in various periodicals. Also see catalogues of all large collections of instruments and under National Music below.

FLUTE. Works by Th. Böhm, 1845 (with summaries, also, by Christopher Welch, 1883, and Mahillon, 1885); Italo Piazza, 1890 (Dissertazione Storia-Critica sul Flauto); Schwedler, 1897; and D. C. Miller, 1922. Guide to flute-literature by E. Prill, 1899.

FOLK-SONG. See various countries under National Music and also under Song.

FORM. Works by H. C. Koch, 1782-83; Küster, 1872; Skuherský, 1879; Steinitzer, 1885; Jadassohn, 1889; H. Riemann, 1889; E. Pauer, 1890?; E. Prout, 1893-95; Klauwell, 1894; Krehl, 1902; Loewengard, 1904; A. Richter, 1904; Siklós, 1910?; Leichtentritt, 1911-20; Stöhr, 1911; Herm. Erpf, 1914 (Der Begriff d. musikal. Form); and also all general works on composition and on particular forms.

GREEK MUSIC. In addition to divisions in all general music-histories, see works by Roussier, 1770; Sacchi, 1778; Ginguené, 1815; Drieberg, 1818-58; Perne, 1830?; E. Krüger, 1830-38; A. J. H. Vincent, 1845-68; Kiesewetter, 1846-48; J. F. Bellermand, 1847; Fortlage, 1847; M. B. Jullien, 1854-61; Westphal, 1854-93; Weitzmann, 1855; Jan, 1859-95; J. G. Bertrand, 1862; Paul, 1866; Thimus, 1868-76; J. H. H. Schmidt, 1868-72 (Die Kunstformen in d. griech. Poesie); Christ, 1874-1902; Gevaert, 1875-1902; Ruelle, 1875-1900; Saint-Saëns, 1886-1902; Petr, 1890?; Reinach, 1890?; Monro, 1894; C. F. A. Williams, 1895?; Thierfelder, 1897; K. Stumpf, 1897; Mohler, 1898-1900; Laloy, 1899-1904; H. Abert, 1902; Hnr. Weil, 1902; Tischer, 1903; Tillyard, 1905?; Marnold, 1909; Emmanuel, 1911; Pizzetti, 1914; etc. The standard editions of Greek writers on music are by Meibom, 1652; Wallis, 1662-90; Marquardt, 1868; Alb. Jahn, 1882; Otto von Jan, 1895; Macran, 1902, etc.

GREGORIAN MUSIC. In addition to divisions in all general music-histories and to practical manuals of all sorts, see works by Nisard, 1840; Guéranger, 1840-75; Ortiqne, 1841-66; F. J. Fétis, 1843-70; Danjou, 1844-49; Lück, 1846-59; Proske, 1850-61; Helmore, 1850-80; Lam-billotte, 1851-55; D. and J. G. Mettenleiter, 1852-55; Lafage, 1853-59; Niedermeyer, 1856-61; Morelot, 1861; Jausions, 1864; F. X. Witt, 1865-86; Jacobsthal, 1871-97; Haberl, 1871-1910; F. Schmidt, 1875; Goovaerts, 1876; G. V. Weber, 1880-1901; Pothier, 1880-1905; Kienle, 1884-1905; Schmetz, 1885-93; Mocque-reau, 1889-1909; Gevaert, 1890-95; Tinel, 1890; Haller, 1891-1910; Brambach, 1895; P. J. Wagner, 1895-1919; M. Springer, 1897-1907; Molitor, 1901-04; M. Horn, 1902; Gietmann, 1904; Vivell, 1904; Gastoué, 1905; Mathias, 1905; Weinmann, 1905-20; Dupoux, 1906; Bewe-runge, 1906-07; P. Ferretti, 1906-13; Drinkwelder, 1906-14; Nikel, 1908; etc. The standard editions of mediæval writers are by Gerbert, 1774-84, and Coussemaker, 1841-65, but to these many separate editions of particular works are to be added.

HARMONY. Out of almost innumerable treatises and text-books mention may be made of works by Rameau, 1722-54; Geminiani, 1742-55; Tartini, 1754-67; Solano, 1764-80; Schrö-ter, 1772-82; J. A. P. Schulz, 1773 (Kirnberger); Vallotti, 1779; Portmann, 1785-98; J. H. Knecht, 1785-1803; Türk, 1791-1800; Langlé, 1793; Kollmann, 1796-1806; Catel, 1802; H. C. Koch, 1811; H. M. Berton, 1815; F. J. C. Schneider, 1820; Perne, 1822; F. J. Fétis, 1824-44; S. Mattel, 1825-30; Gebhardi, 1828-35; Jelensperger, 1830; Erik Drake, 1839-40; Dehn, 1840; F. J. Kunkel, 1844-77; A. Day, 1845; W. Horsley, 1847; Kraushaar, 1852; Hauptmann, 1853-68; E. F. Richter, 1853; Weitzmann, 1853-61; Durutte, 1855-76; F. A. Gil, 1856; L. Rossi, 1858; G. A. Macfarren, 1860-67; H. J. Vincent, 1860-1900; Savard, 1861; Zvonaf, 1861; Reber, 1862; Vivier, 1862; Oettingen, 1866; A. Samuel, 1867; Tiersch, 1868-85; Ouseley, 1868-83; Tchaikovsky, 1870-95; Bussler, 1875-89; K. Grädener, 1877; Hostinsky, 1879; Rischbieter, 1879-88; H. Hiles, 1879-94; Kistler, 1879-1908; Paul, 1880; Emery, 1880; H. Riemann, 1880-90; Rockstro, 1881; Goetschius, 1882-1900; Jadassohn, 1883-1901; Gadsby, 1884; G. Oakey, 1884; Skuhersky, 1885; Fillmore, 1887-98; Rimsky-Korsakov, 1888; Ziehn, 1888-1912; Piel, 1889; E. Prout, 1889; J. Klauser, 1890; Ergo, 1891-1914; Hasel, 1892; Loewengard, 1892-1913; G. C. Gow, 1895; O. A. Mansfield, 1896; H. A. Norris, 1896; Sacchetti, 1897; Ippolitov-Ivanov 1897; J. F. Bridge, 1899; Roguski and Zelenski, 1900?; Juon, 1901-20; Pembaur, 1901; Viné, 1901-10; Noskowski, 1902; Reger, 1903; Schreyer, 1903; I. Knorr, 1903-12; Foote and Spalding, 1905; Gevaert, 1905-07; Monod, 1906; Schenker, 1906; R. Louis, 1907; R. Mayrhofer 1907; Thuille, 1907; Stöhr, 1909; Siklós, 1910?; Schmitz, 1911; Schönberg, 1911; Lenormand, 1912; E. Kurth, 1913-20; Seeger, 1913-16; Hull, 1914; C. H. Kitson, 1914 (Evolution of Harmony); Gariel, 1916; B. Weigl, 1921; etc. See also under Composition.

HARP. Works by Aptommas, 1859; Snoer, 1898; Zabel, 1899; Flood, 1905; M. B. Grossi, 1911 (L'Arpa ed il suo Mecanismo); Riccardo Ruta, 1911; and Charlotte Fox, 1911 (Irish harpers); besides catalogues of instrument-collections.

HEBREW OR JEWISH MUSIC. The literature comprises both queries about ancient usages and studies of music in the modern synagogue, with more or less effort to connect the two. Works by S. van Til, 1692-1728 (Digt, Sang en peet Kunst der Hebreën); Viaggio Ugolini, 1765? (The-saurus antiquitatum sacrarum); A. F. Pfeiffer, 1779 (Ueber d. Musik d. alten Hebräer); J. L. Saalschütz, 1829 (Von d. Form d. hebräischen Poesie); S. Sulzer, 1838-65; M. Deutsch, 1865-

90; E. David, 1873; John Stainer, 1879; A. Ackermann, 1894 (Der synagogale Gesang); J. Weiss, 1895; Breslauer, 1898; S. Heller, 1903 (Die echte hebräischen Melodien); H. Gressmann, 1903 (Musik u. Musikinstrumente im AT.); A. Friedmann, 1904 (Der synagogale Gesang); Bramberger, 1905?; F. Leitner, 1906 (Der gottesdienstliche Volksgesang im jüdischen u. christlichen Altertum); Idelsohn, 1908-22; J. L. Cahan, 1912 (Yiddish Folk-Songs and their Original Airs); etc.

HINDU MUSIC. Works by Wm. Jones, 1784; N. A. Willard, 1834 (Treatise on the Music of Hindustan); Tagore, 1875-86; C. R. Day, 1891; B. A. Pingle, 1898 (Indian Music); H. A. Poppley, 1921 (The Music of India); and various articles by R. Simon, 1902-13, and F. Strangways, 1908-14.

HISTORY, MUSICAL. So far as possible, books relating to the history of special subjects are listed under those subjects. Among those that have a more or less general scope, whether as treatises proper or as manuals or text-books, are works by Jacques Bonnet, 1715-16; Bourdelot, 1743; Marpurg, 1754-78; Martini, 1757-81; Blainville, 1767; Hawkins, 1776; Burney, 1776-89; Laborde, 1780; Forkel, 1788-1801; C. Kalkbrenner, 1792; Busby, 1819; W. C. Stafford, 1826-30; Kiesewetter, 1826-45; Blondeau, 1827; F. J. Fétis, 1830-76; G. W. Fink, 1831; Crotch, 1831; Hogarth, 1835; A. Schmid, 1842-46; Lafage, 1844; Brendel, 1848-54; Czerny, 1851; Jos. Schlüter, 1853-63; A. B. Marx, 1855 (19th cent.); Ambros, 1861-72; Félix Clément, 1861-85; Hullah, 1862-65; Bauck, 1862-88; K. L. Schneider, 1863; Reissmann, 1863-90; C. A. Mankell, 1864; Dommer, 1867; E. Naumann, 1869-85; Eitner, 1869-1905; F. L. Ritter, 1870-74; A. Galli, 1871-1900; H. A. Köstlin, 1873; Chappell, 1874; Kothe, 1874; Marcillac, 1876 (modern); Nohl, 1876-85; Wagemann, 1878; H. Riemann, 1878-1916; Fritz Stade, 1879; Rockstro, 1879-86; Lavoix, 1883; Sacchetti, 1883; Tottmann, 1883; Fillmore, 1883-88; Rowbotham, 1885-99; Kienzl, 1886-89; R. Pohl, 1888; Prosnitz, 1889-1915; Henderson, 1889-1921; Wooldridge, 1900-05; Mathews, 1891; Wegelius, 1891-93; Davey, 1891-1919; Hadow, 1892-94; Stecker, 1892-1903; Swoboda, 1893; Untersteiner, 1893-1904; C. H. H. Parry, 1893-1911; O. Keller, 1894-1908; Sandberger, 1894-1918; Ménil, 1895-1906; Panum, 1897-1905; Bonaventura, 1898; J. E. Mathew, 1898; F. W. Walter, 1898 (19th cent.); Gasperini, 1899-1913; W. M. Vogel, 1900; Möhler, 1900; on the 19th century, Schwartz, 1900, L. Schmidt, 1901-08, Mérian, 1902, and D. G. Mason, 1902-06; H. Ritter, 1901-02; Fuller-Maitland, 1902; E. Dickinson, 1902-05; Grunsky, 1902-14; Humbert, 1904; E. G. Annreuther, 1905; Leichtentritt, 1905; Storck, 1905; P. Viardot-Garcia, 1905; W. Niemann, 1905-11; Lederer, 1906 (15th cent.); A. Blass, 1907; J. K. Paine, 1907; W. S. Pratt, 1907; Duncan, 1908; C. G. Hamilton, 1908; Procházka, 1909; Batka, 1909-11; Woollett, 1900-12;

Kinkeldey, 1910 (16th cent.); Landormy, 1910; Drosdowski, 1910?; Emmanuel, 1911; Lammer, 1912; Opienski, 1912; O. Schmid, 1912; Combarieu, 1912-15; Goetschius and Tapper, 1914; Servières, 1914; Schering, 1914-17; The Art of Music (D. G. Mason), 1914-17; Stanford and Forsyth, 1916; Klemetti, 1916-20; Einstein, 1917-18; K. A. Rau, 1918; Schiedermair, 1918; Denéréaz, 1919; Norlind, 1920; P. Blumenthal, 1921; etc. Works dealing with music more particularly in individual countries are listed under National Music.

HYMNODY. The literature is of vast extent, particularly in German. Some references have already been given under Church Music. The most valuable general books in English are J. Julian's monumental Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; S. W. Duffield, Latin Hymn-Writers, 1889; C. Winkworth, Christian Singers of Germany, 1869; L. F. Benson, The English Hymn, 1915; W. G. Horder, The Hymn-Lover, 1889; J. S. Curwen, Studies in Worship-Music, 2 series, 1885-88; and J. T. Lightwood, Hymn-Tunes and their Story, 1905. For a handy bibliography of denominational manuals and collections, see W. S. Pratt, Musical Ministries in the Church, 2d ed. 1915.

INDIAN MUSIC (North America). See works by T. Baker, 1882; B. I. Gilman, 1891-1908; Fletcher, 1893-1900; Farwell, 1901; H. F. Gilbert, 1901; Burton, 1903-09; Galpin, 1903; Burlin, 1905-07; Frances Densmore, 1910-13 (Chippewa Music); many other monographs published by the U. S. National Museum or Bureau of Ethnology in Washington. See Ethnic Music, and also article in the American Supplement to Grove's Dictionary, 1920.

INSTRUMENTS. Among more general works are those by Zamminer, 1855; Pontécoulant, 1857-64; K. Engel, 1869-82; Wasielewski, 1869-89; Comettant, 1869; M. Fürstenau, 1876; J. Rambosson, 1878 (Histoire des Instruments de Musique); A. Kraus, 1878-1901; Mahillon, 1880-1907; Schletterer, 1884; Hipkins, 1885-1902; Pierre, 1890-93; H. Ritter, 1896; Euting, 1899 (medieval); A. Elson, 1902; Wit, 1902-10; Galpin, 1902-13; Buhle, 1903 (medieval); Bonaventura, 1908; K. Schlesinger, 1910 (The Instruments of the Orchestra); Fryklund, 1910-21; K. Sachs, 1913-20; Scheurleer, 1914; Panum, 1915 (medieval); and the invaluable catalogues of collections at London (1872-74), Paris (1875-94), Florence (1878), Munich (1883), Berlin (1892), Brussels (1893-1912), Leipzig (1893-94), Ghent (1894), Prague (1897), New York (1902-14), Cologne (1910-13), Copenhagen (1911) and Ann Arbor (1918-21), as well as those of special exhibitions at London (1851-1904), at Paris, Vienna, etc. (see Kinsky, Musik-instrumentensammlungen, 1920 (in the Peters Jahrbuch)). See also under Ethnic Music, Instrumentation and various particular instruments.

INSTRUMENTATION. Besides many older treatises that relate to orchestral resources very different from those of modern times see works by Mirecki, 1825; Pilotti, 1830?; J. G. Kastner, 1837; Berlioz, 1843; Gevaert, 1863-90; Weckerlin, 1875; E. Prout, 1876-99; Lavoix, 1878; Bussler, 1879; Jadassohn, 1889; Kling, 1890?; Rich. Hofmann, 1893; Guiraud, 1895; H. Riemann, 1902; Widor, 1904; Malling, 1905?; R. Strauss, 1905; Ergo, 1908; Coerne, 1908; Guzewski, 1909; G. E. Conus, 1910?; Rimsky-Korsakov, 1913; Gilson, 1913 (military bands); Forsyth, 1914-20; etc.

LIBRETTO. Works by Lohmann, 1861; Lobe, 1867 (in Kompositionslehre, iv); Zopff, 1868; Schure, 1875; E. de Bricqueville, 1888 (Le Livre d'Opéra Français de Lully à Gluck); F. Lindemann, 1904 (Die Operntexte Quinaults); Fehr, 1912; Istel, 1914; and Sonneck, 1914 (catalogue).

LUTE. Works by Baron, 1727; Gallay, 1867-75; Wasielewski, 1878; Chilesotti, 1882-1914; Piccollelli, 1885; L. A. Vidal, 1889; Coutagne, 1893; A. Tolbecque, 1898-1903; Brenet, 1898-99 (in Rivista Musicale); O. Körte, 1902 (Laute u. Lautenmusik); Koczirz, 1903; Lütgendorff, 1904 (dictionary of makers); E. Engel, 1915 (Von d. Anfängen d. Lautenmusik); etc. See also Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Oesterreich, xviii. 2, xxv. 2. The periodical literature is very extensive.

MADRIGAL. Works by Kroyer, 1902; Cesari, 1908; A. Einstein, 1921; Sandberger, 1921; and many articles in periodicals.

MASS. In addition to the indefinitely numerous treatises from the point of view of liturgics or church history, see works by Schnerich, 1892-1909; Ferd. Probst, 1896 (history in the 5-8th cents.); Ad. Franz, 1902 (medieval period in Germany); M. Bourreau, 1912 (La Messe); Peter Wagner, 1913 (Gesch. d. Messe); Smend, 1920; etc.

MEISTERSINGER. Works by Puschmann, 1871; J. C. Wagenseil, 1697; F. M. Grimm, 1811; Schnorr von Carolsfeld, 1872; Genée, 1894; Runge, 1896-1907; K. Drescher, 1898 (Nürnberger Protokolle, 1575-1689); Alfr. Kühn, 1907 (Rhythmik u. Melodik Michael Behaims); Münzer, 1907; Gotthelf, 1911; etc. See under Minnesinger and Troubadours.

MELODICS. Works by Nichelmann, 1755; Riepel, 1755-65; Daube, 1788-98; Reicha, 1814; Bussler, 1879; H. Riemann, 1883-89; E. Cremers, 1898 (L'Analyse et la Composition Mélodique); Goetschius, 1898-1900; Mey, 1901; Rietsch, 1903; etc.

MELODRAMA. Works by L. Garcin, 1772 (Traité du Mélodrame); Kienzl, 1880; Istel, 1901-06; R. Augsten, 1912 (Les Premiers Mélodrames Français) and Schweinitzer, 1918.

MENSURAL MUSIC. Works by J. G. Bellermann, 1858; Jacobsthal, 1871; H. Riemann, 1878-1910; Hans Müller, 1886; W. Niemann, 1901; J. Wolf, 1904-19; Schünemann, 1907; E. Kurth, 1908; Chybinski, 1911 (Die Mensuraltheorie in d. polnischen Musikliteratur); etc. See Notation.

METRICS. The discussions necessarily dwell much upon the phenomena of versification, which is literary rather than musical, and also often involve much that may be classed under Rhythmics. Works by J. G. J. Hermann, 1796-1817; Apel, 1814-16; E. Krüger, 1838; Westphal, 1854-93; Gietmann, 1880-97; Lanier, 1881; Saran, 1893; Woollett, 1903; H. Riemann, 1903; Wilhelm Meyer, 1906; Wichmayer, 1917; Thierfelder, 1919; etc. See also under Rhythmics.

MILITARY MUSIC. Works by J. G. Kastner, 1848 (Manuel General); Kalkbrenner, 1884 (Die Organisation d. Militärmusik-Korps aller Länder); Wieprecht, 1885; Eichborn, 1885-1909; E. Neukomm, 1889 (Histoire de la Musique Militaire); Rott, 1898 (Die Dienst im Heere als Militärmusiker); J. Le Forgeron, 1898 (Étude sur le Réorganisation des Musiques Militaires); Damanski, 1904 (Die Militärkapellmeister Oest.-Ungarns); H. G. Farmer, 1904 (Memoir of the Royal Artillery); A. A. Klappe, 1912 (The Wind-Band and its Instruments); A. Pfannstiehl, 1914 (Die Erhaltung d. Militärmusik-Kapellen); etc.

MINNESINGER. Works by F. H. Hagen, 1838-56; F. Wolf, 1841; Saran, 1893; Runge, 1896-1910; H. Riemann, 1897; Wustmann, 1912; etc. See under Meistersinger and Troubadours.

MOTET. Works by Wih. Meyer, 1898; Leichtentritt, 1908; Frdr. Ludwig, 1910 (source-book of the literature); G. Eisenring, 1912 (in P. Wagner's Veröffentlichungen d. Gregorian. Akademie); etc.

MUSICOLOGY. Works by G. Adler, 1885-1898 (the last in the Peters Jahrbuch); M. Emmanuel, 1898 (L'Enseignement de la Musique dans les Universités Allemandes); Parodi, date not given; H. Riemann, 1908; W. S. Pratt, 1915 (in Musical Quarterly); etc.

NATIONAL MUSIC. Works concerning music in particular countries or among particular peoples are almost indefinitely numerous, and they vary widely in scope, style and importance. As a help to reference, the following lists are given, but with full recognition of their inadequacy in many regards.

ASIA. Arabian: works by Andres, 1787 (Cartas sobre la Musica de los Arabes); Kiesewetter, 1842; Daniel, 1863; A. Christianovitch, 1863 (Esquisse Historique de la Musique Arabe); Causin de Perceval, 1873 (on early Arab musicians); Land, 1884; Dechevrens, 1898 (in his Science Musicale). Chinese: works by Amiot, 1779; Roussier, 1779; J. A. Van Aalst, 1884 (Chinese Music); Dechevrens, 1901; Mitterer, 1905; Erich Fischer, 1910; Laloy, 1910; M. Courant, 1912 (Sur la Musique Classique des Chinois). Japanese: works by A. Kraus, 1878; F. T. Pigott, 1893 (Music and Musical Instruments of Japan); Dittrich, 1895-1915. Numerous articles in periodicals on all these as well as other Asiatic types.

EUROPE. Alsace: works by J. P. Lobstein, 1840 (Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Musik in Elsass); A. Jacquot, 1882 (Musique en Lorraine); Runge, 1896-1906; F. X. Mathias, 1905; Vogeleis, 1911.

Belgium: works by Deldevez, 1842-43; E. L. F. Fétis, 1849-65; E. Van der Straeten, 1851-95; E. G. J. Gregoir, 1861-75; Burbure, 1862-70; A. Samuel, 1881; Van Duyze, 1889-1908; Soubies, 1901; Van den Borren, 1913; Friedenthal, 1918; etc. See also under Netherlands.

Bohemia: works by Dlabacz, 1815-18; Hostinsky, 1880-95; Chvála, 1887; Procházka, 1890-1910; Soubies, 1898; O. Schmid, 1901; Nejedlý, 1901-13; Batka, 1906; Branberger, 1906; Rychanowski, 1906-09.

E. Steinhard, 1922 (Gliederung deutscher Tonkunst in d. ischekschlovak. Republik); Branberger, from 1922 (Musikalmach); etc.

Denmark: works by T. L. Laub, 1880; Hammerich, 1892-1921; Soubies, 1901; Thuren, 1901; Panum, 1904-06; W. Niemann, 1906; Abrahamsen, 1919; etc.

England: works by Jos. Ritson, 1813 (Coll. of English Songs); Latrobe, 1831; Chappell, 1838-49; Rim-bault, 1844-76; R. Hooper, 1855 (Musical and Musicians); E. Taylor, 1845; Barrett, 1877-82; Fouqué, c. 1880; Squire, 1880; F. L. Ritter, 1883; Fuller-Maitland, 1887-1902; Frere, 1888; Kidson, 1889; Woodbridge, 1890; C. Willeby, 1893 (Masters of English Music); Nagel, 1894-97; Davey, 1895; Crowest, 1895; Brown and Stratton, 1897; J. Stainer, 1898-1902; Bumpus, n. d. (Hist. of Eng. Cathedral Music); M. B. Foster, 1901; Hadow, 1903; Soubies, 1904-06; E. Walker, 1907; Sharp, 1907; E. A. C. Ford, 1912; Van den Borren, 1912-13; Streetfield, 1913; Maclean, 1914; etc. On Wales: works by John Parry (a), 1742; E. Jones, 1784-1802; R. Eastcott, 1793-96 (Sketches of the Origin of Music); G. Thomson, 1809; John Parry (b), 1839-48; John Thomas, c. 1865 (Songs of Wales); E. David, 1884 (Études Historiques sur la Poésie et la Musique dans la Cambrie); Griffith, 1896. On Scotland: works by G. Thomson, 1793-1839; Jos. Ritson, c. 1794 (Historical Essay on Scottish Song); J. Gunn, 1807; Macdonald, 1820 (Anc. Music of Caledonia); W. Daunay, 1838 (Anc. Scottish Melodies); J. G. Dalryell, 1849 (Musical Memoirs of Scotland); Baptie, 1894 (Musical Scotland); N. Diem, 1919 (Beträge zur Gesch. d. schott. Musik im 17. Jahrh.). On Ireland: works by J. C. Walker, 1786; M. W. Hartstonge, 1812 (Minstrelsy of Erin); G. Thomson, 1814-16; Hardiman, 1833 (Irish Minstrelsy); Bunting, 1840; M. Conran, 1846-50 (Nat. Music of Ireland); Geo. Petrie, 1855-1905 (Anc. Music of Ireland); Flood, 1895; Fox, 1911.

Finland: works by Krohn, 1893-1908; Flodin, 1900-04; W. Niemann, 1906-18; Norlind, 1909; Launis, 1910; Klemetti, 1921; etc.

France: works by J. F. Reichardt, 1792-1805; Castil-Blaze, 1820-57; E. C. de Germigny, 1837 (on Normandy); Danjou, 1844; Weckerlin, 1853-1903; Poisset, 1854-60; V. Lespy, 1861 (Notes pour l'Histoire de la Chanson); Thoinan, 1863-94; Pougin, 1864; Chouquet, 1873; J. L. A. Julien, 1873-95; Lajarte, 1876-83; J. J. Hermann, 1878 (La Drame Lyrique en France); E. G. Gregor, 1880-89; Schletterer, 1884-85; Nutter, 1884-86; Dietz, 1885; Pierre, 1886-1900; Malherbe, 1887-1911; Tiersot, 1889; Bellague, 1890; Coquard, 1892; Soubies, 1892-1913; Restori, 1893-95; Hervy, 1894-1904; Combarieu, 1895; Servières, 1897; Expert, 1900; Bruneau, 1901; Rolland, 1901; Solenière, 1901; Laurencie, 1905; Prod'homme, 1905; Écorcheville, 1906-14; Pouehig (Séré), 1907-1921; Pruniers, 1910; Jean-Aubrey, 1916; Cucuel, 1913-14; J. W. Goodrich, 1917; A. W. Locke, 1920; etc.

Germany: works by Burney, 1773; J. F. Reichardt, 1774-88; K. F. Becker, 1840; Chorley, 1841-54; Lilienron, 1854-90; E. O. T. Lindner, 1855; Reissmann, 1861-99; E. Naumann, 1871; Meinardus, 1872-93; Eitner, 1876-80; F. M. Böhme, 1877-97; Raff, 1885; Rietsch, 1886-1910; Zelle, 1889; Prüfer, 1890; Soubies, 1896; M. Gref, 1898; Arth. Seidl, 1900; Friedländer, 1902; Nef, 1902; R. Louis, 1909; Volbach, 1909; H. J. Moser, 1910-21; Neisser, 1911; Bekker, 1916-22; Pfordten, 1917; Schering, 1917; etc. On Baden: works by Stützenberger, 1883 (Grundlinien einer Gesch. d. Tonkunst im Lande Baden); H. Rott, 1917 (Kunst u. Künstler am Baden-Durlach. Hofe). On Bavaria: works by D. Mettenleiter, 1867; Joh. Freszl, 1888 (Die Musik d. bayerischen Landvolks). On Sazony and Thuringia: works by A. Werner, 1902-08; Rautenstrauch, 1906; Ad. Aber, 1921 (Die Pflege d. Musik unter d. Wettinern). On Prussia: work by Döring, 1852. On Silesia: works by C. J. A. Hoffman, 1830 (Die Tonkünstler Schlesiens); Kossmaly, 1846-47; Kinkeldy, 1913.

Hungary: works by Liszt, 1859; K. Abrányi, 1877; A. Colacci, 1889 (Gl'Zingari); Káldy, c. 1890; Soubies, 1898; etc.

Italy: works by L. Riccaboni, 1728 (Histoire du Théâtre Italien); Burney, 1771; Arteaga, 1783-85;

Ginguené, 1811-35; Perotti, 1812 (Sullo Stato Attuale della Musica Italiana); G. V. Orlov, 1822 (Essai sur l'Histoire de la Musique en Italie); Kandler, 1836; G. Masutto, 1875 (Maestri di Musica Italiani del Nostro Secolo); Elewjiwk, 1875; E. Naumann, 1874-76; Chilesotti, 1882; Morsch, 1887; H. Goldschmidt, 1890-1904; Radiotti, 1893; Torchi, 1893; Tebaldini, 1894; Streetfield, 1895; Villanis, 1901; Torrefranca, 1910; Soffredini, 1913; etc.

Netherlands: works by Kieseewetter, 1826; F. J. Fétis, 1828; E. Van der Straeten, 1851-88; E. G. J. Gregoir, 1861-79; Scheurleer, 1883; Land, 1889; Viotta, 1889; Soubies, 1901; H. F. Wirth, 1911-12; etc. See also under Belgium.

Norway: works by H. V. Schytte, 1842-95; Conradi, c. 1890; Elling, c. 1900; Soubies, 1903; W. Niemann, 1906; etc. See also under Sweden.

Poland: works by Kolberg, 1842; Wurzbach, 1852; Karasowski, 1859; Surzynski, 1885; Polinski, 1890-1907; Chybinski, c. 1910; Jachimecki, 1906-21; J. L. Reiss, 1912-22; Opieski, 1918 (La Musique Polonoise); Joteyko, 1918; W. Gieburowski, 1922 (on Gregorian music in Poland); etc.

Portugal: works by Vasconcellos, 1870-80; Soubies, 1898; H. Lyonnet, 1898 (Le Théâtre en Portugal); Vieira, 1900; M. P. P. Carvalhaes, 1908-15 (on opera in the 18th cent.); etc.

Russia: works by Turchaninov, c. 1840-50; Stassov, 1847-1905; Yussopov, 1862; V. Morkova, 1862 (Historical Sketch of the Russian Opera); D. Rasumovsky, 1863-89; P. V. Schein, 1869-1900; Faminzin, c. 1870-90; W. R. S. Ralston, 1872 (Songs of the Russian People); Lissenko, 1877; A. Chodko, 1879 (Les Chants Historiques de l'Ukraine); Cui, 1880 (La Musique en Russie); Durov, 1884; Perepelitsin, 1885; K. H. Weber, 1885; Rasmadze, 1886-88; Sokalsky, 1888; N. F. Findeisen, 1890; Sacchetti, c. 1890; Metallov, 1893; Tcheshichin, 1893; Rybakov, 1895-97; Pougin, 1896-1904; Vosnessensky, 1896; Soubies, 1897; W. W. Veresovsky, 1898; Preobrazhensky, 1900; Riesenmann, 1902-08; Bruneau, 1903; Newmarch, 1904; Calvoceossi, 1907; N. Kashin, 1908; Montagou-Nathan, 1914-17 (Hist. of Russian Music and Contemporary Russian Composers); etc.

Spain: works by Gevaert, 1851; Soriano-Fuertes, 1855-59; Eslava, 1860 (La Música Religiosa en España); Saldoni, 1860-68; Inzenga, 1874-78; Peña y Gofí, 1881-85; Riaño, 1887 (Notes on Early Spanish Music); Laurencie, 1890; Pedrell, 1894; Soubies, 1900; Morphy, 1902; Roda, 1905; Kilenyi, 1914; Joss, 1915; Van Vechten, 1919; etc. On the Basques: works by F. Michel, 1857 (Le Pays Basque en Musique); Gascue 1906-13. See also under Portugal.

Sweden: works by A. Hülphers, 1773 (Historisk Abtheilung om Musik); Atzelius, 1814-48; Häffner, 1815-30; Dybeck, 1846-77; Lindgren, 1880-96; Krohn, c. 1890; Byström, 1900; Soubies, 1901; Norlind, 1901-12; W. Niemann, 1906; Palm, 1910; Noderman, 1911; Petersen-Berger, 1911; etc. See also under Norway.

Switzerland: works by G. Becker, 1874; Niggli, 1886-92; Soubies, 1899; Nef, 1902-08; Thürings, 1903; etc.

For many works on folk-song and collections from different countries see article 'Song' in Grove's Dictionary, iv.

In addition to such collections and also to complete editions of the works of particular composers, there are several great collections that aim to bring together representative masterpieces of studied composition as national 'monuments' (Denkmäler). These include especially the Denkmäler deutsche Tonkunst, 57 vols. since 1892, edited by a commission headed by Lilien-cron (till 1912) and Kretzschmar; the second series of this or the Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern, 21 vols. since 1900, edited by Sandberger; and the Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Oesterreich, 28 vols. since 1894, edited by G. Adler. To these may be added the series issued by the Vereniging voor Nederlands Musiekgeschiedenis, including editions of Sweelinck, Obrecht and Desprez, besides 38 vols. of selected works, edited by various hands; and many more or less analogous undertakings in England, France, Italy, Poland and Spain. For extensive details of all these, see Riemann's Mus.

iklexikon (10th ed. 1922). Somewhat akin to these national publications are the Sammelbände, Zeitschriften und Beihette, published by the Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft in 1899-1914, as well as the proceedings or periodicals of various learned societies in several countries (see under Associations).

AMERICA. United States. Works by F. L. Ritter, 1883; F. C. Jones, 1886; H. M. Brooks, 1888 (Olden-Time Music); Mathews, 1889; L. C. Elson, 1899-1904; R. Hughes, 1900; Sonneck, 1905-17; Kobbé, 1906; Singleton, 1915; W. S. Pratt, 1920-22 (Am. Supplement to Grove's Dictionary and Music of the Pilgrims); H. C. Lahee, 1923; etc.; besides the local New England histories of Geo. Hood, 1846, and N. D. Gould, 1853. On the Negroes: works by Krehbiel, 1914; Burlin, 1918; and see articles in Grove's Dictionary, iii. 359-62 and vi. 307. On the Creeles: work by Friedenthal, 1913.

Somewhat general works on National (patriotic) Music are by K. Engel, 1866; Chorley, 1880; H. Abert, 1900 (Eine Nationalhymnen-Sammlung, in I. M. G. Zeitschr.); O. Böhm, 1901 (Die Volkshymnen aller Staaten d. Deutschen Reichs); Rousseau and Montorgueil, 1901 (Les Chants Nationaux de Tous les Pays); E. Bohn, 1908; Sonneck, 1909-14; etc.

NOTATION. Works by J. A. P. Schulz, 1786; Lafage, 1837-64; A. Baumgartner, 1856 (Gesch. d. musikal. Notation); H. Riemann, 1878-1910; E. David and Lussy, 1882; Smolensky, 1888-1901; Restori, 1892; O. Fleischer, 1895-1904; Combarieu, 1897; Houdard, 1897-1912; Ed. Bernoulli, 1898; C. F. A. Williams, 1903; J. Wolf, 1904-19; Gasperini, 1905; Riesemann, 1908; Gehrken, 1916; etc. See also under Mensural Music. A special study of musical chirography is L. M. Bauzange's L'Écriture des Musiciens Célèbres, 1913.

OPERA. Works by Marcello, 1720 (satire); Quadrio, 1739-46; G. Gilbert, 1757 (Histoire de l'Opéra); Fayolle, 1813; I. F. Mosel, 1813; Castil-Blaze, 1820-56; G. W. Fink, 1838; Hogarth, 1838-51; L. Kreutzer, 1845; R. Wagner, 1850; Kazhinsky, 1851; Lohmann, 1861; H. S. Edwards, 1862-88; A. B. Marx, 1863; Nutter and Thoinan, 1866; Zopff, 1868; Félix Clément, 1869-81; Ella, 1872; Chouquet, 1873; Schuré, 1875; Hanslick, 1875-90; Lajarte, 1876-83; Campardon, 1877-84; E. G. J. Gregoir, 1880-83; Eitner, 1881-85; F. Stieger, 1882; Bitter, 1884; Nohl, 1884; H. Riemann, 1884-93; Reissmann, 1885; Bulthaupt, 1887; Kistler, 1888; P. Spitta, c. 1890; Ben. Croce, 1891 (I Teatri di Napoli); Kretzschmar, 1892; Pfohl, 1894; Rolland, 1895-1913; L. Schmidt, 1896; Streetfeild, 1897-1917; Kleefeld, 1899; Perfall, 1899; A. Elson, 1901; Apthorp, 1901; A. von Weilen, 1901 (Zur Wiener Theatergeschichte); H. Goldschmidt, 1901-04; Istel, 1901-15; Solerti, 1903-05; Dinger, 1904-05; Schiedemair, 1906-10; Krehbiel, 1908-17; Bekker, 1909; E. M. Lee, 1909; J. D. Engel, 1911; Cahn-Speyer, 1913; Prunières, 1913-14; Bie, 1913; Sonneck, 1914-15; Arth. Seidl, 1914-15; Kapp, 1922; etc. OPERETTA. Works by Preiss, 1908; Reinhardt, c. 1910.

ORATORIO. Works by A. Spagna, 1706 (Oratorii ovvero Melodrammi Sacri); Chrysander, 1853 (Ueber d. Oratorium); F. M. Böhme, 1861-87; Bitter, 1872; Wangemann, 1880; Zimmer, 1888; P. Spitta, 1893; Patterson, 1902;

G. Pasquetti, 1906 (L'Oratorio Musicale in Italia); Schering, 1907-11; Alaleone, 1908 (Studi sulla Storia dell' Oratorio Musicale in Italia); etc.

ORCHESTRA. Works by F. Corder, 1895; Henderson, 1899; Hutschenruijter, 1903; Volbach, 1910-13; Singleton, 1917; etc. See Instruments and Instrumentation.

ORGAN. Works by M. Praetorius, 1619 (in his Syntagma musicum); Bendeler, 1690-1739 (Organopæia); J. G. Mittag, 1756 (Histor. Abhandlung von Orgeln); Bedos de Celles, 1766-93; J. Hess, 1766-1810; Adlung, 1768; Schlimbach, 1801; J. Antony, 1832 (Die Orgel); Töpfer, 1833-56; W. Schneider, 1835; J. J. Seidel, 1843; C. F. G. Wilke, 1846; M. P. Hamel, 1849; Cavallé-Col, 1849-75; D. H. Engel, 1855; Rimbault, 1855-64; E. J. Hopkins, 1855-70; J. G. Bertrand, 1859; C. L. Lindberg, 1861 (Handbok om Orgverket); E. G. J. Gregoir, 1865; Elewijck, c. 1865; W. H. Clarke, 1877-1913; Wangemann, 1879-87; E. F. Richter, c. 1880; M. Reiter, 1880 (Die Orgel unserer Zeit); Skuhersky, 1882; A. G. Hill, 1883-91; A. G. Ritter, 1884; Kothe, 1887-90; Locher, 1887-1912; G. V. Weber, 1890; L. A. Zellner, 1893; Pirro, 1897; C. F. A. Williams, 1903-05; H. Schmidt, 1904; Ehrenhofer, 1904-09; Audsley, 1905-20; Alb. Schweitzer, 1906-09; I. Mayrhofer, 1909; Bie, 1910; Kinkeldey, 1910; F. Ludwig, 1910; Hull, 1911; Gessner, 1912; J. W. Goodrich, 1917; Skinner, 1917; Truette, 1919; etc. See also Kothe and Forchhammer's Führer durch d. Orgel-Literatur, 1890-95 (2d ed. 1909).

OVERTURE. Works by R. Wagner, c. 1865; H. Riemann, 1896; Prunières, c. 1910; Botstiber 1913; etc.

PIANO. Works by P. Éard, 1834 (Perfections Apportées dans le Mécanisme du Piano par les Éard); Fischhof, 1853; Welcker von Gontershausen, 1853-70; K. A. André, 1855; Rimbault, 1860; Burbule, 1863; Paul, 1868; Brinsmead, 1868-79; Blüthner and Gretscher, 1872-1909 (Lehrbuch d. Pianofortebauers); Ponsicchi, 1876 (Il Pianoforte); Weitzmann, 1879 (in his Gesch. d. Klavierspiels, 2d ed.); Marmontel, 1885; Hipkins, 1887-96; O. Fleischer, 1899 (see Weitzmann); Villanis, 1901; Cesi, 1903; F. A. Göhlinger, 1910 (Gesch. d. Klavichords); Bie, 1910; etc.

PIANO-PLAYING AND PIANO-MUSIC. Works by J. Knorr, 1835-60; Castil-Blaze, 1839-40; P. Zimmerman, c. 1840; L. Köhler, 1856-82; A. Kullak, 1861; Weitzmann, 1863-80; K. E. Schneider, 1872; Marmontel, 1876; F. Taylor, 1877-97; J. K. Eschmann, 1879; Bruyck, 1880; Ziehn, 1881; Fillmore, 1883; Klauwell, 1885; Deppe, 1885-90; Stöwe, 1886; A. Ruthardt, 1888; Wm. Mason, c. 1890; E. and A. Horák, 1892; Gorno, 1894-1900; Domaniewski, c. 1895; Mayer-Mahr, c. 1895; Jaell-Trautmann, 1895-1912; Bie, 1898; Josef Hofmann, 1898-1914; Seiffert, 1899-1901; Joseffy, 1902; Tetzel, 1902-09; Breithaupt, 1904-19; Shedlock, 1905; W. Niemann, 1906-18; Villanis, 1907;

Johns, 1909; Kinkeldey, 1910; Krehbiel, 1911; Van der Borren, 1912-14; G. Pannain, 1917 (Le Origini e lo Sviluppo dell'Arte Pianistica in Italia); etc. Summaries of piano-literature by Loeschhorn, 1862; Weitzmann, 1863-99; Prosniz, 1884-1918; H. Parent, 1901-07; Ordenstein, 1912.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING. Works by Goovaerts, 1880; H. Riemann, 1896; Kidson, 1900; Mantuani, 1901; H. Springer, 1901-07; Eitner, 1904; C. Junker, 1907 (Vienna publishers); Chailier, 1908; Wallner, 1912; O. von Hase, 1917-19; M. A. Howe, 1917 (Music Publishers in New York City before 1850); etc.

Program-Music. Works by A. B. Marx, 1828; Köchert, 1898; Klatte, 1905; Niecks, 1907; Klauwell, 1910; etc.

PSYCHOLOGY. Works by K. L. Schaefer, 1890; Dauriac, 1891-1904; Bellaigue, 1894; Pilo, 1903; Seashore, c. 1905; Wallaschek, 1905; E. L. Norton, 1906 (The Intellectual Element in Music); F. Krüger, 1907; W. Wallace, 1908; Wetzel, 1909; Laker, 1910; Révész, c. 1910; Max Deri, 1912 (Versuch einer psychol. Kunstlehre); Max Weber, 1921 (Ueber d. rationalist. u. soziolog. Grundlagen d. Musik); etc. See also under Aesthetics. Numerous articles in periodicals are listed in Riemann's Musiklexikon.

RHYTHMICS. Works by Sacchi, 1770; Westphal, 1854-93; Lussy, 1883; Tiersch, 1886; E. Meumann, 1894 (Untersuchungen zur Psychologie u. Aesthetik d. Rhythmus); G. L. Raymond, 1895; Combarieu, 1896; R. Bücher, 1897-1919 (Arbeit u. Rhythmus); Wetzel, 1909; C. F. A. Williams, 1909; H. J. Moser, c. 1910; C. Avogadro, 1910 (Teoria Musicale del Ritmo e della Rima); Monod, 1912; Wichmayer, 1917; etc. See under Metrics and Dancing.

SCHOOL-MUSIC. Besides the discussions connected with the initial stages of the movement in the early 19th century, works by Pflüger, 1853 (Gesangunterricht in Schulen); Tottmann, 1887-1904; Prüfer, 1890; Liliencron, 1891; Plew, 1895 (Didaktik u. Methodik d. Gesangunterrichts); K. Schmidt, c. 1900; F. Sannemann, 1904 (on methods in the 16th cent.); Emmanuel, 1910-11; Werle, 1912; Schipke, 1913; Earhart, 1914; and a long list of practical treatises since 1900 in Riemann's Musiklexikon; see also article 'Public Schools' in the American Supplement to Grove's Dictionary.

SINGSPIEL. Works by Mattheson, 1744; Schletterer, 1863; Calmus, 1908; and see Opera.

SONATA. Works by Faiszt, 1846; Wasielewski, 1874-78; Bagge, 1880; Eitner, 1888; Shedlock, 1895; Hadow, 1896; Klauwell, 1899; Mennicke, 1906; Schering, 1909; H. Riemann, in Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Bayern, xv-xvi; Gascue, 1910; B. Studeny, 1911 (Beiträge zur Gesch. d. Violinsonate); B. Selva, 1914 (Quelques Mots sur la Sonate); Hull, c. 1915. See also under Symphony.

SONG AND SONG-FORMS. Out of the many discussions mention may be made of works by H. A. Hoffmann, 1832-44; Lafage, 1840; F. Wolf, 1841; Reissmann, 1861-74; K. E. Schneider, 1863-67; Schuré, 1868; E. O. T. Lindner, 1871; O. Kade, 1874; Kretzschmar, 1881-1912; L. C. Elson, 1884-1905; Schwartz, 1886; Rietsch, 1886-1910; Prüfer, 1890; E. Radecke, 1891; Reay, 1892; Restori, 1893-95; H. Springer, 1895-1920; Friedländer, 1896-1916; H. T. Finck, c. 1900; Somborn, 1901; Runze, 1902-07; N. F. Findeisen, 1903; H. Riemann, 1905; Herm. Bischoff, 1905; Harzen-Müller, 1907; M. Breslauer, 1908 (Das deutsche Lied); Upton, 1914; O. von Hazay, 1915 (Entwicklung u. Poesie d. Gesanges); R. Veltin, 1915 (Das ältere deutsche Lied unter d. Einflüsse d. italien. Musik); A. Elson, 1918; etc. See Folk-Song and National Music.

SUITE. Works by Kretzschmar, 1887-1919; A. Condamin, 1905 (La Suite Instrumentale); H. Riemann, 1907; Nef, 1921; etc.

SYMPHONY. Works by Brenet, 1882; Bagge, 1884; Kretzschmar, 1887-1919; Upton, 1889; Weingartner, 1897; Goepf, 1898-1913; H. Imbert, 1900; H. Riemann, 1903; Mennicke, 1906; Saint-Foix, 1911; Surette, 1915; Bekker, 1918; Nef, 1921; etc. See also under Sonata.

TEMPERAMENT AND TUNING. Works by Sorge, 1744-58; Kirnberger, 1760; Marpur, 1776-90; Wiese, 1791-93; Türk, 1806; C. Stanhope, 1806 (Principles of Tuning); Vogler, 1807; Montel, 1834; Scheibler, 1838; Kraushaar, 1838; Helmholtz, 1863; Ellis, 1875; Armellino, c. 1880-1902 (Die Kunst d. Klavierstimmens); G. E. Engel, 1881; S. Tanaka, 1890 (Studien im Gebiete d. reinen Stimmung); Eitz, 1891 (Das mathematisch-reine Tonsystem); Th. Hollmann, 1910-12 (Lehrbuch d. Stimmkunst); Krohn, 1911; etc. See also under Acoustics.

TROUBADOURS AND TROUVÈRES. Works by Laborde, 1781; Perne, c. 1825; Diez, 1826-83 (Die Poesie d. Troubadouren); Hueffer, 1869-78; Sittard, 1885; Restori, 1893; Rowbotham, 1895-99; G. Schlager, 1895-1900 (Studien über d. Tagelied und Ueber Musik u. Strophenbau d. französ. Romanzen); J. B. Beck, 1908-10; Aubry, 1909; H. J. Chaylor, 1913 (The Troubadours); G. Bertoni, 1915 (I Trovatori d'Italia); E. Lommatzsch, 1917 (Provenzal. Bardenbuch); etc. See also under Minnesinger and Meistersinger.

VIOLIN AND ITS RELATIVES. Works by F. A. Ernest, 1805; G. Dubourg, 1831-78; F. J. Fétis, 1851-56; Yussupov, 1856; S. A. Forster, 1864; H. Abele, 1864-76 (Die Violine); Wasielewski, 1869-96; P. Davidson, 1871 (The Violin); E. Folegati, 1873 (Storia del Violino); Tottmann, 1873-90; Schebek, 1874; Rühlmann, 1874-82; G. Hart, 1875-81; L. A. Vidal, 1876-78; Zoeller, c. 1880; Heron-Allen, 1882-96; J. M. Fleming, 1883-84 (Old Violins and their Makers); K. Engel, 1883; Piccollelli, 1885; Sevcik, c. 1890; St. George, 1895-1910; A. Tolbecque, 1898; G. Lehmann, 1899; Payne, 1899; Eccarius-Sieber, c. 1900; Witting, 1900; Grill, 1901; Stoeving, 1902-05; Lütgendorff, 1904-22; Reuchsel, 1905-08; A. A. Bachmann, 1906; Pougin, 1910; Van der Straeten, 1911; F. B. Emery, 1912 (The Vio- linist's Dictionary); H. Dörstel, 1912 (Violin-technik u. Geigenbau); Grünberg, 1913; G. Beckmann, 1918; etc. On the viola: works by H. Ritter, 1877-98; H. Dessauer, 1912. On the violoncello: works by Wasielewski, 1889-1911; Van der Straeten, 1898; Grillet, 1901; B. Weigl, 1911; etc. On the double-bass: work by Warnecke, 1901-09. See also Einstein's Zur deutschen Literatur für Viola da Gamba im 16. u. 17. Jahrh. 1905.

VOCALICS. Works by Markwort, 1826-47; Panseron, c. 1830; Johannes Müller, 1833-40; H. Häser, 1839; Duprez, 1845; Segond, 1846-59; Man. Garcia, 1847; F. Schmitt, 1854-70; K. L. Merkel, 1856-73; Seiler, 1861-75; G. E. Engel, 1867-74; Ellis, 1869-89; Hullah, 1870; C. Lunn, 1874-78; Delle Sedie, 1876-86; Kienzl, 1880;

Myer, 1883; Garsó, 1884-1911; Hey, 1886; J. Stockhausen, 1886-87; Koffler, 1889, Müller-Brunow, 1890; H. Goldschmidt, 1890-1907; Maurel, 1892-97; Santley, 1892-1908; Curtis, 1894; Cléricey Blanc de Collet, 1895-1912; Wegelius, 1897; Flatau, 1899; Lankow, 1899; Reeves, 1900; Lilli Lehmann, 1902; Weber-Bell, 1902; Seydel, 1902-09; G. B. Lamperti, 1905; Gutzmann, 1906-09; Henderson, 1906-21; Scheidemantel, 1907; Van Zanten, 1908; Rutz, 1908-11; D. C. Taylor, 1908-16; B. Ulrich, 1909; F. E. Miller, 1910-17; H. J. Moser, 1911; Pielke, 1911; Wallnöfer, 1911; Zay, 1918; etc.

WOMAN IN MUSIC. Works by Upton, 1880; K. Krebs, 1895; A. Elson, 1903; L. C. Elson, 1917; etc.

LUTE AND THEORBO

PART II
BIOGRAPHIES

---

APPENDIX B

PERSONS BEFORE 1700

In the following pages various devices that will be readily understood are employed to present essential facts and yet secure brevity. The main points indicated (except in the case of the more prominent composers) are nationality (by place of birth), source of training, locality of residence or service and scope of production. Under certain names, however, more details are given and lists of complete works added in small type. Musical works are regularly grouped in accordance with their form rather than by date. Where dates are given they are usually those of first performance or publication. Many memoirs and biographical or critical sketches are indicated by author, and where special articles are found in Grove's 'Dictionary' or the 'American Supplement' thereto, the fact is shown by an appended G. or A.

Persons before 1706 are briefly described in Appendix B, and various statistical facts are regrouped for reference and comparison in Part III and Appendices A and C.

Only a few ordinary abbreviations are used, but book-titles, especially those in German, are often condensed (here, for example, I. M. G. stands for Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft).

The following deaths should be noted : —

Bird, Arthur — 1923, Berlin
Bridge, John Frederick — 1924, London
Dannreuther, Gustav — 1923, New York
Gallignani, Giuseppe — 1923, Milan
Grünfeld, Alfred — 1924, Vienna
Machado, Augusto — 1924, Lisbon
Parratt, Walter — 1924, Windsor
Stanford, Charles Villiers — 1924, London
Sternberg, Constantin Ivanovitch von — 1924, Philadelphia
Zichy, Géza — 1924, Pest

Aaron. See Aron.

Abaco, Evaristo Felice dall' (Verona, 1675-1742, Munich). Italian violinist, in about 1696-1701 at Modena and then in the band of the Elector Max Emanuel at Munich, accompanying him during his enforced sojourn at Brussels from 1704 and in 1714 becoming concertmaster at Munich. Wrote a large variety of works, including 24 violin-sonatas, concertos, pieces for small orchestra, etc. See Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Oesterreich, i, ix, with memoir by Sandberger (1900). G.

Abaco, Joseph Clemens Ferdinand (Brussels, 1709-1805, Verona), son of the above. Italian-Belgian 'cellist, from 1729 in the electoral band at Bonn and from 1738 head of the chamber-music, after about 1765 retiring to Verona. Wrote about 30 sonatas and a cantata.

Abbà-Cornaglia, Pietro (Alessandria, 1851-1894, do.). Italian composer of the operas Isabella Spinola, 1877, Maria di Warden, 1884, and Una Partita di Scacchi, 1892, chamber-music, a Requiem and other sacred works.

Abbadia, Natale (Genoa, 1792-1875?, Milan). Italian chorusmaster at a Milan theater in 1831-37 and composer of church-music, the opera Giannina di Pontieu, 1812, etc. His daughter Luigia (b. Genoa, 1821) was a noted mezzo-soprano from 1836 and after 1870 taught at Milan.

Abbatini, Antonio Maria (?1595-1677). 17th C. G.

Abbé, Philippe and Pierre, brothers. French 'cellists in the early 18th century, at first in church-positions at Agen (on the Garonne), later at the Paris Opéra. The latter's skill seems to have hastened the acceptance of the 'cello in place of the viola da gamba. G.

Abbey, Henry Eugene (Akron, O. 1846-1896, New York). American impresario, in charge of the Metropolitan, New York, in 1883-84, '91-92 and '94-96. A.

Abbey, John (1785-1859, Versailles). English organ-maker, in 1826 called to Paris by Érard and soon noted there for good work in many cathedrals, etc., throughout France and also in South America. The business was continued at Versailles by two sons. G.

Abbott, Emma (Chicago, 1850-1891, Salt Lake City). American soprano, from 1870 active in concert and after 1876 a popular favorite in opera in England and America, though not exceptionally gifted. A.

Abd-el-Kadir ben Isa. 14th C.

a Becket, Thomas (Philadelphia, 1843-1918, do.). American pianist and editor in Philadelphia, a notable accompanist and for almost a half-century teacher at Girard College. A.

Abeille, Johann Christian Ludwig (Bayreuth, 1761-1838, Stuttgart). Bavarian violinist and organist, from 1782 in the court-band at Stuttgart, in 1802 succeeding Zumsteeg as concertmaster and in 1815 becoming court-organist. Wrote much good chamber-, harpsichord- and vocal music, including the singspiele Amor und Psyche, 1801, and Peter und Aennchen, 1809, and songs. G.

Abel, Clamor Heinrich. 17th C. G.

Abel, Karl Friedrich (Köthen, 1725-1787, London). Noted Saxon gambist, trained at Leipzig by J. S. Bach, in 1746-58 in the Dresden court-orchestra and from 1759 intimately associated with J. C. Bach in London, where from 1765 he was musician to Queen Charlotte. With Bach he conducted (till 1782) a notable series of concerts. He was expert on several instruments and wrote numerous symphonies, overtures, concertos, sonatas and other chamber-works, besides the operas Love in a Village, 1760, and Berenice, 1764. Among his pupils were J. B. Cramer and Signora Banti. His brother Leopold August (1717-1794) was first a violinist at Brunswick and from 1758 court-conductor successively at Sondershausen, Schwedt and Schwerin (from 1770). Cramer published in 1820 some adagios by Karl, with a memoir by Burney. G.

Abel, Ludwig (in Thuringia, 1834-1895, n. Munich). Good violinist, pupil of David, long in the Weimar and Gewandhaus orchestras, from 1867 concertmaster at Munich and from 1878 inspector and professor at the Conservatory there. Wrote violin-pieces and a method.

Abell, John (London, ?1660-1724?, Cambridge). English alto and lutenist, till 1688 in the Chapel Royal and then till about 1700 touring much on the Continent. Wrote songs and edited collections (1701, '40). G.

Abendroth, Hermann (Frankfort, 1883). Able Hessian conductor, from 1903 directing the Orchester-Verein at Munich, from 1905 that at Lübeck, as well as the Opera, from 1911 city-director at Essen and since 1914 Steinbach's successor as leader of the Gurzenich concerts at Cologne and as head of the Conservatory. He received the title of professor in 1919.

Abendroth, Irene (Lemberg, 1872). Galician coloratura-soprano, from 1889 engaged successively at Vienna, Riga, Munich and Dresden (1899-1908).

Abenheim, Joseph (Worms, 1804-1891, Stuttgart). From 1854 orchestra-conductor at the Stuttgart Conservatory. Wrote overtures, entr'actes, piano-pieces and songs.

Aber, Adolf (Apolda, 1893). Saxon musicologist, educated at Berlin University (Ph.D. 1913) and since 1913 Kretzschmar's assistant there, as well as critic for the Leipzig Neueste Nachrichten. Has written monographs on court-music at Weimar (1913), on Georg Donat of Wittenberg, on J. S. Bach's clavier-concertos and on music in Thuringia.

Abert, Hermann (Stuttgart, 1871), son of the following. After training by his father and at the Stuttgart Conservatory, besides gaining a Ph. D. at Tübingen (1897), from 1902 docent in musical science at Halle University and from 1909 professor, removing in 1919 to Heidelberg University and in 1920 to Leipzig (following Riemann). Has written Die Lehre vom Ethos [Greek music], 1902, Die Musikanschauung d. Mittelalters, 1905, Die dramatische Musik am Hofe Karls von Württemberg, 1905, Jomelli als Opernkomponist, 1908, Gesch. d. Franz-Singakademie zu Halle, 1908, lives of Schumann (1903) and his father (1916), and various articles for the I.M.G. magazines, besides editing several old operas and (since 1914) the Gluck-Jahrbuch.

Abert, Johann Joseph (Kochowitz, 1832–1915, Stuttgart). Bohemian double-bassist, pupil of Kittl and Tomaschek, from 1853 in the Stuttgart court-orchestra and in 1867 Eckert's successor as court-director, retiring in 1888. Wrote 6 effective symphonies, the symphonic poem Columbus, 1864, overtures, chamber-music, a mass and the operas Anna von Landskron, 1858, König Enzo, 1862, Astorga, 1866, Ekkehard, 1878, and Die Almohaden, 1890, besides excellent orchestral arrangements of Bach organ-fugues. Memoir by his son, 1916. G.

Aborn, Milton (Marysville, Cal. 1864) and Sargent (Boston, 1866), brothers. American opera-managers since 1900, especially interested in promoting opera in English, in 1913–15 in charge of the Century Opera House, New York. A.

Abos, Girolamo (Malta, ?1708–1786?, Naples). Italian composer, pupil of Leo and Durante, in 1756–58 cembalist at the Italian Opera in London and then teacher at the Pietà in Naples (Aprile and Paisiello among his pupils). Wrote 14 operas (1742–58), including Tito Manlio, 1756, and from 1758 much church-music, including 7 masses. G.

Abraham, Max (Danzig, 1831–1900, Leipzig). From 1863 in the firm of C. F. Peters at Leipzig and from 1888 sole owner. He began the notable Edition Peters.

Abraham, Otto (Berlin, 1872). Prussian psychologist, educated as a physician (M. D. 1894), since 1896 Stumpf's assistant at the Psychological Institute in Berlin and (with Hornbostel) in charge of the phonograph-collection. Has written numerous essays and monographs on tone-perception (from 1898) and on the records of ethnic music (from 1904) in Japan, Turkey, North America, etc.

Abrahamsen, Erik (in Jutland, 1893). Danish organist, pupil of Malling, since 1914 at the Lutherkirche in Copenhagen and from 1918 in charge of the music-section of the Royal Library. Has written on Danish church-music after the Reformation (1919).

Abrányi, Emil (Pest, 1882), son of the poet. Hungarian conductor, from 1907 court-director at Hanover and since 1911 opera-conductor at Pest. Has written the operas A Köldkirály, 1903, Monna Vanna, 1907 (text by his father),

Paolo und Francesca, 1912, and Ave Maria, 1922.

Abrányi, Kornel (St. György-Abrány, 1822–1903, Pest), of noble family. Hungarian editor and author, pupil of Chopin, Kalkbrenner, Halévy and Fischhof, in 1860–76 editor at Pest of the first Hungarian musical journal, in 1867 founder of the Singers' Union and from 1875 professor in the new National Academy. Wrote a life of Mosonyi (1872), the program-book of the Beethoven Festival of 1870, a text-book in harmony (1874), a sketch of Hungarian music (1877) and a music-history (1886), besides translating many operatexts.

Abt, Franz (Eilenburg, 1819–1885, Wiesbaden). Popular Saxon song-writer and conductor, trained at Leipzig (at first in theology), beginning musical activity while a student. From 1841, after short service at Bernburg, he was conductor at Zurich and in 1852–82 court-director at Brunswick. In 1872 he made a successful tour in America. Wrote at least 3000 vocal pieces, including 7 secular cantatas and a multitude of fluent and graceful songs and part-songs, many of which gained almost the vogue of folk-songs. His piano-works were of slight value. Memoir by Weber, 1886. G.

Abyngton, Henry (?–1497). 15th C. G.

Achsharumov, Demetrius Vladimirovitch (Odessa, 1864). Russian violinist, pupil of Auer, Dont and R. Fuchs, from 1890 touring as concertist and since 1898 orchestral conductor at Poltava and head of the local branch of the Imperial Musical Society.

Ackté-Renvall, Aino (Helsingfors, 1876). Finnish operatic soprano from 1897, successful in both Europe and America (in 1904–05 at New York), especially in French and German works. In 1913 became noted in the rôle of Salome.

Acton, John (Manchester, 1863). English vocal teacher, since 1893 professor at the Royal College, Manchester, and leader of a choral society. Has written 2 cantatas for women's voices, etc.

Adalid y Gurréa, Marcel del (La Coruña, 1826–1881, Longara). Spanish composer, pupil of Moscheles and for a time of Chopin. Wrote the opera Inèsa e Bianca (not given) and some piano-pieces, besides editing 3 collections of folk-songs from Galicia (Spain).

Adam de la Halle (?1240–1287). 13th C. G (Hale).

Adam von Fulda. 15th C. G (Fulda).

Adam, Adolphe Charles (Paris, 1803–1856, do.), son of Louis below. Eminent French opera-composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (from 1821 under Boieldieu). Besides writing 39 operas and 14 ballets (from 1829), in 1847 he founded the Théâtre National, especially to present works by young composers, which soon ended in disaster, and then wrote criticisms for several papers. He became a member of the Légion d'Honneur in 1836 and of the Académie in 1844, and from 1849 taught composition at the Conservatory. His gifts were greatest in the opéra comique and the ballet, especially in flowing melody, gay rhythm and refined accompaniment, with notable resources of humor. His chief work was Le Postillon de Longjumeau, 1836, besides others like Le Chalet, 1834, Le Fidèle Berger, 1838, La Rose de Péronne, 1841, Le Roi d'Yvetot, 1842, Le Toréador, 1849, Giraldia, 1850, and the ballets Giselle, 1841, Le Corsaire, 1856, etc. He also wrote masses, cantatas, motets, men's choruses and songs. His reminiscences were published as Souvenirs d'un Musicien, 2 series, 1857-59. Memoirs by Halévy, 1859, and Pougin, 1877. G.

Adam, Jean (?-1784, Dresden). A violist who in 1756-82 was ballet-composer at Dresden (published a collection of dances in 1756), besides writing symphonies, concertos for piano and for oboe, and 6 string-quartets.

Adam, Louis (Johann Ludwig) (Müttersholtz, 1758-1848, Paris). Alsatian (German) pianist, from 1775 a favorite teacher in Paris and in 1797-1842 professor at the Conservatory (with noted pupils like Kalkbrenner, Hérold, Chaulieu, besides his son). Though self-trained, he was an admirable player. Wrote 2 standard methods (1798, 1802) and many piano-pieces that were popular for a time. G.

Adamberger, Valentin [stage-name 'Adamonti'] (Munich, 1743-1804, Vienna). Able Bavarian operatic tenor, from 1762 prominent in Italy, in 1777 visiting England, and in 1780-89 in high favor in Vienna, then entering the Royal Chapel and becoming noted as teacher. He was intimate with Mozart, who wrote the part of Belmonte in his Entführung for him (1782), besides separate arias. G.

Adami da Bolsena [or Volterra], Andrea (Venice, 1663-1742, Rome). For many years head of the Papal Chapel, of which he wrote a valuable history (1711). G.

Adamowska, Mme. See Szumowska.

Adamowski, Joseph (Warsaw, 1862). Polish 'cellist, trained at the Warsaw and Moscow Conservatories, appearing from 1883 at Warsaw and in 1885-87 teaching at Moscow. In 1889-1907 he was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and since 1903 has been professor at the New England Conservatory. From 1890 he played in the Adamowski Quartet and from 1896 in the Trio with his wife (née Szumowska) and his brother. A.

Adamowski, Timothée (Warsaw, 1858), brother of the above. Polish violinist, trained at the Warsaw and Paris Conservatories, from 1879 concertizing in America and in 1884-1908 a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and since 1908 professor at the New England Conservatory. In 1888 he organized the Adamowski Quartet (reorganized in 1890) and in 1896 the Adamowski Trio. Since 1895 he has been regularly heard as soloist in London and Paris. A.

Adams, Charles R. (Charlestown, Mass. 1834-1900, West Harwich, Mass.). Eminent American operatic tenor from 1856 (concert) and 1861 (opera), appearing with notable success at Vienna, Pest, Berlin and other European capitals, in 1877 returning to America, where from 1879 he was a foremost teacher in Boston. A.

Adams, Suzanne (Cambridge, Mass. 1873). American stage-soprano, in 1894-97 engaged at the Paris Opéra, then at Nice and in 1898-1906 at Covent Garden, London, from 1898 also appearing in America. A.

Adams, Thomas (London, 1785-1858, do.). Noted English organist, from 1802 holding various positions in London churches and often exhibiting new instruments, with much masterly extemporization. From 1817 he was in charge of the annual concerts on the 'Apollonicon' of Flight & Robson. Wrote many organ-works, besides pieces for piano and for voices. G.

Adcock, James (Eton, 1778-1860, Cambridge). English choirboy at Windsor and Eton, from 1800 singer at Cambridge and at length choir-master at King's College there. Wrote glees, anthems and solfeggi. G.

Addison, John (London, ?1766-1844, do.). English double-bassist and composer of light opera (8 works in 1805-18), besides the cantata Elijah, glees, etc., and a text-book for singers (1836). His wife (née Willems) was a clever singer. G.

Addison, Robert Brydges (Dorchester, 1854). English teacher and composer, pupil of the Royal Academy, London, where from 1882 he taught harmony, from 1892 becoming a noted teacher of singing at Trinity College. Has written excellent songs, piano- and violin-pieces, a symphony and an orchestral Allegro.

Adelburg, August, Ritter von (Constantinople, 1830-1873, Vienna). Excellent Austrian violinist, pupil of Mayseder, noted for the remarkable breadth of his tone. Wrote violin-concertos and sonatas, string-quartets, sacred pieces and 3 operas, including the Hungarian Zrinyi, 1868 (Pest). He also wrote a reply to Liszt's essay on Gipsy music (1859).

Ademollo, Alessandro (?-1891, Rome). Italian musicologist, author of I Primi Fasti della Musica Italiana a Parigi [1645-62], 1884, I Primi Fasti del Teatro di Via della Pergola a Firenze [1657-61], 1885, I Teatri di Roma nel Secolo XVII, 1888, and various articles on celebrated singers in the 18th century (1889) and on music at Milan and Mantua (1885-88).

Adgate, Andrew (d. 1793, Philadelphia). Promoter of vocal music in Philadelphia from 1784, starting the 'Uranian Academy' in 1787. A.

Adler, Agnes, née Hansen (Copenhagen, 1865). Gifted Danish pianist, pupil of Neupert and the Copenhagen Conservatory, where since 1900 she has been professor of piano and ensemble-playing.

Adler, Guido (Eibenschütz, 1855). Distinguished Austrian musicologist, graduate of the Vienna Conservatory and University (Ph. D. 1880, with thesis on church-music before 1600). In 1884, with Chrysander and Spitta, he started the able Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft, in 1885 became professor at Prague University and in 1895 followed Hanslick at Vienna University. Since 1913 he has also edited Studien zur Musikwissenschaft. Among his notable publications are essays upon 'imitation,' Beethoven's music, Wagner, etc., and Der Stil in der Musik, 1912. From 1894 he was editor-in-chief of the Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Oesterreich, to which he made many large contributions, especially in vols. iii-vii, ix-xi, xix, xxiii and xxv. G.

Adler, Vincent (Raab, 1826-1871, Geneva). Hungarian pianist, pupil of Erkel (his brother-in-law), with further studies at Vienna and many tours from Paris as a center. From 1865 he was teacher at the Geneva Conservatory. Wrote effective études and salon-pieces. His son Georg (Paris, 1863) is teacher at the Raff Conservatory at Frankfurt.

Adigasser, Anton Cajetan (Inzell, 1728-1777, Salzburg). Bavarian organist, trained by Eberlin at Salzburg, where from 1751 he was cathedral-organist, writing many valuable church-works. In 1767 he joined with Mozart and Mich. Haydn in writing a school-play (each one act). G.

Adlung [Adelung], Jakob (n. Erfurt, 1699-1762, do.). After studies in philology and theology he took up music under Reichardt at Erfurt, where in 1727 he followed Buttstedt as town-organist and from 1741 taught in the Gymnasium. He was expert in both playing and making clavi-chords. Wrote Anleitung zur musikal. Gelahrtheit, 1758 (revised by J. A. Hiller, 1783), Musica mechanica organædi, 1768 (on the organ and clavi-chord), and Das musikal. Siebengestirn, 1768 (the last two issued posthumously by J. L. Albrecht). G.

Adolfati, Andrea (Venice, 1711-1760?, Genoa?). Italian composer, pupil of Galuppi, choir-master at the Salute in Venice and from 1750 in Genoa. Wrote much church-music and 11 operas (1742-53), produced in Italy or at Vienna. G.

Adriaens, Emanuel. 16th C.

Adrien [Andrien], Martin Joseph (Liège, 1767-1824?, Paris). Belgian bass, from 1785 engaged at the Paris Opéra, in 1804 becoming chorus-master, besides teaching declamation in 1795-99. From 1822 he was on the Conservatory staff. During the Revolution he wrote patriotic songs. G.

Ægidius de Marino. 15th C.

Ælsters, Georges Jacques (Ghent, 1770-1849, do.). Belgian carillonneur, choir-master and composer of church-music at Ghent. G.

Æolian, Weber Piano and Pianola Co., The. The corporation in New York combining the interests of the piano, organ and mechanical instrument-making firms previously known as Æolian, Weber, Steck, Wheelock, Stroud, Vocalion, Orchestrelle, Choralion, etc. A.

Aerts, Egide (Boom, 1822-1853, Brussels). Fine Belgian flutist, pupil of Lahon and Fétis, in 1837-40 touring with notable success in France and Italy and from 1847 teaching at the Brussels Conservatory. Wrote much for the flute, besides symphonies and overtures. G.

Afanassiev, Nikolai Jakovlevitch (Tobolsk, 1821-1898, Petrograd). Russian (Siberian) composer, pupil of his father. Wrote symphonies, string-quartets (including The Volga, 1860, and Hebraic), quintets, an octet, violin-pieces, one for the viola d'amour, 4 operas, including Amalet Bek, 2 oratorios, the prize-cantata Peter the Great's Feast, songs, etc., besides editing folk-songs.

Afferni, Ugo (Florence, 1871). Italian conductor, trained at Florence, Frankfurt and Leipzig. From 1893 he directed three societies at Annaberg, from 1897 the new Verein at Lübeck, and in 1905 followed Lüstner as head of the Wiesbaden Kurkapelle. Has written the comedy-opera Potemkin an der Donau, 1897, piano-pieces and songs. In 1895 he married the English violinist May Brommer (b. 1872).

Afflard, Michel P.. 17th C. G.

Afranio. 16th C. G.

Afzelius, Arvid August (Hornborga, 1785-1871, Enköping). Swedish clergyman and archæologist who edited collections of folk-songs (with Geijer, 3 vols, 1814-17, and with Drake, 1848). See Arvidson's Svenska Forn-sånger, 1834-42.

Agazzari, Agostino (1578-1640). 17th C. G.

Aggházy, Carolus (Pest, 1855). Hungarian pianist, pupil of Bruckner, Volkmann and Liszt, appearing from 1882 as concertist and from 1888 teaching at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin. He is now professor at the Pest Conservatory. Has written the opera Maritta, the cantata Rákóczy, chamber-music and piano-pieces, all with decided Hungarian flavor.

Agnelli, Salvatore (Palermo, 1817-1874). Italian composer, pupil of Furno, Zingarelli and Donizetti, from 1839 active in southern Italy and from 1846 at Marseilles. Wrote 8 operas, including La Jacquerie, 1849, Léonore de Médicis, 1855, and Les Deux Avides, 1860, a cantata in memory of Napoleon (1856) and some church-music.

Agnesi-Pinottini, Maria Theresia d' (Milan, 1724-1780?). Italian pianist and composer of 5 stage-works (all 1771), cantatas, sonatas for piano and for harp. G.

Agniez, Louis Ferdinand Léopold [Luigi Agnesi] (n. Namur, 1833-1875, London). Belgian operatic bass, trained at the Brussels Conservatory, at first choir-master and choral conductor there, besides producing an unsuccessful opera (1858). After further study with Duprez, his notable stage-career began in 1862, when he toured Europe with Merelli, appearing in Paris in 1864 and in London in 1865. From 1871 he sang much in England in both opera and concert. G.

Agostini, Lodovico (1534-1590). 16th C. G.

Agostini, Mezio (Fano, 1875). Italian composer, pupil of the Liceo Rossini at Pesaro, where from 1900 he was harmony-teacher, in 1909 succeeding Wolf-Ferrari as head of the Liceo Marcello in Venice. In 1894-1900 he was conductor at various theaters. Has written a symphony, 4 orchestral suites, a string-quartet, 2 piano-trios, a cantata in memory of Rossini and several operas, including Il Cavaliere del Sogno, 1897 (prize).

Agostini, Paolo (?1583-1629). 17th C. G.

Agostini, Pietro Simone (1650-?). 17th C. G.

Agrell, Johann Joachim (Löth, 1701-1765, Nuremberg). Swedish violinist and harpsichordist, from 1723 court-musician at Kassel and from 1746 director at Nuremberg. Wrote many works for chamber-groups and clavier. His sonatas illustrate the transition from the suite to the sonata proper. G.

Agricola [Ackermann], Alexander (1446-1506). 15th C. G.

Agricola, Georg Ludwig (1643-1676). 17th C. G.

Agricola, Johann (?1570-1605?). 16th C. G.

Agricola, Johann Friedrich (n. Altenburg, 1720-1774, Berlin). Saxon organist, educated in law at Leipzig, studying also with J. S. Bach there and with Quantz at Berlin. At Leipzig he was cembalist for the Musical Union under Bach. From 1751 he was court-composer at Berlin and in 1759 succeeded Graun as head of the Royal Chapel, besides gaining fame as an organist. Being slightly related to Handel, he often brought forward the latter's music. Wrote 8 operas (1750-72), some cantatas and odes, 2 Psalms and other sacred music. He opposed Marpurg under the pen-name of 'Olibrio,' assisted Adlung in his Musica Mechanica (1768) and Sulzer in his Theorie d. schönen Künste (1772), and translated Tosi's singing-method (1757). G.

Agricola, Martin (1486-1556). 16th C. G.

Agricola, Wolfgang Christoph. 17th C. G.

Agthe, Friedrich Wilhelm (Sangerhausen, 1796-1830, n. Pirna). In 1822-28 cantor at the Kreuzschule in Dresden. He was a pupil of A. E. Müller, Aug. Riemann and Weinlig.

Agthe, Karl Christian (Hettstedt, 1762-1797, Ballenstedt). As a youth (from 1776) director of a stage-company at Reval (writing 4 singspiele and a ballet), from 1782 court-organist at Ballenstedt, adding a sixth singspiel, 2 books of songs (1782-84) and 6 piano-sonatas. G.

Agthe, Wilhelm Johann Albrecht (Ballenstedt, 1790-1873, Berlin), son of the above. From 1810 in the Gewandhaus Orchestra at Leipzig, from 1823 teacher of Logier's system at Dresden, from 1826 at Posen (where Th. Kullak was his pupil), from 1830 at Breslau and from 1832 at Berlin, where in 1845 he established a school. Wrote piano-works of merit. G.

Aguado y Garcia, Dionisio (Madrid, 1784-1849, do.). Celebrated Spanish guitarist, pupil of Garcia, active at Paris in 1825-38, publishing a noted method (1825) and collections of pieces. G.

Aguilar, Emanuel Abraham (London, 1824-1904, do.). English (Spanish) pianist and composer, making his début in 1848 at Leipzig. Wrote 3 symphonies, 2 overtures, a piano-septet, a piano-sextet, 2 string-quartets, a piano-quartet, trios and 2 unproduced operas (1855, '63).

Aguilera de Heredia, Sebastiano. 17th C. G.

Agujari, Lucrezia (Ferrara, 1743-1783, Parma) [often called 'La Bastardella']. Extraordinary Italian soprano, pupil of Lambertini, appearing from 1764 in Italy and from 1775 in London, continuing in high favor till 1780, when she married the composer Colla, in whose works she had often sung. Her range ran to c<sup>4</sup>. G.

Ahle, Johann Georg (1651-1706). 17th C.

Ahle, Johann Rudolf (1625-1673). 17th C. G.

Åhlström, Olof (Stockholm, 1756-1835, do.). Swedish organist at the Jakobskirche in Stockholm and court-accompanist. Wrote piano- and violin-sonatas, cantatas and songs, and for a time edited the Musikalisk Tidsfördrift. His son Jakob Niklas (Wisby, 1805-1859, Stockholm) wrote 2 operas and other stage-music and edited (with Boman) a collection of folk-songs. G.

Ahna, Heinrich Karl Hermann de (Vienna, 1835-1892, Berlin). Superior Austrian violinist, pupil of Mayseder and Milderer, appearing from 1847 at Vienna, London, etc., and in 1849-51 court-musician at Gotha. In 1851-59 he served in the Austrian army, engaging in the Italian war. After further concert-tours, from 1862 he played in the court-orchestra at Berlin (concert-master from 1868) and from 1869 taught at the Hochschule. In 1872-92 he was second in the famous Joachim Quartet. His sister Eleonore (Vienna, 1838-1865, Berlin) was a soprano of much promise at the Berlin Opera. G.

Ahner, Bruno (Dresden, 1866). Saxon violinist, trained at the Dresden Conservatory, from 1884 concertmaster at Frankfurt, from 1885 under Mottl at Karlsruhe, from 1893 at Schwerin, from 1901 under Richter at the Vienna Opera and since 1902 at the Munich Opera, where he also leads a Quartet.

Aibl, Joseph. A music-publishing firm established at Munich in 1824, from 1836 controlled by Eduard Spitzweg and his two sons. After absorbing the businesses of Falter and Läuterer, since 1904 it has been located at Leipzig as the Universal Edition.

Aiblinger, Johann Kaspar (Wasserburg, 1779-1867, Munich). Bavarian choral conductor and church-musician, trained at Munich and under Mayr of Bergamo. From 1803 he lived at Vicenza, from 1811 was in viceregial service at Milan and organized choral concerts at Venice, from 1819 was cembalist at the Italian Opera in Munich and in 1826-33 conductor, then retiring to Bergamo. At Munich he promoted notable renderings of polyphonic church-music and collected a great library (now in the National Library there). He wrote much fine Catholic music, besides the opera Rodrigo e Ximene, 1821, 2 ballets and a farce. Memoir by Hötzel, 1867. G.

Aichinger, Gregor (1564-1628). 16th C. G.

Aigner, Engelbert (Vienna, 1798-1851, do.). In 1837-42 ballet-conductor at the Vienna Opera. Wrote 3 operas, ballets, cantatas, good church-music, men's choruses and a quintet.

Aimon, Pamphile Léopold François (n. Avignon, 1779-1866, Paris). French theater-conductor, from 1822 at the Théâtre François in Paris. Of his 7 operas, Jeux Floraux, 1818, and Michel et Christine, 1821, were given and Les Sybarites published (1831). He also wrote much chamber-music, text-books in harmony (1813-31), etc. G.

a Kempis, Nicholas. 17th C. G.

Akeroyde, Samuel. 17th C. G.

Åkerberg, Carl Emanuel Erik (Stockholm, 1860). Swedish organist and conductor, in 1889-92 cantor at the German Church in Stockholm, from 1890 organist at the Synagogue, from 1889 director of various choral societies, etc. Has written several large choral works, orchestral and chamber-music, piano-pieces and songs.

Akimento, Theodor Stepanovitch (Kharkov, 1876). Russian composer, pupil of Balakirev and Rimsky-Korsakov, teaching for a time in the Royal Choir School at Petrograd, in 1903-06 living in Paris, and now in Moscow. Has written about 60 works, including an overture, a lyric poem for orchestra, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, piano-pieces, choruses, songs and the unpublished opera The Queen of the Alps.

Ala, Giovanni Battista. 17th C. G.

Alabiev. See Aliabiev.

Alaleona, Domenico (n. Fermo, 1881). Italian composer and historian, graduate of the Academy S. Cecilia in Rome and since 1910 professor in the Conservatory there. In 1908-10 he was choral conductor at Leghorn, as in Rome since 1910. Has written the choral Atollite Portas, 1906, a Requiem, a Sinfonia Italica, the opera Mirra, 1920, songs, etc., besides important articles on Cavalieri, the oratorio, etc.

Alard, Jean Delphin (Bayonne, 1815-1888, Paris). Eminent French violinist from 1831, pupil of Habeneck, from 1843 Baillot's successor as professor at the Conservatory and leader of the court-orchestra. He was both a spirited player and an inspiring teacher (Sarasate was his pupil). He published a noted method, a collection of 18th-century violin-classics, and many brilliant concertos, fantasias, études, etc. G.

Alban, Matthias (1621-1712). 17th C. G.

Albanesi, Luigi (Rome, 1821-1897, Naples). Italian pianist of ability and composer of piano-pieces, church-music and the oratorio Le Sette Parole di Gesù Cristo.

Albani [Marie Louise Cecilia Emma Lajeunesse] (n. Montreal, 1852). Canadian operatic soprano, deriving her stage-name from her church-singing in 1864 at Albany, N. Y. She studied with Duprez and Lamperti, appearing in Messina in 1870 and soon becoming a favorite everywhere, especially at Covent Garden, London, and with English choral societies. Numerous rôles in oratorios and cantatas were written for her from 1880 onward. She became eminent as a Wagnerian interpreter, but was also highly successful in French and Italian works. In 1878 she married the impresario Ernest Gye. In 1906 she retired from the stage. See her Forty Years of Song, 1911. G. A.

Albeniz, Isaac (Camprodón, 1861-1909, Cambo au Bains). Precocious Spanish pianist, pupil of Marmontel, Brassin, Jadassohn and Liszt, beginning brilliant tours in early boyhood. Has written extensively for the piano, often impressionistically, as in the suites Iberia and Catalonia, a Concerto Fantástico and somewhat in the operas The Magic Opal, 1893, Enrico Clifford, 1895, Pepita Jiménez, 1896, King Arthur (trilogy, Merlin, Lancelot, Ginevra), 1897-1906, L'Érmitage Fleurie, 1905, and the oratorio Cristo. G.

Albeniz, Pedro (Biscay, 1755-1821, Logroño). Spanish composer of church-music, choirmaster at San Sebastian and from 1795 at Logroño. G.

Albeniz, Pedro (Longroño, 1795-1855, Madrid). Spanish organist and pianist, pupil of his father (Mattéo A.), Herz and Kalkbrenner, from 1830 professor at the Madrid Conservatory and from 1834 court-organist. He introduced modern pianism into Spain, his pupils being many there and throughout South America. Wrote many piano-pieces and a method, 1840. G.

Albergati, Pirro Capacelli, Conte d' (Carrati, 1663-1735, Bologna). Italian composer of many oratorios, masses (from 1687), motets (from 1691), instrumental and secular vocal pieces (from 1685). In 1687 he was in the service of the Emperor Leopold I.

Albert, Prince Consort of Queen Victoria (n. Coburg, 1819-1861, Windsor). His musical education was extensive and thorough, so that after his marriage to Victoria in 1840 he became a foremost promoter of musical progress at the court and in general. He composed much vocal music, sacred and secular, and the opera Hedwig von Linden, 1840. G.

Albert, Charles Louis Napoleon d' (n. Hamburg, 1809-1886, London). German pianist, active in England from youth as dancing-teacher and composer of much popular dance-music. G.

Albert, Eugène Francis Charles d' (Glasgow, 1864), son of the above. Extraordinary pianist, pupil of Pauer, Richter and Liszt, already a notable artist from 1881 and ever since in the first rank of great performers and interpreters. He is also an able and fertile composer, besides making important transcriptions of Bach's organ-works and editing his Well-Tempered Clavichord and the works of Liszt. His works include a symphony in F, the overtures Esther and Hyperion, piano-concertos in B min. and E, a 'cello-concerto in C, string-quartets in A min. and E-flat, a piano-sonata in F-sharp min., a piano-suite, many piano-pieces and some beautiful songs. He has also written the choral work Der Mensch und das Leben and the operas Der Rubin, 1893, Ghismonda, 1895 (text and music), Gernot, 1897, Die Abreise, 1898, Kain, 1900, Der Improvisator, 1900, Tiefeland, 1903 (his most successful work), Flauto Solo, 1905, Tragadabas, 1907, Izeyl, 1909, Die verschenkte Frau, 1912, Liebesketten, 1912, Die toten Augen, 1916, Seiurocco, 1921, and Marieken von Nymwegen, 1923, besides incidental music to Roda's Die Sklavin von Rhodos, 1912, and Der Stier von Olivera, 1918. He has been thrice married, to Teresa Carreño (1892-95), Hermine Finck (1895-1910) and Ida Thomson (1910-12), and has lived mostly in Vienna and at Meina in Italy. G.

Albert, Heinrich (1604-1651). 17th C. G.

Albertazzi, Emma, née Howson (London, 1814-1847, do.). English operatic contralto, pupil of Costa and Celli, from 1830 singing in Milan, Madrid, Paris and London with good vocal success. In 1831 she married an Italian lawyer. G.

Alberti, Domenico (Venice, ?1717-1740?, Rome?). Italian pianist and singer, through his clavier-sonatas giving his name to the monotonous type of accompaniment-figure known as the 'Alberti bass.' He also wrote motets and 3 operas. G.

Alberti, Giuseppe Matteo (Bologna, 1685-1746?). Italian violinist and excellent chamber-composer at Bologna. Wrote 10 sextets, 12 Sinfonie for strings and organ, and 12 violin-sonatas.

Alberti, Johann Friedrich (1642-1710). 17th C.

Albertini, Gioacchino (1751-1812, Warsaw). Italian court-conductor at Warsaw from about 1780. He produced two popular operas, Circe ed Ulisse, 1785 (Hamburg), and Virginia, 1786 (Rome).

Albicastro [Weissenburg], Henrico. A Swiss soldier in the War of the Spanish Succession (1701-14) who issued at Amsterdam a notable series of chamber-works (quartet-concertos, trio-sonatas and violin-sonatas).

Albini, Felix. Opera-director at Agram and composer of the opera Maricon, 1901, and 5 operettas (1905-09).

Albinoni, Tommaso (Venice, 1674-1745, do.). Italian composer at Venice from before 1700. He wrote church-music, over 50 operas (1694-1740), chief of which was Didone Abbandonata, 1725, much good chamber-music and some cantatas. He was also an expert violinist and singer. J. S. Bach often used subjects and even passages from him as starting-points for his own development. G.

Alboni, Marietta (Cesena, 1823-1894, n. Paris). Great Italian operatic contralto, in 1845-65 probably unrivaled, pupil of Mme. Bertolotti and Rossini. She made her formal début in 1843 at Milan, soon singing elsewhere in Italy, at Vienna and Petrograd, through Germany, in London and Paris, her success being somewhat in competition with Jenny Lind. In 1853 she was heard with brilliant effect in the United States and South America. Her voice was full and rich and her style extremely finished, but dramatically she was somewhat reserved. In 1854 she married Count Pepoli and retired from the stage after his death in 1866, though still singing somewhat in concert; in 1877 she married again. Memoir by Pougin, 1912 (see also sketch by Aclocque, 1848). G.

Albrecht, Eugen Maria (Petrograd, 1842-1894, do.), son of Karl below. Excellent German-Russian violinist, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1860 prominent in the orchestra of the Italian Opera at Petrograd, in 1872 becoming inspector of the imperial orchestras there and going in 1884 on a tour to examine orchestras in other countries (report in 1886), and in 1892 librarian at the Opera. In 1872 he joined Hildebrandt and Gille in founding the Chamber-Music Society and in 1881-86 was president of the Philharmonic Society. Besides text-books, he wrote a keen critique of the Petrograd Conservatory (1891) and (with Wessel) made a collection of soldiers' and sailors' songs.

Albrecht, Johann Lorenz (n. Mühlhausen, 1732-1773, do.). Thuringian organist and author, from 1758 organist at the Marienkirche in Mühlhausen and cantor at the Gymnasium. Besides some church-music, he wrote various articles and books (from 1761), contributed to Marpurg's Kritische Beiträge (1754-62) and edited two posthumous treatises by Adlung (1768).

Albrecht, Karl (Posen, 1807-1863, Gatchina). German conductor, pupil of Schnabel, in 1825-35 violinist in Breslau, from 1838 conductor in Petrograd, at first of German opera, but from 1840 of Russian (led the première of Glinka's Russian and Ludmilla, 1842), from 1845 director of the Philharmonic Concerts and from 1850 teacher at a school in Gatchina. Wrote 3 string-quartets, a ballet and a mass.

Albrechtsberger, Johann Georg (n. Vienna, 1736-1809, do.). Distinguished Austrian organist and theorist, pupil of Emmerling. From about 1753 he was organist at Molk, where his playing promptly attracted notice, from 1765 filled two or three similar positions, from 1772 was court-organist at Vienna and choir-director for the Carmelites, and from 1792 was director at St. Stephen's. He was teacher of numerous able pupils, such as Beethoven, Hummel, J. Weigl, Seyfried, Eybler and Mosel. His chief writings were Grundliche Anweisung zur Composition, 1790 (2d ed. 1818), on Generalbass, 1792, and a Clavierschule, 1808. A complete edition of his theoretical works was edited by Seyfried (1826, '37). Of his about 250 compositions only 27 are published (fugues and a concerto for piano, chamber-music and organ-preludes). In ms. are a great variety of chamber- and church-music, including 26 masses and 6 oratorios. Some of his instrumental works are in the Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Oesterreich, xvi. 2. G.

Albrici, Vincenzo (1631-1696). 17th C.

Alcarotti, Giovanni Francesco. 16th C.

Alcock, John (London, 1715-1806, Lichfield). English organist, pupil of Stanley, from 1737 at Plymouth, from 1742 at Reading, in 1749-60 at Lichfield Cathedral, and in 1766-90 at Tamworth. Mus. D. of Oxford in 1761. His works included a Service in E min., anthems, many glees of merit, and the tune-book The Harmony of Zion, 1752. His son John (1740-91) was organist at Walsall from 1773. G.

Alda, Frances [name originally Davis] (New Zealand, 1883). Superior operatic soprano, pupil of Marchesi, from 1904 extensively active in Europe and since 1908 at the Metropolitan, New York. She has created rôles in many operas by Gilson, Messager, Puccini, Damrosch and others, and has a wide repertory in French and Italian. In 1910 she married Gatti-Casazza. A.

Alden, John Carver (Boston, 1852). American piano-teacher, trained by Faelten and at Leipzig, from 1880 in Boston, then in New York and the South, and latterly at Quincy, Mass. He has written a piano-concerto, piano-pieces and studies, songs and anthems. A.

Aldrich, Henry (1647-1710). 17th C. G.

Aldrich, Mariska (Boston, 1881). American operatic soprano from 1908, pupil of Giraudet and Henschel. At first a contralto, she was at the Metropolitan, New York, till 1913, but took the rôle of Brünnhilde at Bayreuth in 1914. She married J. F. Aldrich in 1901, and is now Mrs. W. E. S. Davis. A.

Aldrich, Perley Dunn (Blackstone, Mass. 1863). American vocalist and teacher, trained in Boston and by Shakespeare, Trabadello and Sbriglia. In 1885-87 he taught at the Univ. of Kansas, in 1889-91 at the Utica Conservatory, and since 1903 in Philadelphia. Has written 2 cantatas, several songs and a book on Vocal Economy, 1895. A.

Aldrich, Richard (Providence, 1863). Eminent American critic, trained at Harvard under Paine. Since 1891 he has written for New York papers, at first for the Tribune, but from 1902 for the Times, always with dignity, force and breadth. He contributed to the revised edition of Grove's Dictionary in 1904-10. He has published Guides to Parsifal and the 'Ring' (1904, '05) and a translation of Lilli Lehmann's How to Sing, 1902, '14. A.

Aldrovandini, Giuseppe Antonio Vincenzo (?1675-1707). 17th C. G.

Alembert, Jean le Rond d' (Paris, 1717-1783, do.). Able French acoustician, from 1747 writing extensively on problems of sound, with a treatise on Rameau's theories (1752) and many articles in Diderot's Encyclopédie, 1751-72, of which for a time he was joint-editor. G.

Alessandri, Felice (Rome, 1747-1798, Casalbino). Italian pianist, composer and conductor, trained at Naples, in 1763-67 at Paris, then in Italy, but with sojourns in London, Dresden, Russia and Berlin (royal conductor, 1789-92). He wrote over 30 operas, including Il Ritorno d'Ulisse, 1790, a ballet, an oratorio and some chamber-music. Memoir by Valdrighi, 1896.

Alessandro Romano. See Merlo.

Alexandre, Jacob (1804-1876, Paris). Founder of a firm of harmonium-makers in Paris (1829), introducing the 'Alexandre' organ in 1874.

Alfano, Franco (Naples, 1877). Italian pianist and composer, trained at the Naples and Leipzig Conservatories, from 1896 settling in Berlin, but, after touring in Poland, again at Leipzig, where his first opera was given. Has written a symphony, a Suite Romantica, the operas Miranda, 1897, La Fonte d'Enscir, 1898, Risurrezione, 1902 (after Tolstoi), Il Principe Zilah, 1905, L'Ombra di Don Giovanni, 1913, and La Leggenda di Sacuntala, 1921, some ballets and good piano-works. In 1917 he followed Busoni as head of the Bologna Liceo.

Alfarabi (?900-950?). 10th C.

Alferaky, Achilles Nikolaievitch (Kharkov, 1846). Russian composer in high court favor at Petrograd, writing an opera and interesting songs and piano-pieces, often using folk-song themes from the Ukraine.

Alfieri, Pietro (Rome, 1801-1863, do.). Eminent Italian authority on Gregorian and old polyphonic music, long professor at the English College in Rome. Wrote several works on the treatment of Gregorian music (1840-57), biographies of Jommelli (1845), Bittoni (1852) and many Roman church-musicians, and edited Allegri's Miserere (1840, under the pen-name of 'Alessandro Geminiani') and three great collections (1840-46) of 16th-century masters, including the first comprehensive edition of Palestrina. He also wrote articles for the Gazzetta Musicale. G (with contents of chief collections)

Alfvén, Hugo (Stockholm, 1872). Swedish composer and conductor, pupil of the Stockholm Conservatory and till 1903 holder of scholarships for graduate-study. Since 1910 he has been music-director at Upsala University. Has composed 3 symphonies, 2 symphonic poems, the rhapsody Midsommarvaka, the cantata Sten Sture, the lyric scena The Bells, a cantata for the Linnæus bicentenary in 1907, violin- and piano-pieces, songs, etc.

Algarotti, Francesco (Venice, 1712-1764, Pisa). Learned Italian scholar, in 1740-49 in the service of Frederick the Great at Berlin. His Saggio sopra l'Opera, 1756, was an important criticism of operatic method, with remarkable intuition as to its future development. Memoir by Michelelesi, 1770. G.

Aliabiev [Alabiev], Alexander Alexandrovitch (Moscow, 1787-1851, do.). Russian amateur, composer of over 100 graceful songs and (with others) of popular operas, especially The Prisoner of the Caucasus. Memoir by Timofeiev, 1912. G.

Aliprandi, Bernardo (Milan, ?-1785?). Italian 'cellist, in the court-orchestra at Munich from 1732 and concertmaster in 1750-80. Wrote 4 operas (1737-40) and a Stabat Mater, 1749. G.

Alkan [Morhange], Charles Henri Valentin (Paris, 1813-1888, do.). French pianist of extraordinary technical facility with intricacies and tours de force, but a fine romanticism as well. His works included a long list of varied études, many of taxing difficulty, preludes, dances and marches, pieces for pedal-piano, a concerto, a sonata and a piano-trio. G.

Allacci, Leone (1586-1669). 17th C. G.

Allegri, Domenico. 17th C.

Allegri, Gregorio (1584-1652). 17th C. G.

Allen, Charles N. (York, 1837-1903, Boston). English violinist, pupil of Saenger, from 1871 prominent in Boston, Mass., as player and organizer of good ensemble-groups. A.

Allen, George Benjamin (London, 1822-1897, Brisbane). English organist, conductor and composer, located in turn in England, Ireland and Queensland. For a time he managed a light-opera company to give Sullivan's works. Wrote 5 operas, including Castle Grim, 1865, and The Wicklow Rose, 1882, cantatas, church-music, songs and part-songs.

Allen, George Nelson (Mansfield, Mass. 1812-1877, Cincinnati). American pioneer teacher, pupil of L. Mason, in 1841-64 professor at Oberlin College, apparently the first in America to hold such an academic position. A.

Allen, Henry Robinson (Cork, 1809-1876, London). Irish stage-tenor, popular in London in 1842-50 in French and Italian works as well as English. Later he was a ballad-writer. G.

Allen, Hugh Percy (Reading, 1869). English organist and conductor from 1880, from 1887 at Chichester Cathedral, Christ's College, Cambridge, St. Asaph and Ely Cathedrals in succession, and in 1901-19 organist at New College, Oxford, conductor of the Bach Choir there and from 1907 of the Bach Choir in London, and from 1918 professor of music, following Parratt. Mus.D. of Oxford in 1898. He has also been efficient in promoting orchestral societies. G.

Allen, Nathan Hale (Marion, Mass. 1848). American organist, conductor and composer, pupil of Grell, Haupt and Van der Stucken. From 1883 he was organist in Hartford, and in 1906-11 in Worcester, and has also been active in choral societies. Has written many effective songs, anthems, and organ-pieces, including a Pièce Symphonique and a Symphonic Fantasia, and 2 sacred cantatas. With L. W. Bacon he edited The Hymns of Luther, 1883. A.

Allihn, Heinrich Max (Halle, 1851-1910, do.). Saxon pastor n. Halberstadt from 1885, notable as specialist on instrument-making, editing Töpfer's Orgelbaukunst, 1888, etc.

Allin, Arthur Ivan (Copenhagen, 1847). Danish (Swedish) organist, pupil of Tofte, Rée and Rasmussen, since 1888 organist at Aarhus Cathedral. Has written a symphony, 2 overtures and piano-pieces.

Allison, Horton Claridge (London, 1846). English pianist, pupil of the Royal Academy, London, and the Leipzig Conservatory, becoming teacher at Manchester. Mus. D. of Dublin Univ. in 1877. Has written a piano-concerto, organ-pieces, the cantata Prayer, etc.

Allison, Richard. 16th C. G.

Allon, Henry Erskine (London, 1864-1897). English composer of much promise, writing songs, choral ballads and cantatas, besides chamber- and piano-music. G.

Almeida, Fernando d' (1618-1660). 17th C.

Almenrader, Karl (n. Düsseldorf, 1786-1843, Biebrich). Rhenish bassoonist, from 1810 active at Cologne, Frankfurt and Mayence and from 1822 in the court-orchestra at Biebrich. He made improvements in his instrument, wrote a treatise on it (1824) and a method, and composed a concerto, chamber- and solo-pieces. G.

Alois, Ladislaus (Prague, 1860). Bohemian 'cellist, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, from 1898 in the court-orchestra at Petrograd, writing many works, including 2 concertos, a trio, etc.

Alsager, Thomas Massa (1779-1846). English journalist (part-owner of the London Times), who formed a society to promote interest in Beethoven's music which gave the first English renderings of his Missa Solemnis (1832) and of Cherubini's Requiem (1834), as well as a Spohr festival (1843), at which the composer conducted. Alsager was intimate with many musicians, was himself a good performer on various instruments and was the first to employ a music-critic on a daily paper. G.

Alsleben, Julius (Berlin, 1832-1894, do.). Prussian pianist and author, pupil of Dehn, from 1865 president of the Berlin Tonkünstlerverein, in 1879 a founder and president of the Musiklehrerverein and from 1874 editor of Harmonie. Ph.D. of Kiel Univ. Besides concertizing and teaching, he wrote an a cappella Requiem, songs, etc., and handbooks on music-history (1862-80) and many articles.

Alstedt, Johann Heinrich (1588-1638). 17th C.

Altani, Hyppolit (b. 1846). Russian conductor, trained at the Petrograd Conservatory, from 1866 active in provincial theaters and from 1882 opera-director at Moscow.

Altenburg, Johann Ernst (Weissenfels, 1736-1801, Bitterfeld). Saxon trumpeter, pupil of Römhild and Altnikol, from 1769 organist at Bitterfeld. Wrote a treatise on the trumpet and drum (1765) and trumpet-music. See I. M. G. Sammelbde. 7. G.

Altenburg, Michael (1584-1640). 17th C. G.

Altès, Ernest Eugène (Paris, 1830-1899, Bordeaux). French violinist and conductor, pupil of Habeneck and Bazin. From 1871 he was under-conductor at the Opera, becoming chief in 1879-87, and in 1877-79 also leader of the Société des Concerts. He wrote a symphony, a string-quartet, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, etc. G.

Altès, Joseph Henri (Rouen, 1826-1895, Paris), brother of the above. Good French flutist, long in the Opera orchestra and in 1868-94 Dorus' successor at the Conservatory.

Althouse, Paul Shearer (Reading, Pa. 1889). American operatic tenor since 1913 and also fine concert-singer. He sang in premières of Madeleine (1914) and Madame Sans-Gêne (1915), also of Boris Godunov (1913) in America. A.

Altmann, Wilhelm (Adelnau, 1862). From 1900 head-librarian of the Royal Library in Berlin and since 1914 in charge of its music-section (following Kopfermann), besides from 1906 director of the Deutsche Musiksammlung and from 1904 critic for the National-Zeitung, as well as for other journals. Has published Chronik d. Berliner Philharm. Orchesters, 1902, H. von Herzogenberg, 1903, Öffentliche Musikbibliotheken, 1903, Wagners Briefe, 1905 (register of about 3150 letters), Brahms Briefwechsel, 1907, Wagners Briefwechsel mit seinen Verlegern, 2 vols. 1911, Kammermusik-Literatur-Verzeichnis, 1910, Reger-Katalog, 1917, Orchester-Katalog, 1919, Berger-Katalog, 1920, besides arrangements from Bach, Beethoven, Stamitz and Boccherini and an edition of Mich. Haydn's violin-sonatas.

Altnikol, Johann Christoph (?-1759, Naumburg). Pupil and son-in-law of J. S. Bach, from 1748 organist at Naumburg and a teacher and composer of repute. Of his works only 2 clavier-sonatas and a church-cantata are extant. G.

Altschuler, Modest (Mogilev, 1873). Russian 'cellist, trained at Warsaw by Gobelt and at the Moscow Conservatory, from 1890 touring in Russia and elsewhere with the Moscow Trio. About 1900 he came to New York and in 1903 organized the Russian Symphony Orchestra, which he has since conducted with steady success throughout America. A.

Alvarez [Albert Raymond Gourron] (Bordeaux, 1861). Eminent French operatic tenor from 1885, first at Ghent, Lyons and Marseilles and from 1892 at the Opéra in Paris, where he has sung in numerous premières. From 1899 he became popular in London and New York as well.

Alvárez, Fermin Maria (?-1898, Barcelona). Spanish song-composer, with about 100 works.

Alvary, Max [properly Achenbach, his father being Andreas A., the famous painter] (Düsseldorf, 1856-1898, Thuringia). Rhenish operatic tenor, pupil of Stockhausen, appearing first at Weimar. In 1884-91 he had much success in New York, especially in Wagnerian rôles, and later was at Hamburg and Mannheim. G.

Alwin, Karl (Königsberg, 1891). Able Prussian conductor, pupil of Humperdinck and Kaun, in 1911-12 chorusmaster under Muck at Berlin and also at Bayreuth and Halle, in 1914-15 in charge of the Posen Opera, in 1915-17 of that at Düsseldorf and in 1917-20 of that at Hamburg, then going to Vienna.

Amadé, Thaddäus, Baron von (Presburg, 1782-1845, Vienna). Hungarian pianist, who in 1820 became the leading patron of the boy Liszt. He also published (1836) the national folk-songs collected by his predecessor Ladislav, Baron von Amadé (1703-1764).

Amadei, Roberto (Loreto, 1840). Italian composer of church-music and the operas Luchino Visconti, 1869, Bianca de' Rossi, the comic Il Bacchettone and Amore Allegro, 1896.

Amani, Nicholas (1875-1904). Russian composer of a suite, variations, preludes, etc., for piano, and of a string-trio and songs.

Amati, Andrea (?1530-1611), Antonio (1555-1638), Geronimo [1] (1556-1630), and Niccolò, brother of Andrea. 16th C. G.

Amati, Geronimo [2] (1649-1740), Niccolò (1596-1684), and Vincenzo (1629-1670). 17th C. G.

Amato, Pasquale (Naples, 1878). Famous Italian operatic baritone since 1900, trained at the Naples Conservatory. He speedily became noted throughout Europe, and since 1908 has been a favorite in the United States and in Argentina, singing in the premières of Germania, The Girl of the Golden West, Armida, Pelléas et Mélisande, etc., and covering a wide range in older works of different schools. A.

Ambrogetti, Giuseppe. Italian basso buffo, appearing with success from 1807, especially in England in 1817-21. He married the singer Teresa Strinasacchi, and was still living in 1838. G.

Ambros, August Wilhelm (n. Prague, 1816-1876, Vienna), nephew of Kiesewetter. Bohemian pianist and superior musicologist, finely educated in law and music at Prague University, from 1840 for over twenty years employed as prosecuting attorney, but steadily pursuing historical and critical investigations in music and becoming famous as author. From 1869 he was professor at Prague University and also at the Conservatory, and from 1872 worked at Vienna, both in the Ministry of Justice and as professor in the Conservatory. His writings were Die Grenzen d. Musik u. Poesie, 1856 (2d ed. 1885), in reply to Hanslick, Culturhist. Bilder aus d. Musikleben d. Gegenwart, 1860, '65, the epoch-making Geschichte der Musik, 4 vols. completed, with a 5th edited by Kade, 1861-82, and extended further by Langhans, 1882-86 (original vols. revised by various hands, 1887-1911), and Bunte Blätter, 2 series, 1872-74 (2d ed. by Vogel, 1896). He also composed the opera Bretislav a Jitka, 2 overtures, 2 masses, a Stabat Mater, piano-pieces and songs, besides appearing as pianist. G.

Ambrose, Paul (Hamilton, Ont. 1868). Canadian organist, from 1886 in New York and from 1917 at Trenton, N. J., where since 1904 he has been music-director at the State Normal School. A.

Ambrosio, Alfredo d' (Naples, 1871-1915, Nice). Italian violinist, pupil of Sarasate and Wilhelmj, from 1893 teacher and leader of a quartet at Nice. Wrote a string-quartet and quintet, 2 violin-concertos, violin-pieces, an opera and a ballet.

American Piano Company, The. A corporation, formed in 1908, to unite the interests of the Chickering, Knabe, Haines, Marshall & Wendell and other piano-making firms, with headquarters in New York. A.

Amft, Georg (n. Glatz, 1873). Silesian teacher, pupil of the Inst. für Kirchenmusik, Berlin, becoming teacher at the Habelschwerdt Seminary and publishing Berühmte Werke alter Meister für Orgel (containing unpublished works of W. F. and K. P. E. Bach), Deutscher Männerchor (recent works), Schlesische Volkslieder and Neues Liederbuch für katholische Schulen, 1918, besides an edition of K. P. E. Bach's clavier-sonata in A min. In 1913 he gained the title of royal director.

Amicis, Anna Lucia de (Naples, ?1740-?). Excellent Italian stage-soprano from about 1760, at first in opera buffa, but from 1763 (London) in J. C. Bach's Orione and other serious works. In 1773 she sang at Milan in Mozart's Lucio Silla and continued active till 1790. G.

Amiot, Joseph Maria (Toulon, 1718-1794, Pekin). French Jesuit, from 1750 missionary in China. In 1779 he contributed a volume upon Chinese music to Roussier's large series of Mémoires on Chinese history, science and art, including a translation from Li-koang-ti. G. W. Fink transferred much of Amiot's work into German in his Ersten Wanderung, 1831.

Ammerbach, Elias Nikolaus (?1530-1597). 16th C.

Ammon, Blasius (?-1590). 16th C. G.

Amner, John (?-1641). 17th C. G.

Amon, Johann Andreas (Bamberg, 1763-1825, Wallerstein). Bavarian hornist, pupil of Stich [Punto], with whom he toured widely in Germany and France, from 1789 director at Heilbronn, and from 1817 at Wallerstein. Wrote symphonies, concertos, much chamber-music, 2 masses, a Requiem and 2 singspiels.

Amorevoli, Angelo (Venice, 1716-1798, Dresden). Italian stage-tenor of ability, who, after success in Italy, from 1741 sang in London and from 1750 at Dresden. G.

Anacker, August Ferdinand (Freiberg, 1790-1854, do.). Saxon organist and composer, pupil of Schicht and Schneider, from 1822 cantor at the Freiberg Seminarium (among his pupils were Brendel and Volkmann) and leader of a significant 'Miners' Band.' Wrote cantatas, part-songs, songs, etc. G.

Ancona, Mario (Florence, 1870). Italian operatic baritone, from 1890 in London, New York (from 1893), Russia, Spain, Portugal and Argentina, as well as throughout Italy, receiving decorations from Portugal and Italy (Order of the Crown). He has a large répertoire, including Verdi and Wagner works, with many other Italian and French operas.

Ancot, Jean (Bruges, 1779-1848, do.). Belgian violinist from 1804, trained at Paris. Wrote 4 violin-concertos, overtures, etc. Of his two sons, Jean (1799-1829) was a fine pianist, in London in 1823-25 and then at Boulogne, with tours in Belgium, and a curiously fertile composer (225 works for piano and for violin).

Ander, Aloys (Liebititz, 1817-1864, Wartenberg). Notable Bohemian tenor from 1845 at Vienna, especially after a triumphant appearance in Le Prophète in 1850. G.

Anders, Erich (n. Halle, 1883). Saxon composer, educated at Leipzig University and Conservatory, at first director at Barmen and Heidelberg, then teacher and critic at Berlin, from 1916 living at Munich, from 1919 at Cologne and from 1920 lecturer at Bonn University. Has written 2 comic operas, the orchestral legend Anseldo, many orchestral 'songs,' music for the 'spoken opera' Tod und Leben, 1920, a piano-suite and other piano-pieces, and choruses.

Anders, Gottfried Engelbert (Bonn, 1795-1866, Paris). Long head of the music-division of the National Library at Paris, collecting a fine private library (bought by Asantchevsky and given to the Petrograd Conservatory) and writing on Paganini and Beethoven (1831, '39).

Andersen, Anton Jørgen (Christiansand, 1845). Noted Norwegian 'cellist and composer, in 1871-1905 playing at the Stockholm Opera and in 1876-1911 teaching at the Conservatory there. Has written 3 symphonies (1884-1891), another in ms., a symphony for 14 'cellos and 3 double-basses, several other works for low strings, a 'cello-sonata (1876), men's choruses and songs.

Andersen, Carl Joachim (Copenhagen, 1847-1909, do.). Eminent Danish flutist and conductor, in 1869-77 playing in the court-orchestra at Copenhagen, in 1881 a founder of the Berlin Philharmonic and then deputy-conductor, and from 1894 conductor of the Palace Orchestra in Copenhagen and head of his own school. Wrote over 60 flute-works of importance. His brother Vigo (1852-1895), also a fine flutist, was long in the Thomas Orchestra in Chicago.

Anderson, Arthur Olaf (Newport, R. I. 1880). American theorist and composer, pupil of Norris, Guilmant, d'Indy and Sgambati, from 1905 teacher in Berlin and since 1908 at the American Conservatory, Chicago. He has written suites for orchestra, violin, piano and organ, 2 piano-sonatas, fugues, songs, song-cycles and choruses. A.

Anderson, Lucy, née Philpot (Bath, 1790-1878, London). English pianist, mostly self-taught, from 1820 somewhat prominent in London as soloist and teacher. She was the teacher of Queen Victoria and her children. In 1820 she married the violinist G. F. Anderson (d. 1876). G.

Anderton, Thomas (Birmingham, 1836-1903, do.). English amateur composer at Birmingham, organist and critic for the Daily News. Wrote many popular cantatas and operettas (from 1870), including The Wreck of the Hesperus and Yuletide, 1885, part-songs, songs, a symphony, overtures, a string-quartet, etc.

Andrade, Francisco d' (Lisbon, 1859-1921, Berlin). Portuguese operatic baritone, pupil of Miraglia and Ronconi, since 1882 known favorably throughout Europe in both opera and concert. From 1906 he was engaged in Berlin.

André, Johann (Offenbach, 1741-1799, do.). Hessian pianist, composer and founder of an important publishing-house (1774). Wrote about 30 operas and singspiels (from 1760), including a setting of Belmonte e Costanze, 1781, that preceded Mozart's, and various 'durchkomponierte' ballades (from 1783), being the first to develop the form, and many songs (see Eitner). In 1777-84 he was theater-director in Berlin. G.

André, Johann Anton (Offenbach, 1775-1842, do.), son of the above. Excellent pianist, violinist and composer, also succeeding his father as publisher in 1799. Wrote 2 operas, symphonies, chamber-music, church-music, etc., several important text-books in composition (1832-45) and violin-methods. In 1800 he bought the music left by Mozart and issued the first thematic catalogue of his works (1805, '28). He was one of the first to give music-lithography a large commercial application. He was also eminent as teacher and collector. He was succeeded by his son Johann August (1817-1887). G.

André, Johann Baptist [Jean Baptiste] (Offenbach, 1823-1883, Frankfort), another son of Anton. Pianist at Berlin and director for the Duke of Bernburg. G.

André, Julius (Offenbach, 1808-1880, Frankfort), another son of Anton. Excellent organist, pupil of A. Schmitt, writing organ-pieces and an Orgelschule. G.

André, Karl August (Offenbach, 1806-1887, Frankfort), Anton's eldest son. From 1835 head of a branch-house at Frankfort and founder of a piano-factory there. He wrote on piano-making (1855). G.

Andreä, Volkmar (Bern, 1879). Swiss conductor and composer, trained at the Cologne Conservatory, from 1902 choral conductor at Winterthur, since 1906 orchestral conductor at Zurich, from 1913 music-director at the University, from 1914 head of the Conservatory there and since 1920 president of the Swiss Musicians' Society. He has served as guest-conductor in Germany, France, Spain and Italy. His works include an orchestral suite, a Sinfonische Fantasia, a string-quartet, a string-trio, 2 piano-trios, a violin-sonata, 2 cantatas and a Vater Unser for soli, chorus and orchestra, the opera Ratcliff, 1911, many songs and men's choruses a cappella. In 1911 he led the first performance in Italy of Bach's Matthew Passion (Milan).

Andrée, Elfrida (Wisby, 1841). Swedish organist and composer, from 1861 at Stockholm and from 1867 at the Gothenburg Cathedral. Has written 2 organ-symphonies, 1 for orchestra, a string-quartet, a piano-trio and quintet, violin-romanzas, the choral work Snöfrid, etc.

Andreoli, Carlo (Mirandola, 1840-1910?). Italian pianist and organist, trained at the Milan Conservatory and from 1875 professor there. In 1858-71 he concertized in London. G.

Andreoli, Giuseppe (Milan, 1757-1832, do.). Good Italian double-bassist at Milan, in the orchestra at La Scala and professor in the Conservatory. He was also a harpist. G.

Andreoli, Guglielmo (Mirandola, 1835-1860, Nice), brother of Carlo above. Fine pianist, also trained at Milan, from 1856 touring widely through Europe. Wrote a piano-quartet and a good manual of harmony. G.

Andreozzi, Gaetano (Naples, 1763-1826, Paris). Italian composer from 1780, pupil of Jommelli. After early successes in Italy and a journey to Russia in 1784, from 1790 he was director at Naples, from 1791 in Madrid, then again in Naples, and from 1825 lived in Paris. Wrote 45 operas, 3 oratorios and a set of string-quartets (1786).

Andrevi, Francesco (n. Lerida, 1786-1853, Barcelona). Spanish-Italian priest and choir-master, successively at Valencia, Seville and Bordeaux (1832-42), and, after living in Paris, from 1849 at Barcelona. Wrote much valuable church-music, including an oratorio, a Requiem and a Stabat Mater, also a text-book in harmony (1848). G.

Andrews, George Whitfield (Wayne, O. 1861). Distinguished American organist and conductor, trained at Oberlin and from 1879 almost wholly engaged there as organist, teacher in the Conservatory and leader of the Musical Union (from 1900). He is widely known as concert-organist. Mus.D. of Oberlin in 1903. Has written much for the organ, including 6 sonatas, 4 suites, a Theme and Variations, 2 serenades and many detached pieces, besides an orchestral suite, a piano-trio, some songs, choruses and piano-pieces. A.

Andrews, J. Warren (Lynn, Mass. 1860). Also a prominent American organist from before 1875, at first in or near Boston, from 1879 at Newport, R. I., from 1888 at Cambridge, from 1891 at Minneapolis, and since 1898 in New York, where he has been active as recitalist and as warden in 1913-16 of the Am. Guild of Organists. A.

Andries, Jean (Ghent, 1798-1872, do.). Belgian violinist, teacher and author, from 1835 professor in the Ghent Conservatory and from 1851 its director. Wrote several books on music-history and on instruments, as on the flute (1866) and on bells (1868).

Androt, Albert August (Paris, 1781-1804, Rome). French composer of promise, winning the Prix de Rome in 1803 and beginning study with Gugieliemi. Wrote the cantata Alcyone, a Requiem and an opera. G.

Anerio, Felice (1560-1614). 16th C. G.

Anerio, Giovanni Francesco (?1567-1620?). 16th C. G.

Anet, Baptiste (? -1755, Lunéville). French violinist, pupil of Corelli, from 1724 in the Royal Chapel at Paris and later musician to the exiled King of Poland. Wrote violin-sonatas, etc. G.

Anfossi, Pasquale (n. Naples, 1727-1797, Rome). Italian violinist and from 1769 excessively prolific composer, pupil of Piccinni and later his rival. Worked first at Rome, then in turn at Paris, London, Prague, Dresden and Berlin, returning to Rome in 1784, becoming director at the Lateran in 1791. Wrote in all about 75 operas (1758-94), often with decided ability, especially on comic subjects and (from 1775) with notable attention to finali, besides 12 oratorios and other sacred music. G.

Angelet, Charles François (Ghent, 1797-1832, Brussels). Belgian pianist, pupil of Zimmerman and Fétis, from 1829 court-pianist at Brussels. Wrote a prize-symphony, a trio and piano-pieces.

Angeli, Andrea d' (Padua, 1868). Italian composer and author, taking a Ph.D. at Padua University and becoming at first professor of Italian literature at a local school, then editor of La Cronaca Musicale and later professor of music-history and æsthetics at the Liceo Rossini, Pesaro. He was the first in Italy to give lecture-recitals. Has written the operas L'Innocente, 1896, Il Negromante and Al Ridotto di Venezia, a Stabat Mater and several masses, chamber-music, etc., librettos for operas, and many valuable essays on music in the Greek drama, Marcello's theory of the theater, Petrarch, Gluck, etc.

Angelini. See Bontempi.

Angeloni, Luigi (in Papal States, 1758-1842, London). Italian politician, in 1800-23 living in Paris and publishing there a notable monograph on Guido d'Arezzo (1811).

Anger, Joseph Humphrey (1862-1913, Toronto). English organist, from 1893 professor of theory at the Toronto Conservatory and also organist, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, examiner for the University (Mus.D. in 1902), etc. Wrote a good harmony text-book, Form in Music and a pamphlet on the enharmonic scale. A.

Angerer, Gottfried (in Württemberg, 1851-1909, Zurich). Conductor of men's choruses at Frankfurt, Mannheim and finally Zurich, where he was head of the Musical Academy. Wrote many ballads for men's voices.

Anglebert, Jean Baptiste Henri d' (?1628-1691). 17th C. G.

Animuccia, Giovanni (?1500-1571). 16th C. G.

Animuccia, Paolo (? -1563). 16th C. G.

Anna Amalia (Berlin, 1723-1787, do.). Prussian Princess, sister of Frederick the Great, pupil of Kirnberger, an able clavierist and contrapuntist. Wrote the cantata Der Tod Jesu. G.

Anniabale, Il Padovano (1527-1575). 16th C. G.

Anrooij, Peter van (Zalt-Bommel, 1879). Dutch violinist, pupil of Wagenaar, Beerman and Kes, from 1905 director at Groningen (Ph.D. of the University), then at Arnheim and since 1917 at The Hague. Has written the orchestral rhapsodie Piet Hein.

Ansani, Giovanni (late 18th C.). Able Italian operatic tenor, with a voice both powerful and sweet, singing at Copenhagen in 1770, in 1782 in London, in 1784 at Florence and then teaching in Naples. Wrote an opera (1791). G.

Anschütz, Karl (Coblentz, 1815-1870, New York). Rhenish teacher and conductor, pupil of Frdr. Schneider. In 1844 he became head of the music-school in Coblentz founded by his father, Joh. Andreas A., in 1808, from 1848 was concert-conductor in London, and from 1857 led operas in New York for Strakosch and Ullmann, in 1860-62 also directed the Arion Society and in 1862 made a significant effort to establish German opera. A.

Ansermet, Ernest (Vevey, 1883). Swiss conductor, pupil of Denéréaz, Gédalge, Barblan and Bloch, from 1912 conductor at the Montreux Kursaal, in 1915-18 Stavenhagen's successor in the Subscription Concerts in Geneva and in 1918 founder there of the Orchestre de la Suisse-Romande. Since 1915 he has also toured as conductor with Diaghilev's Russian Ballet troupe (Paris, London, Italy, Spain and the Americas). Has written the symphonic poem Feuilles au Printemps and many smaller pieces.

Ansorger, Konrad Eduard Reinhold (n. Liebau, 1862). Silesian pianist from 1882, pupil of Liszt, becoming widely known in both Europe and America (1894) and in 1898-1903 teaching at the Klindworth Conservatory in Berlin. Has written 2 string-quartets and a sextet, 3 piano-sonatas and other pieces, a Requiem, etc.

Ansorger, Max (Striegau, 1862). Silesian organist, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, from 1887 organist at Stralsund, as well as choral director, and since 1891 at Breslau, mostly at the Bernardikirche, gaining the title of professor in 1919. Has written motets, choruses and songs.

Antegnati, Costanzo (1557-1620?). 16th C. G.

Antier, Maria (Lyons, ?1687-1747, Paris). French operatic singer, from 1712 in high repute at the Paris Opéra.

Antipov, Constantin Athanasevitch (b. 1859). Russian composer of many fine piano-pieces and an orchestral Allegro Symphonique.

Anton, F. Max (n. Eisleben, 1877). Saxon teacher, pupil of Tietz, Stavenhagen and Kwast, now at the Detmold Conservatory. Has written 3 symphonic odes and other orchestral pieces, a piano-concerto, dances and songs.

Anton, Karl (Worms, 1887). Hessian clergyman, highly educated at Heidelberg, Griefswald and Halle Universities (Ph.D. 1912), from 1906 holding church-positions at Weinheim, Baden-Baden and (from 1917) Mannheim. He has made significant efforts to enrich the services of the Reformed Church by precept and example, both musically and otherwise, and since 1919 has taught music-history (and other topics) in the Mannheim Hochschule. Author of Beiträge zur Biographie Loewes, 1912, Luther u. die Musik, 1918, Angewandte Liturgik, 1919, and numerous articles in periodicals.

Antonii, Pietro degli (?1645-1720?). 17th C.

Apel, Johann August (Leipzig, 1771-1816, do.). A Saxon lawyer and civil official who opposed Gottfried Hermann in articles on meter in the Allgem. Musikal. Zeitung (1807-08) and also published Metrik, 2 vols. 1814-16. From his collection of ghost-stories (1810-14) came the plot of Weber's Der Freischütz.

Apell, Johann David von (Kassel, 1754-1833, do.). Manager of the Kassel theater and also choral conductor. Wrote 4 operas, 3 symphonies, 3 quartets, etc., and a Galerie of famous musicians.

Apiarius, Mathias. 16th C.

Appel, Karl (Dessau, 1812-1895, do.). Saxon violinist, pupil of Frdr. Schneider, long ducal concertmaster at Dessau (till 1880). Wrote an opera (1840), violin-pieces and humorous men's part-songs.

Appenzeller, Benedictus. 16th C.

Appunn, Georg August Ignaz (1816–1885), and his son, Anton (1839–1900), were noted acousticians at Hanau (Kassel), making useful investigations of overtones and developing a just-intonation harmonium with 53 keys to the octave.

Aprile, Giuseppe (in Apulia, 1738–1814, do.). Famous Italian alto, pupil of Avos at Naples, where, after much success on Italian and German stages, he was teacher (many noted pupils, like Cimarosa and Garcia). His various Solfeggi have been often reprinted. Also wrote songs and duets. G.

Arthrop, William Foster (Boston, 1848–1913, Vevey). Eminent American critic, active in Boston from 1872, from 1881 on the Transcript, and from 1903 living in Switzerland. He taught music-history at Boston University and often lectured elsewhere. In 1892–1901 he edited program-books for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was joint-editor with Champlin of a Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians, 3 vols. 1888–90, besides writing Musicians and Music-Lovers, 1894, By the Way, 2 vols. 1898, The Opera Past and Present, 1901, and several translations. A.

Aptommas, John (1826–?) and Thomas (1829–?), brothers. Noted English harpists, long active in London, the younger also living for a time in New York (1851–56). They wrote a Hist. of the Harp, 1859, and many harp-pieces.

Ara, Ugo (Venice, 1876). Italian violinist and (from 1902) violist, pupil of Tirindelli, Thomson and Fuchs. In 1903–17 he was violist in the Flonzaley Quartet, resigning to enter the Italian army. A.

Araja, Francesco (Naples, 1700–1767?, Bologna). Italian opera-composer from 1729, with 22 works, many of them written for Petrograd, where he was director of Italian opera in 1735–59. His La Clemenza di Tito, 1751, was the first opera in Russian. He also wrote church-music and a Christmas oratorio. G.

Arauxo [Araujo], Francisco Corrêa de (?1581–1663). 17th C.

Arbeau, Toinot Jean [Tabourot] (1519–1595?). 16th C. G.

Arbós, Enrique Fernández (Madrid, 1863). Spanish violinist, pupil of Monasterio, Vieuxtemps, Joachim and Gevaert, in 1883 concert-master of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and in 1889 of the Glasgow Symphony Orchestra, with great success in extensive tours. He has taught at the Hamburg Conservatory, at the Madrid Conservatory and since 1890 at the Royal College of Music, London, with frequent service as conductor in England, Spain and Russia. In the first rank both as virtuoso and as teacher. Has written many violin-pieces, 3 piano-trios, an orchestral suite and the comic opera El Centro de la Tierra, 1895. G.

Arcadelt, Jacob (?1514–after 1557). 16th C. G.

Archambeau, Ivan d' (n. Liège, 1879). Fine Belgian 'cellist, pupil of his father, Massau and Jacobs, from 1903 member of the Flonzaley Quartet. A.

Archangelsky, Alexander Andreievitch (n. Penza, 1846). Russian director of choirs from 1862, organizing a chorus in 1880 for tours throughout Europe. He began the use of women's voices in such choirs. Has written 3 masses and many a cappella works.

Archer, Frederick (Oxford, 1838–1901, Pittsburgh). Able English organist, trained in London and Leipzig, at first organist at Merton College, Oxford, and from 1873 at the Alexandra Palace, London, besides leading a chorus in Glasgow in 1878–80. From 1881 he was organist in Brooklyn and New York, from 1885 founder and editor of The Keynote and from 1887 conductor of a Boston oratorio society. From 1895 he was organist at the new Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh, also directing the Symphony Orchestra there in 1896–98 and serving as church-organist. Wrote a cantata, many organ- and piano-pieces and a text-book on the organ. G, A.

Arditi, Luigi (Crescentino, 1822–1903, n. Brighton). Italian pianist, conductor and composer, trained at Milan, beginning opera-directing in 1843 in Italy and at Havana, whence from 1847 he visited New York at intervals till 1856. After two years at Constantinople, from 1858 he worked in England, but with tours in Germany, Austria and Russia till 1895. Wrote 3 operas with moderate success, many songs and My Reminiscences, 1896. G, A.

Arditi, Michele (Naples, 1745–1838, do.). Italian archæologist, director of the Naples Museum and also composer of an opera and many vocal and instrumental works.

Arend, Max (Deutz, 1873). Rhenish lawyer, educated at Leipzig and also pupil of Riemann, from 1907 living at Dresden. Has written on the music of Gluck (from 1914) and formed a Gluck Society (1913).

Arens, Franz Xaver (Neef, 1856). Rhenish conductor, educated in Milwaukee and in Germany. After teaching at Buffalo, in 1885–88 he led an orchestra and chorus in Cleveland and directed a music-school in Indianapolis. In 1890–92 he gave concerts of American music in Vienna and Germany, returning to New York in 1896. Since 1900 he has been active there in establishing useful series of 'people's' concerts. Has written an orchestral fantasia, choral works and songs. A.

Arensky, Anton Stepanovitch (Novgorod, 1861–1906, Finland). Gifted Russian lyrical composer, pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov, from 1883 teaching at the Moscow Conservatory and in 1895–1901 directing the Imperial Choir at Petrograd. His works include the operas A Dream on the Volga, 1892, Raphael, 1894, and Nal and Damajanti, 1899, the ballet Nuit d'Égypte, 1900, music for Pushkin's Fountain of Bakhchissarai, the ballades The Wolves and The Diver, a Coronation Cantata, symphonies in B min. and A, piano- and violin-concertos, 4 suites, a piano-quintet and trio, 2 string-quartets, and a large number of poetic piano-pieces, songs, etc. He also published text-books in harmony and form. G, A.

Aria, Cesare (Bologna, 1820–1894, do.). Italian teacher and church-composer, from 1840 theater-conductor at Bologna and from 1850 head of the Accademia there, but also taught in France and England.

Ariani, Adriano (Rome, 1877). Italian conductor and composer, besides precocious pianist, pupil of Ugolini and Sgambati, now in New York. Has written 2 symphonies, a suite, a mass and the oratorio St. Francis. A.

Aribo Scholasticus (d. 1078?). 11th C.

Arienzo, Nicola d' (Naples, 1842). Influential Italian teacher, composer and author, pupil of Fioravanti and Mercadante, since 1877 at the Naples Conservatory (director from 1879). Has written the operas Monzù Gnazio, 1860, I Due Mariti, 1866, Le Rose, 1868, Il Cacciatore delle Alpi, 1869, Il Cuoco, 1873, I Viaggi, 1875, La Figlia del Diavolo, 1879, I Tre Coscritti, 1880, and La Fiera, 1887, the oratorio Il Cristo sulla Croce, 2 symphonies, 2 violin-concertos, 2 'cello-concertos, a canonic piano-sonata and other pieces, a Stabat Mater, a Miserere and other choral works. Author of various historical essays, as on Gesualdo (1891), the opera buffa (1887), melodrama in the 18th century (1900), music in Naples (1900) and the modern opera (1902), besides 2 theoretical manuals (1879, '99), in the first advocating the use of pure intonation and also a mode of the minor second. He was the teacher of Van Westerhout and Leoncavallo.

Ariosti, Attilio (Bologna, 1666–1740?, Spain?). Noted Italian composer, originally a monk, from 1695 in court-service at Mantua and Florence, from 1697 musician to Queen Sophie Charlotte at Berlin, from 1703 to the Duke of Anjou and the Emperor Joseph I (till 1711), in 1715–16 and 1720–27 was in London, associated with Bononcini (in rivalry with Handel), then returning to Bologna. Wrote 25 operas (1686–1727), several oratorios, a Passion, cantatas, divertimenti for the violin and studies for the viole d'amour. See Ebert, Ariosti in Berlin, 1905. G.

Ark, Karl van (1842–1902, Petrograd). Pupil of Leschetizky, from 1862 teacher of piano at the Petrograd Conservatory and in 1878 Leschetizky's successor as professor. Published a good method.

Arkwright, Godfrey Edward Pellew (b. 1864). English editor of works by Purcell (Purcell Soc. 1889–1902), The Old English Edition, 25 vols. 1889–1902 (works in 17–18th cents.), and The Musical Antiquary, 1909–13.

Arlberg, Georg Ephraim Frits (Leksand, 1830–1896, Christiania). Swedish operatic baritone, from 1858 at the Stockholm Opera, in 1874–77 at Christiania, then variously in Russia, Italy, Paris and London, and from 1884 teaching at Copenhagen. Wrote songs and a vocal method and translated opera-texts.

Armbrust, Karl F. (Hamburg, 1849–1896, Hanover). Able organist, pupil and son-in-law of Faiszt, from 1869 his father's successor at the Petrikerche in Hamburg and critic for the Fremdenblatt.

Armbruster, Karl (Andernach, 1846). Rhinish pianist and conductor, devoted to developing interest in Wagner in England through lecture-recitals, assisting Richter in concert-series in 1882–84 and conducting operas at various theaters in London. In 1884–94 he directed performances at Bayreuth. In 1901–13 he was musical adviser for the London County Council.

Armes, Philip (Norwich, 1836–1908, Durham). English organist, in boyhood chorister at Norwich and Rochester Cathedrals, pupil of J. L. Hopkins at the latter and his assistant to 1856, from 1861 at Chichester Cathedral and from 1862 at Durham. From 1890 he was also examiner for Durham University and from 1897 professor, besides various similar duties elsewhere. Mus. D. of Oxford in 1864 and of Durham in 1874. Wrote the oratorios Hesekiah, 1877, St. John, 1881, and St. Barnabas, 1891, several services, anthems and the prize-madrigal Victoria, 1897. G.

Armingaud, Jules (Bayonne, 1820–1900, Paris). Excellent French violinist, long in the Opéra orchestra at Paris. At 16 he organized a Quartet that became famous and toured with it in Germany, later adding wind-parts under the name Société Classique. He introduced many of Beethoven's quartets in Paris. G.

Armsheimer, Ivan Ivanovitch (Petrograd, 1860). Russian composer of the operas Sous la Feuillée, Jägerliv, and Der Oberförster, 3 ballets, 2 cantatas, a flute-suite, violin- and 'cello-pieces, many choral works and more than 150 songs. He has also written an extended work on instrumentation.

Arnaud, François (n. Carpentras, 1721–1784, Paris). French essayist on music (Works, 3 vols. 1808), a supporter of Gluck's theories of opera. Memoir by De Bricqueville, 1833.

Arne, Michael (London, 1741–1786, do.), son of the following. Facile English composer of ballad-operas from 1763, notably Cymon, 1767, and some songs. In 1771–72 he visited Germany, conducting works of Handel at Hamburg (The Messiah first time in Germany, Apr. 15, 1772) and Lübeck. From 1779 he was theater-conductor in Dublin and from 1784 led oratorios in London. He dabbled much in chemistry and was often absorbed in searching for 'the philosopher's stone.' G.

Arne, Thomas Augustine (London, 1710–1778, do.). Important English composer of ballad-operas and songs, largely self-taught while a law-student. From 1733 his early success was aided by his sister (later the famous actress Mrs. Cibber) and from 1736 by his wife (née Cecilia Young). From 1738 he was composer for Drury Lane, except in 1742–44, when he gave concerts in Dublin, returning to be conductor at Drury Lane and composer for the Vauxhall Gardens. Besides his many masques, pastorals and lighter works, he wrote 2 operas in the Italian style, Artaxerxes, 1762, which won distinct success, and Olympiade, 1764, the oratorios Abel, 1744, and Judith, 1764 (using women's voices in the choruses for the first time), much incidental music for Shakespeare's plays and other dramas, many songs, glees and catches, besides works for orchestra, violin, harpsichord and organ. Mus.D. of Oxford in 1759. Memoir and list of works in Musical Times, 1901 (also see Eitner). G.

Arneiro, José Augusto Ferreira Veiga, Viscount d' (Macao, China, 1838–1903, San Remo). Eminent Portuguese composer (partly Swedish by descent), pupil at Lisbon of Botelho, Schira and Soares. Best known by his Te Deum (unfortunately often called in France Symphonie-Cantate), 1871, though noted also for the ballet Ginn, 1866, and the operas L'Elisire di Giovinezza, 1876, and La Derelitta, 1885.

Arnheim, Amalie (Berlin, 1863–1917, do.). Able student of music-history, writing articles on 17th-century topics (French secular songs, music at Bremen, Thomas Selle, etc.).

Arnold, Georg. 17th C.

Arnold, George Benjamin (Petworth, 1832–1902, Winchester). English organist, pupil of S. S. Wesley, from 1852 at St. Columba's College, from 1855 at Torquay, from 1859 at New College, Oxford, and from 1865 at Winchester Cathedral. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1860. Wrote the oratorio Ahab, 1863, cantatas, services, anthems, 2 piano-sonatas, part-songs and songs.

Arnold, Johann Gottfried (n. Oehringen, 1773–1806, Frankfort). Württemberg 'cellist, pupil of Romberg and Willmann, known at first through tours in Germany and Switzerland, and from 1797 in the theater-orchestra at Frankfort. Wrote 5 'cello-concertos, 'cello-variations, a Symphonia Concertante for 2 flutes and orchestra. G.

Arnold, Karl (n. Mergentheim, 1794–1873, Christiania, Norway). Württemberg pianist, trained at Frankfort, working from 1819 at Petrograd, from 1824 at Berlin, from 1835 at Münster and from 1849 at Christiania, where he was organist and conductor of the Philharmonic Society. Wrote many works for piano, a piano-sextet and the opera Irene, 1832.

Arnold, Richard (Eilenburg, 1845–1918, New York). Excellent Prussian violinist, pupil of David, from 1869 prominent in New York under Thomas, from 1877 in the Philharmonic Society, becoming concertmaster in 1880, in 1878–91 leader of the Philharmonic Club and from 1897 organizer of his own Sextet. A.

Arnold, Samuel (London, 1740–1802, do.). Distinguished English organist and composer, pupil of Gates and Nares in the Chapel Royal, of which he became organist in 1783. In 1789–92 he conducted the Academy of Ancient Music and from 1793 was organist at Westminster Abbey. Wrote about 50 stage-works, including many popular ballad-operas (from 1765), the oratorios The Cure of Saul, 1767, Abimelech, 1768, The Resurrection, 1773, The Prodigal Son, 1777, and Elijah, 1795, and considerable church-music. Also edited a monumental collection of Cathedral Music, 4 vols. 1790 (supplementing Boyce), and an edition of Handel's works, 36 vols. from 1786, besides lesser works. He was active in promoting one or two musical societies, and was Mus.D. of Oxford from 1773. G.

Arnold, Yourij von (Petrograd, 1811–1898, Crimea). Russian critic and composer, in 1863–70 writing for the Neue Zeitschrift at Leipzig, in 1870–94 head of his own school at Moscow and lecturer at the University, and from 1894 vocal teacher in Petrograd. Wrote an opera, an operetta, a prize-cantata and 2 overtures, but is best known for monographs on Russian church-music (from 1878) and his Mémoires, 3 vols. 1892.

Arnold-Strothotte, Maurice (St. Louis, 1865). American violinist, conductor and composer, trained at Cincinnati, Berlin, Cologne and Breslau, active in St. Louis and New York as writer of various characteristic music and director of light opera. Has written a symphony, an overture, dances and marches for orchestra, a violin-sonata, the cantata The Wild Chase, 2 comic operas, a grand opera, etc. A.

Arnold von Bruck (?1480–1545). 16th C. G (Bruck).

Arnoldson, Oskar (Stockholm, 1839–1881, Karlsbad). Swedish lyric tenor, in 1858–81 a favorite at the Stockholm Opera.

Arnoldson, Sigrid (Stockholm, 1864), daughter of the above. Gifted Swedish soprano, pupil of Strakosch and Désirée Artôt, appearing in 1886 at Moscow and becoming noted throughout Europe and in America (1894) in Italian and French rôles. She is the wife of Alfred Fischhof.

Arnould, Madeleine Sophie (Paris, 1744–1802, do.). In 1757–78 the leading soprano at the Paris Opéra. She sang at the première of Gluck's Iphigénie en Aulide (1774). Examples of her wit are found in her Arnouldiana. Memoirs by Goncourt, 1877, and Douglas, 1898. G.

Aron (?–1052). 11th C.

Aron, Pietro (?1490–1545). 16th C. G.

Arpi, Oskar (Börstl, 1824–1890, Upsala). In 1852–71 conductor of the Swedish Union of Student Singers, with which he made notable tours throughout Europe (Paris Exposition, 1867).

Arregni, Vicente (Madrid, 1871). Spanish composer, trained at the Madrid Conservatory, with further study in Paris and Rome. Has written several operas, including Yolanda, 1911, the oratorio San Francisco, the choral work El Lobo Ciego, a symphony, the symphonic poems Historia de una Madre (prize, 1910) and Plegaria, a string-quartet, a piano-sonata, church-music, etc. He is critic for the Madrid El Debate.

Arresti, Giulio Cesare (?1630–1695). 17th C.

Arriaga y Balzola, Juan Crisóstomo Jacobo Antonio de (n. Bilbao, 1806–1826, Marseilles). Precocious Spanish violinist, pupil of the Paris Conservatory. Wrote a symphony, an overture, 3 string-quartets, etc. G.

Arrieta y Corera, Pascual Juan Emilio (Puente la Reina, 1823–1894, Madrid). Spanish composer, pupil of Vaccai at Milan, from 1857 teacher at the Madrid Conservatory and from 1868 director. Wrote about 50 highly successful zarzuelas and operas (from 1846), notably Isabel la Católica, 1850.

Arrigoni, Giovanni Giacomo. 17th C.

Artaria. A famous music-publishing business, originally art-dealers in Mayence and Vienna, from 1776, under the lead of Giovanni Artaria, becoming the pioneer music-printing establishment of Vienna, while his son Dominik from 1793 developed the Mayence business, soon transferring it to Frankfort. Numerous members of the family have had part in the firm at different times. The house became noted through the publication of a long list of works by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. G.

Arteaga, Stefano (Madrid, 1730-1799, Paris). Spanish Jesuit, from 1773 in Italy and associated with Martini, later in Rome and Paris. Wrote an important history of Italian opera (1783, revised 1785 in 3 vols.). G.

Artôt, Alexandre Joseph Montagney (Brussels, 1815-1845, n. Paris), son of Maurice below. Fine French violinist, pupil of his father, Snel and the Kreutzers, widely known through tours (in America in 1843). Wrote a violin-concerto, fantasies, etc., a piano-quintet, string-quartets, etc. He is called the best of the Rubini line of players. G.

Artôt, Jean Désiré Montagney (Paris, 1803-1887, Brussels), also son of Maurice. French hornist, pupil of his father, succeeding him at the Monnaie, Brussels, in 1829 and from 1843 professor in the Conservatory and in 1849-73 also in the Royal Orchestra. Wrote various horn-pieces, including a quartet.

Artôt, Marguérite Joséphine Désirée Montagney (Paris, 1835-1907, Berlin), daughter of Jean above. Celebrated operatic soprano, pupil of Mme. Viardot-Garcia, from 1857 singing throughout Europe in Italian and some German rôles, from 1889 living in Paris. In 1869 she married the Spanish baritone Padilla y Ramos, with whom she often appeared. G.

Artôt, Maurice Montagney (n. Dijon, 1772-1829, Brussels). Military bandmaster in the Revolution and later hornist at the Monnaie, Brussels, and conductor at the Béguinage. G.

Artusi, Giovanni Maria (?1545-1613). 16th C. G.

Asantchevsky, Michael Pavlovitch von (Moscow, 1838-1881, do.). Russian composer, trained at Leipzig and by Liszt, in 1871-76 director of the Petrograd Conservatory, to which he gave his extraordinary library (the nucleus of which came from Anders). Wrote considerable chamber-music, etc. G.

Aschenbrenner, Christian Heinrich (1654-1732). 17th C. G.

Ashley, John (?1740-1805, London). English bassoonist, in 1784 Bates' assistant in directing the Handel Commemoration, and from 1795 manager of the Lenten 'oratorios' at Covent Garden (at which Mozart's Requiem and Haydn's Creation were first given in England). He and his four sons often gave musical 'festivals' at various English towns. They were clever instrumentalists. G.

Ashton, Algernon Bennet Langton (Durham, 1859). English pianist and prolific composer, trained at Leipzig and Frankfort (Helbig prize in 1879). From 1885 he was piano-teacher at the Royal College of Music, London, and since 1913 has been at the London and Trinity Colleges, besides many tours in England and on the Continent. Has written 5 symphonies, 3 overtures, a wind-quintet, 2 piano-quintets, 2 string-quartets, 2 piano-quartets, 3 piano-trios, concertos for piano and violin, a 2-piano suite, sonatas for violin, viola, 'cello and piano, a cantata, part-songs, many songs, etc., besides two series of critiques entitled Truth, Wit and Wisdom, 1904, '08. G.

Ashton, Joseph Nickerson (Salem, Mass. 1868). American organist and teacher, in 1895-1904 at Brown University, and since 1907 at Abbott Academy, Andover, in 1908-12 also at Phillips Academy there. Since 1905 he has been organist in Brookline. Has edited a hymnal for schools (1913). A.

Asioli, Bonifacio (Correggio, 1769-1832, do.). Precocious and abundant Italian composer, producing large works when but 8 years old. In 1808-14 he taught at the new Milan Conservatory. At different times he lived at Turin, Venice and Paris. Wrote 7 operas, the oratorio Giacobbo, much sacred music of every kind and an extensive list of instrumental works, besides several text-books in harmony, singing and instruments (from 1800), of which the chief was Il Maestro di Composizione, 1836. Memoir by Coli, 1834. G.

Asola, Giovanni Matteo (?1560-1609). 16th C. G.

Aspa, Mario (Messina, 1799-1868, do.). Sicilian composer, pupil of Zingarelli. Wrote over 40 operas (from 1830) for Naples, including I Due Forzati, c. 1834, Un Travestimento, 1846, Il Muratore di Napoli, 1850, Piero di Calais, 1872, etc.

Asplmayer, Franz (?1721-1786, Vienna). Austrian composer who early followed the progressive methods of Stamitz and the Mannheim circle. Wrote 12 quartets, 6 trios and other chamber-music, besides 2 singspiele and ballet-music.

Assmayer, Ignaz (Salzburg, 1790-1862, Vienna). Austrian organist, pupil of M. Haydn and Eybler, in 1808-15 organist at Salzburg, from 1825 court-organist at Vienna and from 1835 deputy or second court-director. Wrote the oratorios Saul und David, Sauls Tod and Das Gelübde, 15 masses and other church-music, symphonies, overtures and other secular works. G.

Astaritta, Gennaro (Naples, ?1749-1803). Italian composer of about 35 operas (1765-1793), given in Italy and Germany, including Circe ed Ulisse, 1787. He was specially successful in comic works.

Aston, Hugh (?-1522). 16th C. G.

Astorga, Emanuele Gioachino Cesare Rincón, Barone d' (Augusta, 1680–1757, Madrid). Sicilian (Spanish) nobleman, after 1718 in the service of the King of Spain. He was highly educated and an expert amateur musician. Wrote the pastoral opera Dafne, 1709, a famous Stabat Mater, 1752 (London), many cantate da camera and other vocal works. The traditional story of his life has proved fictitious (see monograph by Hans Volkmann, 2 vols., 1911–19). G.

Atherton, Percy Lee (Boston, 1871). American composer, trained at Harvard, Munich, Berlin, etc. Has written 3 comic operas, a symphonic poem, 2 violin-sonatas, suites for violin and for flute, piano-pieces, many songs and choruses. A.

Atkins, Ivor Algernon (Cardiff, 1869). Welsh organist, pupil and assistant of Sinclair at Truro and Hereford Cathedrals, from 1893 organist at Ludlow and from 1897 at Worcester Cathedral, where he has also been at times conductor of the Three Choir Festivals. Has written the cantata A Hymn of Faith, 1905, and considerable church-music. G.

Attaignant, Pierre. 16th C. G.

Attenhofer, Karl (Wettingen, 1837–1914, Zurich). Swiss choral conductor and composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1866 at Zurich, becoming famous for choral writing for men's voices, as in the cantatas Hegelingsfahrt, 1890, Frühlingsfeier and Der deutsche Michel and a Liederbuch für Männergesang, 1882 (also for women's voices), various songs (some for children), etc.

Atterberg, Kurt M. (Gothenburg, 1887). Gifted Swedish composer, trained at the Stockholm Conservatory, the Berlin Hochschule and by Schillings. Has written symphonies in B-flat min. and F, a symphonic poem, an overture, a violin-concerto, a string-quartet, a ballet, music for Diding's Jefla, etc.

Attrup, Karl (Copenhagen, 1848–1892, do.). Danish organist, pupil of Gade, from 1869 teaching in the Copenhagen Conservatory and organist at leading churches.

Attwood, Thomas (London, 1765–1838, do.). Distinguished English organist and composer, pupil of Nares and Mozart and at Naples of Cinque and Latilla, from 1796 organist at St. Paul's and composer to the Chapel Royal and from 1836 its organist, besides being one of the first teachers at the Royal Academy of Music. He was (from 1829) an intimate friend of Mendelssohn. Wrote about 20 ballad-operas (1792–1807), considerable church-music and some songs and piano-pieces. G.

Auber, Daniel François Esprit (Caen, 1782–1871, Paris). Eminent French operatic composer, pupil of Cherubini, from 1842 his successor as director of the Conservatory, and from 1857 maître de chapelle to Napoleon III. From 1835 he was member of the Académie. His greatest success was in opéra comique, but he struck a higher note with Masaniello, 1828, which was one of the pioneer French grand operas. From 1820 he had the constant assistance of the able librettist Scribe. His strength lay in varied and sparkling melody and brilliant orchestration. In one work he collaborated with Hérold (1823) and in one with Boieldieu (1824), besides once with several others (1831). His total list includes

Julie, 1811, Jean de Convin, 1812, Le Séjour Militaire, 1813, Le Testament, 1819, La Bergère Châtelaine, 1820, Emma, 1821, Leicester, 1822, La Neige, 1823, Vendôme en Espagne (with Hérold), 1823, Les Trois Genres (with Boieldieu), 1824, Le Concert à la Cour, 1824, Léocadie, 1824, Le Maçon, 1825, Le Timide, 1826, Fiorilla, 1826, Masaniello, 1828, La Fiancée, 1829, Fra Diavolo, 1830, Le Dieu et la Bayadère, 1830, La Marquise de Brinvilliers, 1831, Le Philtre, 1831, Le Serment, 1832, Gustave III, 1833, Lestocq, 1834, Le Cheval de Bronze, 1835, Action, 1836, Les Chaperons Blancs, 1836, L'Ambassadrice, 1836, Le Domino Noir, 1837, Le Lac des Fées, 1839, Zanetta, 1840, Les Diamants de la Couronne, 1841, Carlo Broschi, 1842, Le Duc d'Orlone, 1842, Le Part du Diable, 1843, La Sirène, 1844, La Barcarolle, 1845, Haydée, 1847, L'Enfant Prodigue, 1850, Zerline, 1851, Marco Spada, 1852, Jenny Bell, 1855, Manon Lescart, 1856, Magenta, 1859, La Circassienne, 1861, La Fiancée du Roi des Garbes, 1864, Le Premier Jour de Bonheur, 1868, Rêves d'Amour, 1869. (In 1857 Le Cheval de Bronze and Marco Spada were expanded into grand ballets.)

Memoirs by Jouvin, 1864, Mirecourt, 1867, Pougin, 1873, Kohut, 1895, and Malherbe, 1911. G.

Aubert, Jacques (1678–1753, Paris). Eminent French violinist, from 1727 head of the court-band, the orchestra at the Opéra and the Concerts Spirituels at Paris, and from 1748 also director for the Duc de Bourbon. Wrote much graceful violin-music, ensemble-pieces, the opera La Reine de Pérès, 1725, and 6 ballets. He was succeeded at the Opéra and the Concerts by his son Louis (1720–after 1779), who was active till 1771. G.

Aubéry du Bouleuy, Prudent Louis (Verneuil, 1796–1870, do.). French guitarist, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, writing much for ensemble with guitar and flute, and author of a method for his instrument. Memoir by J. de l'Avre, 1896.

Aubry, Pierre (Paris, 1874–1910, Dieppe). Able French musicologist, specializing in the history of French music. His writings include Huits Chants Héroïques, 1896, Mélanges de Musicologie Critique, 4 vols. 1900–1903, Essais de Musicologie Comparée, 2 vols. 1903–5, Les Caractères de Danse (18th C.), 1905, La Musique en Normandie (13th C.), 1906, Les Plus Anciens Textes de Musique Instrumentale au Moyen-Age, 1907, several other books on the 13th C. (1907–09), and Trouvères et Troubadours, 1909 (in English, 1914), besides articles in the Courrier Musical (1903–08). His researches and interpretations have thrown much new light on the medieval development.

Audran, Edmond (Lyons, 1842–1901, n. Paris), son of the following. French composer, mostly of light opera, from 1862, living at Paris from 1877. Among about 40 works the most popular were La Fiancée des Verts-Poteaux, 1887, Olivette, 1895, Sainte-Freya, 1892, La Mascotte, 1880, Miss Helyett, 1890, Madame Suzette, 1893,

Monsieur Lohengrin, 1896, with the larger Photis, 1896, La Duchesse de Ferrare, 1895, and La Poupée, 1896. His first operetta was L'Ours et le Pacha, 1862. G.

Audran, Marius Pierre (Aix, 1816–1887, Marseilles). French operatic tenor from about 1840, becoming a leading singer at the Opéra Comique, Paris, and at Conservatory concerts. In 1852–61 he sang at various places and from 1863 was director of the Marseilles Conservatory.

Audsley, George Ashdown (Elgin, 1838). Eminent Scottish architect from 1856, mostly in Liverpool, but from 1892 in New York. Since 1865 he has been interested in problems of organ-making, lecturing and writing articles of importance. Has published The Art of Organ-Building, 2 vols. 1905, The Organ of the 20th Century, 1919, and a treatise on Organ Stops, 1920, all marked by fullness of detail and acute critical observation. He has also written extensively on architecture and allied arts. A.

Auer, Leopold (Veszprém, 1845). Eminent Hungarian violinist, trained at Pest and Vienna and under Joachim, from 1868 in imperial service at Petrograd and professor in the Conservatory, in 1887–92 also directing the Imperial Musical Society, besides teaching numerous famous pupils (Elman, Zimbalist, Heifetz, etc.). Since 1918 he has worked in New York, teaching and editing works for violin. Author of Violin-Playing as I Teach It, 1921. G, A.

Auerbach, Nannette, née Falk (Danzig, ?1838). Able German pianist, from 1867 active in Baltimore as soloist and teacher, and in 1871–81 teaching at the Peabody Conservatory, then returning to Europe. A.

Augener & Co. A firm of music-publishers in London, founded in 1853 by Georg Augener and steadily developed into importance. Besides series of the classics and of recent works, they have since 1871 issued The Musical Record (monthly), edited till 1874 by Prout and later by Shedlock. G.

Aulin, Tor (Stockholm, 1866–1914, do.). Distinguished Swedish violinist, pupil of Sauret and Ph. Scharwenka. In 1887 he organized the Aulin Quartet, which took high rank in Scandinavia, Russia and Germany, in 1889–1902 was concertmaster at the Royal Opera, Stockholm, and from 1902 directed the Philharmonic Society there. Wrote the orchestral suite Meister Oluf, 3 violin-concertos and smaller works. He was regarded the best Scandinavian violinist since Ole Bull. G.

Auric, Georges (Lodève, 1899). French composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory and of d'Indy, writing the short comedy La Reine de Cœur, the ballet Les Noces de Camacho, a symphonic poem, a suite for octet, etc. He is prominent in the impressionistic circle.

Aus der Ohe, Adele (Hanover, 1864). German pianist, pupil of Kullak and Liszt, from 1884 widely known in Europe and America (1886) as a brilliant concert-player. Has written 2 piano-suites, études and pieces, with some songs.

Austin, Ernest (London, 1874). Self-taught English composer of ultra-modern tendency. Has written many 'music-poems' for piano or various chamber-ensembles, a piano-sonata, 2 piano-trios, several orchestral pieces, Love-Songs from Don Quixote (chorus, soli and orchestra), and many songs. G.

Austin, Frederick (London, 1872), brother of Ernest above. English organist, baritone and composer, pupil of Grimshawe at Liverpool. After service as organist and as theory-teacher at Liverpool, from 1902 (with study under Lunn) he became a favorite concert- and opera-singer. Has written the overture Richard III, the symphonic poem Isabella, the orchestral rhapsody Spring, a piano-trio, a Festival Prelude for strings and organ, organ- and piano-pieces and church-music. As singer he has been specially successful in Wagner's works. G.

Austin, John Turnell (n. Bedford, 1869). English organ-maker, working in America since 1889, at first at Detroit and since 1899 at Hartford, Conn. His 'universal wind-chest' and other patents have given him high standing. A.

Austin Organ Co., The, of Hartford, Conn., was founded in 1899 to make organs under the patents of J. T. and B. G. Austin, making specialties of the former's 'universal wind-chest' and standard console. They have become one of the largest organ-makers in the United States. A.

Auteri-Manzocchi, Salvatore (Palermo, 1845). Sicilian composer, pupil of Platania and Mabilelli, in 1889–1910 teacher at the Parma Conservatory. Has written the operas Dolores, 1875, Il Negriero, 1878, Stella, 1880, Il Conte di Gleichen, 1887, Graziella, 1894, and Severo Torelli, 1903.

Auvergne, Antoine d' (n. Clermont-Ferrand, 1713–1797, Lyons). French violinist and composer, from 1739 in Paris, joining the Opéra orchestra in 1742 (conductor in 1751–55) and becoming director in 1770–90. Wrote the ballet Les Amours de Tempé, 1752, the first opéra comique Les Troqueurs, 1753, establishing a new form, and 12 other stage-works. Monograph by De Paulin, 1911. G (Dauvergne).

Auxcousteaux, Arthur d' (?–1656). 17th C. G.

Averkamp, Anton (Willige Langerak, 1861). Dutch conductor and composer, pupil of De Lange, Kiel and Rheinberger. In 1890 he founded an a cappella chorus in Amsterdam which became famous for interpretations of old music. He has directed other important societies, is a knight of the Orange-Nassau Order, and has written many articles, besides the symphonic poem Elaine und Lancelot, a violin-sonata, the choral Decora Lux and Der versunkene Burg, choruses a cappella, songs and the opera Die Heidebloem (not yet given).

Avery, John (?–1808). English organ-maker from 1775, including instruments at Winchester Cathedral (1799), St. Margaret's, Westminster (1804), King's College, Cambridge (1804) and Carlisle Cathedral (1808). G.

Avery, Stanley R. (Yonkers, N. Y. 1879). American organist and composer, pupil of Heinrich, Macfarlane, MacDowell, Grunicke and Pfitzner, from 1896 organist at Yonkers and since 1910 at Minneapolis. Has written church-music and many songs, several operettas, scherzos for orchestra, organ and violin, etc. A.

Avison, Charles (Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1710-1770, do.). English organist (at Newcastle) and composer, pupil of Geminiani. Wrote numerous chamber-works, including 12 concertos for piano with strings, An Essay on Musical Expression, 1752, '53, '75, and edited Marcello's Psalms (with Garth), with biography. G.

Aylward, Theodore (1730-1801, London). English organist in London and from 1788 at St. George's, Windsor. From 1771 he was also professor at Gresham College. Mus. D. of Oxford Univ. in 1791. Wrote glees and some church-music. G.

Ayres, Frederic (Binghamton, N. Y. 1876). American composer, pupil of Kelley and Foote. Has written the overture From the Plains, a string-quartet, 2 piano-trios, a violin-sonata, piano-pieces, the song-cycle The Seconee Wolves and other songs. A.

Ayrton, Edmund (Ripon, 1734-1808, London). English church-musician, pupil of Nares, from 1754 organist in Southwell, from 1764 at the Chapel Royal, becoming in 1783 master (succeeding Nares), besides some functions at St. Paul's and Westminster. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1784 and of Oxford in 1788. His 'exercise' was an anthem that was sung at the thanksgiving service (July 28, 1784) at the end of the American Revolution. Wrote other anthems and 2 services. G.

Ayrton, William (London, 1777-1858, do.), son of the above. English critic and conductor, in 1813-26 on the staff of the Morning Chronicle and in 1837-51 on that of the Examiner, in 1813 a founder of the Philharmonic Society, from 1823 editor of the Harmonicon, also of Knight's Musical Library, 8 vols. 1834-7, and of Sacred Minstrelsy, 2 vols. 1835. He often conducted at the King's Theatre, as at the English premières of Don Giovanni (1817) and others of Mozart's operas. G.

Azevedo, Alexis Jacob (Bordeaux, 1813-1875, Paris). French critic, connected with La France Musicale, Le Siècle, La Presse and in 1859-70 L'Opinion Nationale, and writing memoirs of Rossini (1865) and Félicien David (1868), as well as pamphlets against Chevé's notation-system. He was an ardent Italianist in sympathy. G.

Azopardi, Francesco (late 18th C.). Italian contrapuntist, maestro at Malta, writing a treatise, Il Musico Prattico, 1760 (French translation, 1786). G.

Babbi, Christoph (Cesena, 1748-1814, Dresden). Italian violinist, in 1775-78 theater-conductor at Bologna and from 1780 court-concert-master at Dresden. Wrote symphonies, violin-concertos, quartets, etc.

Babbini, Matteo (Bologna, 1754-1816, do.). Celebrated Italian stage-tenor from 1780, singing throughout Europe and in 1792-1802 mainly in Italy. Elogio by Brighenti, 1822. G.

Babcock, Alpheus. American piano-maker, from 1810 in Boston and from 1829 in Philadelphia. His instruments became noted and won many prizes from 1824. In 1825 he was the first to make a solid metal plate to carry the strings, establishing a principle soon everywhere adopted. A (and see G. iii. 728).

Babell, William (?1690-1723, London). English organist and violinist who was the first to make clavier-arrangements of operatic airs, especially from Handel's works. He also adapted some chamber-music. G.

Baccusi, Ippolito (? -1609). 16th C. G.

Baccarc, Valentin (1507-1578). 16th C.

Bach Family, The. An extensive Thuringian clan whose predilection for music is traceable through eight generations, beginning with Hans Bach of Wechmar, near Gotha (b. about 1520). Their number and their frequent musical skill made the name proverbial in the 17th century, so that bands of town-musicians were often called 'the Bachs.' In the fourth generation, early in that century, four principal lines diverge, which in the 18th century were represented by more than thirty musicians of eminence, the greatest being Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750) of the sixth generation. He belonged to the second of the four lines and his first wife came from the third, so that the three eldest of his five gifted sons were Bach-descended through a double derivation. During the early 18th century the members of the various branches of the clan often observed the custom of an annual gathering, usually at Erfurt, Arnstadt or Meiningen, at which music formed the conspicuous focus of common interest.

For convenience of reference, a compact summary of the four divisions of the family is subjoined, starting in the fourth generation with the three sons of Hans 'der Spielmann' (d. 1626) and the son of his brother Lips (d. 1620).

I. Johann of Erfurt (1604-73) had three sons: Joh. Christian of Erfurt and Eisenach (1640-82), Joh. Egidius of Erfurt (1645-1717), and Joh. Nikolaus of Erfurt (1653-82). Of these, Christian had two sons: Joh. Jakob of Eisenach (1668-92) and Joh. Christoph of Gehren (1673-1727); and Egidius also had two: Joh. Bernhard of Eisenach (1676-1749) and Joh. Christoph of Erfurt (1685-1735-?). The son of Bernhard was Joh. Ernst of Weimar (1722-77). None of this line attained much artistic importance.

II. Christoph of Erfurt and Arnstadt (1613-61) had three sons: Georg Christoph of Schweinfurt (1642-97), Joh. Ambrosius of Eisenach (1645-95), and Joh. Christoph of Arnstadt (1645-93). From the first of these descended Joh. Valentin (1669-1720) and his sons Joh.

Lorenz (1695-1773) and Joh. Elias (1705-55)—these forming a Franconian off-shoot from the main Thuringian stock. Ambrosius had three sons: Joh. Christoph of Ohrdruf (1671-1721), Joh. Jakob of Stockholm (1682-1722) and the great Joh. Sebastian (1685-1750). Christoph and Sebastian were each followed by five sons, those of the former being all musicians, but none of much significance, and those of the latter being Wilhelm Friedemann of Halle (1710-84), Karl Philipp Emanuel of Berlin and Hamburg (1714-88), Joh. Gottfried Bernhard of Mühlhausen (1715-39), Joh. Christoph Friedrich of Bückeburg (1732-95) and Joh. Christian of Milan and London (1735-82), all but the third becoming distinguished and the fourth being followed by a son, Wilhelm Friedrich Ernst (1759-1846). It is this second line that sheds the greatest lustre on the family name.

III. Heinrich of Arnstadt (1615-92) had three sons: Joh. Christoph of Eisenach (1642-1703), Joh. Michael of Gehren (1648-94), and Joh. Günther of Arnstadt (1653-83). Of the four sons of Christoph, the most important is Joh. Nikolaus of Jena (1669-1753). Michael's daughter Maria Barbara (1684-1720) married her second cousin Sebastian and was the mother of his first three sons. This third line, though small, had eminent ability.

IV. The grandson of Lips (through Wendel, who was a farmer) was Jakob of Ruhla (1655-1718), whose sons were Joh. Ludwig of Meiningen (1677-1741), Nikolaus Ephraim of Gandersheim (d. 1760), who was more painter than active musician, and Georg Michael (1703-71), who was a school-teacher, followed by Ludwig's sons, both of Meiningen, Samuel Anton (1713-81) and Gottlieb Friedrich (1714-85), and by Georg's son Joh. Christian of Halle (1743-1814) and his son Joh. Philipp of Meiningen (d. 1846). This line reached its high point in Joh. Ludwig and his sons.

Nearly all of these leading members of the clan occupied official positions as town-musicians, cantors or organists, and many of them won reputation as composers. Most of them naturally emphasized sacred music, but were also interested in secular works, especially for instruments.

Their special geographical field extended about 100 miles east and west from Erfurt, but in the later 18th century some of them became conspicuous not only in northern Germany, but in Italy, England and Scandinavia. Through the works of the greatest of them their influence ultimately affected much of the whole course of music-history. This is the more remarkable in view of the fact that as a rule they were artistically unaggressive and unambitious in the ordinary sense.

Bach [Bak], Albert Bernhard (Gyula, 1844-1912, Edinburgh). Hungarian baritone, appearing in concert at Vienna from 1871, but, after further training in Italy, in opera from 1877, first at Milan and from 1879 at Pest. From 1886 he was teacher and oratorio-singer in Great Britain and Germany. He specialized in the songs and ballades of Loewe. Wrote Raphael, Mozart and the Renaissance, 1883, Sound, Light and Color, 1899, The Art-Ballad—Loewe and Schubert, 1890, '91, and edited Loewe's Ballads, 3 vols.

Bach, August Wilhelm (Berlin, 1796-1869, do.). Prussian organist, from 1822 teaching at the Inst. für Kirchenmusik, Berlin, and from 1832 (following Zelter) director there. Among his pupils was the boy Mendelssohn. From 1858 he had the title of professor. Wrote the oratorio Bonifacius, 1836, and the sacred drama Iphigenia in Delphi.

Bach, Christoph (1613-1661). 17th C. G.

Bach, Fritz (Paris, 1881). French organist and composer, pupil of d'Indy, Guilmant and Vienne, since 1913 active in Nyon. Has written a symphony, 2 string-quintets, 2 string-quartets, a violin-sonata, several choral works, etc.

Bach, Georg Christoph (1642-1697). 17th C. G.

Bach, Hans 'der Spielmann' (?1580-1626). 17th C. G.

Bach, Heinrich (1615-1692). 17th C. G.

Bach, Jakob (1655-1718). 17th C.

Bach, Johann (1604-1673). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Ambrosius (1645-1695). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Bernhard (Erfurt, 1676-1749), son of Egidius below. Organist at Erfurt, Magdeburg and (from 1703) Eisenach, succeeding the eminent Joh. Christoph, and also duet cembalist. Wrote excellent orchestral suites and chorale-variations. G.

Bach, Johann Bernhard (Ohdruf, 1700-1744, do.), nephew and for a time pupil of Joh. Sebastian. From 1721 organist at Ohdruf, succeeding his father, Joh. Christoph. G.

Bach, Johann Christian (1640-1682). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Christian (Leipzig, 1735-1782, London), Joh. Sebastian's youngest surviving son, trained from 1750 at Berlin by his brother Emanuel and in 1754-56 (as protégé of Count Litta of Milan) at Bologna by Martini, besides study at Naples in 1757. In 1760-62 he was cathedral-organist at Milan (having become a Catholic). From 1762 he lived in London as a favorite opera-composer, music-master to the royal family and teacher of many pupils besides, and from 1764 joined the gambist Abel in concert-series that were popular for nearly twenty years. In 1772 and '74 he visited Germany and in '78 was in Paris. In 1767 he married the singer Cecilia Grassi. His style was facile and graceful rather than profound. While in Italy he wrote considerable Catholic church-music, but his chief interest was in the opera. In England he added many instrumental works, in which he happily applied the new methods of the Mannheim circle. Wrote over 15 operas, including Catone in Utica, 1758, Orione, 1763, Zanaida, 1763, Adriano in Syria, 1765, and Carataco, 1767, the oratorio Gioas, 1770, cantatas, canzonets and arias, a large number of symphonies or overtures for small orchestra, clavier-concertos with or without other instruments, much chamber-music for various ensembles, and many sonatas and other pieces for harpsichord. See exhaustive article by Max Schwarz in I. M. G. Sammelbde. 2. 401-454. G.

Bach, Johann Christoph (1642-1703). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Christoph (1645-1693). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Christoph (1671-1721). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Christoph (1673-1727). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Christoph Friedrich (Leipzig, 1732-1795, Bückeburg), older brother of Joh. Christian above, son of Joh. Sebastian. Took some law-studies, but from 1750 was chamber-musician to Count von Lippe at Bückeburg, where he remained except for one visit to London. Wrote cantatas, an oratorio and much chamber-music. G.

Bach, Johann Egidius (1645-1717). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Ernst (Eisenach, 1722-1777, do.), son of Joh. Bernhard (1) above and about 1735 pupil of Joh. Sebastian. Was first a lawyer at Eisenach, but from 1749 was his father's successor as organist and from 1756 non-resident director at Weimar. Wrote good church-music and some clavier-sonatas, also the preface to Adlung's Musikal. Gelahrtheit (1758). G.

Bach, Johann Gottfried Bernhard (Weimar, 1715-1739, Jena), last son of Joh. Sebastian's first marriage. Was organist at Mühlhausen in 1735 and at Sangerhausen in 1736, but soon turned to law-studies at Jena, dying of a sudden fever after a time when his father had lost all track of him. G.

Bach, Johann Jakob (Eisenach, 1682-1722, Stockholm), older brother of Joh. Sebastian. Having been in the Eisenach town-band, about 1704 entered the Swedish army in Poland under Charles XII as oboist, serving in the invasion of Russia, the defeat at Poltava (1709) and the retreat into Turkey, where he remained till 1713, visiting Constantinople and having flute-lessons there from Buffardin. In 1713-21 he was court-musician at Stockholm (see Spitta, Eng. trans. ii. 154-6). On the occasion of his departure from home in 1704 Joh. Sebastian wrote a unique farewell Capriccio, a singularly interesting piece of program-music (see Spitta, i. 235-43).

Bach, Johann Lorenz (Schweinfurt, 1695-1773, Lahm). Able organist at Lahm, the last representative of the Franconian Bachs, son of Joh. Valentin. He made the Ferrich copy of the Bach Genealogy. G.

Bach, Johann Ludwig (Steinbach, 1677-1741, Meiningen), son of Jakob of Ruhla. From 1708 he was cantor at Meiningen and from 1711 court-director. Wrote important cantatas (12 of which Joh. Sebastian carefully copied), a mass, Trauermusik (1724), and an overture or suite. His able sons were Samuel Anton (1713-1781) and Gottlieb Friedrich (1714-1785), both of Meiningen. G.

Bach, Johann Michael (1648-1694). 17th C. G.

Bach, Johann Michael (?1745-?), perhaps connected with the Schweinfurt Bachs. Cantor at Tonna, going thence to Holland, England and America, studied law at Göttingen about 1780 and became a lawyer at Güstrow, Mecklenburg. Wrote cantatas, clavier-concertos and a textbook on harmony (1780). G.

Bach, Johann Nikolaus (1653-1682). 17th C.

Bach, Johann Nikolaus (Eisenach, 1669-1753, Jena), son of Joh. Christoph of Eisenach, and Joh. Sebastian's second cousin. From 1695 was town- and university-organist at Jena, though with an interval when he visited Italy and also served in the Danish army. Wrote suites, a mass and a comic operetta (based on Jena student-life). He was an expert in organ-building, a noted harpsichord-maker and diligent in advocating equal temperament. G.

Bach, Johann Sebastian (Eisenach, [Mar. 21] 1685–1750 [July 28], Leipzig), son of Joh. Ambrosius. The consummate genius of the great Bach family and one of the greatest in music-history. His boyhood was spent in narrow conditions, till 1695 at Eisenach and then, both father and mother dying, with his eldest brother, Joh. Christoph, at Ohrdruf. He began the violin with his father and was well grounded on harpsichord and organ by his brother, besides general studies at the Ohrdruf Academy, where his good soprano voice was noted. In 1700–03 he was at St. Michael's School at Lüneburg (north Germany), with much practice in church-music, the chance to study many works in the library and various contacts with important organists, such as Böhm at Lüneburg and Reinken at Hamburg, besides visits to Celle to hear French chamber-music. After his voice broke he continued as violinist and choir-prefect. At 18 he was already an accomplished organist and composer in the strong German contrapuntal style.

In 1703 he went to Weimar as court-violinist, but soon became town-organist at Arnstadt, where the organ was new and large and where he had incentive to compose for the choir. While here (1705) he made a notable trip to Lübeck (225 miles on foot) to hear Buxtehude's organ- and choir-music—long outstaying his leave of absence. This and other circumstances disturbed his relations at Arnstadt, and in 1707 he became organist at Mühlhausen (succeeding J. G. Ahle). In 1707, also, he married his second cousin Maria of Gehren. Various plans for improving the organ and the choir were cut short in 1708 by a call once more to Weimar as court-organist and violinist.

At Weimar he spent nine years under a kindly and cultivated patron, with many congenial circumstances in the court-kapelle and in the friendship of J. G. Walther, the town-organist. Here he perfected himself as organ-virtuoso and wrote most of his large organ-works, besides making extensive studies in the clavier- and chamber-music of both France and Italy, beginning to develop their styles along new lines of his own. He also entered upon the writing of church-cantatas. He was often called to inspect or exhibit organs, as at Kassel, Leipzig, Halle (where in 1714 he was nominated for town-organist), Meiningen and Dresden (where in 1717 he offered to compete with the French clavierist Marchand, who ran away from the contest).

In 1717 he accepted the post of court-director at Köthen, where the Prince was also cultured and musical, but where he had no organ and was expected to accent chamber-music. Here he developed his ideas about clavier-playing (later exemplified and published by his son Emanuel) and about the use of equal temperament, soon producing most of his larger clavier-works, including Part I of his monumental Well-Tempered Clavier (1722). He wrote much also for stringed instruments and for the flute, besides perfecting ensemble-forms, like suites, concertos and the like, in ways that combined minute knowledge of past achievements and a sure sense of fresh creation. Here he invented the 'viola pomposa,' a form between the viola and the violoncello. He made occasional trips to Leipzig, Halle (where in 1719 he just missed meeting Handel), Karlsbad and Hamburg (where in 1720 he won plaudits from the veteran Reinken). In 1720 his first wife died, leaving the three sons, Friedemann, K. Ph. Emanuel and Bernhard. In 1721 he married Anna Wilken of Weissenfels, a beautiful singer and his pupil and co-worker in many ways.

From 1723 he was cantor of the Thomasschule in Leipzig, an honorable but difficult post, and also had oversight of music in two leading churches and at the University—in all these succeeding Kuhnau. He was hampered by the lax management of the school (except in 1730–34), by the trend of popular interest away from serious church-music, and by sundry local and personal jealousies. But he held honorary appointments from the courts of Köthen, Weissenfels and Warsaw, with a technical relation to that of Dresden, and he had many notable visitors and able pupils, while his home-life was full of satisfaction. He often visited Hasse at Dresden and in 1747 was invited to Potsdam by Frederick the Great. During this period he carefully revised many earlier works and added a vast number of cantatas and oratorios, mostly adapted to the Lutheran calendar. His strenuous industry finally brought on eye-trouble, and, after an unsuccessful operation in 1749, he became totally blind. His death was from apoplexy. He was buried near the Johanniskirche, but the location was later lost. [In 1894 his presumable remains were found and in 1900 placed in the church.] His wife and the three unmarried daughters (one had married Altnikol) were left in poverty and all became dependent on town-charity, Anna Bach dying in 1760, but the last of the daughters not till 1809. Five sons survived, two from the first marriage and three from the second.

The total amount of his work as composer is prodigious, not only in bulk (several hundreds of items), but in depth of content and originality of form. Very few works were published either during his lifetime or for a century afterward. It was not until 1837 that Peters began to issue a complete edition, Breitkopf & Härtel following in 1851 with the fuller, critical edition of the Bach-Gesellschaft (46 vols. to 1899). Even this is defective, since many works are known to be lost. The list, as it stands, includes

For organ—over 40 fugues (usually with a prelude, toccata or fantasia), about half of which rank as the noblest works of their kind, a large number of chorale-preludes and elaborations, often of great beauty, 6 sonatas and several detached pieces of magnitude.

For clavier or harpsichord—Das wohltemperirte Clavier (48 preludes and fugues in all keys), Pt. i. 1722, Pt. ii. 1744, various other preludes (or toccatas) and fugues, 2- and 3-part Inventions, the 'French' and 'English' suites, besides other suites and partitas, 14 concertos for 1-4 clavers with strings, etc., besides Das musikalische Opfer, 1747, and Die Kunst der Fuge, 1749.

For other instruments—many sonatas and concertos for violin, viola da gamba, 'cello, flute, etc., either alone or with clavier or strings, besides works for various ensembles, including several overtures.

For chorus—about 300 cantatas or motets for the Lutheran church-year (5 complete cycles, of which about 200 are known), 5 Passions (including that according to St. John, 1724, and St. Matthew, 1729), with analogous oratorios for Christmas (6 parts, 1734), Easter, etc., 2 Magnificats, 5 large masses (especially that in B min., 1733-38) and several shorter ones, and many secular cantatas, serenatas and occasional works.

His style is essentially instrumental rather than vocal, equally supreme in the fields of keyboard- and chamber-music. His method is almost always strongly contrapuntal, though with infinite variety of treatment. He excelled in the invention and presentation of subjects, in exhaustless ductility of thematic development, in the architectonic arrangement and proportion of the several parts or sections, and in the welding of the whole into artistic unity in accordance with some dominant conception. Though always highly intellectual, his genius was intensely emotional and spiritual upon a lofty plane, so that his greatest works have a singular universality or ideality that have given them permanent influence upon the whole of later musical progress. In his grasp of harmonic possibilities and of many details of performance and structure he was far in advance of his time. With the prevalent interest in the opera he had little sympathy, and he came before the modern orchestra had established itself as a means of expression. But indirectly his titanic energy affected even these fields.

The Bach literature is extensive. Memoirs by Forkel, 1802 (Eng. 1820, French, 1876), Hilgenfeldt, 1850, Bitter, 2 vols. 1865 (2d ed. 4 vols. 1880), Spitta, 2 vols. 1873-80 (Eng. 3 vols. 1884-5, 2d ed. 1899), Poole, 1882, Barth, 1902, Pirro, 1906, Parry, 1909, Wolfrum, 2 vols. 1910, Tiersot 1912. Critical works by Hauptmann, 1841 (on Die Kunst der Fuge), Franz, 1871, 1910 (on vocal works), Tudor, 1891 (on Bach, Beethoven and Wagner), Riemann, Katechismus der Fuge, 3 vols. 1890-1, 3d ed. 1914 (on Das wohltemperirte Klavier), Pirro, 1894 (Eng. 1902) (on Bach's organ), Todt, 1895 (on the cantatas), Sittard, 1895 (on the B min. Mass), Widmann, 1895 (on the St. Matthew Passion), Taylor, 1897 (on Bach as church-musician), Iliffe, 1897 (on Das wohltemp. Clavier), Fuller-Maitland, The Age of Bach and Handel, 1902 (vol. iv of Oxford History of Music), Schweitzer, J. S. B., le Musicien-Poète (1905, '08, Eng. 1911), Pirro, L'Esthétique de J. S. B., 1907, Heuss, 1909 (on the St. Matthew Passion), Robert, Le Descriptif chez Bach, 1909, Voigt, 1911 (on the cantatas), etc. For fuller list, see Baker, Dict. of Musicians, 3d ed., 1919.

Bach, Karl Philipp Emanuel (Weimar, 1714-1788, Hamburg), second surviving son of Joh. Sebastian. He had a considerable education in philosophy and law at Leipzig and Frankfort-am-der-Oder, but was also thoroughly trained by his father, so that in 1738-67 he was chamber-musician to Frederick the Great, then becoming director at the chief church in Hamburg, succeeding Telemann. He was exceedingly admired and respected, was one of the best clavier-players of his time, and produced an immense number of works that had wide circulation and influence. As composer his gifts were not remarkable, but he came just when a profound change in musical style was taking place, and his genius for clear and orderly expression was of service in fixing new standards. Deserting the intricate and intellectual methods of his father, he became the real founder of the new sonata-form, with its emphasis upon melody, phrase and figure. From him Haydn derived his initial impetus. Wrote over 200 clavier-pieces, over 50 clavier-concertos, an immense number of chamber-works of every kind, 18 symphonies for orchestra, the oratorios Die Israeliten in der Wüste and Die Auferstehung und Himmelfahrt Jesu, 22 Passions, cantatas, etc. Memoirs by Bitter, 1868, Flueller, 1909, and Vrieslander, 1923, and thematic catalogue of works by Wotquenne, 1905. G.

Bach, Leonard Emil (Posen, 1849-1902, London). Prussian pianist and composer, pupil of Kullak, Wüerst and Kiel at Berlin, from 1869 teaching in Kullak's Academy, from 1874 pianist to Prince George of Prussia, and from 1882 teacher at the Guildhall School, London. Wrote the popular short operas Irmengard, 1892, The Lady of Longford, 1894, Des Königs Garde, 1895, and Das Tabakskollegium, besides many piano-pieces.

Bach, Otto (Vienna, 1833-1893, n. do.). Austrian composer, pupil of Sechter, Marx and Hauptmann, for many years theater-manager at different German towns, from 1868 in charge of the Mozarteum at Salzburg, and from 1880 director at the Votivkirche, Vienna (then new). Wrote the operas Sardanapal, 1860?, Die Liebesprobe, 1867, Die Argonauten, 1870, Lenore, 1874, and Medea, 4 symphonies, the overture Elektra, a choral ballad, church- and chamber-music.

Bach, Wilhelm Friedemann (Weimar, 1710-1784, Berlin), Joh. Sebastian's eldest and most gifted son. Besides music-study with his father and with Graun, he had a good general education, excelling in mathematics. From 1733 he was organist in Dresden and in 1747-64 at Halle, becoming famous as an extraordinary player and a powerful composer, but finally losing place and repute through boorish manners and growing dissipation. What became of him is but partially known. He made two or three efforts to regain recognition, but died in disgrace and poverty—a unique instance in the whole Bach circle. Wrote about 25 cantatas, many concertos for piano or for organ, considerable chamber-music and many piano-pieces. He is said to have been a masterly improvisator and to have composed much now lost. Memoir by Falck, 1913, with thematic catalogue. G.

Bach, Wilhelm Friedrich Ernst (Bückeburg, 1759-1845, Berlin), grandson of Joh. Sebastian (son of Joh. Christoph Friedrich) and his last male descendant. Trained by his father and uncle (Joh. Christian), he became a successful piano-teacher in London, from 1782 concertized in Germany and at Paris, from 1789 was in court-service at Berlin, becoming music-master to Queen Luise and her family, and in 1810 retired on pension. Wrote only a limited number of works, including piano-concertos, etc. G.

Bache, Constance (Edgbaston, 1846-1903, Switzerland). English pianist and writer, pupil of the Munich Conservatory, but forced by an accident to give up concert-work. From 1883 she taught in London and specialized as translator of musical books and librettos, including Liszt's and Von Bülow's Letters, etc., Heintz' analyses of Tristan, Die Meistersinger and Parsifal, and the texts of Liszt's St. Elizabeth, Schumann's The Rose's Pilgrimage and Faust Scenes, Mozart's Bastien et Bastienne and Humperdinck's Hänsel und Gretel, besides Brother Musicians (on her brothers, F. E. and Walter Bache).

Bache, Francis Edward (Birmingham, 1833-1858, do.). Gifted, but short-lived English composer, pupil of Bennett and the Leipzig Conservatory. Wrote a piano-concerto, a piano-trio and many piano-pieces, and the operas Which is Which? and Rübezahl. He died of consumption. G.

Bache, Walter (Birmingham, 1842-1888, London), brother of the above. Fine English pianist, trained at Leipzig and under Liszt, becoming known from 1865 in London as the latter's strong advocate. For several years after 1874 he gave series of concerts devoted to introducing Liszt's works to the English public, including several of the symphonic poems, of the choral works, the piano-concertos, etc. He was professor at the Royal Academy, where he succeeded in establishing the Liszt Scholarship. G.

Bachmann, Alberto Abraham (Geneva, 1875). Able Swiss violinist, trained at the Lille Conservatory and by Ysaÿe, Thomson, Hubay, Brodski and Petri. He has toured all over the world (in America since 1916), and has received many official decorations. Has written a violin-sonata, 2 concertos and many pieces, besides the important Les Grands Violinistes du Passé, 1913, Le Violon, 1906, and a Gymnastique (for violinists), 1914. He is preparing an Encyclopédie du Violon. A.

Bachmann, Gottlob (n. Zeitz, 1763-1840, do.). Saxon organist, trained at Leipzig and Dresden, from 1791 organist at Zeitz. Wrote 3 symphonies, a piano-quintet, 3 string-quartets, 3 singspiele, a cantata, ballads and songs, etc.

Bachmann, Sixtus (Kettlershausen, 1754-1818, n. Vienna). Notable Bavarian organist and pianist, precociously developed in memorizing. At 12 he contended with Mozart (then 10) on the organ at Biberach. He entered the Premonstrant monastery near Vienna. Wrote 4 piano-sonatas, organ-fugues, symphonies, chamber-music, cantatas and many fine masses.

Bachmetiev, Nikolai Ivanovitch (1807-1891). In 1861-83 head of the Imperial Choir at Petrograd. Wrote a symphony, a string-quartet, violin-pieces, etc.

Bachofen, Johann Kaspar (Zurich, 1697-1755, do.). Swiss cantor and singing-teacher in Zurich, from 1727 editing various books and periodicals containing tunes for hymns and psalms and other sacred music that had wide popularity and influence. G.

Bachrich, Sigismund (Zsambokreth, 1841-1913, Vienna). Hungarian violinist and composer, pupil of Böhm at Vienna, for many years teaching in the Conservatory there (till 1899) and for 12 years playing in the Hellmesberger Quartet, as well as in leading orchestras (viola). Wrote the operettas or comic operas Muzzedini, 1883, Heini von Steier, 1884, Der Fuchs-Major, 1889, etc. Erinnerungen published in 1914.

Backer-Gröndahl, Agathe Ursula (Holmestrand, 1847-1907, n. Christiania). Brilliant Norwegian pianist and composer, pupil of Kjerulf, Lindemann, Kullak, Von Bülow and Liszt, from 1875 married to the choral conductor O. A. Gröndahl of Christiania. Best known by 6 Études de Concert, a piano-suite, Romantische Stücke and many other fine piano-works, and by many beautiful songs and the song-cycle Des Kindes Frühlingstag. G.

Backhaus [Bachaus], Wilhelm (Leipzig, 1884). Superior Saxon pianist, pupil of Reckendorf and d'Albert. Since 1900 he has been chiefly occupied in concert-playing (in America 1912-14), but has taught in Manchester, England (1905), and at Sondershausen (1907-08). In 1905 he won the Rubinstein Prize.

Bachofen, Johann Georg Heinrich (in Baden, 1768-1839, Darmstadt). A noted expert on the harp, clarinet, flute and basset-horn, widely known through tours in Germany and southern Europe, in 1806-15 chamber-musician at Gotha and then head of a factory for making wind-instruments in Darmstadt. Wrote pieces and methods for his several instruments.

Bacon, Richard Mackenzie (Norwich, 1776-1844, n. do.). English editor, critic and vocal teacher, founder of The Quarterly Musical Magazine, 1818-29 (the first English musical periodical) and of the Norwich Festivals (from 1824), and writer for many journals, besides editing the Norwich Mercury. Wrote three works on singing (1824, '25), biographies of Pitt and the Earl of Suffolk, besides political pamphlets. G.

Bader, Karl Adam (Bamberg, 1789-1870, Berlin). Bavarian operatic tenor from 1811, in 1820 -49 leading tenor at the Berlin Court Opera, and from 1849 director at the Hedwigskirche. He was noted for rôles in Spontini's operas.

Badia, Carlo Agostino (1672-1738). 17th C.

Badia, Luigi (n. Naples, 1819-1899, Milan). Italian composer of 4 operas (from 1846) and many songs.

Badiali, Cesare (Imola, ?1810-1865, do.). Eminent Italian operatic bass from 1827, appearing throughout Italy, especially at Milan, in 1832-38 at Madrid and Lisbon, also from 1842 at Vienna and from 1859 at Paris and London. He sang florid parts (as in Semiramide) as written. G.

Bagge, Selmar (Coburg, 1823-1896, Basel). Saxon teacher and critic, pupil of D. Weber and Sechter, in 1851-55 theory-teacher at the Vienna Conservatory, from 1855 critic for the Monatschrift f. Theater u. Musik, in 1860-63 founder of the Deutsche Musikzeitung, in 1863-68 editor at Leipzig of the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung, and then director of the Basel Music School, besides editing the Schweizerische Sängerezeitung. He was a strong opponent of the New-German school. Wrote a Lehrbuch der Tonkunst, 1873, on the development of the sonata (1880) and the symphony (1884), a symphony, chamber-music, piano-pieces and songs. Memoir by Eglinger, 1897. G.

Bai, Tommaso (?1650-1714). 17th C. G.

Baier, Victor (New York, 1861-1921, do.). American organist, from 1884 assistant at Trinity Church, New York, and from 1897 chief organist there. In 1920 he became warden of the Am. Guild of Organists. A.

Baif, Jean Antoine de (1532-1589). 16th C.

Bailey-Apfelbeck, Marie Louise (Nashville, Tenn. 1876). American pianist (of Irish-Polish descent), pupil of Reinecke, Leschetizky and Malwina Brée, since 1900 concertizing in both Europe and America. She has been counted one of the best players in Vienna, where she married an army-officer.

Baillot, Pierre Marie François de Sales (Paris, 1771-1842, do.). Eminent French violinist, the last of the classical school, pupil of Sainte-Marie, Pollani and the Paris Conservatory, but not committed to an artistic career till 1795, then becoming professor in the new Conservatory. In 1802 he was a member of Napoleon's private band, in 1805-08 toured in Russia with the 'cellist Lemare, soon became famous throughout Europe, in 1821-31 was concert-master at the Opéra and from 1825 of the Royal Orchestra. From 1814 he organized chamber-concerts, becoming known as an unrivalled ensemble-player. His tone was broad and noble, his execution precise and his style in every way superior. Wrote 9 violin-concertos, 3 string-quartets and much other chamber-music, a Symphonic Concertante for two violins and orchestra, a violin-sonata, etc., the standard textbook L'Art du Violon, 1834, assisted Rode, Kreutzer, Levasseur and others in preparing the Conservatory methods for violin and 'cello, besides essays on Grétry (1814), Viotti (1825) and others. Among his pupils were the elder Habeneck, Mazas and the Dancla brothers. His son René Paul (1813-1889) was long professor of ensemble-playing at the Conservatory. G.

Baini, Giuseppe (Rome, 1775-1844, do.). Distinguished Italian composer and writer of decidedly conservative sympathy, pupil of his uncle Lorenzo Baini (maestro at the Apostoli) and of Jannaconi (maestro at St. Peter's), from 1802 singer in the Pontifical Choir and in 1818 chamberlain. Wrote a famous Miserere, 1821, long given in Holy Week in alternation with those of Allegri and Bai, masses, motets, a Te Deum, etc., a monumental monograph on Palestrina (1828, in German 1834) and a treatise on rhythm in music and poetry (1820). Besides being an erudite and skillful musician he was gifted as historian and writer. He projected a complete critical edition of Palestrina's works, but completed only a small part of it. He held the title of Abbate. G.

Bainton, Edgar Leslie (London, 1880). English composer, trained at the Royal College, London, settled in Newcastle-on-Tyne as head of the Conservatory and conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Has written the short opera The Crier by Night, the choral works Before Sunrise, A Song of Freedom and Joy and The Blessed Demozel, the symphonic poem Paracelsus and other orchestral works.

Bajetti, Giovanni (Brescia, ?1815-1876, Milan). Italian composer, long concertmaster at La Scala, Milan. Wrote the operas Gonzalo, 1841, Il Genio d'Italia, 1843, L'Assedio di Brescia, 1844, Caterina, 1847, and Uberto da Brescia, 1866, and the ballet Faust, 1848.

Baker, Benjamin Franklin (Wenham, Mass. 1811-1889, Boston). American singer and teacher, in 1841-47 Lowell Mason's successor as teacher in the Boston public schools, and in 1851-68 head of the Boston Music School, which he founded. He was useful in stimulating popular interest in music and its study. Wrote cantatas, etc., edited vocal collections and the Boston Musical Journal, and compiled a textbook of harmony. A.

Baker, Theodore (New York, 1851). Able American editor, trained under Paul and at the Leipzig University (Ph.D. 1881). In 1880 he made studies of tribal music among the Seneca Indians (central New York) and elsewhere, leading to the thesis Ueber die Musik der nordamerikanischen Wilden, 1882, which was the pioneer work on Indian music. Since 1892 he has been editor for Schirmer in New York, producing two standard dictionaries, the one of terms (1895, many later eds.), the other of biographies (1900, 3d ed. 1919), and translating many important books on theory, technique and criticism, besides supervising the details of thousands of works of every class. A.

Baklanov, Georges (Petrograd, 1882). Russian operatic baritone, pupil of Vittorio Vanzo, from 1905 appearing both in Russia and the leading European capitals and in 1909 removing to the United States, where he has sung with the Boston Opera Company and at the Metropolitan, New York, and since 1917 with the Chicago Opera Company. A.

Balakirev, Mily Alexeievitch (Nijni Novgorod, 1837-1910, Petrograd). Distinguished Russian pianist, composer and founder (from about 1860) of the Neo-Russian movement. After general education at Kazan University, he was a protégé of Oulibichev, quickly acquiring musical proficiency, so that in 1855 he made his début as pianist at Petrograd with success. In 1862, with the choral conductor Lomakin, he founded the influential Free School of Music, whose orchestral concerts he conducted (except in 1874-81). In 1866-67 he conducted Russian operas in Prague, in 1867-70 directed the Imperial Musical Society at Petrograd, and in 1883-95 was conductor at the Court Chapel. His influence was exerted not only to bring out many unknown Russian works of importance, but to introduce the knowledge of advanced styles from the rest of Europe. He became the leader of the circle ('the big five') including Cui, Mussorgsky, Rimsky-Korsakov and Borodin. He himself, starting with great admiration of Glinka, became a striking exponent of the distinctive Russian style and spirit, with mastery use of national motifs. His works include symphonies in C (1897-98) and D min. (1909), the symphonic poems Russia and Tamara, 4 overtures, a piano-concerto, the piano-fantasia Islamei and many dances, etc., for piano, 2 sets of songs (30 in all) and 2 collections of folk-songs. Letters with Tchaikovsky edited by Liapunov, 1912. G, A.

Balart, Gabriel (Barcelona, 1824-1893, do.). Spanish opera-conductor and composer of several popular zarzuelas, trained in Paris, from 1852 conductor at Madrid and Barcelona, and at length director of the Barcelona Conservatory.

Balatka, Hans (n. Olmütz, 1827-1899, Chicago). Moravian conductor, pupil of Proch, Sechter and Gentiluomo, coming to Milwaukee in 1849. In 1851-60 he was founder and leader of the Musikverein there, then of the Philharmonic Society, Musical Union and Germania Männerchor in Chicago, and after 1873 of the Liederkrantz and other organizations, besides touring in 1870 with Mme. Pappenheim. Wrote a cantata (1869), the double chorus for men's voices The Power of Song, 1856, many choruses and songs. A.

Balbâtre, Claude (Dijon, 1729-1799, Paris). French organist, pupil of Rameau, from 1756 at St. Roch, from 1760 at Notre-Dame and from 1776 also in service of the king's brother (later Louis XVIII).

Balbi, Ludovico (?-1604). 16th C. G.

Balbi, Melchior (Venice, 1796-1879, Padua). Italian composer and theorist, pupil of Nini, Valeri and Calegari, in 1818-53 concertmaster in Padua theaters and from 1854 director at S. Antonio there. Wrote 3 operas (1820-25), much church-music, a Requiem for Rossini, 1868, a 'grammar' of music as a language (1825) and Nuova Scuola Basata sul Sistema Semitonato Equabile, 1872, and edited Calegari's Sistema Armonico, 1829.

Baldwin, Ralph Lyman (Easthampton, Mass. 1872). American organist and public-school supervisor, pupil of Chadwick, Emery, Heindl and Elson, from 1904 organist in Hartford, Conn., in charge of music in the leading schools and (from 1906) conductor of the (men's) Choral Club. Since 1900 he has directed the Institute of Music Pedagogy, Northampton, Mass. (summer normal school). Has written an organ-sonata, a Burlesca e Melodia for organ, anthems, men's choruses, including Hymn before Action, songs, and edited several collections of school-music. A.

Baldwin, Samuel Atkinson (Lake City, Minn. 1862). Distinguished American organist, graduate of the Dresden Conservatory in 1884, from 1886 organist in Chicago, from 1889 in St. Paul and Minneapolis, besides leading choral societies, and since 1902 in New York and Brooklyn (till 1911), becoming in 1907 professor at the College of the City of New York, where he has for years given notable annual series of recitals, as well as elsewhere. Has written a symphony, the orchestral suite A Summer Idyl, 2 concert-overtures, chamber-music and some choral works. A.

Balfé, Michael William (Dublin, 1808-1870, England). Irish composer of popular operas and operettas, pupil of C. F. Horn and (under the patronage of Count Mazzara) of Federici, Galli and Bordogni. He early appeared as stage-baritone, in 1828-35 in Paris and Italy. From 1843 his English successes were constant till 1864, when he retired. His works include

I. Rivali, 1829, Un Avvertimento ai Gelosi, 1830, Enrico IV al Passo del Marna, 1831, The Siege of Rochelle, 1835, The Maid of Artois, 1836, Catherine Grey, 1837, Joan of Arc, 1837, Diadeste, 1838, Falstaff, 1838, Keolanthe, 1840, Le Puits d'Amour, 1843, Les Quatre Fils d'Aymon, 1844, The Bohemian Girl, 1843 (his greatest success, given throughout Europe), The Daughter of St. Mark, 1844, The Enchantress, 1845, L'Étoile de Séville, 1845, The Bondman, 1846, The Maid of Honour, 1847, The Sicilian Bride, 1852, The Devil's in it, 1852, Piùtore e Duca, 1856 (as The Painter of Antwerp 1881), The Rose of Castile, 1857, Satanella, 1858, Bianca, 1860, The Puritan's Daughter, 1861, The Sleeping Queen, 1863, Blanche de Nevers, 1863, The Armourer of Nantes, 1863, The Knight of the Leopard or Il Talismano, 1874, besides the cantata Mazeppa and 2 others, glee and ballads. The Bohemian Girl was transformed in 1856 into French as La Bohémienne and in 1858 into Italian as La Zingara.

He had great fertility in effective melody and no little skill in orchestration and the telling arrangement of scenes, but had limited powers of characterization and small sense of the larger dramatic values. Within his chosen field he was not only popular but eminent. In 1846 he visited Vienna, in 1848 Berlin and in 1852-56 Russia and Trieste, besides vibrating often between London and Paris. Memoirs by Kenney, 1875, and Barrett, 1882. G.

Ballantine, Edward (Oberlin, O. 1886). American composer, trained at Boston and Berlin, since 1912 instructor at Harvard University. Has written the symphonic poems The Eve of St. Agnes, 1917, and The Awakening of the Woods, an Overture to the Piper, incidental music to Hagedorn's Delectable Forest, pieces for violin or 'cello and piano songs, etc. A.

Ballard, Robert. 16th C. G.

Balling, Michael (n. Würzburg, 1866). Eminent Bavarian conductor, trained as violist at the Würzburg Music School, for a time playing in the Mayence orchestra, in the court-band at Schwerin (1886-92) and also at Bayreuth. After a sojourn in Nelson (New Zealand), where he founded a music-school, an orchestra and a choral society, in 1896-97 he served as assistant-conductor at Bayreuth, as again in 1906-14. From 1898 he was in charge of the Opera at Lübeck, then at Breslau and in 1903-11 at Karlsruhe (succeeding Mottl). In 1911-14 he followed Richter as head of the Hallé Orchestra in Manchester (England). Since 1919 he has been general director at Darmstadt. He is editor-in-chief of the standard edition of Wagner's works begun by Breitkopf & Hartel in 1914.

Baltazarini. 16th C. G.

Baltzar, Thomas (?1630-1663). 17th C. G.

Baltzell, Winton James (Shiremanstown, Pa. 1864). American editor, author and composer, trained mostly in Boston and with H. A. Clarke, editor of The Etude from 1907 and of The Musician in 1907-18. Has published vocal music, a History of Music, 1905, and a Dictionary of Musicians, 1914. A.

Banchieri, Adriano (?1565-1634). 17th C. G.

Banck, Karl (Magdeburg, 1809-1889, Dresden). Saxon critic, pupil of Klein, Berger, Zelter and Frdr. Schneider, working at Magdeburg, Berlin, Leipzig (from 1834, at first closely associated with Schumann), in Thuringia and (from 1840) at Dresden.

Band, Erich (Berlin, 1876). Prussian conductor, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, director in succession at Mayence, Bremen, Rostock and (since 1905) of the Stuttgart Opera, as well as of choral organizations. Has written a string-quartet, a piano-sonata and pieces, and an essay on the history of the modern orchestra.

Bandini, Primo (Parma, 1857). Italian composer of the operas Eufemio di Messina, 1878, Fausta, 1886, and Janko, 1897.

Bandini, Uberto (Rieti, 1860). Italian composer, trained at Perugia, Naples and Rome. Has written the overture Eleonora, a symphony and Il Baccanale for orchestra, 1880. G.

Bandmann, Tony (Hamburg, 1848-1907, do.). Pupil of Deppe and an early representative of his method, working as teacher at Hamburg and writing Die Gewichtstechnik d. Klavierspiels, 1907.

Bandrowski, Alexander (Lubaczów, 1860-1913, Cracow). Galician actor and operatic tenor, pupil of Sangiovanni and Salvi, from 1887 becoming a Wagnerian exponent of high rank. He translated Rienzi, Tannhäuser and Lohengrin into Polish.

Banister, Gilbert. 15th C. G.

Banister, Henry Charles (London, 1831-1897, n. do.). English theorist and composer, pupil of Potter at the Royal Academy of Music, where from 1851 he was professor of theory, as from 1880 also at the Guildhall School and at the Normal College for the Blind. He was also a good concert-pianist. Wrote a Text-Book of Music, 1872 (many eds.), Some Musical Ethics and Analogies, 1884, Lectures on Musical Analysis, 1887, Musical Art and Study, 1888, a memoir of Macfarren (1891) and several handbooks of harmony. Some of his lectures were collected by Macpherson under the title Interludes, 1898. Composed 4 symphonies, 5 overtures, chamber-music, cantatas, etc. G.

Banister, Henry Joshua (London, 1803-1847, do.). English 'cellist, father of the above. Wrote 'cello text-books and edited a vocal collection (1803).

Banister, John (1630-1679). 17th C. G.

Banister, John, Jr. (?1663-1735). 17th C. G.

Bannister, Henry Marriott (1855-1919). English clergyman, since about 1890 sub-librarian of the Bodleian Library, Oxford. Editor of Monumenti Vaticani di Paleografia Musicale, 1913 (vol. xii of Codices Vaticani Selecti) and of several volumes of Anlecta Hymnica Medii Aevi, with many articles in periodicals.

Banti, Brigitta, née Giorgi (Crema, 1759-1806, Bologna). Extraordinary Italian stage-soprano, originally a street-singer. Heard in a Paris café by De Vismes in 1778, she was at once engaged for the Opéra, where her sure intuition as both singer and actress won great success, though she seemed unable to learn in the ordinary way (even to read notes). In 1779-1802 she sang constantly at leading operatic centers, sometimes in opera buffa, many works being specially written for her by Bianchi. Her voice was perfectly even through a very wide range, combining extreme flexibility with sweetness and emotional power. She married the dancer Zaccaria Banti. Memoir by Lozzi, 1909. G.

Bantock, Granville (London, 1868). Gifted English composer, pupil of Corder and Macfarren Scholar at the Royal Academy, London, appearing as an original composer from 1892. In 1893-96 he edited the New Quarterly Musical Review, besides leading comedies and light opera and in 1894-95 making a world-tour with one of the Edwardes companies. In 1896 he gave a concert devoted to music by young Englishmen (Allon, Hawley, Hinton, R. Steggall, W. Wallace and himself), which marked the beginning of a new interest. In 1897-1901 he was conductor at New Brighton of both symphony and choral concerts, still emphasizing new English works. In 1900 he gave a concert of British music at Antwerp, with another in 1902. In 1902 he followed Wood as conductor of the Wolverhampton Festivals, and since 1908 has been professor at Birmingham University and director of the Music School of the Midland Institute. His works include

The short operas Cadmar, 1892, and The Pearl of Iran, 1896, and incidental music to his own 5-act drama Rameses II, 1891; the dramatic cantata The Fire-Worshippers, 1892; the choral symphonies Atlantia in Calydon, 1912, and The Vanity of Vanities, 1914; the festival symphony Christus, 10 parts, 1903; various scenas, etc.,

LEOPOLD AUER

© Mishkin, N. Y.

with orchestra, like Wulstan, 1892. The Time-Spirit, 1904, Thorvenda's Dream, 1903, Omar Khayyâm, 2 parts, 1906-07, Sea-Wanderers, 1907; the choral suite A Pageant of Human Life; the tone-poems Thalaba the Destroyer, 1900, Dante, 1902, Hudibras, 1902, The Witch of Atlas, 1902, Lalla Rookh, 1903, The Great God Pan, 1903, The Pierrot of the Minute, 1908, Dante and Beatrice, 1911, Fifine at the Fair, 1912, Hebridean Symphony, 1916; the overtures Saul, Cain, Belshazzar, Eugene Aram (for an unfinished opera, 1895), To a Greek Tragedy, 1911; the orchestral suites Russian Scenes, 1899, and English Scenes, 1900; music for Elektra; 3 Dramatic Dances and Scenes from the Scottish Highlands for orchestra; the Oriental scenes Processional, 1894, and Jaga Naut, 1897; a Pagan Symphony; the orchestral variations Helena, 1900; the ballets Egypt, 1892, and The Enchanted Garden, 1916; an Elegiac Poem for 'cello and orchestra; a string-quartet, a Serenade for horns; a Mass for men's chorus a cappella; the song-albums, with orchestra, Ghazels of Hafiz, Songs of the East, Ferishta's Fancies, Sappho, Jester Songs and Songs of the Seraglio; besides lesser works for piano or voice. He has projected a Celtic Folk-Opera (with Mrs. Fraser).

The above titles indicate his extreme interest in the picturesque and unusual. He tends always to be a colorist and his sure grasp of orchestral technique makes his work highly effective. Whether the artistic message is as fine as the rhetoric of presentation is disputed. See critique by H. O. Anderton, 1915, and article in The Musical Quarterly, July, 1918. G, A.

Banwart, Jakob. 17th C.

Baptie, David (Edinburgh, 1822-1906, Glasgow). Scottish lexicographer, compiling a Handbook of Musical Biography, 1883 (2d ed. 1887), Musicians of All Times, 1889, and an extensive catalogue of part-songs (over 23,000), on which he labored for over fifty years (1846-98), now deposited in the British Museum for reference. He also edited popular hymn-books, and wrote many glees, anthems, etc. G.

Baptiste. See Anet, Baptiste.

Baralli, Raffaello (n. Lucca, 1862). Italian specialist in Gregorian music, from 1893 teaching in the Istituto Musicale at Lucca and since 1920 at the School for Church Music in Rome. Has written various treatises and articles on his specialty (from 1901).

Barbaja, Domenico (Milan, 1778-1841, Posilipo). Famous Italian impresario, who became manager of San Carlo in Naples, La Scala in Milan and in 1821-28 of two leading theaters in Vienna, besides smaller enterprises. He brought out the first works of Bellini, many of those of Rossini and Donizetti, besides Weber's Eury-anthe at Vienna. He also employed all the leading singers of the day. He retired about 1830. G.

Barbarino, Bartolommeo. 17th C.

Barbedette, Hippolyte La Rochelle (Poitiers, 1827-1901, Paris). French biographer (1861-82) of many composers (Beethoven, Chopin, Weber, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Heller) and contributor to the Ménestrel.

Barbella, Emanuele (Naples, 1704-1773, do.). Italian violinist, pupil of Bini, Leo and Martini, exemplifying the Tartini tradition. He probably lived long in London. Wrote much for two and three violins, also (with Logroscino) the opera Elmira Generosa, 1753. G.

Barbi, Alice (Modena, 1862). Accomplished Italian mezzo-soprano, trained also as violinist. From 1882 till her marriage in 1897 to Baron Wolff-Stomersen she was hailed in Italy and elsewhere as a foremost song-singer, equally successful in works of different countries and periods. See article in Gazetta Musicale, 1887. G.

Barbier, Frédéric Étienne (Metz, 1829-1889, Paris). Prolific French composer of light operas, ballets and songs, for a time concertmaster at the Théâtre International in Paris and also conductor at the Alcazar, besides writing critiques. His stage-works numbered about 60 (from 1852).

Barbier, Jules Paul (Paris, 1825-1901, do.). Skillful French littérateur, with Carré author of many opera-libretti (from 1853) for Massé, Reber, Boulanger, Diffès, Meyerbeer (Le Pardon de Ploërmel), Thomas (Hamlet, Françoise de Rimini) and Gounod (Faust, Philémon et Baucis, Roméo et Juliette, Polyeucte). His son Pierre (b. 1854) is also well-known as librettist.

Barbieri, Carlo Emanuele di (Genoa, 1822-1867, Pest). Italian conductor and composer, pupil of Mercadante and Crescentini, in Vienna in 1845-47, '56-62, Berlin and Hamburg in 1847-53, Rio de Janeiro in 1853-56, and from 1862 head of the National Theater at Pest. Wrote the operas Cristoforo Colombo, 1848, Nisida, 1851, Carlo und Carlin, 1859, Arabella, 1862, and the favorite Perdita, ein Wintermärchen, 1865, besides songs in German and Italian, church-music, etc.

Barbieri, Francisco Asenjo (Madrid, 1823-1894, do.). Noted Spanish composer of zarzuelas, trained at the Madrid Conservatory, from 1847 secretary of the Zarzuela Society and from 1868 professor of harmony and history at the Conservatory. Wrote over 75 zarzuelas (often in collaboration), of which the earliest were Gloria y Peluca, 1850, and Jugar con Fuego, 1851, turning to an Italian style with L'An y Toros, 1864, besides much orchestral and choral music and able articles on both musical and political subjects. He also edited the important Cancionero Musical de los Siglos XV y XVI, 1890, and a work by Eximeneo on Don Lazaro Viscardi (1872). In early life he was clarinetist, opera-singer and conductor in northern Spain. In 1866 he started concerts in Madrid that led to a permanent series. In 1873 he was made a member of the Academy of Arts. G.

Barbireau, Jacques (?-1491). 15th C. G.

Barblan, Otto (in the Engadine, 1860). Able Swiss organist from 1885, trained at the Stuttgart Conservatory, since 1887 organist of the Geneva Cathedral, professor in the Conservatory and conductor of the Société de Chant Sacré. Has written many organ-pieces, a string-quartet, a Passion (1918), the cantatas Ode Patriotique, 1896, and Post Tenebras Lux, 1909, Psalms 23 and 137 for chorus and orchestra, men's choruses, etc.

Barbot, Joseph Théodore Désiré (Toulouse, 1824-1897, Paris). French tenor, pupil of Elwart and Garcia, from 1848 appearing in Paris and Italy and from 1875 professor of singing at the Paris Conservatory. He sang in 1859 at the première of Faust.

Barbour, Florence, née Newell (Providence, R. I. 1867). American pianist and composer for piano and of songs, including the suites Venice, A Day in Arcady and All in a Garden Fair, sets of Forest-Sketches, Nature-Pieces, a Reverie for strings and piano, many song-groups, anthems and women's choruses. A.

Barcewicz, Stanislaus (Warsaw, 1858). Polish violinist, trained at the Moscow Conservatory, from 1885 professor at the Warsaw Conservatory, from 1893 second conductor of opera and from 1911 head of the Musical Institute.

Bardas, Willy (Vienna, 1887). Able Austrian pianist, pupil of Grädener, Schnabel and Bruch, since 1919 teaching at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin. His wife is noted as a concert-contralto.

Bardi, Giovanni, Conte del Vernio (1534-1612). 16th C. G.

Barge, Johann Heinrich Wilhelm (n. Dannenberg, 1836). Hanoverian flutist, from 1853 in a regimental band, from 1860 in the Detmold court-orchestra and in 1867-95 first flute at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig. Wrote a flute-method, studies and arrangements.

Bargheer, Adolf (Bückeberg, 1840-1901, Basel). Violinist, last pupil of Spohr and then of Joachim, from 1866 teacher and leader at the Basel Music School.

Bargheer, Karl Louis (Bückeberg, 1831-1902, Hamburg), brother of the above. Violinist, pupil of Spohr, David and Joachim, from 1850 concertmaster of the Detmold court-orchestra and in 1863-76 capellmeister there, from 1876 concertmaster of the Philharmonic in Hamburg and teacher in the Conservatory, and from 1889 leader of the Von Bülow orchestra there.

Bargiel, Woldemar (Berlin, 1828-1897, do.), step-brother of Clara (Wieck) Schumann. Able Prussian composer, pupil of Dehn and the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1850 teacher in Berlin, from 1859 at the Cologne Conservatory, from 1865 director of the Rotterdam Music School and of the Maatschappij concerts, from 1874 professor at the Berlin Hochschule, also from 1875 member of the senate of the Academy of Arts and head of one of its divisions (composition). In style he was a follower of Schumann. Wrote a symphony, the overtures Prometheus, Zu einem Träuerspiel (Romeo and Juliet) and Medea, 3 Dances Brillantes and an Intermezzo for orchestra, 4 string-quartets, 3 piano-trios, a violin-sonata, suites for piano and for violin, a string-octet, 3 Psalms for chorus and orchestra (one a cappella), many piano-pieces and songs, all marked by careful workmanship. G.

Barker, Charles Spackman (Bath, 1806-1879, Maidstone). English organ-maker, trained by Bishop, who worked first at Bath, about 1835 inventing the pneumatic lever for lessening key-resistance, from 1837 in Paris (where Cavallé-Col adopted his system), continuing in various firms till 1870, when he returned to England. About 1865 he perfected an electric action. At the Paris Exposition of 1855 he won a first-class medal and membership in the Légion d'Honneur. G.

Barley, William. 16th C. G.

Bärmann, Heinrich Joseph (Potsdam, 1784-1847, Munich). Famous clarinetist, from 1807 in the Bavarian court-band and soon widely known throughout Europe as soloist. He was intimate with Weber, Meyerbeer and Mendelssohn. Wrote over 100 clarinet-works in various forms that are still valued. His brother Karl (1782-1842) was a noted bassoonist in the Royal Band at Berlin. G.

Bärmann, Karl (Munich, 1811-1885, do.), son of Heinrich. Excellent clarinetist, pupil and successor of his father at Munich. Wrote a standard method (2 parts and supplement), and many pieces. G.

Bärmann [Baermann], Karl (Munich, 1839-1913, Boston), son of the foregoing. Superior pianist, pupil of Wanner, Wohlmuth, Liszt and Lachner, after many years of teaching in the Munich Conservatory in 1881 came to America, becoming a leading soloist and teacher in Boston. His pupils included Mrs. Beach and F. S. Converse. Wrote a piano-suite, 12 fine studies and many pieces, besides an orchestral Festival March (played in Munich). G, A.

Barnabee, Henry Clay (Portsmouth, N. H. 1833-1917, Boston). American comedian and stage-singer from 1854, from 1879 with the Boston Ideal Company and in 1887 (with Karl) founder of The Bostonians, rounding out more than a half-century of notable success in light and comic operas. Published My Wanderings, 1913. A.

Barnard, Charlotte, née Alington (1830-1869, Dover). English poet and song-writer of a popular character (pen-name 'Claribel'). G.

Barnard, John. 17th C. G.

Barnby, Joseph (York, 1838-1896, London). Distinguished English organist, conductor and composer, trained at the Royal Academy, London, and from 1855 organist of various churches, notably at St. Andrew's (Wells St.) in 1863-71 and at St. Anne's (Soho) in 1871-86. From 1861 he was adviser for Novello and from 1867 conducted Barnby's Choir and other choral societies under Novello auspices, and in 1878-1886 was the first conductor of the new London Musical Society. From 1875 he was precentor at Eton and from 1892 head of the Guildhall School of Music. He often served as conductor of festivals outside of London. He was knighted in 1892. Wrote the cantata Rebekah, 1870, Psalm 97, 1883, a large number of services, anthems, hymn-tunes, part-songs, etc., with fluent grace and skill, and was musical editor of The Hymnary, 1872, and four other collections. G.

Barnekow, Christian (St. Sauveur, Pyrenees, 1837-1913, Copenhagen). Danish organist and composer, pupil of Helstedt, working at Copenhagen, where from 1871 he was a prominent leader in various enterprises. Wrote a string-quintet, a piano-quartet, a piano-trio, sonatas for violin and for piano, Idyllen for strings, 2 organ-fantasias, 4 sets of organ-preludes, numerous choruses, part-songs and songs (many with organ), including the cycles Die Einsame, Der Königen Klage, Finnische Gesänge and Nocturnes, besides editing 8 sets of sacred songs from old masters, some works of Buxtehude (for piano, 4 hands), etc.

Barnes, Edward Shippen (Seabright, N. J. 1887). American organist, trained at the Yale School of Music and the Schola Cantorum, Paris, since 1911 organist in New York. Has written an organ-symphony, 2 suites, a fantasia for organ and chorus and 2 sacred cantatas. A.

Barnett, John (Bedford, 1802-1890, Cheltenham), father's name originally Bernhard Beer (related to Meyerbeer). English composer, pupil of C. E. Horn, Perez and Ferd. Ries, beginning stage-singing in 1813 and writing musical farces, etc. from 1825 for various London theaters, finally entering the field of serious opera in 1834. From 1841 he taught singing at Cheltenham, though with several sojourns on the Continent. His chief works were an oratorio (1830), the operetta The Pet of the Petticoats, 1831, the operas The Mountain Sylph, 1834 (hailed as the first English opera of the time), Fair Rosamund, 1837, Farinelli, 1839, and Kathleen (not performed), several effective series of songs and a multitude (4000) of single songs, besides a symphony and 2 string-quartets, and a pamphlet on vocal methods (1842) and a School for the Voice, 1844. He had considerable melodic originality. G.

Barnett, John Francis (London, 1837-1916, do.), nephew of the above. Eminent English pianist and composer, trained at the Royal Academy, London (twice Queen's Scholar), and the Leipzig Conservatory, playing at the Gewandhaus in 1860. As early as 1853 he appeared in London in Mendelssohn's 2d Concerto under Spohr. From 1860 he became widely known in England as teacher, soloist and conductor, and from 1883 was professor at the Royal College, London. Wrote a symphony (1864), 2 overtures, 6 orchestral sketches, The Lay of the Last Minstrel for orchestra, 1874, a piano-concerto, a string-quintet, quartet and trio, etc., and, more notably, the oratorio The Raising of Lazarus, 1876, and many cantatas, including The Ancient Mariner, 1867, Paradise and the Peri, 1870, The Good Shepherd, 1876, The Building of the Ship, 1880, The Harvest Festival, 1881, The Wishing-Bell, 1893, all for various festivals. He also wrote for piano and for voices alone or in chorus, and published Musical Reminiscences and Impressions, 1906. G.

Barnett, Neville George (London, 1854-1895, Picton, N. S. W.). English organist, pupil of J. L. Hopkins, after service in London churches, organist of the leading R. C. church in Sydney, N. S. W., choirmaster at the Synagogue, teacher at the Blind Asylum and critic for several papers.

Wrote the opera Pomare (given in Auckland), a mass, organ-pieces, choruses and a text-book in harmony.

Baron, Ernst Gottlieb (Breslau, 1696-1760, Berlin). Noted Silesian lutenist and theorbist, touring with much success from 1720, from 1728 in court-bands at Gotha, Eisenach and Rheinsberg, and from 1737 at Berlin. Wrote an Untersuchung des Instruments der Laute, 1727, a contribution on the lute to Marpurg's Beiträge, 1756, and other studies. G.

Barré, Antonio and Leonardo. 16th C. G.

Barrère, Georges (Bordeaux, 1876). Accomplished French flutist, trained at the Paris Conservatory, from 1898 soloist at the Colonne Concerts and the Opéra, and since 1905 in the Symphony Society, New York, and teacher at the Institute of Musical Art. In Paris he founded in 1895 the Société Moderne d'Instruments à Vent, and in New York in 1910 the Barrère Ensemble, in 1913 the Trio de Lutèce (flute, harp and 'cello) and in 1914 the Little Symphony. He is Officier in the French Académie. Has edited Altès' flute-études. A.

Barret, Apollon Marie Rose (Paris, 1808-1879, London). Fine French oboist, pupil of Vogt, successively engaged at the Opéon in Paris, the Opéra-Comique and (till 1874) the Italian Opera in London. Wrote an excellent method, with supplementary studies. G.

Barrett, William Alexander (Hackney, 1836-1891, London). English critic and author, from 1869 on the Morning Post, besides at different times editing the Monthly Musical Record and the Musical Times and singing in the choir at St. Paul's. Wrote English Glee and Madrigal Writers, 1877, English Church Composers, 1882, Balfe, his Life and Work, 1882, and was co-editor with Stainer of the Dictionary of Musical Terms, 1876 (and later eds.). He also composed an oratorio and other vocal music. G.

Barrientos, Maria (Barcelona, 1885). Talented Spanish operatic soprano, a precocious student at the Barcelona Conservatory, making her début in 1899 at Barcelona and in 1900 at La Scala, Milan. After singing in various European countries and in South America till 1913, in 1916 she came to the Metropolitan in New York. Her répertoire includes all standard French and Italian works, especially in coloratura rôles. She married George Keen in 1907 at Barcelona. A.

Barrington, Daines (London, 1727-1800, do.). English lawyer, author of essays on precocious musicians (Crotch, Mornington, Mozart, two Wesleys), on bird-song (1773), Welsh instruments, etc. G.

Barry, Charles Ainslie (London, 1830-1915, do.). English editor and critic, trained by Walmisley and at the Cologne and Leipzig Conservatories, contributor to several papers, in 1875-79 editor of the Monthly Musical Record, and for many years author of the analytical programs of the Richter concerts. From 1886 he was secretary of the Liszt Scholarship Fund. Wrote a symphony, 2 overtures, an orchestral march, a string-quartet, cantatas and other vocal music. G.

Barsanti, Francesco (Lucca, ?1690-1760?, in England). Italian flutist, oboist and violist, settling in Great Britain in 1714. Made a Collection of Old Scots Tunes, 1742, and wrote considerable chamber-music and some Antifone in the Palestrina style. G.

Barsotti, Tommaso Gasparo Fortunato (Florence, 1786-1838, Marseilles). In 1821-52 founder and director of the Free School of Music at Marseilles. Wrote a Méthode de Musique, 1828, and some piano- and vocal pieces.

Barstow, Vera (Celina, O. 1893). American violinist, pupil of Von Kunits, appearing first in 1912 at Vienna and New York, with many later engagements with orchestras and in concert. A.

Bartay, Andreas (Széplak, 1798-1856, Mayence). Hungarian composer, from 1838 director of the National Theater, Pest, and, after concerts in Paris in 1848, settled in Hamburg. Wrote the Hungarian operas Aurelia, Csel and The Hungarians in Naples, an oratorio, masses, ballets, etc.

Bartay, Ede (1825-1901, Pest), son of the above. Director of the National Musical Academy in Pest and founder of a pension-fund for Hungarian musicians. Wrote the overture Pericles, etc.

Bartei, Girolamo. 17th C. G.

Barth, Adolf Franz (Alsleben, 1852). Eminent Saxon surgeon (M.D. 1879), since 1896 located at Leipzig, where he has specialized in the anatomy and physiology of the ear, with notable researches in acoustics. Has written Zur Lehre von d. Tönen u. Geräuschen, 1887, Beitrag zur Anatomie d. inneren Ohres, 1889, Die Helmholtzsche Theorie über d. Hören, 1892, Ueber d. Bildung d. menschlichen Stimme, 1904, Klang u. Tonhöhe d. Sprechstimme, 1906, and many other articles and treatises.

Barth, Christian Frederik (Kassel, 1787-1861, Middelfart), son of the following. From 1802 oboist in the Copenhagen court-orchestra, with some tours in other countries, and from 1841 an influential teacher. Wrote 2 oboe-concertos, a sonata, duets and quartets, besides an overture.

Barth, Christian Samuel (Glauchau, 1735-1809, Copenhagen). Noted Saxon oboist, pupil of J. S. Bach, engaged in orchestras at Rudolstadt, Weimar, Hanover, Kassel and Copenhagen in turn. Wrote brilliant oboe-concertos and other works.

Barth, Friedrich Philipp Karl Anton (Kassel, 1775-1804, Copenhagen), son of the above. Successor of his father at Copenhagen. Wrote concertos for oboe, flute and two horns, and made collections of Danish and German songs.

Barth, Hermann (Luxemburg, 1866). Clergyman at Ruhlsdorf and Marienwerder, author of a life of Bach (1902), a history of church-music (1903) and works on the chorale (1904-05).

Barth, Karl Heinrich (Pillau, 1847-1923, Berlin). Eminent Prussian pianist, pupil of Stein-mann, Von Bülow, Bronsart and Tausig, from 1868 teacher at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, from 1871 at the Hochschule and from 1910 head of the piano-department in the latter. He was equally noted as soloist and in ensemble. With De Ahna and Hausmann he formed a Trio that became widely celebrated. Under Frederick III in 1888 he was court-pianist. Wrote a violin-sonata.

Barth, Richard (Grosswanzleben, 1850). Saxon violinist (forced by accident to play left-handed), pupil of Beck and Joachim, concert-master at Münster and from 1882 at Crefeld, then director at Marburg University, in 1895-1904 conductor of the Hamburg Philharmonic and of the Singakademie, and since 1908 director of the Hamburg Conservatory. He edited Brahms' letters to J. O. Grimm (1908). G.

Barthe, Grat Norbert (Bayonne, 1828-?). French opera-composer, pupil of Leborne, taking the Prix de Rome in 1854 with the cantata Francesca da Rimini. Wrote the operas Don Carlos and La Fiancée d'Abydos, 1865, the oratorio Judiith, etc.

Barthel, Johann Christian (Plauen, 1776-1831, Altenburg). Saxon organist, pupil of J. A. Hiller, from 1792 court-conductor at Schöneburg and from 1797 at Greitz, and from 1804 court-organist at Altenburg. G.

Barthélemon, François Hippolyte (Bordeaux, 1741-1808, Dublin). Distinguished Irish-French violinist and composer, from 1765 leader of the opera-orchestra in London and in 1770-76 at Marylebone Gardens, in 1776-77, with his wife (née Mary Young) a popular singer, toured on the Continent, and in 1784 visited Dublin. His playing was marked by a firm and pure tone. Wrote the operas Pelopida, 1766, Le Fleuve Scamandre, 1768, The Judgment of Paris, 1768, The Maid of the Oaks, 1774, Belphegor, 1778, etc., besides 6 string-quartets, violin-concertos, etc. G.

Bartholdy, Conrad Johan (Frijsenborg, 1853-1904, Copenhagen). Danish cantor, pupil of Gebauer and Neupert, from 1883 at the Matthäuskirche in Copenhagen. Wrote the operas Loreley and Dyveke, an overture and choruses.

Bartholomew, William (London, 1793-1867, do.). English amateur who translated or adapted the texts of many of Mendelssohn's works (except St. Paul and the Hymn of Praise), of Costa's Eli, Naaman and The Dream, of Méhul's Joseph, of Spohr's Jessonda, etc. G.

Bartholony, Jean (Geneva, 1880). Swiss composer, trained in Paris, now head of the Geneva Conservatory. Has written the symphonic poems La Nuit Cède au Jour and Jeux de Faunes, a violin-sonata, Impressions d'Été for piano and pieces for organ or for organ and violin.

Bartleman, James (London, 1769-1821, do.). English baritone, pupil as a boy-chorister of Cooke, from 1788 a principal soloist at the Ancient Concerts and (1791-95) at the new Vocal Concerts. He was famous as the interpreter of Purcell's songs. G.

Bartlett, Homer Newton (Olive, N. Y. 1846–1920, Hoboken, N. J.). American organist and composer, trained in New York, where from 1860 he was organist, from 1885 at the Madison Avenue Baptist Church. He wrote with great fluency, but with much freshness and accuracy of style, among his almost 250 works being the opera La Vallière, 1887, the operetta Magic Hours, the symphonic poem Apollo, a Légende for orchestra, a concerto and ballade for violin, many effective organ-pieces, 3 piano-ballades and other piano-works (some based on Japanese themes), anthems and songs. A.

Bartlett, John. 17th C. G.

Bartmuss, Richard (Bitterfeld, 1859–1910, Dessau). Able Prussian organist, pupil of Grell, Haupt and Löschhorn, from about 1880 organist at Dessau, receiving the title of royal professor in 1902. Wrote 2 organ-concertos, 4 organ-sonatas, 2 chorale-fantasias, Kirchliche Festmusiken, the oratorio Der Tag der Pfingsten, the cantata Die Apostel in Philippi, motets, choruses, songs and melodramas, including Liturgische Vespere (Lutheran musical services).

Bartók, Béla (Nagy Szent Miklós, 1881). Hungarian pianist and composer, pupil of Kersch, L. Erkel and the Pest Music Academy, where since 1906 he has been professor. Has written the opera Ritter Blaubarts Burg, 1918, the pantomime Der wunderbare Prinz, 1919, the dance-play Der holzgeschnitzte Prinz, 1922, the symphonic poem Kossuth, orchestral suites, 2 Porträts for orchestra, a Rhapsodie for piano and orchestra, a piano-quintet, a string-quartet, a piano-suite and other pieces, and edited a collection of Hungarian, Slovak and Rumanian folk-songs.

Bartoli, Erasmo (1606–1656). 17th C.

Bartolini, Or' in Dio. 17th C.

Bartz, Johannes (Stargard, 1848). Pomeranian organist, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1872 at the Peter-Paul Church in Moscow and director of choral societies. Has written the opera Der Feldweibel, the oratorio Der Himmelsbote, the orchestral suite Rolf Krakes Tod, a string-quartet, a violin-sonata, 3 piano-sonatas, a Requiem and other church-music, 12 books of songs, etc.

Bary, Alfred Erwin von (Malta, 1873). Though trained as a physician (M.D. 1898, Munich), from 1902 was operatic tenor at the Court Opera in Dresden, going in 1912–18 to that in Munich. Since 1904 he has sung with success at Bayreuth.

Baselt, Friedrich [Fritz] Gustav Otto (Oels, 1863). Silesian composer and conductor, pupil of Emil Köhler and Bussler, variously occupied in Breslau, Essen and Nuremberg, since 1894 at Frankfurt as director of the Philharmonic Verein and the Sängervereinigung. Has written a multitude of works, mostly vocal, including many operettas (from 1888) and some ballets, and many men's choruses a cappella, etc., besides instrumental pieces.

Basevi, Abramo (Leghorn, 1818–1885, Florence). Italian editor and author, founder and editor of Armonia (until 1859) and then writer for Boccherini, publishing a study of Verdi's works (1859), treatises on harmony (1862, '65) and a handbook of music-history (1865–66). In 1859 he started matinées at Florence that later became the Società del Quartetto. In early life he also wrote two operas (1840, '47). G.

Basili, Francesco (Loreto, 1767–1850, Rome). Italian composer, pupil of his father and Jannaconi, maestro at Foligno, Mamerata and Loreto, from 1827 head of the Milan Conservatory and from 1837 maestro at St. Peter's in Rome, following Fioravanti. Wrote 16 operas, large and small (1788–1818) and some dramatic oratorios, much church-music, including a Requiem for Jannaconi (1816), symphonies and sonatas in Haydn's style, songs, etc. G.

Bassani, Geronimo. Italian singer in the choir of St. Mark's, Venice, pupil of Lotti, writing good church-music and 2 operas (1718–21).

Bassani, Giovanni. 16th C.

Bassani, Giovanni Battista (?1657–1716). 17th C. G.

Bassett, Franklin (Wheeling, W. Va. 1852–1915, Pasadena, Cal.). American pianist, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, but debarred from full activity by accident. From 1877 he was organist and teacher at Cleveland, giving the first organ-recitals there, engaging fruitfully in ensemble-playing and training many able piano-pupils as director of the Conservatory. A.

Bassford, William Kipp (New York, 1839–1902, do.). American organist and composer, pupil of S. P. Jackson, long active in New York, writing the opera Cassilda, a mass and other church-music, songs and piano-pieces. After W. V. Wallace's death in 1865 he was engaged to complete his opera Estrella. A.

Bassi, Amadeo Vittorio (Florence, 1876). Italian operatic tenor from 1899 in Italy, in 1902–07 in South America, in 1907 at Covent Garden, London, in 1906–08 at the Manhattan, New York, and in 1910–12 with the Chicago Opera Company. He sang at the premières of d'Erlanger's Tess, Franchetti's Germania, Mascagni's L'Amico Fritz, Cilèa's Gloria, etc., and his répertoire includes over 50 rôles, mostly Italian.

Bassi, Luigi (Pesaro, 1766–1825, Dresden). Italian operatic baritone, pupil of Laschi, known in Italy from 1779 (before his voice changed), from 1784 a favorite at Prague, from 1806 at Vienna, and, after spending 1814–15 again at Prague, director of the Dresden Opera. He was intimate with Mozart (who wrote the part of Don Giovanni for him in 1787), with Prince Lobkowitz in Vienna and with Weber at Prague and Dresden. G.

Bassiron [Basiron], Philippe. 15th C. G.

Bastiaans, J. G. (Wilp, 1812–1875, Haarlem). Dutch organist, pupil of Schneider at Dessau and of Mendelssohn, long organist at Amsterdam and teacher at the Blind Institution, and from 1868 organist at Haarlem, succeeded by his son Johann (1854–1885).

Baston, Josquin. 16th C.

Bates, Joah (Halifax, 1741–1799, London). English conductor, graduate of Cambridge, more or less engaged in secretarial or commercial duties throughout his life, but also in 1776 founder and till 1793 conductor of the Ancient Concerts, in 1783–84 promoter and conductor of the first Handel Commemoration, as well as of later ones (till 1791), and well known as an expert upon Handel's music. In 1780 he married Sarah Harrop, a favorite concert-singer. G.

Bates, William. English composer of light operas, etc., for the Marylebone and Vauxhall Gardens in 1760–75. G.

Bateson, Thomas (?1575–1630). 17th C. G.

Bath, Hubert (Barnstaple, 1883). English conductor and composer, trained at the Royal Academy of Music, in 1912–13 conductor for the Quinlan opera-troupe on its world-tour, in 1915 at the Shaftesbury Theatre, London, director of the opera-class at the Guildhall School and musical adviser to the London County Council. Has written the operas Young England, 1915, Bubble, 1920, Trilby and others, the symphonic poem Hannele, 1908, the orchestral Variations, 1904, Sea-Sketches, 1909, and African Suite, 1915, the cantatas The Legend of Norbudda, 1908, The Wedding of Shon Maclean, 1910, The Jackdaw of Rheims, 1911, Look at the Clock, 1911, and The Wake of O'Connor, 1914, 6 short quintets for piano and strings, and about 150 highly original songs (30 by Fiona Macleod). G., A.

Bathe, William (1564–1614). 16th C. G.

Batiste, Antoine Édouard (Paris, 1820–1876, do.). Noted French organist, trained at the Paris Conservatory, where from 1836 he was professor of solfeggio, harmony and choral singing. From 1842 he was organist at St.-Nicholas-des-Champs and from 1854 at St.-Eustache. Wrote numerous facile and popular organ-works and edited the Conservatory text-book of solfeggio (12 vols.), with useful original matter. G.

Batka, Richard (Prague, 1868–1922, Vienna). Bohemian musicologist (Ph.D., Prague University), in 1896–98 (with Teibler) editor of the Neue Musikalische Rundschau at Prague, critic for the Neue Revue and Tageblatt, and conductor of the Dürerbund (1903–08), from 1897 also editor of the Kunstwart in Vienna, from 1908 in Vienna as also editor of Der Merker (with Specht), lecturer on music-history for the Akademie der Tonkunst and critic for the Fremdenblatt. Wrote biographies of Bach, Schumann (Reclam ed. 1892), and Wagner (1912), Aus der Musik- u. Theaterwelt, 1894, Martin Plüdemann, 1896, Musikalische Streifzüge, 1898, Die Musik der Griechen, 1900, Die mehrstimmige Kunstmusik des Mittelalters, 1901, Die Lieder Mülchs von Prag, 1905, Die Musik in Böhmen, 1906, Gesch. der Musik in Böhmen, vol. i. 1906,

Aus der Opernwelt, 1907, Allgemeine Gesch. des Musik, 2 vols. 1909–11, besides editing Bunte Bühne (from 1902), Mozart's poetry (1906) and Hausmusik (1907), and contributing critical essays to Schlesinger's Musikführer.

Batta, Alexandre (Maastricht, 1816–1902, Versailles). Fine Belgian 'cellist, pupil of Platel, from 1835 living in Paris, with numerous tours throughout the Continent. Wrote many effective 'cello-pieces.

Battaille, Charles Amable (Nantes, 1822–1872, Paris). French physician, becoming in 1848–57 a bass on the staff of the Opéra-Comique, and from 1851 professor of singing at the Conservatory. Wrote a valuable method (1861–63), including extensive physiological data. G.

Battanchon, Félix (Paris, 1814–1893, do.). French 'cellist, pupil of Vasin and Norblin, from 1840 in the Opéra orchestra. In 1846 he invented a small 'cello, calling it the 'baryton,' but his advocacy of it had small result.

Batten, Adrian (?1585–1637). 17th C. G.

Battishill, Jonathan (London, 1738–1801, do.). English organist and composer, early boy-chorister at St. Paul's under Savage, then Boyce's deputy as organist for the Chapel Royal and cembalist at Covent Garden, from 1764 also organist in various city churches. Best known for anthems, glees, catches and songs, but also wrote (with Arne) the opera Almena, 1764, and the pantomime The Rites of Hecate, 1764. In 1763 he married the stage-singer Miss Davis (d. 1777). He collected a large library, chiefly non-musical. Memoir by Busby in Monthly Mag. 1802. G.

Battista, Vincenzo (Naples, 1823–1873, do.). Italian composer, pupil of the Naples Conservatory. Wrote 14 operas for Naples (from 1844).

Batke, Max (n. Windlacken, 1863–1916, Berlin). East Prussian singing-teacher, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, from 1891 teacher at the Stern Conservatory and in 1900 starting a school that in 1910 became the Seminar für Schulgesang. In 1902 he was active in promoting concerts for young people. Since 1898 he has published many manuals related to elementary instruction in the public schools, including collections of songs.

Batton, Désiré Alexandre (Paris, 1797–1855, Versailles). French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory, from 1842 one of its inspectors and later teacher of singing. Won the Prix de Rome in 1817 with the cantata La Mort d'Adonis. Four early operas (1818–28) were unsuccessful, but he coöperated with Auber, Hérold and others in the effective La Marquise de Brinvilliers, 1831. G.

Battu, Pantaléon (Paris, 1799–1870, do.). French violinist, pupil of Kreutzer, until 1830 in the orchestra of the Opéra and the court, and in 1846–59 assistant-concertmaster at the Opéra. Wrote 2 violin-concertos, 3 duos concertants, romances, etc.

Bätz, Karl (in Thuringia, 1851–1902, Berlin). After 15 years in America, in 1886 he settled in Berlin, starting the Musikinstrumenten-Zeitung in 1890. Wrote on Indian instruments (1876) and instrument-making in general.

Bauck, Wilhelm (Gothenburg, 1808-1877, Stockholm). Swedish critic and author, from 1842 writing for different papers in Stockholm and from 1858 lecturing on music-history at the Conservatory. Author of Handbok i Musikens Historia, 1862-88, Musiklära, 2 parts, 1864, '72, Musikaliskt Reallæikon, 1871, and Musik och Teater, 1868, besides a string-quartet and some piano-pieces.

Baudiot, Charles Nicolas (Nancy, 1773-1849, Paris). French 'cellist, pupil of J. B. Janson and in 1802 his successor as professor in the Paris Conservatory, and in 1816-32 in the court-orchestra. Wrote much for the 'cello alone or in ensemble, a method and (with Levasseur and Baillot) the Conservatory method as well.

Bauer, Harold (n. London, 1873). Distinguished pianist (German-English in parentage), in youth (till 1892) a violinist, pupil of Pollitzer, but from 1893 appearing as pianist, first in Paris, then in Russia and soon throughout the musical world, coming to the United States in 1900. Besides standing in the first rank as a soloist he is highly accomplished as an ensemble-player. His répertoire includes all branches of piano-literature, but he is noted for interpretations of Brahms, Schumann and Franck. He has edited and revised some important works. A.

Bauer, Moritz (Hamburg, 1875). Originally educated at Munich, Strasburg and Freiburg as a physician and served for a time as army-surgeon, but turned to musical studies at Leipzig and Frankfort (Ph.D. of Zurich Univ. in 1904). From 1904 teacher of history, analysis and pedagogy at the Hoch Conservatory, Frankfort, and since 1914 professor in the Academy of Sciences there. Author of Historie oder Pamphlet?, 1910, Beiträge zur Kenntnis d. Lieder Schuberts, 1914, and Iwan Knorr, 1916, besides some vocal pieces.

Bäuerle, Hermann (in Würtemberg, 1869). R. C. priest since 1895, also student at the Ratisbon Music School and from 1901 professor of composition there. In 1906 he took a Ph.D. at Leipzig with the thesis Eine musikphilologische Studie über 7 Busspsalmen Lassos. He has advocated since 1903 the editing of old church-music in modern form, publishing a series including 4 vols. of Palestrina (1903-06), one each of Lasso, Vittoria and Fux, besides articles and essays on the subject. In 1921 he founded the Ulm Conservatory.

Baulduin, Noël. 16th C. G.

Baumbach, Friedrich August (1753-1813, Leipzig). In 1778-89 director of the Hamburg Opera and then in Leipzig composing for piano, violin, etc. (including Gesänge am Klavier, 1798) and writing for the Handwörterbuch über d. schönen Künste, 1794.

Baumfelder, Friedrich (Dresden, 1836-1916, do.). Saxon pianist, pupil of Joh. Schneider and the Leipzig Conservatory, from about 1860 cantor of the Dreikönigskirche in Dresden and director of the Schumann chorus. Wrote a symphony, a piano-sonata and suite, Der Geiger zu Gmünd for chorus and many showy salon-pieces and études for piano.

Baumgart, Expedit Felix (Glogau, 1817-1871, Bad Warmbrunn). Silesian teacher, from 1843 in the Institut für Kirchenmusik at Breslau (theory and organ). Edited K. P. E. Bach's Sonaten für Kenner und Liebhaber. Memoir by Palm, 1872.

Baumgarten, Karl Friedrich (Lübeck, ?1740-1824, London). North German organist, pupil of J. P. Kunzen, from 1780 organist of the Lutheran Chapel in London and leader of the orchestra at Covent Garden (till 1794). Wrote various stage-pieces, including Robin Hood, 1784, and Blue Beard, 1792. He taught many able pupils. G.

Baumgartner, August (Munich, 1814-1862, do.). Bavarian choirmaster in Munich, publishing essays on musical shorthand in the Stenographische Zeitschrift (1852) and separately (1853-56), besides church-music, etc.

Baumgartner, Wilhelm (Rorschach, 1820-1867, Zurich). Swiss composer of men's choruses, songs and popular piano-pieces, from 1845 active at Zurich, after 1859 as director at the University. He was somewhat intimate with Wagner in 1850-60.

Bäumker, Wilhelm (Elberfeld, 1842-1905, Rurich). Rhenish R. C. priest, from 1892 at Rurich, contributing many articles on church-music and musicians to the Allgem. deutsche Biographie, Eitner's Monatshefte and Haber's Jahrbuch, with monographs on Palestrina and Lassus (1877-78), Zur Gesch. d. Tonkunst in Deutschland, 1881, Der Todtentanz, 1881, Niederländische geistliche Lieder d. 15. Jahrh., 1888, Ein deutsches geistliches Liederbuch (15th C.), 1896, and especially Das katholische deutsche Kirchenlied, 4 vols. 1883-1911 (completed by J. Gotzen). G.

Baur, Charles Alexis (Tours, 1789-?). Noted French harpist, pupil of Nadermann, from 1805 in Paris and in 1820-34 (or later) in London.

Bausch, Ludwig Christian August (Naumburg, 1805-1871, Leipzig). Saxon violin-maker, from 1826 at Dresden and Dessau and from 1839 at Leipzig, succeeded by his son Otto (1841-1874), from whom the business went to A. Paulus at Markneukirchen. Another son, Ludwig (1829-1871), spent many years in New York, returning finally to Leipzig.

Bauszern, Waldemar von (Berlin, 1866). Prussian conductor and composer, pupil of Kiel and Bargiel, from 1891 director of choral societies at Mannheim, from 1896 at Dresden, from 1903 at Cologne (teaching also in the Conservatory), from 1908 Degner's successor as head of the Weimar Conservatory and since 1916 Knorr's at the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfort. His fame as composer was due at first to Von Bülow's interest. Has written the operas Dichter und Welt, 1897, Dürer in Venedig, 1901, Herbert und Hilda, 1902, Der Bundschuh, 1904, and Satyros, 1920, 4 symphonies (of which the 3d, Leben, with final chorus from Goethe's Ganymed, and the 4th, for strings, wind and piano, are not yet published), the overture Champagner, a tragicomic orchestral ballade, a string-sextet, 2 piano-quintets, 3 string-quartets, other chamber-music, a Sonata Eroica for piano, the song-cycle Das klagende Lied, other songs and choruses, besides the large choral work Das hohe Lied vom Leben und Sterben (not yet produced). For the standard edition of Cornelius he edited Der Barbier von Bagdad and Der Cid, besides completing Gunlöd (given in 1906 at Cologne and, further revised, in 1918 at Halle).

Bax, Arnold E. Trevor (London, 1883). English composer, pupil of Matthay and Corder. Has written the symphonic poems Into the Twilight, 1908, In the Fairy Hills, 1909, and Christmas Eve on the Mountains, 1911, a Festival Overture, 1909, 2 string-quartets, a string-quintet, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, the choral works Fatherland, 1907, and Enchanted Summer, 1909, the ballet King Kajata, 1911, A Celtic Song-Cycle, 1905, piano-pieces and songs. G. A.

Bayer, Aloys (Sulzbach, 1802-1863, n. Chiemsee). Bavarian operatic tenor, in 1823-43 prominent at the Munich Opera, besides being noted as a lieder-singer. Härtinger was one of his pupils.

Bayer, Josef (Vienna, 1852-1913, do.). Prolific and effective Austrian composer of light operas and ballets, educated at the Vienna Conservatory, from 1870 violinist in the court-orchestra and from 1885 director of ballets at the Opera. He received decorations from the Austrian and Belgian governments. His first work, Der Chevalier von San Marco, 1881, was brought out in New York. Der Polizeichef, 1904, was extraordinarily successful. Several works utilize Bosnian folk-songs and Der Goldasoka has a Hindu subject.

Bazin, François Emanuel Joseph (Marseilles, 1816-1878, Paris). French teacher and composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1840), and from 1844 professor there, first of singing, then of harmony and from 1871 of composition (following Thomas). He was member of the Académie from 1872. Wrote 9 operas, from Le Trompette de M. le Prince, 1846, to L'Ours et le Pacha, 1870, the cantata Louise de Montfort, 1840, a mass, an oratorio, Psalm 137, and a Cours d'Harmonie for the Conservatory. G.

Bazzini, Antonio (Brescia, 1818-1897, Milan). Important Italian violinist and composer, originally a pupil of Camisoni, but much developed by later study of German models. From 1837, on Paganini's advice, till 1864 traveled widely as concertist. From 1873 he was professor of composition at the Milan Conservatory and from 1882 director. Wrote a notable string-quintet and 5 quartets, with many fine violin-pieces, violin-concertos, the opera Turanda, 1867, the symphonic poem Francesca da Rimini, 1890, the cantatas La Resurrezione di Cristo and Senacheribbo, overtures to Alfieri's Saul and Shakespere's King Lear, Psalms 51 and 56, songs, etc. G.

Beach, Amy Marcy, née Cheney (Henniker, N. H. 1867). Talented American pianist and composer, pupil of Perabo, Baermann and Hill, appearing often in concert from 1883, especially in Boston, where in 1885 she married Henry H. A. Beach (d. 1910). Has written a Gaelic Symphony, 1896, a piano-quintet, a piano-concerto, 1900, a mass, 1892, several choral works, a service, anthems and other church-music, a Suite Française for piano and many other characteristic piano-works, and numerous songs and part-songs. In 1893 she wrote a Festival Jubilate for the opening of the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and in 1898 and 1915 other choral pieces for the Omaha and San Francisco Expositions. G. A.

Beach, John Parsons (Gloversville, N. Y. 1877). American composer, pupil of the New England Conservatory and later of Gédalge and Bauer, from 1900 teaching in Minneapolis, from 1904 in New Orleans, from 1907 in Boston and since 1910 living much in Paris and Italy. Has written several picturesque chamber-works, piano-pieces and songs, with the stage-scene Pippa's Holiday, 1915, and the short fairy-opera Jornida and Jornidel. A.

Beale, Frederic Fleming (Troy, Kan. 1876). American teacher, pupil of Mrs. Gaynor, Weidig and Middelschulte, from 1908 at the University of Washington (Seattle) and since 1911 at the University of Idaho. Has written an orchestral Dance-Caprice, 1910, Psalm 24, the operetta The Magic Wheel, etc.

Beale, William (Landrake, 1784-1854, London). Noted English composer of glees and madrigals, pupil of Arnold and Cooke, from 1813 teaching in London. Published madrigal-collections, 1815, 1820, and won various prizes. G.

Beard, John (?1716-1791, Hampton). Eminent English tenor from 1736 (under Handel), in 1737-67 almost constantly engaged at Drury Lane or Covent Garden, from 1761 being proprietor and manager of the latter. Handel wrote for him the tenor rôles in all the greatest of his oratorios. G.

Beaton, Isabella (Grinnell, Ia. 1870). American pianist and composer, trained at the Grinnell Conservatory and under Moszkowski and Boise, from 1899 teaching in Cleveland and since 1910 head of her own school there. Has written an orchestral scherzo, 2 string-quartets, a piano-sonata, piano-fugues, etc. A.

Beauchamps, Pierre François Godard de (Paris, 1689-1761, do.). Author of two annals of the French musical stage, Recherches, 3 vols. 1735, and Bibliothèque, 1746.

Beaulieu [originally Martin], Marie Désiré (Paris, 1791-1863, Niort). French composer and author, trained at the Paris Conservatory, taking (but not using) the Grand Prix in 1810, settling at Niort, where he promoted chamber-music and in 1829 founded the society which in 1835 became the Association Musicale de l'Ouest, holding important annual festivals, and in 1836 started a choral society in Paris. To both societies he left large legacies. Wrote much fine church-music (from 1812), including a Requiem for Méhul, 1819, and a Messe Solennelle, 1845, 2 operas and some dramatic scenes, 3 oratorios, etc., and monographs on rhythm (1852), Gregorian music (1858) and the origin of music (1859). G.

Beauquier, Charles. (Besançon, 1833). For many years contributor to the Revue et Gazette Musicale and author of Philosophie de la Musique, 1865, La Musique et le Drame, 1884, two works on the musicians and popular songs of Franche-Comté, 1887, 1894, as well as the libretto of Lalo's Fiesque.

Beauvarlet, Jean Jacques [called B.-Charpentier] (Abbeville, 1730-1794, Paris). Able French organist, at first active at Lyons and from 1771 at Paris. Wrote fugues, Noëls Variés, 12 sets of pieces for church use and piano-sonatas.

Becher, Alfred Julius (Manchester, 1803-1848, Vienna). German-English critic, educated in Germany, living a restless life on the Continent and in England till 1841, when he settled in Vienna, writing for the Musik-Zeitung and the Sonntagsblätter. In 1848 he edited Der Radikale, was arrested for sedition and condemned to be shot. Wrote a symphony, a string-quartet, a 'cello-fantasia and songs, besides pamphlets on the Niederrheinische Musikfest, 1836, and on Jenny Lind, 1846. G.

Bechgaard, Julius (Copenhagen, 1843-1917, do.). Danish composer, pupil at the Leipzig Conservatory and of Gade. Has written the operas Prode, 1893, and Frau Inge, 1894, a concert-overture, many songs, including 2 cycles for baritone, etc.

Bechstein, Friedrich Wilhelm Karl (Gotha, 1826-1900, Berlin). Saxon piano-maker, founder in 1856 of a famous business in Berlin, with branches in Paris, Petrograd and London, which has an international reputation. G.

Beck, Franz (Mannheim, 1730-1809, Bordeaux). Badenese violinist, pupil of Stamitz, who spent his life in Paris and (from 1777) Bordeaux, where he organized concerts from 1780. Among his pupils were Blanchard and Bochsa. Wrote 24 symphonies, string-quartets, a Stabat Mater, 1789, the operas La Belle Jardinière, 1767, Pandora, 1789, and L'Ile Déserte, and piano-sonatas. G.

Beck, Heinrich Valentin (Maar, 1698-1758, Frankfurt). Hessian cantor and composer, from 1718 at Lauterbach, from 1734 at Hanau and from 1738 second court-director at Frankfurt, where he was popular as teacher in the best families, including that of Goethe's grandfather. Wrote cantatas of value. Memoir by Bodo Wolf, 1911.

Beck, Johann Baptist (Gebweiler, 1881) Alsatian musicologist, pupil of Brumpt (organ) and Ph.D. of Strasburg University in romance languages (1907), since 1920 lecturer on music-history at the Institute of Musical Art, New York.

He has made extensive studies throughout Europe, leading to the treatises Die Melodien der Troubadours, 1908, and La Musique des Troubadours, 1910, and an essay in the Riemann Festschrift, 1909. He is preparing complete facsimile editions of Troubadour and Trouvère melodies.

Beck, Johann Heinrich (Cleveland, 1856). American violinist and composer, trained at Leipzig, from 1882 head of the Schubert Quartet in Cleveland, in 1889-90 'orchestral conductor in Detroit and in 1901-12 in Cleveland, as well as elsewhere. Has written the overtures Romeo and Juliet, Lara, 1886, and Skirnismal, 1887, several other orchestral pieces, 2 string-sextets and a quartet, the cantata Deukalion, etc. A.

Beck, Johann Nepomuk (Pest, 1827-1904, Presburg). Able Hungarian operatic baritone from about 1850, first at Pest and Vienna and then throughout Germany, in 1853-85 being engaged at the Vienna Court Opera. His son Joseph (1850-1903) was also a fine baritone, from 1876 at Berlin and from 1880 at Frankfurt. G.

Becker, Albert Ernst Anton (Quedlinburg, 1834-1899, Berlin). Important Saxon composer, pupil of Bönicke and Dehn, teaching in Berlin from 1856 (after 1881 in the Scharwenka Conservatory), and from 1891 director of the Domchor. Wrote a notable symphony (prize at Vienna, 1861), a grand mass, 1878, the oratorio Selig aus Gnade, 1890, a Reformationscantate, 1883, Psalms 104 and 147 (a cappella), many dignified motets, etc., a piano-quintet, a remarkable piano-quartet, several works for violin or 'cello and orchestra, an organ-fantasia and fugue, a Ballade and Scherzo for piano, many songs and the opera Loreley, 1898. G.

Becker, Diedrich. 17th C. G.

Becker, Georg (Frankenthal, 1834-?). Bavarian pianist and musicologist, living at Geneva, long a contributor to various periodicals in Germany, France, Italy and England, and editor for the Society of Musical Writers. Author of La Musique en Suisse, 1874, La Musique à Genève depuis 50 Ans, De l'Instrumentation du XV<sup>e</sup> au XVII<sup>e</sup> Siècle, 1884, Aperçu sur la Chanson Française (11-17th Cs), Les Projets de Notation Musicale du XIX<sup>e</sup> Siècle, and essays on Rousseau's Pygmalion, Eustorg de Beaulieu, Gêrault, Goudimel, Cauley and Waelrant. G.

Becker, Hugo (Strasburg, 1864). Superior Alsatian 'cellist, pupil of his father (see below), Kündiger, F. W. Grützmacher, Hess, De Swert and Piatti, from 1884 in the opera-orchestra at Frankfurt, with extensive tours as soloist, teacher at the Hoch Conservatory, in 1890-1906 member of the Heermann Quartet, from 1901 engaged at the London Popular Concerts, and since 1909 teacher at the Hochschule, Berlin. He is eminent both as soloist and in ensemble, and has often played in trio with Ysaÿe and Busoni. Has written a 'cello-concerto (1898), variations and pieces. G.

Becker, Jean (Mannheim, 1833-1884, do.). father of the foregoing. Famous Badenese violinist, pupil of Kettenus and Lachner, till 1858 concertmaster of the Mannheim orchestra, made highly successful tours, from 1866 lived in Florence, in 1867-80 organized the Florentine Quartet (with Masi, Chiostri and Hilpert). His daughter Jeanne (1859-1893) was a fine pianist, and his son Hans (1860-1917) a good violist and violinist, long teaching in the Leipzig Conservatory. G.

Becker, Karl Ferdinand (Leipzig, 1804-1877, do.). Saxon organist, teacher and author, pupil of Schicht and Schneider, from 1825 organist at the Peterskirche, Leipzig, and from 1837 at the Nicolaikirche, in 1843-56 also teaching at the Conservatory. Wrote Die Hausmusik in Deutschland im 16., 17. u. 18. Jahrh., 1840, and Die Tonwerke des 16. u. 17. Jahrh., 1847, and revised Forkel's Musikliteratur, 1836, '39. His valuable library was bequeathed to the city of Leipzig. G.

Becker, Konstantin Julius (Freiberg, 1811-1859, Oberlössnitz). Saxon composer and editor, pupil of Anacker and K. F. Becker, in 1837-46 on the staff of the Neue Zeitschrift, and in 1843-46 teacher in Dresden. Wrote the opera Die Erstürmung von Belgrad, 1848, a symphony, the rhapsody Das Zigeunerleben, a noted Männergesangschule, 1845, 2 harmony text-books and a translation of Berlioz' Voyage Musical, 1843, besides several novels. G.

Becker, Reinhold (Adorf, 1842). Saxon violinist and composer, from 1870 in Dresden, becoming in 1884-94 conductor of the Liedertafel. His career as performer was checked by a muscular affection. Has written the operas Frauenlob, 1892, and Rathold, 1896, a symphony, the symphonic poem Der Prinz von Homburg, 2 violin-concertos, many effective men's choruses and songs.

Becker, René Louis (Bischheim, 1882). Alsatian organist, pupil of Muench, Blumer, Somborn and Gessner, in America since 1904, from 1905 teaching at St. Louis University and both church- and concert-organist, since 1915 at the Alton (Ill.) Cathedral. Has written 5 organ-sonatas and other useful organ-pieces, including a toccata and a suite, many masses and some other church-music, and piano-pieces. A.

Becker, Valentin Eduard (Würzburg, 1814-1890, Vienna). Bavarian composer of men's choruses, 2 operas, a quintet for clarinet and strings, masses, etc.

Becker. The leading piano-making firm in Russia, founded in 1841 at Petrograd by Jakob Becker, a Bavarian. From about 1850 it succeeded in competing successfully with foreign makers. G.

Beckman, Bror (Kristinehamn, 1866). Swedish composer, pupil of Lindegren, since 1904 director of the Stockholm Conservatory. Has written a symphony, Sommernächte for strings, a violin-sonata, chamber-music, piano-pieces and songs.

Beckmann, Gustav (Berlin, 1883). Student of musicology at Berlin University (Ph. D. 1916).

Author of Das Violinspiel in Deutschland vor 1700, 1918, and edited lists of periodical-articles in the I. M. G. Zeitschr. 1911-14.

Beckmann, Johann Friedrich Gottlieb (1737-1792, Celle). Noted organist and harpsichordist, excelling in improvisation. Wrote 12 clavier-sonatas, 6 concertos and other pieces, besides the opera Lukas und Hannchen, 1782.

Beckmann, Wilhelm Gustav (Bochum, 1865). Rhenish organist, pupil of the Inst. für Kirchenmusik, Berlin, from 1896 organist at the Kreuzkirche in Essen and in 1899 founder of an Organists' Union for the Rhineland and in 1908 of a Union of Evangelical Church-Musicians (at Berlin). Has written a manual for pastors and organists.

Beckwith, John Christmas (Norwich, 1750-1809, do.). English organist, pupil of Hayes, at St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich, from 1794 and at the cathedral in 1808-09. Mus.D. of Oxford in 1803. Wrote church-music, organ-concertos and a chant-book, 1808, with a history of chanting. G.

Becquié, A. (Toulouse, ? 1800-1825, Paris). French flutist in the orchestra of the Opéra-Comique, Paris, composing a Grand Fantaisie et Variations and other effective flute-works.

Becquié, Jean Marie (Toulouse, 1797-1876, Paris), brother of the above. Excellent French violinist, long in the orchestra of the Théâtre Italien, Paris, composing a violin-fantasia and other pieces.

Bečvářovsky, Anton Felix (Jungbunzlau, 1754-1823, Berlin). Bohemian organist and composer, pupil of Kucharz, from 1777 at Prague, from 1779 at Brunswick, from 1796 at Bamberg and from 1800 at Berlin. Wrote 3 piano-concertos, 3 sonatas and many songs.

Bédard, Jean Baptiste (Rennes, ? 1765-1815?, Paris). Able Breton violinist and harpist, from 1796 in Paris, composing 2 symphonies, 5 harp-sonatas and various pieces for harp with other instruments.

Bedford, Herbert (London, 1867). English painter, also trained at the Guildhall School. In 1894 he married the singer and composer Liza Lehmann. Has written the symphony The Optimist, the symphonic poem Sowing the Wind, the suite Queen Mab, the interlude Over the Hills and Far Away, various songs and also the opera Kit Marlowe.

Bedinger, Hugo (Stockholm, 1876-1914, Westeras). Swedish composer of orchestral and chamber-music, a violin-sonata, the oratorio Bethania, etc.

Bedos de Celles, François (n. Béziers, 1706-1779, St.-Maur). French Benedictine at Toulouse, member of the Académies des Sciences at Bordeaux and Paris. Author of the notable L'Art du Facteur d'Orgues, 3 vols. 1766-78 (vol. 4 added in German, 1793) and an article on the organ at St.-Martin in Tours (1762). G.

Beecham, Thomas (Liverpool, 1879). English conductor from 1899, when he formed an amateur orchestra at Huyton, and from 1905, when he first undertook more advanced work at London. In 1906-08 he started the New Symphony Orchestra and in 1908 founded the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, achieving such success that from 1910 he undertook opera as well at Covent Garden, bringing out many new works. Since 1915 he has led the Philharmonic Society. He was knighted in 1916. A.

Beecke, Ignaz von (Wimpfen, 1733-1803, Wallerstein). A cavalry-captain in Württemberg who became Musikintendant to Prince Oettingen-Wallerstein. He was a fine clavierist and a friend of Jommelli, Gluck and Mozart. Wrote 7 operas, an oratorio, symphonies, quartets, clavier-sonatas, etc. See I. M. G. Sammelbde. 9. 107-14.

Beer, Jakob Liebmann. See Meyerbeer.

Beer [Boer], Joseph (Grünwald, 1744-1811, Potsdam). Bohemian trumpeter and (from 1771) remarkable clarinetist, first at Paris and then touring extensively, in 1787-94 at Wallerstein and finally entering the Prussian court-band. He became the foremost player of his time, excelling in execution and in delicate expression. He also added to the number of keys. Wrote concertos, duets and variations. G.

Beer, Max Joseph (Vienna, 1851-1908, do.). Austrian pianist, pupil of Dessoff, and composer of 3 operas, including Der Streik der Schmiede, 1897, the cantata Der wilde Jäger, a piano-suite and pieces, songs, etc.

Beer-Walbrunn, Anton (Kohlberg, 1864). Bavarian composer, trained at the Munich Conservatory and since 1901 teaching there. Has written the operas Sühne, 1894, Don Quixote, 1908, Das Ungeheuer, 1914, 3 symphonies, an overture, a Deutsche Suite for orchestra, several other works, original or arranged, for orchestra, 5 string-quartets, a piano-quintet and quartet, sonatas for 'cello and for violin, several organ-works, the choral Mahomets Gesang, 1896, many choruses and part-songs, many songs, etc. See essay and list of works in Sonneck's Suum Cuique, p. 157.

Beeth, Lola (Cracow, 1864). Galician operatic soprano, pupil of Dustmann, Viardot-Garcia and Artôt, from 1882 at Berlin, in 1888-95 and 1897-1902 at Vienna, also at Paris, New York and elsewhere, since 1902 living at Berlin.

Beethoven, Ludwig van (Bonn, [Dec. 16] 1770-1827 [Mar. 26], Vienna). One of the greatest of musicians, the founder of the distinctive lines of progress in the 19th century, though himself adhering largely to the typical forms of the 18th. On his father's side he was of Belgian descent, but his mother and his birthplace were Rhenish, while his work was mostly done at Vienna, so that he is often counted in the Austrian circle. The immediate effects of his style were most evident in Germany, so that he is also classed with later masters there.

Both his grandfather and his father were musicians in the Electoral Chapel at Bonn, the former having been its head from 1761. His father was harsh and often intemperate, but his mother (from Ehrenbreitstein) was gentle and lovable (d. 1787). Ludwig was the eldest of the three sons who survived, the others being Caspar (d. 1815) and Johann (d. 1848)—both selfish and unprincipled characters. His early home-life, therefore, had many trying features, including poverty. But he grew up in contact with several good musicians, especially Neefe, the court-organist, and Franz Ries, the violinist. His own precocity from the age of four was urged forward by his father in hopes of making money. At twelve he was already often taking the organ for Neefe and at thirteen began playing the harpsichord at the theater-rehearsals, besides soon being violist in the orchestra. Before he was twenty he was already an extraordinary pianist, but had composed comparatively little, though he had begun to test his strength in several styles, including chamber-music. In 1790 and '92 Haydn had commended his work at Bonn, and in 1787 Mozart at Vienna prophesied great things for him. He had already begun to attract the interest of cultivated amateurs, such as the Von Breuning family and the young Waldstein.

In 1792 he removed to Vienna, till 1794 on a stipend from the Elector. He went to Haydn and Albrechtsberger for lessons, as well as to Schenck and others, though his originality and independence made him a puzzling pupil. He began to secure public notice from 1795 as a pianist, especially as interpreter and improvisator. In 1796 he made a tour to Nuremberg, Prague and Berlin. He rapidly made his way among aristocratic connoisseurs, and Prince Lichnowsky allotted him an annual stipend. From about 1795, also, he began to publish compositions in several forms, including piano-sonatas, quartets, a symphony, the ballet Prometheus, the oratorio Christus am Oelberg and some other vocal works. But by 1800 he began to suffer from deafness, an affliction, as appears from the letter often called his 'Will' (1802), that tended to cause him deep bitterness and even despair. In general, the style of this first period is modeled on the principles of Haydn and Mozart, especially in the adoption of the sonata-form as the main type of structure, though handled with new power and beauty of content.

The period from about 1800 to 1815 was full of production and of brilliant success. The list of piano-sonatas grew to 27, the symphonies to 8, the piano-concertos to 5, the string-quartets to about a dozen, and the opera Fidelio (first given in 1805-06 and in revised form in 1814), with various dramatic overtures, and the Mass in C, with other choral works, appeared as signs of the restless outreaching of his genius in all directions. He was under constant emotional strain, since many different enterprises were usually under way at once and his excitement and absorption in them were extreme. But he had the elation of manifold and powerful creation, coupled with repeated public triumphs.

On the other hand, his deafness was steadily increasing, the problem of pecuniary support was never permanently solved, there was more than one hopeless falling in love, and the general status of Austrian society was extremely unsettled. In 1808 he was invited to become musician to Jerome Bonaparte at Kassel, but this was offset by the raising in Vienna of a fund to hold him there, where it was expected that he might be made imperial court-musician. Under these conflicting conditions his style leaped into full maturity, exhibiting a marvelous assurance and wealth of inspiration, with a masterful handling of every resource of construction and of presentation. His deviations from the objective regularity of the 'classical' style became more striking as the fullness of his subjective impulse grew.

In 1815 his brother Caspar died and committed his nine years' old boy to Beethoven's care. This charge, with the difficulties and anxieties it involved, added to his now absolute deafness and consequent social isolation, tended to fill the next years with mental and physical stress. This was plainly reflected in the change that came over his style. The number of works produced during this final period was relatively small, but their scope and intensity were indescribably great. His spirit was deeply perturbed and also exalted, and musical creation was his one means of self-expression. The later works include five great piano-sonatas, the Choral Symphony, the Missa Solemnis and the culminating string-quartets. In all these there is an astonishing freedom of form, a constant grandeur and even gigantism of conception, and a straining eagerness of self-revelation that set them in the highest class of musical creation. The strong artistic individuality of all Beethoven's work was here carried to a sublime climax that remains one of the wonders of music-history.

In 1826 the scapegrace nephew, having failed in various ways, attempted suicide and was banished from Vienna. Beethoven went with him to his brother Johann's country-place on the Danube. Exposure and fatigue led to pneumonia and dropsy. His resulting death was regarded as a public calamity, and his funeral drew a vast concourse. The burial was in the Währing cemetery.

Beethoven's figure was short and stocky, his face rugged and rather stern, though capable of brightening in humor or enthusiasm, and his total personal impression one of force and character, though often awkward and angular. In temperament, perhaps owing to peculiarities in his physical constitution, he was often odd and freaky, with a tendency to suspicion and even needless distrust and dislike. In spirit he was deeply sincere and earnest, with an essential uprightness and nobility that won and held both respect and affection. His absentmindedness and capriciousness often involved him in much practical difficulty, but he met all adverse conditions, whether small or large, with indomitable courage, energy and aspiration.

No composer of high rank has seemed to have greater difficulty in realizing his conceptions. He left an incomparable series of 'sketch-books' which recorded many of the stages through which his works grew into final form. When once this form had been reached, however, he was extremely tenacious of it, usually refusing all alteration.

With him instrumental music entered upon a new phase. He was the first composer to utilize the capacity of the modern piano and the first to bring out the latent powers of the modern orchestra. With him began the modern emphasis upon music as the special voice of personality or self-expression as contrasted with the merely objective beauty exalted in the preceding period. Thus he opened a new era.

His separate works total upwards of 250, of which 138 bear an opus-number, sometimes for a group. Below is a classified summary (opus-numbers in brackets):

- | Symphonies—  |                                   | Orchestral Works                        |                                    |
|--|-----------------------------------|---|------------------------------------|
| 1  | [21] C (1800)                     | 6                                       | [68] F, Pastoral (1808)     |
| 2  | [36] D (1802)                     | 7                                       | [92] A (1813)                      |
| 3  | [55] E-flat, Eroica (1805) | 8                                       | [93] F (1814)                      |
| 4  | [67] B-flat (1807)                | 9                                       | [125] D min., Choral (1824) |
| 5  | [60] C min. (1808)                |   |                                    |
| Sketches of a 10th (1826). Score and parts of an early work found at Jena in 1910.   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Overtures—   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Prometheus [43] (1801)  |                                   | Ruins of Athens [113] G (1812)   |                                    |
| Leonore (Fidelio) —   |                                   | King Stephen [117] E-flat (1812) |                                    |
| No. 2 [72a] C (1805)   |                                   | Battle of Vittoria [91] (1813)   |                                    |
| No. 3 [72a] C (1806)   |                                   | 'Namensfeier' [115] C (1815)            |                                    |
| No. 1 [138] C (1807)   |                                   | Fidelio [72b] E (1814)           |                                    |
| Coriolanus [62] C min. (1807)   |                                   | Weihe des Hauses [124] C (1822)  |                                    |
| Egmont [84] F min. (1810)   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Sketches of one on b-a-c-h (1822-25). Also incidental numbers for Prometheus , Egmont , Ruins of Athens and King Stephen .  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Concertos—   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Piano: 1 [15] C (1800); 2 [19] B-flat (1797); 3 [37] C min. (1800); 4 [58] G (1806); 5 [73] E-flat, Emperor (1809).   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Violin: [61] D (1806), also for piano (1807).  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Piano, violin and 'cello: [56] C (1805).   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Piano and chorus, Choral Fantasia [80] C min. (1808).   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Fragments of works for piano in D (1790, 1815) and for violin in C (early). Also a Rondo in B-flat for piano (1797) and Romanzas in G and F for violin (1802), besides Cadenzas for the piano-concertos.   |                                   |   |                                    |
| Allegretto in E-flat, music for a Ritter-Ballet , Marches in C ( Tarpeia ), D and F, and 36 Dances.  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Chamber-Works  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Octet for string in E-flat [103] (early), also as quintet for strings [4] (1796).  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Septet for strings and wind in E-flat [20] (1800), also as trio for piano, clarinet and 'cello [38] (1804).  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Sextets for strings and horns in E-flat [81b] (1795), and for wind in E-flat [71] (1796).  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Quintets for piano and wind in E-flat [16] (1796), and for strings in C [29] (1801) and in D (fugue) [137] (1817). See above, under Octet, and below, under Quartets and Trios.  |                                   |   |                                    |
| Quartets for strings in F, G, D, C min., A, B-flat [18] (1800), F, E min., C [59] (1806), E-flat, Harfenspieltett [74] (1809), F min. [95] (1810), E-flat [127] (1824), B-flat [130] (1825), C-sharp min. [131] (1826), A min. [132] (1825) and F [135] (1826). Also Fugue in B- |                                   |   |                                    | flat [133] (1826) and arrangement in F of piano-sonata in E (1802).

 Quartets for piano and strings in C, E-flat and D (early).
 Also arrangement of quintet in E-flat.
 3 Equal for 4 trombones (1812).
 Trios for strings in E-flat [3] (early), G, D and C min. [9] (1797). Also Serenade in D [8] (1797).
 Trios for piano and strings in E-flat, G, C min. [1] (1795), the last also for string-quintet [104] (1817), D, E-flat [70] (1808) and B-flat [97] (1811). Also 2 early works in E-flat and B-flat, the latter one movement only. Sketches in F min. (1816); sets of 2 Variations in E-flat and G [44, 121a] (early, 1823).
 Trios for oboes and English horn in C [87] (1795) and for piano, clarinet and 'cello in B-flat [11] (1804), also arrangement of the Septet [38] (1804). Serenade for flute, violin and viola in D [25] (1797). Variations, La ci darem, for oboes and English horn (1795).
 Sonatas for violin in D, A, E-flat [12] (1797), A min. [23] (1801), F [24] (1801), A, C min., G [30] (1802), A, Kreutzer [47] (1803) and G [96] (1812); for 'cello in F, G min. [5] (1796), A [69] (1808), C and D [102] (1815); for horn in F [17] (1800). Variations for violin in F and for 'cello in F, G, E-flat and various lesser works.

Piano-Works

Sonatas—
1 [2] F min.	19 [49] G min.
2 [2] A	20 [49] G		(1796)
3 [2] C	21 [53] C, Waldstein (1804)
4 [7] E-flat (1796)	22 [54] F (1804)
5 [10] C min.	23 [57] F min. Appassionata (1806)
6 [10] F			(1797)
7 [10] D	24 [78] F-sharp (1809)
8 [13] C min. Pathétique (1797)	25 [79] G (1809)
9 [14] E	26 [81a] B-flat, Lebewohl , etc. (1809)
10 [14] G (1798)	27 [90] E min. (1814)
11 [22] B-flat (1800)	28 [101] A (1816)
12 [26] A-flat (1801)	29 [106] B-flat (1818)
13 [27] E-flat	30 [109] E (1820)
14 [27] C-sharp (1801)	31 [110] A-flat (1821)
15 [28] D (1801)	32 [111] C min. (1822)
16 [31] G
17 [31] D min. (1802)
18 [31] E-flat

Also early works in E-flat, F min., D, C, and sonatinas in G, F, with Bagatelles [33, 119, 126], Preludes [39] and in F min., Rondos in C, G [51], in G [129] and in A, Phantasie in G min. [77], Polonaise in C [89], many dances and lesser pieces. About 25 sets of Variations [34, 35, 76, 105, 107, 129, etc.].
 4-hand Sonata in D [6], 3 Marches [45], Fugue [134] (from [133]), and 2 sets of Variations.

Vocal Works with Orchestra

Opera, Fidelio, in 2 acts (originally Leonore) [72a, 72b] (1805–06, '14).
 Oratorio, Christus am Oelberg [85] (1803).
 Masses in C [86] (1807) and D, Solemnis [123] (1823).
 Cantatas, Meeresstille u. glückliche Fahrt [112] (1815) and Der glorreiche Augenblick [136] (1814). In 1836 the latter was also published as Preis der Tonkunst, with text by Rochlitz.
 Also Elegischer Gesang [118], Opferlied [121b] and Bundeslied [122].
 See also 9th Symphony and Choral Fantasia.
 Scene and Aria for soprano, Ah, perfido [65] (1796).
 Terzet for soprano, tenor and bass, Tremate, empi, tremate [116] (1814).

Other Vocal Works

Gesang der Mönche for 4 voices a cappella.
 18 vocal Canons.
 Folk-songs with piano, violin and 'cello—37 Scottish, 57 Irish, 26 Welsh and 12 various.
 About 65 solo songs with piano.

The standard complete edition is that of Breitkopf & Hartel, 40 vols. 1864–67, with additional volumes in 1887 and 1904. The best thematic catalogue of works is that of Nottebohm, new ed. 1913, with comprehensive bibliography by Kastner. The monumental biography is that of Thayer, of which 3 vols. in German translation were issued by Deiters, 1866, '72, '79, and 2 more by Riemann, 1907, '08, besides an English edition, edited by Krehbiel, 3 vols. 1921.

Among almost innumerable memoirs important examples are those of Schindler, 1838 (new ed. 1906), Von Lenz, 1855 (new ed. 1908), Marx, 1859 (6th ed. 1906), Nohl, 1864–77 (new ed. 1906), Wasielewski, 1888, Von Frimmel, 1901, Kalischer, 1910, Bekker, 1911, d'Indy, 1911, Kerst, 2 vols. 1913, Leitzmann, 1918, Hensel, 1918, etc. For references to the enormous critical literature see Nottebohm (useful summary in Baker, Dict. of Musicians, 1919, p. 67).

Beffari, Louis François (Nonancourt, 1751–1838, Paris). In 1792–1816 police-commissioner in Paris. Author of many elaborate and important records of the Opéra. His invaluable library was bequeathed to the city of Paris, but was burned during the Commune in 1871. G.

Begnig, Giuseppe de (Lugo, 1793–1849, ?). Italian stage-singer from 1813, from 1819 at Paris and in 1822–24 in England. His wife, née Ronzi (?1800–1853), sang with him in Italy, France and England. G.

Behaim, Michel (1416–1474). 15th C.

Behm, Eduard (Stettin, 1862). Pomeranian teacher and composer, trained at Leipzig and Berlin, after work in Vienna, Stettin and Erfurt, director of the Schwanzer Conservatory, Berlin (till 1901). Has written a symphony (Mendelssohn prize), a piano-concerto (Bosendorf prize), a string-sextet (using the violotta), a clarinet-quintet, a piano-trio, a vio in-concerto, sonatas and suite, and the operas Der Schelm von Bergen, 1899, Marientind, 1902, and Das Gelöbnis, 1914.

Behn, Hermann (Hamburg, 1859). Educated in law at Heidelberg University, musically a pupil of Bruckner, Rheinberger and Zumpe, from 1887 teaching in Hamburg, gaining the title of professor in 1917. Since 1897 he has lectured on music-history. Has written a piano-sonata and many songs, besides making notable 2-piano arrangements of 12 overtures (Weber, Beethoven, Wagner), parts of Wagner's operas, Bruckner's 7th and Mahler's 2d Symphonies.

Behnke, Emil (Stettin, 1836–1892, Ostend). Eminent Pomeranian vocal teacher and expert, long resident in London. Wrote The Mechanism of the Human Voice, 1880, Voice, Song and Speech (with Browne), 1883, etc.

Behrend, William (Copenhagen, 1861). Danish lawyer and publicist, long critic for various journals and contributor to biographical dictionaries and since 1917 librarian and teacher of music-history at the Copenhagen Conservatory. Has written memoirs of Hartmann (1895, 1919), part of a music-history (1905) and a biography of Gade (1917).

Behrens, Johan Didrik (Bergen, 1820–1890, Christiania). German-Norwegian promoter of men's choruses in Norway, from 1842 organizing several societies in Christiania and from 1849 holding festivals there and in Bergen.

Beier, Franz (Berlin, 1857–1914, Kassel). Prussian violinist and conductor, pupil of the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, and graduate of Rostock University (Ph. D. 1883), from 1885 at Kassel, in 1899 becoming director of both choral and orchestral concerts and acquiring the title of professor in 1908. Has written 2 operettas, a redaction of Spohr's Kreuzfahrer (1899) and a dissertation on Froberger's suites (1883).

Beilschmidt, Kurt (Magdeburg, 1886). Saxon composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, writing the orchestral Zu einem Liebespiel, the sinfonietta Im Maien, a string-quartet, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, choruses, stage-pieces, songs, etc.

Bekker, Paul (Berlin, 1882). Prussian critic, pupil of Rehfeld, Sormann and Horwitz, early a violinist in Berlin, from 1906 critic there for the Neueste Nachrichten, from 1909 for the Allgem. Zeitung, in 1911–22 at Frankfurt for the Zeitung, and editor in 1906–09 of program-books for the Berlin Philharmonic Society. Has written biographies of Fried (1907), Offenbach (1909) and notably Beethoven (1911), besides Das Musikdrama d. Gegenwart, 1909, Das deutsche Musikleben, 1916, Die Sinfonie von Beethoven bis Mahler, 1918, Franz Schreker, 1919, Die Weltgeltung d. deutschen Musik, 1920, Kritische Zeitbilder, 1921, and Deutsche Musik d. Gegenwart, 1922.

Belaiev, Mitrofan Petrovitch (Petrograd, 1836–1904, do.). Noted Russian music-publisher from 1885, when he founded a press devoted solely to bringing out Russian works of the new school (over 3000 works), besides instituting annual series of concerts, both orchestral and chamber, to perform such works. His will endowed both of these, besides a fund for pensioning needy musicians. In his honor a string-quartet on B-la-f was written jointly by Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin, Liadov and Glazunov, each contributing a movement.

Belcke, Christian Gottlieb (1796–1875) and Friedrich August (1795–1874), brothers, the one a fine flutist, at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, in 1819–32, the other the first trombone-virtuoso, in 1816–58 chamber-musician at Berlin. Each wrote concertos, études and pieces for his instrument.

Beldemandis, Prosdocus de. 15th C.

Beliczay, Julius von (Komorn, 1835–1893, Pest). Hungarian composer (though not especially national in style), pupil of Joachim Hoffmann and Krenn, after work in Vienna and Presburg, from 1888 theory-teacher at the National Academy, Pest. Wrote a favorite mass, 2 symphonies, 3 quartets, a trio, a serenade, etc., for strings, an Ave Maria for soprano and chorus, piano-pieces, songs, and Part i. of a text-book on composition (1891). G.

Belin, Guillaume and Julien. 16th C.

Bell, William Henry (St. Albans, 1873). English composer, trained at the Royal Academy of Music, from 1903 professor of harmony there, and since 1912 head of the College of Music in Cape Town, So. Africa. Has written symphonies in C min. (Walt Whitman), 1900, in A, 1918, and in F (The Open Road), 1919, the symphonic poems or preludes The Canterbury Tales (three), 1898–99, A Song in the Morning, 1907, Mother Carey (three), 1902, The Passing of Wenonah, Epithalamion, Love among the Ruins, 1908, The Shepherd, 1908, and 2 Mood-Pictures, with a prelude to Æschylus' Agamemnon and incidental music to Jonson's Vision of Delight, the choral ballads Hawke, The Call of the Sea, The Bird-Bride and The Baron of Brackley, an Arcadian Suite for orchestra and a set of Symphonic Variations, 1917, string-quartets in D min. and G min., a set of 5 Little English Dances for small orchestra, a viola-sonata, and some songs. G, A.

Bellaigue, Camille (Paris, 1858). Fertile French critic, since 1885 on the Revue des Deux Mondes and the Temps, his writings being collected as L'Année Musicale, 5 vols. 1886–91, La Musique Française au XIXe Siècle, 2 vols. 1890, L'Année Musicale et Dramatique, 1893, Psychologie Musicale, 1894, Portraits et Silhouettes de Musiciens, 1896 (also English and German), Études Musicales et Nouvelles Silhouettes, 1898 (also English), Impressions Musicales et Littéraires, 1900, Études Musicales, 2 vols. 1903–07, and Les Époques de la Musique, 2 vols. 1909, besides biographies of Mozart (1906), Mendelssohn (1907) and Gounod (1910). G.

Bellamann, Heinrich Hauer (Fulton, Mo. 1882). American pianist and teacher (descended from the Bellermann family in Germany), pupil of Philipp and Widor, since 1907 dean of Fine Arts in Chicora College, Columbia, S. C. He has specialized in modern French music. Has written a piano-concerto, a piano-quintet, sonatas for violin and for piano, and choral works. A.

Bellanda, Ludovico. 16th C.

Bellasio, Paolo. 16th C.

Bellasis, Edward (b. 1852). English editor and author of a life of Cherubini (1874).

Bellazzi, Francesco. 17th C.

Bellère, Jean (?–1595) and Belthasar. 16th C.

Bellermann, Constantin (Erfurt, 1696–1758, Münden). Thuringian composer, expert lutist, gambist and flutist, from 1719 cantor at Münden and from 1741 school-rector there. He was also well known as poet. Wrote an opera, many oratorios (from 1726) and cantatas, lute-suites, concertos and sonatas for various instruments and a pamphlet about musicians (1743). G.

Bellermann, Johann Friedrich (Erfurt, 1795–1874, Berlin), a relative of the above. Eminent student of Greek music, trained at Berlin and Jena, from 1819 teacher in the Gymnasium 'zum grauen Kloster' in Berlin, and in 1847–68 its director. Besides several editions of Greek writers on music (from 1840), he wrote Die Tonleitern u. Musiknoten der Griechen, 1847. G.

Bellermann, Johann Gottfried Heinrich (Berlin, 1832–1903, Potsdam), son of the preceding.

Eminent theorist, pupil of the Inst. für Kirchenmusik and of Grell, from 1853 singing-teacher under his father, and from 1866 Marx' successor as professor in the University. Wrote the notable treatise Die Mensuralnoten u. Taktzeichen im 15. u. 16. Jahrh., 1858 (2d ed. 1906), besides Der Kontrapunkt, 1862 (4th ed. 1901), based on the theories of Fux, many articles in the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung (1868-74) and a life of Grell (1899). He also wrote considerable vocal music, including that for three Greek plays. Memoir by Otto Schneider, 1903. G.

Belletti, Giovanni (Sarzana, 1813-?). Gifted Italian stage-baritone, trained at Bologna, from 1838 singing at Stockholm with Jenny Lind, from 1841 in Italy, in 1848-62 in London, again with Jenny Lind, sharing also in her tour in America in 1850-52. Retired in 1862 to Sarzana. G.

Bell'Haver [Bell'Avere], Vincenzo (†1530-1588?). 16th C. G.

Belli, Domenico. 17th C. G.

Belli, Girolamo (1552-?). 16th C. G.

Belli, Giulio (†1560-?). 16th C. G.

Bellincioni, Gemma (Monza, 1864). Famous Italian operatic soprano since 1881, pupil of her father and of Corsi, appearing throughout Europe, in South America and in the United States (1899). In Spain she was associated with Tamberlik. She sang at the premières of Cavalleria Rusticana (1890), A Santa Lucia (1892), Fedora (1898), Lorenza (1901), etc., and has a répertoire of over forty Italian and French works. She unites fine histrionic ability with a voice of much brilliancy. In 1881 she married the tenor Stagno (d. 1897). Since 1911 she has taught in Berlin. G.

Bellini, Vincenzo (Catania, 1801-1835, n. Paris). Famous Sicilian opera-composer, taught by his father and at the Naples Conservatory, where he also pursued much private study and where he wrote many vocal and instrumental works, including a symphony and his first opera. His abundant gifts as melodist, with his intuitive vocal sense and his poetic sympathy made him speedily popular, not only at Naples, but at Milan and Venice. His last work was brought out at Paris. Instrumentally he showed little power, owing to the weakness of his early discipline. Wrote the operas Adelson e Salvini, 1825, Bianca e Fernando, 1826, Il Pirata, 1827, La Straniera, 1829, Zaira, 1829, I Capuletti ed i Montecchi, 1830, La Sonnambula, 1831, Norma, 1832, Beatrice di Tenda, 1833, and I Puritani, 1835 (his librettist from 1827 to 1833 being Felice Romani), 3 masses, other sacred music and several early orchestral works. La Sonnambula and Norma established his right to rank with Rossini and Donizetti. I Puritani, also, is musically characteristic, though the libretto is poor. Memoirs by Cicconetti, 1859, Pougin, 1868, Amore, 1894, Voss, 1901, Lloyd, 1908, Parodi, 1913, with collections of letters by Scherillo and Salvioli, both 1885. G.

Bellinzani, Paolo Benedetto (Ferrara, †1690-1760?). Italian church-musician, from 1717 maestro at Udine, from 1722 at Ferrara, from 1726 at Pesaro and from 1733 at Urbino. Wrote masses and other church-music, madrigals and flute-sonatas.

Belloe, Teresa [Giorgi-Trombetta] (n. Turin, 1784-1855, do.). French-Italian operatic mezzosoprano, engaged at Milan in 1804-24, with highly successful visits in northern Italy, at Paris and at London (from 1817). She retired in 1827. Her répertoire included over eighty works, especially those of Rossini. Memoir by Boggio, 1895. G.

Belloli, Luigi (Castelfranco, 1770-1817, Milan). Noted Italian hornist, long in the orchestra at La Scala, Milan, and from 1812 teacher in the Conservatory. Wrote several operas and ballets (from 1803), horn-concertos and a method.

Belloni, Guiseppè. 17th C.

Bemberg, Henri [Herman] (Paris, 1861), of Argentine parents. French composer, pupil of Bizet, Marechal and the Paris Conservatory, taking the Rossini Prize in 1885. His style resembles that of Gounod and Massenet, with much refinement of detail. Has written the operas Le Baiser de Suzon, 1888 (comie), and Elaine, (1892), the cantata La Mort de Jeanne d'Arc, 1886, and many effective songs. G.

Bemetzrieder, Anton (in Alsace, 1743-1817, London). Theory-teacher, a protégé of Diderot, from 1782 in London. Wrote a long list of textbooks on singing, keyboard-technique and harmony, including Leçons de Clavecin, 1771. G.

Benda, Franz (Alt-Benatek, 1709-1786, Potsdam). Remarkable Bohemian violinist, pupil of Lobel, Koniček and J. G. Graun, after teaching in Dresden, from 1733 in the orchestra of Frederick the Great (first when Crown Prince) and from 1771 concertmaster. He handed along the traditions of the Tartini school of violin-playing to a considerable circle of German players. Wrote many works for violin, including concertos, sonatas, trio-sonatas, études, etc., besides works for other instruments and symphonies (see Eitner). Autobiography in Neue Berl. Musikzeitung, 10. G.

Benda, Friedrich Ludwig (Gotha, 1746-1793, Königsberg), son of Georg below. Violinist at Dresden and Berlin, in 1780-82 opera-director at Hamburg and from 1789 at Königsberg, with service in 1782-89 as chamber-musician at Schwerin. Wrote violin-concertos and sonatas, a comie opera (1782), operettas, an oratorio and sacred cantatas, besides a symphony.

Benda, Friedrich Wilhelm Heinrich (Potsdam, 1745-1814, do.), son and pupil of Franz above. Violinist and pianist, from 1765 chamber-musician at the Prussian court. Wrote 3 operas, an operetta, 2 oratorios, several cantatas, symphonies, violin- and flute-concertos, etc. G.

Benda, Georg (Alt-Benatek, 1722-1795, Köstritz), brother of Franz above. Skillful Bohemian clavierist, oboist and composer, pupil of his father and brother, from 1742 in the court-band at Berlin, from 1750 court-director at Gotha (in Italy in 1765-66), retiring in 1778. Wrote able works in many styles, including much church-music, many secular cantatas and songs, an opera, several operettas, orchestral and chamber-music in much variety. He is best known as a pioneer in pure melodrama (text spoken throughout), as in Ariadne auf Naxos, 1774, Medea, 1778, Pygmalion, 1780, etc. The first two had much popularity. Memoirs by Hodermann, 1895, and Helička, 1911, and see Istel, Die Entstehung d. deutschen Melodrams, 1906, and article by Brückner in I. M. G. Sammelbde. 6. G.

Benda, Karl Hermann Heinrich (Potsdam, 1748-1836, Berlin), son of Franz above. Violinist, pupil of his father, from 1766 in the court-band at Berlin and from 1802 concertmaster. Among his pupils were Wilhelm III and the composer Rungenhagen. G.

Bendel, Franz (n. Rumburg, 1832-1874, Berlin). Excellent Bohemian pianist, pupil of Proksch and Liszt, from 1862 teacher in Kulak's Academy, Berlin. Wrote over 100 works, including symphonies, a piano-concerto, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, piano-études, several sets of songs, 4 masses, etc., often with much grace and charm.

Bendeler, Johann Philipp (? 1660-1712 ?). 17th C.

Bender, Paul (Driedorf, 1875). Eminent Prussian operatic bass, at first trained in medicine, pupil also of Luise Ress and Baptist Hoffmann, from 1900 engaged at the Breslau Opera and since 1903 at Munich, besides many concert-tours and guest-appearances (from 1902 several times at Bayreuth).

Bendix, Max (Detroit, 1866). American violinist and conductor, trained mostly by Jacobsohn, after much early experience in orchestras under Thomas, Seidl and Van der Stucken, from 1886 concertmaster of the Thomas Orchestra (in 1893 succeeding to the direction at the Chicago Exposition). In 1897-1903 he toured as soloist or with his Quartet. In 1904 he was conductor at the St. Louis Exposition, as also in 1915 at the San Francisco Exposition. In 1905-06 and '09-10 he led or directed at the New York opera-houses. Has written a violin-concerto, orchestral pieces and many songs. A.

Bendix, Victor Emanuel (Copenhagen, 1851). Able Danish violinist and composer, pupil and favorite of Gade, since 1872 teacher and choral conductor in Copenhagen. Has written 4 symphonies (Zur Höhe, Sommerklänge aus Südrussland, etc.), an overture, a piano-concerto, a piano-trio, choral works, a piano-sonata and other fine piano-works.

Bendl, Karl [Karel] (Prague, 1838-1897, do.). Important Bohemian conductor and composer, trained at the Prague Organists' School and in 1865-79 director of the choral society Hlahol, later musician to Baron Dervies. With Smetana and Dvořák he was influential in giving Bohemian music its place in general estimation. Wrote the operas Lejla, 1868, Bretislav a Jitka, 1870, Cernahorci, 1881, Starý Zenich, 1883 (comic), Karel Skřéta, 1883, Dítě Tábora, 1892, Malki Mila, 1895, Carovny Kvet and Gina, the ballet Bohemian Wedding and an operetta, several orchestral pieces and an overture, a string-quartet, a violin-sonata, 3 masses, cantatas and at least 200 songs and choruses. G.

Benedict, Julius (Stuttgart, 1804-1885, London). Jewish conductor and composer, from 1835 working in England. He was a pupil of Abeille, Hummel and Weber, in 1823-25 directed the Kärnthnerthor-Theater, Vienna (on Weber's nomination), and in 1825-34 was at San Carlo, Naples, going thence to Paris. In London he was first conductor of opera buffa at the Lyceum, from 1837 of the orchestra at Drury Lane, after 1852 at Her Majesty's, Drury Lane and Covent Garden (from 1859), of the Monday Popular Concerts and of the Harmonic Union, besides in 1845-78 directing the Norwich Festival and various appearances of Jenny Lind, including her American trip in 1850-52, as well as the Liverpool Philharmonic in 1876-80. He was knighted in 1871, and in 1874-75 received numerous decorations from various European courts. Wrote the operas Giocinta ed Ernesto, 1829, I Portoghesi in Goa, 1830, Un Anno ed un Giorno, 1836, The Gypsy's Warning, 1837, The Brides of Venice, 1844, The Crusaders, 1846, The Lake of Glenaston, 1862, The Lily of Killarney, 1862, and The Bride of Song, 1864, the oratorios St. Cecilia, 1866, and St. Peter, 1870, the cantatas Undine, 1860, Richard Cœur-de-Lion, 1863, and Graziella, 1882, 2 symphonies (1873-74), 2 piano-concertos and a concertino, besides sonatas and various pieces. He also wrote memoirs of Mendelssohn, 1850, and Weber, 1881. His fertility and all-round skill gave him for many years a notable influence. G.

Benedictus Appenzelders. 16th C.

Benelli, Antonio Peregrino (Forlì, 1771-1830, in Saxony). Italian tenor from 1790 at Naples, London (in 1798-1801) and Dresden (till 1822). In 1822-29 he was singing-teacher under Spontini at Berlin, losing his place because of a foolish criticism of Spontini's Olimpie. Wrote a good method and Solfeggi (from 1814), and an opera (1798), besides church-music and articles for the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung. G.

Benet, Johannes. 15th C. G.

Benevoli, Orazio (1602-1672). 17th C. G.

Benham, Victor (Brooklyn, 1871). American pianist and composer, first known as a child-prodigy, pupil of Marmontel. Except in 1890-1900 and 1904-12 he has lived in Europe, making many tours. Has written 2 symphonies, 2 piano-concertos, a violin-concerto, 5 string-quartets, a piano-quintet, piano-pieces and songs. A.

Benincori, Angelo Maria (Brescia, 1779-1821, Paris). Good Italian violinist, pupil of Ghiretti, Rolla and Cimarosa, known in Spain and Austria as well as Italy, and from 1803 in Paris. Wrote 6 operas without much success and completed Isouard's Aladin, produced with striking applause in 1822, after his death. At Vienna he became an admirer of Haydn, writing 5 fine string-quartets and 3 piano-trios, which are his best works. G.

Bennet, John. 17th C. G.

Bennett, George John (Andover, 1863). Able English organist, trained at the Royal Academy, London, the Berlin Hochschule and the Munich Conservatory (as Balfe Scholar), from 1888 harmony-teacher at the London Royal Academy and organist at various churches, and since 1895 organist at Lincoln Cathedral and conductor of choral and orchestral societies and the triennial festivals there. Mus. D. of Cambridge in 1893, and examiner there, at Durham and for London institutions, as well as fellow of the R. C. O. Has written the overtures Jugend-träume, 1887, and Cymbeline, 1895, an orchestral suite, 1902, a piano-trio, a Festival Evening Service, 1890, and a Festival Te Deum, 1895 (both at St. Paul's, London), a mass, anthems, part-songs and songs. G.

Bennett, Joseph (Berkeley, 1831–1911, do.). Eminent English critic and librettist, long employed on the Pall Mall Gazette, Graphic, Telegraph and Musical Times, most notably on the last two. In 1875–76 he edited Concordia and in 1883–86 The Lute, and from 1885 the program-books of the Philharmonic Society and of the Saturday and Monday Popular Concerts (till 1903). Among his many librettos are those for Barnett's Good Shepherd, 1876, Sullivan's Golden Legend, 1886, Cowen's Ruth, 1887, Bottesini's Garden of Olivet, 1887, and Mackenzie's Rose of Sharon, 1884, Story of Sayid, 1886, Dream of Jubal, 1889, and Bethlehem, 1894. Author of Letters from Bayreuth, 1877, The Musical Year, 1883, Story of Ten Hundred Concerts (Sat. Pop. Concerts, 1857–87), 1887, Primers of Musical Biography, 1877–91, History of the Leeds Musical Festivals, 1859–92 (with F. R. Spark), 1892, Forty Years of Music, 1908, etc. G.

Bennett, William Sterndale (Sheffield, 1816–1875, London). Eminent English pianist and composer, trained at the Royal Academy, London, and in Leipzig (1837–38, sent by the Broadwoods, and 1841–42). His remarkable promise was evident from his tenth year, and his 1st concerto was written at 16. In 1837 he played at the Gewandhaus and conducted his Naiades overture. From 1834 he was for some years organist at St. Anne's, Wandsworth. In 1843–56 he gave regular chamber-concerts, and in 1849 established the Bach Society (first English performance of the St. Matthew Passion in 1854). In 1853 he was asked to become conductor at the Gewandhaus in place of Rietz, but declined. In 1856–66 he was conductor of the Philharmonic Society, and led the Leeds Festival in 1858. From 1856, also, he was professor at Cambridge, being made Mus. D. there in 1856 (also A. M. in 1867), besides becoming D. C. L. of Oxford in 1870. From 1866 he was principal of the Royal Academy. He was knighted in 1871. Besides being a pianist of great dexterity and finish, though caring little for sensational effect, he was noted for his keenly intellectual idealism, combined with a peculiarly delicate romantic imagination. Though conservative and almost austere in taste, he was also enterprising and constructive as teacher and composer. The number of his works was not large, but their beauty of workmanship was conspicuous. They include Symphony in G min.

Overtures—Parisina, 1834–35; The Naiades, 1836, The Wood-Nymphs, 1840, Paradise and the Peri, 1862, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Marie du Bois.

Piano-Concertos—1, D min., 2, E-flat, 3, C min., 4, F min.; also another in F min., unpublished.

Piano-sestet; piano-quintet (with wind); piano-trio; sonata-duo for piano and 'cello.

Piano-sonatas in F min. and The Maid of Orleans.

Many piano-works, including Capriccios in D min. and A min., the sketches The Lake, The Millstream and The Fountain, 3 Impromptus, 3 Romances, Allegro Grazioso, Caprice in E (with orch.), Suite de Pièces, Rondo Piacevole, Scherzo, Toccata, etc.

The oratorio The Woman of Samaria, 1867, the cantata The May-Queen, 1858. Odes (1862) for the International Exposition and for the Cambridge Installation, music for Sophocles' Ajax.

Several anthems, part-songs and songs.

The Chorale-Book for England (edited with Goldschmidt), 1862, supplement, 1864.

Memoirs by J. R. S. Bennett, 1907, and in the Musical Times, 1903, 1916. G.

Bennewitz, Anton (n. Leitomischl, 1833). Bohemian violinist, pupil of Mildner, after work at Prague, Salzburg and Stuttgart, from 1866 teacher at the Prague Conservatory and in 1882–1901 its director.

Benoist, François (Nantes, 1794–1878, Paris). French organist, trained at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1815), from 1819 organist at the Chapel Royal and teacher at the Conservatory, and from 1840 chorusmaster at the Opéra. Wrote the operas Léonore et Félix, 1821, and L'Apparition, 1848, 4 ballets (1839–51), a Requiem for 3 men's and 1 child's voices, and the Bibliothèque de l'Organiste, 12 books. G.

Benoit, Camille. A pupil of Franck, from 1888 one of the custodians at the Louvre in Paris. Has written an overture (c. 1880), the symphonic poem Merlin l'Enchanteur, music for Anatole France's Noces Corinthiennes and the lyric drama Cléopâtre, as well as the books Souvenirs, 1884, Musiciens, Poètes et Philosophes, 1887, and translations of Beethoven's Elegische Gesang (in Latin) and of extracts from Wagner. G.

Benoit, Pierre Léonard Léopold (Harlebeke, 1834–1901, Antwerp). Eminent Belgian composer and author, a foremost promoter of the Belgian or Flemish national school. He was trained at the Brussels Conservatory (first prize for composition, 1857) and by various study in Germany. In 1856 he was theater-conductor in Brussels and in 1861 in Paris. In 1867 he founded the Flemish School of Music at Antwerp, remaining at its head till his death. This enterprise, with his abundant and able works and writings, marked an epoch in exalting Flemish musical art, though his own originality was not marked. A large number of his vocal works were written to texts by the poet Hiel. His compositions include concertos for piano and for flute, the choral symphony The Mowers, the operas Het dorp in't gebergte, 1856, Isa, 1867, and Pompéja, 1896, the oratorios Lucifer, 1866, De Schelde, 1869, Drama Christi, 1871, De Rhijn, 1889, and one for children, the cantatas De Oorlog, 1873, Flanderens Kunstroem (Rubens), 1877, and Antwerpen, 1877 (triple men's chorus), with the choral Muse der Geschiedenis, 1880 and Hucbald, 1880, 2 masses, a Te Deum, a Requiem, several motets, music for Charlotte Corday and for Willem de Zwijger, 1876, and songs. From 1873 he published many books, pamphlets and articles regarding the Flemish movement. In 1882 he was elected to the Brussels Academy. Memoirs by Belpaire, 1901, Stoffels, 1901, Sabbe, 1902, and Mortelmans, 1911. G.

Benvenuti, Tommaso (n. Venice, 1838-1906, Rome). Italian composer of 7 operas (1856-95), including Beatrice di Svevia, 1890, and La Baruffe Chiozzotte, 1895 (opera buffa).

Berardi, Angelo. 17th C.

Berber [-Credner], Felix (Jena, 1871). Extraordinary Saxon violinist, trained at the Dresden Conservatory and under Brodsky, from 1891 concertmaster at Magdeburg, in 1897-1903 of the Gewandhaus Orchestra, Leipzig (and leader of the Quartet), from 1904 teacher at the Royal Academy, London, in 1907 at the Hoch Conservatory, Frankfurt, in 1908-12 at the Geneva Conservatory (also leader of a Quartet), and since 1912 living in Munich, from 1920 teaching at the Conservatory. In 1910 he toured in America. He has won special notice for renderings of the Brahms double-concerto (with Klengel) and of concerto-series in successive concerts.

Berbiguier, Benoit Tranquille (in Vacluse, 1782-1838, n. Blois). Famous French flutist, pupil of Wunderlich. Wrote a prodigious amount of music for his instrument, alone or in various combinations, some of which is excellent, but some merely showy. The list includes 10 concertos, 7 books of sonatas, 15 of duos, 6 of trios, etc. See Brosset, Silhouettes Musicales du Blésois, 1907. G.

Berchem, Jaquet de. 16th C. G.

Berens, Hermann (Hamburg, 1826-1880, Stockholm). Fine North German pianist, pupil of his father, Reissiger and Czerny. After a tour with Alboni, from 1847 he lived in Sweden, starting chamber-concerts at Stockholm, serving as court-director at Örebro from 1849, and after 1860 being court-conductor at Stockholm and teacher for and member of the Academy. Wrote the opera Violetta, the Greek drama Kodros, 3 effective operettas, various overtures, chamber-pieces, part-songs and songs, with an important Schule der Geläufigkeit for piano.

Beretta, Giovanni Battista (Verona, 1819-1876, Milan). Italian theorist, for some years head of the Bologna Conservatory and then undertaking to complete Barberi's extensive encyclopedia, but finished only a part. Wrote text-books on harmony and orchestration.

Berg, Adam. 16th C. G.

Berg, Johann von (? - 1563). 16th C. G.

Berg, Konrad Mathias (Kolmar, 1785-1852, Strasburg). Alsatian violinist and pianist, trained at the Paris Conservatory and from 1808 teaching at Strasburg. Wrote 4 string-quartets, 10 piano-trios, 3 piano-concertos, many sonatas, etc., with a striking essay in Cécilia (1835) on methods of piano-teaching and a history of music in Strasburg from 1790 (1840).

Berg, Natanael (1879). Swedish surgeon and composer, mostly self-taught, writing the opera Leila, a symphony, the symphonic poems Traumgewalten and Es werde Licht, the cantata Der Mann und das Weib and Israels Lobgesang, ballads with orchestra, choruses and songs.

Berger, Francesco (London, 1834). German-English pianist, pupil of L. Ricci, Liekl, Hauptmann and Plaidy, from 1855 on the staff of the Royal Academy and the Guildhall School in London, with many tours in Great Britain. In 1884-1911 he was secretary of the Philharmonic Society. Has written the opera Il Lazzarone, a mass, incidental music to plays of Wilkie Collins, songs and many part-songs, besides Reminiscences, 1913.

Berger, Ludwig (Berlin, 1777-1839, do.). Gifted Prussian pianist and composer, pupil of Gürlich and Clementi, from 1815 teaching in Berlin, among his pupils being Mendelssohn and his sister, Taubert and Henselt, and in 1819 (with Klein, Reichardt and Rellstab) starting the junior Liedertafel. His later years were spent apart from active work. Wrote important piano-studies, a toccata, a rondo, etc., besides vocal works, including the opera Oreste. Memoir by Rellstab, 1846. G.

Berger, Rudolf (Brünn, 1874-1915, New York). Moravian operatic baritone and (from 1909) tenor, from 1896 at Brünn, in 1904-07 at the Berlin Court Opera and again in 1909-14, chiefly in Wagnerian rôles, and in 1914-15 at the Metropolitan, New York. His repertoire was enormous, especially as baritone. He sang Salome about 80 times. In 1913 he married the soprano Marie Rappold.

Berger, Wilhelm (Boston, 1861-1911, Jena). German-American composer, brought up in Bremen, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, from 1888 teacher at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory there, and from 1903 head of the Meiningen Orchestra. Royal Prussian Professor and member of the Royal Academy. Wrote symphonies in B-flat and B min., orchestral variations and fugue, a Dramatic Fantasy in overture-form, the choral Euphorion, Gesang der Geister über den Wassern, Meine Göttin (men's voices, prize-work), 1898, and Der Totentanz, 3 ballades for baritone and orchestra, string- and piano-quintets, a piano-quartet, many piano-pieces (some with violin), part-songs and nearly 100 songs. Memoirs by Kohut in Neue Musikzeitung, 1902, and E. Krause, 1907, and catalogue of works by Altmann, 1920. G. A.

Berggreen, Andreas Peter (Copenhagen, 1801–1880, do.). Danish teacher, from 1838 organist in Copenhagen, and from 1843 teacher and from 1859 general inspector in the public schools. His chief pupil was Gade. Wrote a comic opera (1832), incidental music to plays by Öhlenschläger, etc., and edited 11 vols. of folk-songs of all nations (2d ed. 1864). Memoir by Skou, 1896. G.

Bergh, Rudolph (Copenhagen, 1859). Danish zoölogist, educated at the Copenhagen University and in 1885–1903 teaching there, now living near Bonn. Has written a string-quartet, a violin-sonata, the choral Requiem für Werther and Geister der Windstille, other choruses and piano-works.

Bergiron du Fort-Michon [de Briou], Nicolas Antoine (Lyons, 1690–1768, do.). In 1713 founder of a concert-series at Lyons that continued even after his death. From 1739 he was also director of the opera.

Bergmann, Karl (Ebersbach, 1821–1876, New York). Saxon 'cellist and conductor, pupil of Zimmermann (Zittau) and Hesse, member of Gungl's band in Berlin and (from 1850) of the troupe known as the Germania Orchestra in the United States, of which he became conductor till its dissolution in 1854. He then joined the Philharmonic Society in New York, becoming joint-conductor with Eisdelf and from 1862 sole conductor. In Boston he directed the Handel and Haydn Society in 1852–54 and in New York the Arion Society. In 1859 he led the first New York performance of Tannhäuser, and in many ways was a pioneer in establishing advanced musical interest. The young Theodore Thomas was closely associated with him, both in the Philharmonic and (for one year) in the Mason-Thomas Soirées. G. A.

Bergner, Frederic (Baden, 1827–?, New York). German 'cellist, from 1849 in the Philharmonic Society, New York, and in 1856–68 in the Mason-Thomas Quintet. A.

Bergner, Wilhelm (Riga, 1837–1907, do.). German-Russian organist, from 1861 at the English church in Riga and from 1868 at the Cathedral, where he established a notable choir and installed a fine organ (1882–83). He organized a Bach Society. He directed the first scenic rendering of Rubinstein's Moses in 1894.

Bergonzi, Carlo (?–1747). Cremonese violin-maker, pupil and noted follower of Stradivari from 1716 to 1755. His son and nephews, who followed him, were not his equals in skill. G.

Bergquist, John Victor (St. Peter, Minn. 1877). Swedish-American organist, from 1895 active in Lutheran churches in Minnesota, in 1905–08 also teaching at Gustavus Adolphus College, and since 1912 director at Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill. Has written an oratorio, cantatas and organ-sonatas. A.

Bergson, Michael (Warsaw, 1820–1898, London). Polish (Jewish) pianist, pupil of T. Schneider, Rungenhagen and Taubert, from 1840 living successively in Paris, Italy, Vienna, Berlin, Leipzig, Paris and London. In 1863 he was for a time head of the Geneva Conservatory. Wrote the operas Luisa di Montfort, 1847 (Florence) and Salvator Rosa, an operetta, and, for piano, a Concerto Symphonique, a Polonaise Héroïque, 12 études, etc., besides some chamber-works.

Bergt, Christian Gottlob August (n. Freiberg, 1772–1837, Bautzen). Noted Saxon organist and composer, from 1802 organist and teacher at Bautzen. Wrote important choral works, including a Passion, a Te Deum, hymns and canticles, and many songs, besides symphonies, violin-sonatas, etc., and effective handbooks for singing-teachers (1832, '38). Memoir by Herzing, 1838.

Beringer, Oskar (Furtwangen, Baden, 1844–1922, London). German pianist, brought up in England, at first self-taught, but later broadly trained at Leipzig and Berlin. He appeared often in London in 1859–64 and after 1871. In 1869–71 he taught in Tausig's School in Berlin, and in 1873–97 conducted a similar school in London. Since 1885 he has been professor at the Royal Academy of Music. Has written excellent piano-exercises, some pieces and songs, besides a book of reminiscences (1907). His brother Robert (b. 1841) is also a pianist of ability. G.

Bériot, Charles Auguste de (Louvain, 1802–1870, Brussels). Eminent Belgian violinist, pupil of Tiby (local teacher at Louvain) and influenced from 1821 by Viotti and Baillot at Paris, where he was at once recognized as one of the great virtuosi, as later in England and throughout the Continent. In 1826–30 he was violinist to the King of the Netherlands, and, having declined in 1842 a place at the Paris Conservatory, in 1843–52 was professor at the Brussels Conservatory, retiring because of failing eyesight and paralysis of the left arm (totally blind from 1858). In 1836 he married the contralto Malibran (she died six months later). His highly individual style, uniting brilliance, elegance and great dexterity, placed him at the head of a new school of Franco-Belgian artists, including especially Vieuxtemps. Wrote 10 concertos, 11 sets of variations, several Duos Brillants for violin and piano, 4 piano-trios, 2 instructive works, including his Grande Méthode, 3 parts, 1858, and études. See Heron-Allen's De fidiculis opuscula, vi. G.

Bériot, Charles Wilfride de (Paris, 1833–1914, n. Paris), son of the above. Good pianist, pupil of Thalberg, long professor at the Paris Conservatory. Wrote the symphonic poem Fernand Cortez, overtures, 3 piano-concertos, chamber-music and many piano-works, etc. He and his father prepared a method of accompanying.

Berlijn, Anton [Wolf?] (Amsterdam, 1817–1870, do.). Dutch composer, pupil of L. Erk and G. W. Fink, from about 1846 conductor at the Royal Theatre, Amsterdam. He received many decorations from various courts and was a member of the Accademia S. Cecilia, Rome. Wrote 9 operas (from 1841), 7 ballets, the oratorio Moses auf Nebo, 1844, a symphonic cantata (1848), a mass, psalms, a symphony (1857) and other orchestral pieces, chamber-music, overtures, etc. Memoir by Böhm.

Berlioz, Hector Louis (n. Grenoble, 1803–1869, Paris). Extraordinary French composer, the son of a physician and by him intended for the same profession. In 1823, however, at Paris he decided to take up music, though this involved a rupture with his family, and entered the Conservatory, where, in spite of lack of previous study and of his eccentric mind and temperament, he finally won the Prix de Rome in 1830. During this period he worked his way mainly by singing in an obscure theater-chorus, and from 1825 undertook a variety of daring works in composition, evincing an originality that startled his teachers and bewildered his listeners. His three years' term in Italian study he cut in two, returning to Paris in 1832, bringing several further works. In 1833 he married the Irish actress Henrietta Smithson and for years sought with slight success until toward 1840 to carve out a career as a most unconventional composer. He was forced into journalism to win a livelihood—an avocation for which, however, his acute mind and biting wit remarkably fitted him. At length his fifteen years of battle for recognition brought some reward, enabling him to project a trip into Germany, where Schumann and Liszt had become his advocates. Though this plan occasioned the permanent estrangement of his wife, it finally came to pass in 1843, followed by further tours in Austria and Bohemia in 1845, in Russia in 1847, and to London in 1852. From the first, when he conducted his own works at Leipzig and Weimar, these tours were triumphantly successful, establishing his fame as one of the most remarkable masters of orchestral expression in history. In Paris, however, he continued to be either misunderstood or flatly rejected, though with occasional successes and honors. Since 1839 he had had a small official connection with the Conservatory and in 1859 he was made librarian, though his ambition to enter the faculty was defeated. In 1856 he became a member of the Académie, succeeding Adam. He was repeatedly called to act on juries at the great Expositions in both London and Paris. At intervals he put forth literary works of signal power. In 1854, when his first wife died, he married the mediocre singer Marie Recio. Her sudden death in 1862, the utter failure in 1863 of Les Troyens, which he considered his masterpiece, the death of his son Louis in 1867, and the irresistible advance of organic disease, made his last years full of bitterness. Yet in 1867 he was able to make a second trip to Russia. At the end he was honored by a stately public funeral, attended by many musical notables.

Appreciation of his singular genius and of his services, not only to French music, but to general progress, gradually became common, especially as the Franco-Prussian War of 1870–71 turned French attention toward whatever was distinctively French. In 1879 a grand commemoration was held, and the vogue of certain works steadily increased. In 1903 the centenary of his birth was marked by numerous memorial concerts and the erection of monuments at Grenoble and Monte Carlo.

The works prior to 1835 include

The symphonies Épisode de la Vie d'un Artiste (Symphonie Fantastique), 1831, and Harold en Italie (viola oblig.), 1834.

The overtures Waverley, 1828, Les Francs-Juges, 1828, King Lear, 1831, The Corsair, 1831, and Rob Roy, 1832.

The choral works Le Révolution Grecque, 1826, Hermine, 1828, La Mort de Cléopâtre, 1829, Sardanapale, 1830 (prize-work), Méditation Religieuse, 1831, Lélio (monodrama, 2d part of Symphonie Fantastique), Le Cinq Mai (Napoleon), 1834, and Sara la Baigneuse (for three choruses), 1834, besides a mass (St. Roch), 1822.

The songs Irlande (9 poems from Moore), 1829, La Captive, 1832, Les Nuits d'Été (6 from Gautier), 1832 and Fleurs de Landes, 1834.

Of these the orchestral works and some of the songs are much the most notable.

The works after 1835 are as a rule far more elaborate, even to the pitch of gigantism. They include

The Symphonie Funèbre et Triomphale (military band, strings and chorus ad lib.) and the dramatic symphony Roméo et Juliette, 1838, besides the Marche Funèbre (Hamlet), 1848.

The overture Le Carnaval Romain, 1843.

The choral works Grande Messe des Morts (Requiem), 1837, Te Deum, 1849–54, the oratorio L'Enfance du Christ, 1850–54, the cantata L'Impériale, 1855, with several lesser works.

The opera Benvenuto Cellini, 1835–37, the dramatic legend La Damnation de Faust, 1846, the comic opera Béatrice et Bénédicte, 1860–62, and the opera Les Troyens, in two parts (La Prise de Troie and Les Troyens à Carthage), 1858–63.

Various arrangements, etc., including recitatives for Der Freischütz, 1841, Weber's L'Invitation à la Valse for orchestra, 1841, Bortniansky's Pater Noster and Adoremus, 1843, L. von Meyer's Marche Marocaine, 1845, Martini's Plaisir d'Amour, 1859, and Schubert's Erkönig, 1860.

A critical edition of his Complete Works in about 24 vols. was begun by Breitkopf & Härtel in 1899 (18 vols. to 1916), edited by Malherbe and Weingartner.

As composer, Berlioz' powers both of creation and of execution were decidedly fitful in operation. His lack of sound early training hampered him often. Though opulent of ideas and sometimes carried away in a torrent of imagination, he was not always able to coördinate and effectively realize his conceptions. But at times he rose to positive sublimity and to passages of ethereal beauty. In the musical expression of the grotesque, the frightful, the uncanny and the tremendous he achieved many signal successes. His intense romanticism led in directions too manifold to be classified.

In the field of orchestral technique, however, he had no rival in his time except Wagner. He made the most thorough studies of the capacity of instruments and the possibilities of combining them, and his works abound in novel and instructive efforts to enlarge orchestral practice. He often sought to accomplish results by huge aggregations of forces, orchestral, vocal and even mechanical—not for mere noise, but to secure unheard-of effects. His ideal orchestra embraced over 400 players, combined with a vast chorus, an organ, etc. From the outset of his career he stood forth as the first orchestral virtuoso of music-history.

His aggressive and revolutionary spirit commended him to the radical wing of German musicians, so that he is often linked with Wagner as a restless seeker for new paths. He was a persistent cultivator of 'program' methods rather than 'absolute' music. His prevailing artistic impulse was strongly dramatic, though he had a charming lyrical side as well. Yet in all these directions he stood apart, not affiliated, with others and not founding any distinct movement of his own, and from him radiated influences that profoundly affected all subsequent progress.

His able literary work includes the Voyage Musical (first German trip), 1843, the masterly Traité d'Instrumentation, 1843, Les Soirées de l'Orchestre, 1853, Les Grotesques de la Musique, 1859, and À travers Chants, 1862, besides much fugitive writing and correspondence. Editions have been published by Pohl, 1864 (4 vols.) and by Breitkopf & Härtel, 1903–12 (10 vols.), besides various sets of Letters. See his own Mémoires, 1870 (2d ed 2 vols. 1876), and sketches or memoirs by Griepenkerl, 1843, Liszt, 1855, Scheurleer, 1877, Hippeau, 1883–85, Ernst, 1884, Pohl, 1884, Julien, 1888, Lüning, 1893–94, Boulton, 1903, Tiersot, 1903, Boschot, 1906–13, Coquard, 1908, Schrader, 1908, and Kapp, 1917. G.

Bermudo, Jean. 16th C. G.

Bernabei, Giuseppe Ercole (?1620–1687). 17th C. G.

Bernabei, Gioseffo Antonio (1649–1732). 17th C. G.

Bernacchi, Giovanni (Bologna, 1685–1756, do.). Italian male soprano, pupil of Pistocchi, active in Italy probably about 1710, in London in 1716–17 and 1729–30 (Handel operas), in Bavaria and Austria in 1726–28, and after 1730 a teacher in Italy, with several noted pupils. His voice was not so remarkable as his general artistic skill. About 1730 he revived the use of extended roulades or fiorature. Wrote some contrapuntal church-music. G.

Bernard, Émile (Marseilles, 1843–1902, Paris). Able French organist and composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, where he was thrice a prize-winner, for many years (till 1895) organist at Notre-Dame-des-Champs. Wrote the overture Beatrice, orchestral suites, a piano-quartet and trio, a noted violin-concerto (dedicated to Sarasate), a violin-suite, both a violin- and a 'cello-sonata, 2 organ-suites, an organ fantasia and fugue (prize in 1877), fine works for organ and piano, a Concertstück and a Fantaisie for piano with orchestra, piano-pieces, besides the cantatas Guillaume le Conquérant and La Captivité de Babylone. G.

Bernardi, Bartolommeo (Bologna, ?–1730, Copenhagen). Italian violinist, from before 1700 resident in Copenhagen. Wrote sonatas for string-trio or for violin solo, and the opera Libussa, 1703.

Bernardi, Enrico (Milan, 1838–1900, do.). Italian theater-conductor and composer of some operas and almost 60 ballets (1854–79), besides much dance-music.

Bernardi, Francesco. See Senesino.

Bernardi, Gian Giuseppe (Venice, 1865). Professor of counterpoint, history and æsthetics at the Venice Conservatory, founder of a society for reviving old stringed instruments, and composer of piano- and violin-pieces and songs.

Bernardi, Stefano (?–1638?). 17th C.

Bernardini, Marcello (Capua, ?1762–?). Italian composer of about 20 operas (1784–94), given mostly at Rome, Naples, Vienna and Venice.

Bernasconi, Andrea (Marseilles, 1706–1784, Munich). Italian opera-composer from 1741, in Vienna in 1743–47 and from 1755 court-director at Munich. Wrote 18 operas (1741–72), mostly for Munich, an oratorio and much church-music. His step-daughter Antonia in 1767 sang in Gluck's Alceste (written for her), in 1770–71 in Mozart's Mitridate (at Milan), in 1778–79 in both serious and comic opera at London, and after 1783 in some of Gluck's works at Vienna.

Berneker, Constanx (in E. Prussia, 1844–1906, Königsberg). From 1872 organist at the Königsberg Cathedral, director of the Singakademie and composition-teacher in the Conservatory. Wrote the oratorios Judith and Christi Himmelfahrt, various cantatas and other choral works. Memoir by Laudien, 1909. In 1907 a Berneker Society was formed to publish his works.

Berner, Friedrich Wilhelm (Breslau, 1780–1827, do.). Able Silesian organist, trained by his father, Gehrmie and Reichardt, mastering several instruments, especially the clarinet. In 1804–06 he worked with Weber, and from 1811 (with Schnabel) was engaged in developing choral societies in Breslau and vicinity on the model of the Berlin Singakademie, as well as cataloguing the music in monastery-libraries, and died in the midst of activity. Wrote works on singing (1815), chorale-interludes (1819) and figuration (1821). Among his many pupils, Hesse was the most famous. Memoir by Hientsch, 1829.

Berners, Lord [Gerald Hugh Tyrwhitt] (London, 1883). English diplomat and composer, musically trained in Dresden and London, since 1912 connected with the British Embassy at Rome. Has written characteristic orchestral sketches and piano-pieces, somewhat after the manner of Casella and Stravinsky. His first work was a set of funeral marches ('for a statesman, a canary and a rich aunt'). His Fantaisie Espagnole was given by the London Philharmonic in 1919. He succeeded to his peerage in 1918. A.

Bernhard der Deutsche (? - 1459). 15th C.

Bernhard, Christoph (1627-1692). 17th C. G.

Bernier, Nicolas (Mantes, 1664-1734, Paris). French church-musician, from 1694 choirmaster at Chartres Cathedral, from 1698 at St. Germain in Auxerre and in 1704-26 trainer at the Ste. Chapelle in Paris (following Charpentier), in 1723 becoming one of the four directors. With Morin and Clérambault he initiated cantata-writing in France, publishing 7 books for 1-2 voices (1703-23), 3 books of motets (1703-41) and also dramatic divertissements for Nuits de Seceaux.

Berno Augiensis (? - 1048). 11th C.

Bernoulli, Eduard (Basel, 1867). Swiss musicologist, trained at Leipzig University (Ph. D. 1896), from 1910 lecturer and from 1921 professor at Zurich University. Author of Die Choralnotenschrift bei Hymnen u. Sequenzen im späteren Mittelalter, 1898, Oratorientexte Händels, 1905, Berlioz als Aesthetiker der Klangfarben, 1909, and Aus Liederbüchern der Humanisten, 1910, besides editing Albert's Arion for the Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst, xii, xiii, and (with Holz and Saran) a modern edition of the Jenaer Liederhandschrift, 1901.

Bernoulli, Johann (Basel, 1667-1747, do.). Swiss mathematician of eminence, author of researches in acoustics (1732), followed by his son Daniel (1700-1781), who was professor from 1725 at Petrograd and from 1743 at Basel, with various studies in the same field, and his grandson Jakob (1759-1789), also professor at Petrograd.

Bernsdorf, Eduard (Dessau, 1825-1901, Leipzig). Saxon critic of conservative tendency, long on the Leipzig Signale. He completed Schladebach's Universal-Lexikon, 3 vols., 1856-65. G.

Bernuth, Julius von (Rees, 1830-1902, Hamburg). Rhenish conductor, pupil of Taubert and Dehn and of the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1857 founder and conductor of various societies at Leipzig, from 1864 conductor of the Hamburg Philharmonic and from 1867 also of the Singakademie, and in 1873 founder of the Conservatory, to the direction of which he more and more devoted himself, from 1895 retiring from other duties. From 1878 he had the title of professor.

Berr, Friedrich (Mannheim, 1794-1838, Paris). Noted clarinetist and bassoonist, bandmaster in the French army, from 1823 at the Italiens in Paris, from 1831 professor at the Conservatory and from 1836 head of the School of Military Music. Wrote a vast quantity of music for his instruments and a Traité Complet de la Clarinette, 1836.

Berré, Ferdinand (n. Brussels, 1843). Belgian composer of comic operas (from 1867) and about 50 romances.

Bertali, Antonio (1605-1669). 17th C.

Berté, Heinrich (Galgóc, 1858). Hungarian composer, mostly at Vienna, of many ballets (from 1890) and operettas (from 1896), the latter including Der kleine Chevalier, 1907, Kreolenblut, 1911, Der Märchenprinz, 1914, etc.

Bertelman, Jan Georg (Amsterdam, 1782-1854, do.). Dutch teacher and composer, pupil of Brachthuis, long professor at the Royal Music-School in Amsterdam (pupils include Hol and Van Bree). Wrote a mass, a Requiem, a string-quartet, concertos for clarinet and for double-bass, etc.

Bertelsmann, Karl August (Gütersloh, 1811-1861, Amsterdam). Westphalian singing-teacher, pupil of Rinck, from 1839 director of the new Eutonia chorus in Amsterdam. Wrote part-songs, songs and pieces for organ and for piano.

Berthaume, Isidore (Paris, 1752-1802, Petrograd). French violinist, from 1774 at the Opéra in Paris, from 1783 conductor of the Concerts Spirituels, from 1793 leader of the court-orchestra at Eutin, and finally soloist in the court-orchestra at Petrograd. Wrote a violin-concerto, sonatas, concert-pieces for 2 violins, etc.

Berthold, Karl Friedrich Theodor (Dresden, 1815-1882, do.). Saxon organist, pupil of J. Otto and J. Schneider, succeeding the latter in 1864 as court-organist at Dresden, having from 1849 been active at Petrograd. Wrote the oratorio Petrus, a mass, a symphony, overtures, church-music, etc., and (with M. Fürstenau) an account of instrument-making in Vogtland (1876).

Bertin, Louise Angélique (n. Paris, 1805-1877, Paris). French contralto, pianist and composer of the operas Le Loup-Garou, 1827, Faust, 1831, and La Esmeralda, 1836 (text adapted by Victor Hugo), ballades and some chamber-music. G.

Bertini, Benoît Auguste (Lyons, 1780-?). French piano-teacher in London, author of a pamphlet on musical stenography (1812) and also on its use in playing and singing (1830).

Bertini, Domenico (Lucca, 1829-1890, Florence). Italian singer and composer, pupil of the Lucca Conservatory and of M. Puccini, from 1862 teacher and critic at Florence, writing for Boccherini, La Scena, etc., conducting the Società Cherubini, and writing 2 operas, church- and chamber-music and a theoretical treatise (1866).

Bertini, Giuseppe (Palermo, 1756-1849?, do.). Sicilian abbé and court-maestro at Palermo, author of a musical dictionary (1814). G.

Bertini, Henri Jérôme (London, 1798-1876, n. Grenoble), brother of Benoît Auguste above. Excellent French-English pianist and composer, pupil of his father and brother, by 1810 already a precocious player, known in the Low Countries and Germany. In 1821-59, from Paris as a center, he made highly successful tours throughout Europe, and then retired to Meylau, near Grenoble. His taste and style set him much above the empty showiness prevalent in his day. Wrote a large number of worthy chamber-works in different combinations of the piano with strings, wind and even full orchestra, but is best remembered for many fine sets of études, from which selections have been edited by Buonamici and Riemann. He made a notable arrangement of Bach's Wohltemperirtes Clavier for four hands. G.

Bertinotti, Teresa (in Piedmont, 1776-1854, Bologna). Effective Italian stage-singer, heard in Naples and other Italian cities from 1788 and after 1805 having success in Vienna, Munich, the Hague, London and Lisbon. From 1814 she lived in Bologna, after 1823 as singing-teacher of some note. G.

Bertoldo, Sper' in Dio (?1530-1590?). 16th C.

Bertolli, Francesca. Fine Italian contralto, in 1729-37 repeatedly employed by Handel in London, though in 1733-35 with the opposition under Senesino. G.

Berton, Henri Montan (Paris, 1767-1844, do.), son of the following. Noted French violinist and opera-composer, pupil of Rey and Sacchini, from 1782 playing in the Opéra orchestra and composing freely before he was 20, from 1795 professor in the new Conservatory, besides in 1807-09 conducting the Italian Opera Buffa. In 1815 he was elected to the Académie, and from 1834 was Officier in the Légion d'Honneur. In 1828 he suffered much through the bankruptcy of the Opéra-Comique, from which he was receiving stated royalties. Out of nearly 50 operas and ballets (1786-1827) probably the chief were Ponce de Léon, 1797, Montano et Stéphanie, 1798, Le Délire, 1799, Aline, 1803, Ninon chez Mme. de Sévigne, 1808, and Françoise de Foix, 1809. He also wrote 5 oratorios, 5 cantatas and many songs, besides some didactic works, chief of which was a Dictionnaire des Accords, 4 vols. 1815, and pamphlets against the tendencies represented by Rossini. As composer, he had no special originality or depth, but showed melodic facility, a desire for clear harmony and refined orchestration, and a clever sense of dramatic effect. Memoirs by Raoul-Rochette, 1844, and Blanchard, 1839. His son Henri [or François] (1784-1832), in 1821-27 teacher in the Conservatory, also wrote several operas (1810-34). Memoir by Raoul-Rochette, 1832. G.

Berton, Pierre Montan (in Ardennes, 1727-1780, Paris), father of the foregoing. From 1759 court-conductor at Paris and leader at the Opéra, having previously been (from 1746) conductor and organist at Bordeaux. Wrote 5 operas (from 1755), including Adèle de Ponthieu, 1773 (with Laborde). In the Gluck-Piccinni controversy he tried to act as peacemaker. G.

Bertoni, Ferdinando Gioseffo (Isola di Garda, 1725-1813, n. Brescia). Italian maestro and composer, pupil of Martini, from 1752 organist at St. Mark's, Venice, and from 1785 director, succeeding Galuppi, besides in 1757-97 being director at the Conservatorio de' Mendicanti. In 1778-80 and '81-83 he visited London. Wrote over 40 operas (1747-87), 12 oratorios, good church-music, some string-quartets, harpsichord-sonatas (some with violin), etc. Of his operas, Orfeo, 1776, and Quinto Fabio, 1778, may be mentioned. G.

Bertrand, Aline (Paris, 1798-1835, do.). Famous French harpist, pupil of Nadermann and Bochs, from 1820 extraordinarily successful throughout Europe.

Bertrand, Jean Gustave (n. Paris, 1834-1880, Paris). French musicologist and critic for several Paris periodicals. Author of works on the history of the organ (1859), ancient music (1862), the origins of harmony (1866), reform in the Conservatory singing-methods (1871) and Les Nationalités Musicales Étudiées dans le Drame Lyrique, 1872. G.

Berutti, Antonio (b. 1862). Argentine composer of the operas La Vendetta, 1892, Evangelina, 1893, Taras Bulba, 1895, Pampas, 1897, Yupanki, 1899, Khrisé, 1902, Aphrodite, 1903, Horrida Nox, 1908, and Gli Eroi, 1910, those from 1897 produced at Buenos Aires.

Berwald, Franz Adolf (Stockholm, 1796-1868, do.), nephew of the following. Director of the Stockholm Conservatory and composer of the opera Estrella de Soria, 1862, 3 symphonies, chamber-music, etc., besides collecting a valuable library of scores. G.

Berwald, Johann Friedrich (Stockholm, 1787-1861, do.). Child-prodigy as violinist, pupil of Vogler, appearing at 5 and touring widely while under 10, as well as composing in large forms, from 1816 chamber-musician at the court in Stockholm and from 1819 court-conductor. Wrote 2 symphonies, string-quartets, etc. G.

Berwald, William Henry (Schwerin, 1864). North German teacher and composer, pupil of Rheinberger and Faiszt, from 1889 conductor at Libau in Russia, since 1892 professor of piano and composition at Syracuse University in America (Mus. D. 1912). Has written 2 overtures (Dramatic and Walthari), a piano-quintet (prize from Phila. Manuscript Soc.), a piano-trio, 2 violin-sonatas, a Seven Last Words and several other sacred cantatas, many anthems and part-songs, songs, piano-pieces, etc. A.

Besekirsky, Vassili (Moscow, 1879), son of the following. Excellent Russian violinist, pupil of his father, from 1891 known in Russia, Germany and Scandinavia, in 1910-13 professor at the Odessa Conservatory, in 1914-16 touring in the United States.

Besekirsky, Vassili Vassilievitch (Moscow, 1835). A foremost Russian violinist, pupil of Léonard and Damecke, from 1860 in the orchestra of the Imperial Theatre, Moscow, touring extensively from 1868, becoming concertmaster in 1871 and in 1882-1902 being the effective teacher of many pupils at the Conservatory of the Philharmonic Society (including Gregorovitch and his own son). His long activity was publicly celebrated in 1900 and 1910 at both Moscow and Petrograd. Has written many orchestral works, including an overture, a suite, etc., a violin-concerto, cadenzas for concertos by Beethoven, Brahms and Paganini, besides editing Bach's violin-sonatas, with a preface on L'Art Musical du Violon, 1913. G.

Besler, Samuel (1574-1625). 17th C. G.

Besozzi, Alessandro (Parma, ?1700-1775, Turin). Noted Italian oboist, from 1731 in court-service at Turin, becoming director. He made many tours with his brother Girolamo (1713-1786). Other brothers, also fine oboists, were Antonio (1707-1781), who succeeded Alessandro in 1775, after work at Dresden, and Gaetano (1727-1798), who was employed at the Neapolitan and French courts and finally went to London. The renown of the family was continued by Antonio's son Carlo (b. c. 1738), by Gaetano's son Girolamo (d. 1785, Paris), and the latter's son Henri (flutist) and grandson Louis Désiré (1814-1879), who won the Prix de Rome in 1837. Alessandro and Girolamo wrote many sonatas for various instruments. G.

Beszel, Vassili Vassilievitch (Petrograd, 1843-1907, Zurich). Founder in 1869 of a notable music-publishing business at Petrograd, issuing many works by leading Russian composers, as well as a small periodical in 1872-77 and a larger Review in 1885-89. Author of Reminiscences of Tchaikovsky, who was with him as student at the Petrograd Conservatory in 1863-65. G.

Bessemes, Antoine (Antwerp, 1809-1868, do.). Belgian violinist, pupil of Baillet, from 1829 in the orchestra of the Italiens, Paris, later toured as soloist, in 1847-52 conducted an orchestra in Antwerp and then taught in Paris. Wrote a violin-concerto, fantasias, duos, études, etc., string-trios and quartets, and much church-music. G.

Besson, Gustave Auguste (Paris, 1820-1875, do.). French maker of brass instruments from 1838 or earlier, beginning then a series of structural improvements of importance, especially in securing a full bore, without angles, in greatly improving the valve-mechanism and in providing for playing in more than one key without crooks, besides inventing a double-bass clarinet and a series of 'cornaphones.' G.

Best, William Thomas (Carlisle, 1826-1897, Liverpool). Distinguished English organist, mostly self-taught, from 1840 at Liverpool churches and (from 1848) for the Philharmonic Society there, and, after a year in London, in 1855-94 organist at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, for a time also in local churches, from 1868 for the Musical Society and from 1872 for the Philharmonic again, besides many engagements elsewhere (in 1871-91 at the Handel Festivals in London). In 1890 he made a trip to Australia. His recitals at St. George's Hall became famous. In 1880 he was offered knighthood, but preferred to accept a Civil-List pension. Wrote a large quantity of organ-music in many forms, often effective and individual, prepared many organ-arrangements and new editions, including 20 vols. of Handel, besides an Organ-School, 1853, and The Art of Organ-Playing, 1870. His accomplishments as virtuoso exerted a marked influence. G.

Beständig, Otto (Striegau, 1835-1917, n. Hamburg). Silesian teacher and conductor, pupil of Mettner, Freudenberg and Mosewius, from 1858 at Hamburg, where he founded a Konzertverein and a Conservatory, besides being conductor at Wandsbeck. He retired in 1910. Has written the oratorios Der Tod Baldurs and Victoria Crucis, a Deutscher Hymnus, a quartet for violin, 'cello, piano and harmonium, piano-pieces and a piano text-book (1872).

Betti, Adolfo (Lucca, 1875). Superior Italian violinist, pupil of Thomson, from 1896 appearing in Vienna, from 1900 working in conjunction with Thomson at Brussels, and since 1903 head of the famous Flonzaley Quartet. A.

Betz, Franz (Mayence, 1835-1900, Berlin). Eminent Rhenish operatic baritone from 1856, in 1859-97 regularly engaged at the Berlin Opera, where and at Bayreuth and elsewhere he became famous as a Wagnerian interpreter. He sang at the premières of Die Meistersinger (1868) and of the Ring cycle [Wotan] (1876). He was also heard more or less in other countries, as in Austria and in 1882 in England. His wife, née Düringer (1837-1906), was a noted coloratura-soprano. G.

Bevan, Frederick Charles (London, 1856). Popular English singer, from 1877 in the Chapel Royal. Since 1906 he has lived in Australia. Has written many songs that are much in vogue.

Bevignani, Enrico Modesto (Naples, 1841-1903, do.). Italian operatic conductor, from 1864 at His Majesty's, London, and from 1870 at Covent Garden, for many years also serving at Petrograd and Moscow and from 1894 at the Metropolitan, New York. The Czar made him Knight of St. Stanislas, with patent of nobility. His opera, Caterina Bloom, 1863, given in Naples, was decidedly successful, but he chose not to continue as composer.

Bevin, Elway. 16th C. G.

Bewerunge, Henry (in Westphalia, 1862). R. C. priest, musically trained at Ratisbon, in 1888-1914 professor at St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, Ireland. He has written many articles on church-music, Die vatikanische Choral-ausgabe, 2 parts, 1906-07, and translations of two of Riemann's treatises, besides in 1891-93 editing Lyra Ecclesiastica.

Bexfield, William Richard (Norwich, 1824-1853, London). English organist, first at Boston and from 1848 in London. In 1847 he was a candidate for the Oxford professorship. Wrote the oratorio Israel Restored, 1851, the cantata Hector's Death, anthems, organ-fugues, etc. G.

Beyschlag, Adolf (Frankfort, 1845). Hessian conductor, pupil of Lachner, in 1868-80 conducting theater-orchestras at Trèves and Cologne and concerts at Mayence and Frankfort, in 1880-1902 in England, principally at Belfast, Manchester and Leeds, and since 1902 living in Berlin (made royal professor in 1907). Author of Die Ornamentik der Musik, 1908.

Bezecny, Emil (Prague, 1868). Bohemian teacher, pupil of Slavkowsky and Adler, since 1896 professor at the Prague Conservatory. Has written a Requiem, a violin-sonata, etc., and edited some works for the Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Oesterreich.

Biaggi, Girolamo Alessandro (Milan, 1819–1897, Florence). Italian musicologist, trained at the Milan Conservatory, after working at Milan as maestro and editor of Italia Musicale, about 1860 became professor of music-history and æsthetics at the new Istituto Musicale at Florence and contributor to various periodicals (pen-name Ippolito d'Albano). Wrote the opera Martino della Scala, essays on church-music (1857), Florentine melodrama, plectral instruments, 17th-century music, and a life of Rossini (unfinished).

Bianchi, Charitas Bianca [Bertha Schwarz] (Heidelberg, 1858). Badenese operatic soprano, pupil of Wilczek and Mme. Viardot-Garcia, protégée of the impresario Pollini (whom she married in 1897), first appearing in 1873 (Karlsruhe) and then in London, Mannheim and Vienna. From 1902 she has taught at the Munich Conservatory and latterly at the Mozarteum in Salzburg.

Bianchi, Francesco (Cremona, 1752–1810, London). Italian opera-composer, in 1775–78 cembalist at the Italian Opera, Paris, from 1780 in Florence, in 1785–91 assistant-organist at St. Mark's, Venice, from 1792 conductor in London and Dublin. Wrote about 70 operas of popular character (from 1773), including Merope, 1799, 2 oratorios, and a work on harmony (unpublished). Bishop was one of his pupils. G.

Bianchi, Valentine (Vilna, 1839–1884, Candau). Russian stage-soprano from 1855, trained at the Paris Conservatory, singing at Schwerin, Stettin, Petrograd and Moscow and retiring in 1870.

Biber, Aloys (Ellingen, 1804–1858, Munich). Founder and manager of the foremost Bavarian piano-making business, to which his son succeeded.

Biber, Heinrich Ignaz Franz von (1644–1704). 17th C. G.

Bibl, Rudolf (Vienna, 1832–1902, do.). Able Austrian organist, pupil of his father and Sechter, playing from 1850 at St. Peter's, Vienna, from 1859 at St. Stephen's and from 1863 court-organist and from 1897 court-director. Wrote an organ-concerto (1891), an organ-sonata (1895), preludes and fugues and an Orgelschule, a violin-sonata, 4 masses with orchestra and 1 a cappella, 2 Requiems, etc. G.

Bie, Oscar (Breslau, 1864). Silesian scholar in the history of art, pupil in music of Ph. Scharwenka, from 1890 professor at the Technische Hochschule, Berlin, and editor of the Neue Rundschau. Has written Das Klavier u. seine Meister, 1898 (2d. ed. 1901), Intime Musik, 1904, Der Tanz, 1906 (2d. ed. 1920), Die moderne Musik u. R. Strauss, 1906 (2d. ed. 1916), Klavier, Orgel u. Harmonium, 1910 (2d. ed. 1921), Die Oper, 1913, etc.

Bieber, Theodor August (Hamburg, 1839–1912, do.). For more than a half-century director of the choral society Euthymia in Hamburg, besides conducting his own music-school.

Biehle, Johannes (Bautzen, 1870). Saxon cantor, trained at the Dresden Conservatory, since 1898 at the Bautzen Cathedral, becoming Director of Church Music in 1908. In 1905 he started successful annual festivals. Since about 1910 he has specialized in architectural acoustics at Berlin and Dresden (1918). Author of works on the pneumatic action in organs (1911) and on church-building from an acoustical standpoint (1913).

Biehr, Oskar (Dresden, 1851). Gifted Saxon violinist, trained at the Dresden Conservatory, and under Walter and David, from 1874 court-musician at Ballenstedt and in 1877–1902 in the Munich court-orchestra. He is an able ensemble-player.

Bienenfeld, Elsa. Originally studying chemistry and medicine, but took up musical science under Adler and Schönberg (Ph.D. of Vienna Univ. in 1904, dissertation on 16th-century works). Critic for the Wiener Journal.

Bierey, Gottlob Benedict (Dresden, 1772–1840, Breslau). Saxon opera-composer, pupil of C. E. Weinlig, from 1808 Weber's successor as director at Breslau, retiring in 1828. Wrote about 25 operas, mostly light, including Wladimir, 1807, Elias Ripsraps, 1810, etc., many cantatas and much church-music. G.

Biernacki, Michael Marian (Lublin, 1855). Polish composer of an orchestral Prolog, the choral Traum und Kabale, a piano-suite, a violin-suite, 2 masses, songs, etc., besides a textbook in composition (1922).

Bignami, Carlo (Cremona, 1808–1848, Voghera). Excellent Italian violinist and conductor, from 1827 at Cremona, then at Milan and Verona, and from 1837 again at Cremona, where he made the orchestra notable. Wrote a violin-concerto and other violin-works.

Bignami, Enrico (1836–1894, Genoa). Violinist and composer of the operas Anna Rose, 1892, and Luigi Feschi.

Bigot, Marie, née Kiéné (Colmar, 1786–1820, Paris). Alsatian pianist, from 1804 wife of Count Razumovsky's librarian in Vienna, where she was intimate with Haydn, Salieri and Beethoven, and (from 1809) in Paris, where she was also a favorite with both composers and pianists. In 1816 Mendelssohn had some lessons with her. G.

Bilhon, Jean de. 16th C. G.

Billings, William (Boston, 1746–1800, do.). Eccentric American singing-teacher, by trade a tanner, active in 1770–94 as author of many collections of tunes, odes, etc., for 'singing-schools' and as leader of such classes. His attempts at composition were crude and often infelicitous, but his zeal for choral music was real and contagious, so that he exerted some useful influence. A.

Billington, Elizabeth, née Weichsel (London, ?1768–1818, n. Venice), daughter of a German oboist and an English stage-singer. Precocious English soprano, in 1783 married to a double-bassist and making her stage-début at Dublin, continuing in London till 1794 with striking success. In 1794–1801 she sang throughout Italy, and then (till 1811) again in London, at both Drury Lane and Covent Garden, also at both the Ancient and the Vocal Concerts. Her second husband, from 1799, was M. Felissent. Her range was extensive and she excelled in execution. Her chief rival in England was Mara. G.

Billroth, Theodor (Rügen Is., 1829–1894, Austria). Eminent German surgeon and also fine pianist, from 1867 in Vienna, where he was intimate with Hanslick and Brahms, most of the latter's chamber-music being first given at his house. Author of Wer ist musikalisch?, 1896 (4th ed. 1912). Letters edited by G. Fischer, 1895, 8th ed. 1910.

Bilse, Benjamin (Liegnitz, 1816–1902, do.). Silesian conductor, from 1843 developing a noted orchestra at Liegnitz, and in 1868–84 directing popular concert-series at Berlin. In 1894 he was made Hofmusikus. Wrote dance-music.

Bimboni, Alberto (Florence, 1882). Italian conductor, trained at the Florence Conservatory, in 1911–12 touring in America with the Savage Opera Company and in 1913–14 with the Century Opera, New York. He has also appeared as pianist with noted artists. He is said to be preparing an opera on Indian themes. A.

Binchois, Gilles [Egidius] (?1400–1460). 15th C. G.

Binder, Christlieb Siegmund (1724–1789, Dresden). Saxon composer, from 1753 organist at the Dresden Hofkirche. Wrote organ-preludes, clavier-concertos, quartet- and trio-sonatas, etc., in a style related to that of Emanuel Bach.

Binder, Fritz (Baltimore, 1873). American pianist and conductor, trained wholly in Germany, where he appeared as a child in 1880, pupil of Leschetizky and the Cologne Conservatory, from 1896 conductor at Solingen, and since 1901 of the Danzig Singakademie, as well as director of the Conservatory. A.

Binder, Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand (Dresden, 1764–?). Noted harp-maker at Dresden, credited with improvements in the double-action mechanism.

Bingham, Walter Van Dyke (Iowa, 1880). American psychologist, from 1910 at Dartmouth College and since 1915 at the Carnegie Inst. of Technology, Pittsburgh, writing many articles on musical aspects of physiological psychology, and also Studies in Melody, 1910. A.

Bini, Pasqualino (Pesaro, ?1720–?). Italian violinist, favorite pupil of Tartini (who called him his superior), from 1754 concertmaster of the Stuttgart court-band. Wrote a violin-concerto and a sonata. G.

Biondi, Giovanni Battista. 17th C.

Bioni, Antonio (Venice, 1698–?). Italian opera-composer, in 1726–33 director at Breslau, then returning to Italy. Wrote about 25 operas (1721–38), including Endimione, 1727, a mass and a serenata for 5 voices. G.

Birchall, Robert (?–1819, London). English music-publisher from about 1784, including a circulating-library and the issue of a large number of standard works (many of Beethoven's, Mozart's operas, etc.). G.

Birkenstock, Johann Adam (Alsfeld, 1687–1733, Eisenach). Hessian violinist, from 1725 at Kassel and from 1730 at Eisenach. Wrote violin-sonatas and clavier-sonatas with 4 violins, viola and 'cello.

Bird, Arthur (Cambridge, Mass. 1856). American composer, pupil of Haupt, Loeschhorn and Rohde, working almost wholly at Berlin (except 1877–81, in Halifax, N. S.). Has written a symphony, 3 orchestral suites, a serenade for wind (Paderewski prize, 1901), suites and pieces for piano, the comic opera Daphne, 1897, and the ballet Rübezahl. G. A.

Bird, Henry Richard (Walthamstow, 1842–1915, London). Fine English organist and remarkable accompanist, from 1859 engaged at various London churches, especially (from 1872) St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington, conductor of a Chelsea choral society and accompanist to several others, and from 1896 teacher at the Royal College and at Trinity College. G.

Birnbach, Joseph Benjamin Heinrich (Breslau, 1793–1879, Berlin), son of the following. Silesian pianist and composer, teaching at Breslau from 1814 and in Berlin from 1821 (Nicolai, Kücken and Dehn among his pupils). Wrote 2 symphonies, 2 overtures, concertos for piano, clarinet, oboe, etc., a quintet, piano-pieces and Der vollkommene Kapellmeister, 1845.

Birnbach, Karl Joseph (Köpenick, 1751–1805, Warsaw). Silesian violinist and composer, pupil of Dittersdorf, early working at Breslau, from 1795 at Berlin and in 1804–05 head of the German Opera at Warsaw. Wrote many symphonies, piano-concertos, chamber-works, 2 operas (1783), oratorios and church-music.

Bischoff, Georg Friedrich (in the Harz, 1780–1841, Hildesheim). From 1816 director at Hildesheim, noted as the first to organize a Musikfest in Germany (Frankenhausen, 1810, Spohr being conductor). He was influential in promoting others later.

Bischoff, Hans (Berlin, 1852–1889, do.). Excellent Prussian pianist, pupil of Th. Kullak and Wüerst (also Ph.D. of Berlin Univ. 1873), from 1873 taught in Kullak's Academy and conducted some concerts of the Singakademie. Edited Ad. Kullak's Aesthetik des Klavierspiels, 1876, and collections of Handel's and Bach's clavier-works.

Bischoff, Hermann (Duisburg, 1868). Rhinish composer, pupil of Jadassohn, working at Munich. Has written 2 symphonies, the symphonic poem Pan, and a work on Das deutsche Lied, 1905.

Bischoff, Kaspar Jakob (Ansbach, 1823–1893, Munich). Bavarian composer, pupil of Ett, Stuntz, F. Lachner and the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1850 singing-teacher at Frankfurt. Wrote the opera Maske und Mantilla, 1852, 3 symphonies, an overture to Hamlet, chamber- and church-music, and a text-book of harmony (1890). Memoir by Schmidt-Bode, 1889.

Bischoff, Ludwig Friedrich Christian (Dessau, 1794–1867, Cologne). Saxon teacher and editor, from 1823 head of the Wesel gymnasium, and from 1850 founder and editor of the Rheinische Musikzeitung at Cologne (later Niederrheinische Z.). He rendered Oulibicheff's Beethoven into German (1859). He was the first to use the derivative term Zukunftsmusik with reference to Wagner's style.

Bishop, Ann, née Rivière (London, 1810–1884, New York). English soprano, pupil of Moscheles and at the Royal Academy, appearing in concert from 1831 and later at various festivals. She married H. R. Bishop in 1832, but in 1839 eloped with the harpist Bochsá (d. 1855), with whom or with Martin Schultz, her husband from 1859, she traveled incessantly all over the world, including America from 1846, from 1859 and in her last years. She had a brilliant high voice, of no special sympathy. G.

Bishop, Henry Rowley (London, 1786–1855, do.). Famous English composer of stage-works, pupil of Bianchi, writing his first piece in 1804, a ballet in 1806 and an opera in 1809, and then (till 1841) being constantly engaged as composer or conductor at Covent Garden, Drury Lane or Vauxhall, besides from 1813 being one of the leaders of the new Philharmonic Society and in 1840–48 in charge of the Ancient Concerts. In 1841–43 he was professor at Edinburgh University, and in 1848 succeeded Crotch as professor at Oxford, where he was made Mus.D. in 1853. He was knighted in 1842. His extremely numerous and facile works were of varied dimensions, none rising above the ballad-opera level, but marked by easy melody and dextrous construction. Many were adaptations from other composers, including Mozart's Figaro and Don Giovanni, Rossini's Barbiere and Guillaume Tell, and Boieldieu's Jean de Paris. Among the longer works were The Maid of the Mill, 1814, The Slave, 1816, Maid Marian, 1822, Clari, 1823, The Fall of Alpiers, 1825, Aladdin, 1825, The Knights of the Cross, 1826, Under the Oak, 1830, etc. From these and lesser works many single numbers became popular (like 'Home, sweet home' from Clari). He also wrote a quantity of capital glees and effective songs, the cantata The Seventh Day and the oratorio The Fallen Angel, prepared editions of The Messiah, of Handel's songs, etc. He was twice married, first to a Miss Lyon and in 1832 to Ann Rivière (see above). G.

Bispham, David Scull (Philadelphia, 1857–1921, New York). Distinguished American baritone, trained by Vanuccini, Lamperti, Shakspeare and Randegger. His operatic début was in 1891 (London), followed by constant engagements in London and New York, continuing active in opera till 1909 and not only creating many rôles, but establishing himself as a foremost interpreter of several different styles, including especially that of Wagner. His operatic répertoire included over 50 works and he also sang in more than 100 oratorios and cantatas. As a song-singer he was equally accomplished, covering a range of at least 1500 works, and he made much impression with song-cycles and with melodrama. While especially noted for parts requiring dramatic versatility and humor, he was also powerful in those of dignity and depth. His declamatory and elocutionary skill, combined with his use of English wherever possible, made his work highly educational. Autobiography, 1920. G, A.

Bitter, Karl Hermann (Schwedt, 1813–1885, Berlin). Prussian lawyer and official, holding important positions from 1846 at various places. Author of a life of J. S. Bach (1865, 2d ed. 4 vols. 1881), new translations and studies of Don Giovanni and Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride (1866) a valuable account of J. S. Bach's sons (2 vols. 1868), on Gervinus' Händel u. Shakspeare (1869), on the history of the oratorio (1872), studies on the Stabat Mater (1883), and Die Reform der Oper durch Gluck u. Wagner, 1884. He also wrote much for periodicals and edited Loewe's autobiography (1870). His collected writings were published in 1885. G.

Bittner, Julius (Vienna, 1874). Austrian lawyer and opera-composer, in 1915 and 1918 winning the Mahler and Raimund prizes. Has written the operas Die rote Gret, 1907, Der Markt der Liebe (ballet-opera), 1909, Der Musikant, 1910, Der Bergsee, 1911, Der Abenteuerer, 1913, Alarich, Das höllische Gold, 1915, and Die Kohlheimerin, 1921, all to his own librettos and all but two given in Vienna.

Bittoni, Bernardo (Fabriano, 1755–1829, do.). Fine Italian organist and violinist, writing much church-music (unpublished). Memoir by Alfieri, 1852.

Bizet, Alexandre César Léopold Georges (Paris, 1838–1875, Bougival). Highly gifted French composer and pianist, in 1848–57 pupil of the Paris Conservatory, where in 1857 he won the Prix de Rome, his master in composition being Halévy (whose daughter he married in 1869). His genius was most distinctive in brilliant form and orchestration, in colorful characterization, as of Oriental scenes, and in a certain intensity of imaginative delineation. His career was too short to bring out all the latent capacity of his artistic endowment, but he nevertheless left a deep mark upon French dramatic music. His short list of works comprises the three opéras bouffes Le Docteur Miracle, 1857 (with Lecocq), Don Procopio, [1858] 1906, and La Guzla de l'Émir [1859], the larger Les Pêcheurs de Perles, 1863, La Jolie Fille de

Perth, 1867, Numa, 1871, Djamileh, 1872, Car-men, 1875, and Ivan le Terrible, incidental music to Daudet's L'Arlesienne (later made into an orchestral suite), 3 other suites, L'Arlesienne, No. 2, Roma and Jeux d'Enfance, the overtures Patrie and La Chasse d'Ossian, 2 movements of a symphony, piano-pieces and songs. Of all his works Carmen stands out as not only the most successful, but as a significant contribution to operatic literature. G.

Black, Andrew (Glasgow, 1859). Scottish baritone, pupil of Randegger, J. B. Welch and Scafeti, notable at London from 1887, in MacCunn's Lay of the Last Minstrel in 1888, at the Leeds Festival of 1892, then for a time in the United States, and especially from 1894 at the festivals at Birmingham, Gloucester, Norwich, etc. Since 1893 he has been professor at the Manchester Royal College of Music. G.

Blaes, Arnold Joseph (Brussels, 1814-1892, do.). Excellent Belgian clarinetist, pupil of Bachmann, whom, after several years of touring, he succeeded in 1842 as professor at the Brussels Conservatory. His wife (née Meerti) was a cultivated singer. G.

Blaes, Edouard (Ghent, 1846). Belgian bassoonist and choral conductor, from 1875 playing at the French theater at Ghent, director at St.-Bavon, also city-director, teacher at the Conservatory, head of the music-school at Ledeberg and leader of various choral societies. Has written choruses and songs.

Blagrove, Henry Gamble (Nottingham, 1811-1872, London). English violinist, pupil of his father, of the new Royal Academy (from 1823) and of Spohr. He first appeared as a prodigy in 1817, in 1830-37 was in Queen Adelaide's band, from 1836 led a quartet (with H. Gattle, J. B. Dando and C. Lucas), and thenceforth was in constant request at concerts and festivals. His brother Richard (d. 1895) was a fine violist and also specialist on the concertina. G.

Blahak, Joseph (Raggendorf, 1779-1846, Vienna). Hungarian tenor, in 1802-23 at the Leopoldstädter Theater, Vienna, and from 1824 director at the Petrikirche. Wrote much church-music.

Blahetka, Marie Leopoldine (n. Vienna, 1811-1887, Boulogne). Austrian pianist, pupil of Kalkbrenner, Moscheles and Sechter, for some years touring extensively and from 1840 living at Boulogne. Wrote a piano-concerto, sonatas, piano-trios, piano-pieces, songs and the romantic opera Die Räuber und die Sänger, 1830. G.

Blahoslav, Johannes (?-1871). 16th C.

Blainville, Charles Henri (n. Tours, 1711-1769, Paris). French 'cellist and author, writing several symphonies (one in the Greek Dorian mode, 1751), a text-book in harmony (1751), L'Esprit de l'Art Musical, 1754, and a music-history (1767).

Blaise, Benoit (?-1772, Paris). French bassoonist at the Comédie Italienne in Paris and composer of some of the earliest French comic operas (1754-62).

Blamont, François Colin de (Versailles, 1690-1760, do.). After study with Lalande, from 1719 in charge of music at the French court. Wrote numerous ballets and divertissements (from 1723), including the opera Diane et Endymion, 1731, 2 sets of motets, including a good Te Deum, 3 books of solo-cantatas, etc., and an Essai sur les Goûts Anciens et Modernes de la Musique Française, 1754. G.

Blanc, Adolphe (Manosque, 1828-1885, Paris). French composer, studying at the Paris Conservatory and with Halévy, winning the Chartier prize (chamber-music) in 1862. Wrote the comic opera Une Aventure sous la Lique, 1857, 2 operettas, a burlesque symphony, an overture, much chamber-music and piano-pieces.

Blanchard, Henri Louis (Bordeaux, 1778-1858, Paris). French critic, pupil of R. Kreutzer, Reicha and Méhul, in 1818-29 concert-master at the Variétés, Paris, and later theater-manager and able essayist for several journals. Wrote the comic opera Diane et Vernon, 1831, many lighter pieces, some chamber-music, and also many biographical notices, later collected. G.

Blanchet, Émile R. (Lausanne, 1877). Swiss pianist, pupil of his father, the Cologne Conservatory and Busoni, since 1904 teaching at Lausanne and composing good piano-works, a violin-sonata and a Konzertstück for piano with orchestra.

Blanck, Hubert de (Utrecht, 1856). Dutch pianist and teacher, pupil of Dupuy and Ledent, from 1873 touring in northern Europe, for a time conductor at Warsaw, in 1880 with Dengremont in South America, in 1881-83 in New York and then in Havana, where he developed a National Conservatory, now with branches in other Cuban cities. A.

Bland, Maria Theresa, née Romanzini (1769-1838, London). Jewish singer of Italian descent, from 1782 popular in London, especially at Drury Lane, till 1824. G.

Blangini, Giuseppe Marco Maria Felice (Turin, 1781-1841, Paris). Italian tenor, conductor and composer, pupil of Ottani, from 1799 a fashionable teacher at Paris, from 1805 at Munich, from 1809 court-director at Kassel, and in 1814-30 court-director at Paris and teacher in the Conservatory. Wrote about 30 operas (1802-32), including La Marquise de Brinvilliers (with Cherubini and Carafa), 1831, many effective romances (songs), nocturnes (duets), and 4 masses. Autobiography, Souvenirs de Blangini, 1834, edited by Villemarest. G.

Blankenburg, Quirin Gerbrandt van (Gouda, 1654-1740?, The Hague). Dutch organist at The Hague, author of Elementa Musica, 1739, Orgelboek der gereformeerde Psalmen, 1732, a flute-method, etc. G.

Blaramberg, Paul Ivanovitch (Orenburg, 1841). Russian composer, pupil of Balakirev, from 1870 editor of the Moscow News and from 1878 professor at the Philharmonic School of Music. Has written a symphony, the symphonic poems The Demon, 1869, and The Dying Gladiator, 1882, the cantatas Voievoda, 1865, The Locusts, 1879, and On the Volga, 1880, and the operas Maria of Burgundy, 1882, The First Russian Comedian, 1882, The Juggler, The Watersprite and Tushintzi, 1895, the last being specially successful. G.

Blaserna, Pietro (n. Aquileja, 1836-1917, Rome). Italian physicist, eminent in acoustics, from 1863 at the University of Palermo and from 1872 at that of Rome, where he became senator in 1890. Author of La Teoria del Suono, 1876 (also in German, French and English).

Blasius, Mathieu Frédéric (Lauterburg, 1758-1829, Versailles). Alsatian player of clarinet, bassoon and flute, in 1795-1802 professor at the Paris Conservatory and then till 1816 conductor at the Opéra-Comique. Wrote 3 operas (1788-93), melodramas, concertos for violin, clarinet or bassoon, string-quartets and many works for wind-groups.

Blass, Arthur (Elberfeld, 1857). Rhenish theater-conductor in 1887-96 at various places and since 1901 choral conductor and teacher of music-history at Mannheim. Author of Musikalische Streifzüge, 1890-94, Händel, Chrysander u. d. neue Messias, Beethovens innere Entwicklung, Chronik d. Musikgeschichte, 1907, etc.

Blass, Robert (New York, 1867). American operatic bass, pupil of Sitt, Ewald and Stockhausen, appearing from 1895 in Germany and London, and from 1900 in New York, where he has been connected with the Metropolitan. He sings about 50 rôles in German, French or Italian. A.

Blassmann, Adolf Josef Maria (Dresden, 1823-1891, Bautzen). Good Saxon pianist, pupil of C. Mayer and Liszt, long active in Dresden, except in 1862-64 director of the Euterpe in Leipzig and in 1866-67 court-director at Sondershausen.

Blauvelt, Lillian Evans (Brooklyn, 1874). Excellent American soprano (originally expected to be a violinist), pupil of Bouhy, sang in concert in Europe from 1890 and in opera from 1891, was soon heard widely in the United States, thereafter (till 1914) alternating more or less constantly between Europe and America. She has received honors from several courts. Her voice is notably clear, flexible and brilliant, with much sympathetic capacity. G. A.

Blauwaert, Emil (St. Nicholas, 1845-1891, Brussels). Belgian bass-baritone from 1865, pupil of the Brussels Conservatory, noted for remarkable performances as Lucifer (Benoît's) and Gurnemanz (Bayreuth). From 1877 he taught in Bruges, Antwerp and Mons. G.

Blavet, Michel (Besançon, 1700-1768, Paris). French flutist in Paris, composer of the first French comic opera, Le Jaloux Corrigé, 1752, and 3 sets of flute-sonatas (1728-40).

Blaze [Castil-Blaze], François Henri Joseph (Cavaillon, 1784-1857, Paris). Eminent French critic, in 1822-32 on the staff of the Journal des Débats and then and later writing for many other periodicals. Author of L'Opéra en France, 2 vols, 1820 (his chief work), Dictionnaire de Musique Moderne, 2 vols, 1821 (2d ed. 1825, 3d ed. 1828), Chapelle-Musique des Rois de France, 1832, La Danse et les Ballets, 1832, Mémorial du Grand Opéra, 1838, Le Piano, 1839-40 (Revue de Paris), Molière Musicien, 1852, Théâtres Lyriques de Paris, 2 vols, 1855-56, Sur L'Opéra Français, 1856, L'Art des Jeux Lyriques, 1858, and numerous and important translations of German and Italian librettos into French. Also wrote 3 operas (1843-44), chamber-music, romances and clever pasticcios, with a collection of Provençal songs. G.

Blaze, Henri, Baron de Bury (Avignon, 1813-1888, Paris), son of the above. French littérateur, writing much for the Revue des Deux Mondes, etc., including an important life of Rossini (1854), Musiciens Contemporains, 1856, Meyerbeer et son Temps, 1865, Musiciens du Passé, du Présent, etc., 1880, and Goethe et Beethoven, 1882. His musical knowledge did not equal his father's. G.

Blech, Leo (Aix-la-Chapelle, 1871). Rhenish conductor and composer, for a time pupil at the Berlin Hochschule and also of Humperdinck, from 1893 director in theater or opera in Aix, Prague (from 1899) and at the Berlin Opera (from 1906). Has written the operas Aglais, 1893, Cherubina, 1894, Das war Ich, 1902 (opera-idyl), Alpenkönig und Menschenfeind, 1903 (from Raimund), Aschenbrödel, 1905, and Versiegelt, 1908, the operetta Die Strohwitwe, 1920, the symphonic poems Die Nonne, Waldwunderung and Trost in der Natur, choruses with orchestra, songs and piano-pieces. Studies by Rychnowsky, 1905, 1909.

Bleichmann, Julius Ivanovitch (Petrograd, 1868-1909, do.). Russian conductor and composer, founder of popular orchestral concerts in Petrograd in 1893 and conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts in 1894-95. Wrote 2 operas, orchestral and chamber-music, etc.

Bleuer, Ludwig (Pest, 1863-1897, Berlin). Hungarian violinist, pupil of Grün and the Berlin Hochschule, in 1883-93 concertmaster of the Berlin Philharmonic and from 1894 leader of the Detroit (Mich.) Philharmonic Club.

Blewitt, Jonathan (London, 1782-1853, do.). English organist, pupil of his father and Battishill, active in England from about 1795, in Dublin from 1811 (St. Andrew's), becoming conductor at the Theatre Royal and organist to the Irish Grand Lodge, and from 1826 director at Sadler's Wells Theatre and later at Tivoli Gardens, Margate. Wrote various light operas, operettas, pantomimes and songs. G.

Bleyer, Georg. 17th C.

Bleyer, Nikolaus (1590-1658). 17th C.

Bleyle, Karl (Feldkirch, 1880). Important Tyrolean composer, pupil of Wehrle, S. de Lange, Singer and Thuille, living at Munich. Has written a symphony, the overture Reineke

Fuchs and a Siegesouvertüre, the choral works An den Mistral, Leut lachen, Mignons Beisetzung, Heilige Sendung, Die Höllenfahrt Christi, Chorus Mysticus, Ein Harfenklang and Prometheus, the orchestral Flagellantenzug and Gnomentanz, a violin-concerto, songs, duets and piano-pieces.

Bliss, Arthur (London, 1891). English composer, trained at the Royal College, London, and now teacher there. Has written a symphony, an orchestral Mêlée Fantastique, a piano-concerto, an oboe-concertino, incidental music to Shakespeare's Tempest, Conservations for septet, several works for voices and small orchestra, etc.

Bloch, Ernest (Geneva, 1880). Gifted Jewish Swiss composer, trained by Jaques-Dalcroze, Ysaÿe, Rasse and Knorr, from 1904 working in Geneva, where in 1911-15 he was professor in the Conservatory, besides in 1909-10 conducting concerts at Lausanne and occasionally elsewhere. In 1916 he came as conductor with Maud Allen to the United States, and in 1917 began teaching at the Mannes School in New York. He has been represented on programs of most of the larger orchestras, and in 1917 the Society of the Friends of Music, New York, gave a special concert of his works. In 1919 he took the Coolidge (Berkshire) prize for composition. In 1920 he became director of the new Institute of Music in Cleveland. His works include symphonies in C-sharp min. 1903, and F (Israël, Hebrew themes), the symphonic poems Vivre et Aimer, 1900, and Hiver-Printemps, 1905, a string-quartet in B, a viola-suite (prize above), Trois Poèmes Juifs and Orientale for orchestra, the rhapsody Schelomo for 'cello and orchestra, 4 Poèmes d'Automne and Psalms 22, 114 and 137 for voice and orchestra, the opera Macbeth, 1910, and an unfinished opera, Jezebel. See article in La Critica Musicale, 1920, by Gatti. A.

Bloch, Georg (Breslau, 1847-1910, Berlin). Silesian choral leader, pupil of Hainsch, J. Schubert, Taubert and F. Geyer, from 1879 founder and conductor of the Opernverein in Berlin, teacher in Breslau's Music School and from 1894 director at the Alte Synagoge.

Bloch, Josef (Pest, 1862). Hungarian violinist and composer, pupil of K. Hubay, Volkmann and Dancila, from 1884 in the Hubay-Popper Quartet and in 1890-1900 teacher in the National Conservatory, Pest. Has written an overture, 2 suites and a rhapsody for orchestra, a violin-concerto, a string-quartet and 2 string-suites, pieces, études and a method for violin (1904).

Blockx, Jan (Antwerp, 1851-1912, do.). Eminent Belgian pianist and composer, pupil of Callaerts, Benoit, Brassin and the Leipzig Conservatory, early popular in Antwerp as composer of Flemish songs and cantatas, from 1886 teacher of harmony at the Conservatory and director of the Cercle Artistique, and from 1902 Benoit's successor as head of the Royal Flemish Conservatory. Wrote the operas Jets vergeten, 1877, Maître Martin, 1892, Her- bergprinses [Princesse d'Auberge] 1896, Tijl Uylenspiegel, 1900, De Bruid der Zee, 1901, De Capel, 1903, and Baldie, 1908, the choral works with orchestra Vredezaag, Het Droom-vant Paradies, De Klokke Roelandt, Op den Stroom and Scheldezaag, a Rubens overture, the ballet Milenka, 1887, a violin-romanza with orchestra, etc.

Blodek, Wilhelm (Prague, 1834-1874, do.). Bohemian composer, pupil of the Prague Conservatory, where from 1860 he was professor. Wrote the operas V Studni [Im Brunnen], 1867, and Zidek (not completed), an overture, a mass, men's quartets, songs and piano-pieces. Memoir by Jerík, 1906.

Blon, Franz von (Berlin, 1861). Prussian conductor, trained at the Stern Conservatory and the Hochschule in Berlin, early concert-master at the Hamburg Stadttheater, from 1898 conductor of the Philharmonic Blas-Orchester in Berlin, from 1900 of the Tonkünstler-Orchester there and from 1906 of the Warsaw Philharmonic. Has written the operettas Sub Rosa, 1887, Die Amazone, 1903, and Die tolle Prinzess, 1913, the ballet In Afrika, 1899, and various popular orchestral pieces, etc.

Blondeau, Pierre Auguste Louis (Paris, 1784-1865, do.). French violinist, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1808), in 1810-42 in the orchestra at the Opéra. Wrote the operas Così si fa ai Gelosi, 1812, and Alla Fontana [1893], the ballet Almanzor, 1814, 3 overtures, chamber-music, a mass, 2 Te Deums and other church-music, etc., besides text-books and a music-history (2 vols. 1827).

Bloomfield-Zeissler. See Zeissler.

Blow, John (1649-1708). 17th C. G.

Blum, Karl Ludwig (Berlin, 1786-1844, do.). Prussian composer of varied accomplishments, pupil of H. Grossi, F. A. Hiller and Salieri, in court-service at Berlin from 1820, becoming stage-manager at the Opera. Wrote about 50 stage-pieces, mostly operettas (1810-37), introducing French vaudeville in Germany, besides a guitar-method.

Blumenfeld, Felix Michailovitch (Kovalevskaja, 1863). Russian pianist and conductor, pupil of Th. Stein, from 1885 teacher at the Petrograd Conservatory and in 1898-1912 conductor at the Imperial Opera. Has written a symphony, a string-quartet, several orchestral works. 'cello-pieces, songs, etc.

Blumenschein, William Leonard (Brensbach, 1849-1916, Dayton, O.). German organist and conductor, brought to America in childhood, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1877 organist and choral conductor at Dayton and in 1891-96 chorusmaster for the Cincinnati Festivals. Wrote effective piano-pieces, anthems, songs, etc. A.

Blumenthal, Jacob (Hamburg, 1829-1908, London). North German pianist, pupil of Grund, Bocklet, Sechter, Herz and Halévy, from 1848 a fashionable teacher in London (pianist to the Queen) and composer of popular piano-pieces and songs, etc. G.

Blumenthal, Joseph von (Brussels, 1782-1850, Vienna). Belgian violinist, pupil of Vogler, from about 1803 choirmaster at the Piarist church, Vienna. Wrote the opera Don Sylvio de Rosalba, 1805, a ballet and other stage-music, symphonies and chamber-music, and a violin-method.

Blumenthal, Paul (Steinau, 1843). Silesian organist, trained at the Berlin Royal Academy, from 1870 organist and from 1899 cantor at Frankfurt-on-Oder, becoming royal professor in 1905. Has written some orchestral music, masses and other church-music, etc., besides a music-history (5th ed. 1921).

Blumer, Theodor (Dresden, 1882). Saxon composer, trained by his father and at the Dresden Conservatory, from 1906 at the court-theater in Altenburg and since 1911 living in Dresden. Has written a light opera (1911), the symphonic poem Erlösung, a piano-quintet, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, etc.

Blumner, Martin (Fürstenberg, 1827-1901, Berlin). Prussian conductor and composer, pupil of Dehn, from 1853 second and from 1876 first conductor of the Berlin Singakademie. Wrote the oratorios Abraham, 1860, and Der Fall Jerusalems, 1874, the cantatas Columbus, 1853, In Zeit und Ewigkeit, 1885, and Festival, 1891, an 8-part Te Deum, motets, Psalms, songs, etc., all strongly written in strict style. Author of a history of the Singakademie (1891), which gained him a Ph.D. from Berlin Univ.

Blüthner, Julius Ferdinand (n. Merseburg, 1824-1910, Leipzig). Eminent Saxon pianomaker, founding a famous factory at Leipzig in 1853. Aside from the general excellence of his instruments, for which he won many prizes, he made the 'Aliquot-flügel,' a grand with sympathetic octave strings above the regular series. Author (with H. Gretschel) of Der Pianofortebau, 1872 (3d ed. 1909). G.

Bobinski, Henry Antonovitch (Warsaw, 1861). Polish pianist from 1887, teacher first in Moscow and from 1893 in Kiev. Has written an overture, a piano-concerto, string-variations, piano-pieces, etc.

Boccabadati, Luigia (Parma, ?1800-1850, Turin). Italian stage-soprano from 1817, singing throughout Italy, with most success in opera buffa, in London in 1833 and at Lisbon in 1840-42. G.

Boccherini, Luigi (Lucca, 1743-1805, Madrid). Gifted Italian 'cellist and composer, pupil of his father and Vannucci, from 1764 in the Lucca town-band, touring in 1768-69 with the violinist Manfredi in Italy and to Paris and Madrid, where he became chamber-musician to the Infante Luis (till 1785), and in 1787-94 court-composer in Prussia. In 1800-02 he was the protégé of Lucien Bonaparte at Madrid, but his final years were spent in much sorrow and poverty. His works were almost incredibly numerous, but, especially in the field of chambermusic, marked by delicacy, refinement and good workmanship. He was not only a worthy contemporary of Haydn, but counted by the latter as a compeer. His works include 2 octets, 16 sextets, 125 string-quintets, 12 with piano, 18 with flute or oboe, 91 string-quartets, 54 string-trios, over 40 pieces for violin, besides 20 symphonies, an orchestral suite, a 'cello-concerto, the opera La Clementina, 1765, 2 oratorios, considerable church-music, and the cantata Inez de Castro (his last work). Memoirs by Picquot, 1851, Cerù, 1864, Schletterer, 1882, and Malfatti, 1905. G.

Bochsa, Karl (?-1821, Paris). Bohemian oboist and clarinetist, first in Lyons and Bordeaux and from 1806 in Paris, where he had a music-store. Wrote much chamber-music with oboe or clarinet, a clarinet-concerto and methods for flute and clarinet.

Bochsa, Robert Nicolas Charles (Montmédy, 1789-1856, Sydney, N. S. W.), son of the above. French harpist and composer, pupil of his father and at the Paris Conservatory, appearing precociously as both player and composer, from 1813 was court-harpist, but in 1817, caught in forgery, fled to London, where he started Lenten 'oratorios' (with G. T. Smart) in 1822, taught at the Academy in 1822-27, conducted Italian opera in 1826-32, and in 1839 ran away with Bishop's wife, spending the rest of his life in tours all over the world (in America in 1847). Wrote several operas (1804-19), ballets, an oratorio (1823), a Requiem, some orchestral music, including overtures, and much harp-music, besides an excellent harp-method. Articles by Pougin in Le Ménestrel, 1907. G.

Bocklet, Karl Maria von (Prague, 1801-1881, Vienna). Brilliant Bohemian pianist and also violinist, pupil of Zawora, Hummel, D. Weber and Pixis, from 1820 violinist and teacher in Vienna (L. Köhler and Jacob Blumenthal his pupils).

Bockshorn, Samuel (?1629-1665). 17th C. G.

Bodanzky, Artur (Vienna, 1877). Distinguished Austrian conductor, trained at the Vienna Conservatory, from 1896 violinist at the Vienna Opera and from 1900 theater-conductor at Budweis, going in 1901 to Vienna, where in 1903 he assisted Mahler at the Opera and in 1904 was conductor at the Theater an der Wien, in 1905 at the Lortzing Theater, Berlin, in 1906-09 at Prague (theater and orchestra), in 1909-15 at the Grand Ducal Theater at Mannheim, often appearing elsewhere as guest-conductor. His striking success in 1912 with a Mahler festival at Mannheim and in 1914 with Parsifal at London prepared the way for his succession to Hertz at the Metropolitan in New York in 1915, where his place in the foremost rank has been made secure. In 1919 he added to his opera duties the leadership of the New Symphony Orchestra. He has edited (1918) a new version of Weber's Oberon with skill and insight. A.

Bodenschatz, Erhard (1576-1636). 17th C. G.

Boedecker, Louis (Hamburg, 1845-1899, do.). Pianist and critic at Hamburg, pupil of Marxsen, and composer of some music for orchestra, chamber-ensemble and chorus, a Phantasie-Sonate for violin, a Trio-Phantasie and piano-pieces.

Boehe, Ernst (Munich, 1880). Bavarian conductor and composer, pupil of R. Louis, Thuille and Schwartz, in 1907 assisting Courvoisier in popular orchestral concerts at Munich and in 1913-20 court-director at Oldenburg, going thence as conductor at Ludwigshafen. Has written the symphonic poem Taormina, a Tragische Ouvertüre, a Symphonischer Epilog zu einer Tragödie, a Komödienouvertüre (1914), a set of 4 episodes in the Odysseus Fahrten ('Setting Out and Shipwreck,' 'the Island of Circe,' 'the Lament of Nausicaa,' 'the Home-Coming'), songs with orchestra, etc.

Boekelman, Bernardus (Utrecht, 1838). Excellent Dutch pianist, pupil of his father, the Leipzig Conservatory, also of Von Bülow, Kiel and Weitzmann, from 1866 settled in New York, at first touring with Carl Fornes and Jehin-Prume. He soon formed the New York Trio Club (with R. Richter and E. Schenck). From 1883 he was director of music at a school in Farmington, Conn., and from 1897 in another at Briardiff, N. Y. besides teaching in New York. Has written several chamber-works and characteristic piano-pieces, including some studies, besides editing 16 of the fugues from Bach's Wohltemperirtes Clavier with the themes differentiated in color. A.

Boëllmann, Léon (Ensisheim, 1862-1897 Paris). Alsatian organist and composer, pupil of Gigout, from 1881 at St. Vincent-de-Paul, Paris, and teacher in Gigout's organ-school. Wrote with much finish a symphony, a piano-quartet and trio, a Fantaisie Dialoguée for orchestra and organ, Variations Symphoniques for 'cello and orchestra, a 'cello-sonata, a Rhapsodie Carnavalesque for piano (4-hands), 2 organ-suites, including a Suite Gothique, Heures Mystiques (100 organ-pieces) and many other works for organ. Memoir by Locard, 1901. G.

Boëly, Alexandre Pierre François (Versailles, 1785-1858, Paris). French pianist, trained at the Paris Conservatory (taking violin under Ladurner, from 1830 also organist at St.-Germain-l'Auxerrois. Wrote 3 string-trios, piano-and violin-sonatas, offertories and other organ-pieces, and a mass for Christmas. G.

Boepler, William (Pferdsfeld, 1863). German conductor, educated at Leipzig and Bonn Universities, pupil of Reinecke, Fiedler, Langer and A. Mendelssohn, coming in 1894 to Milwaukee, where in 1895 he organized an capella chorus, in 1899 the Wisconsin Conservatory and in 1902 the Symphony Orchestra, besides writing for two German papers in 1895-97. Since 1904 he has also been active as choral conductor in Chicago. A.

Boerresen, Hakon (Copenhagen, 1876). Talented Danish composer, pupil of Svendsen, writing the operas Der königliche Gast, 1919, and Kaddara, 1921 (subject from Greenland), and various works for orchestra, chamber-ensemble, piano and voice.

Boers, Joseph Karel (Nymwegen, 1812-1896, Delft). Dutch violinist and conductor, pupil of Lübeck, from 1831 theater-conductor at The Hague, Paris and Metz, from 1841 teacher and conductor at Nymwegen, and from 1853 director at Delft. He led large festivals in 1848 at Arnheim and in 1861 at Nymwegen. Wrote a symphony, overtures, cantatas, songs, a history of medieval instruments and a bibliography of music-works produced in the Netherlands.

Boësset, Antoine (?1585-1643). 17th C. G.

Bohlmann, George Karl (Copenhagen, 1838-1920, do.). Danish organist and director at Copenhagen from 1858, pupil of K. Heinemann. Wrote many works for orchestra or chorus, including the overture Die Vikingerfahrt.

Böhm, George (Hohenkirchen, 1661-1733, Lüneburg). Thuringian organist, educated at Jena University, from 1698 organist at the Johanniskirche in Lüneburg, where in 1700-03 J. S. Bach came under his direct influence. Wrote notable clavier-suites, chorale-preludes, cantatas, a Neujahrskied, etc. See notice by Buchmayer, 1908 (in program of the 4th Bach Festival). G.

Böhm, Heinrich (Blatna, 1836). Composer of about 35 operas and operettas popular in Bohemia. G.

Böhm, Josef (Kühnitz, 1841-1893, Vienna). Moravian organist, pupil of Bocklet and Krenn, from 1865 organist and director at the Hofparrkirche in Vienna, teaching also at the school of the Ambrosius-Verein.

Böhm, Joseph (Pest, 1795-1876, Vienna). Fine Hungarian violinist, pupil of his father and P. Rode, appearing at Vienna in 1815 and touring in Italy, in 1819-48 professor at the Vienna Conservatory and in 1821-68 playing in the court-orchestra. Among his numerous strong pupils were Joachim, Ernst, Auer, the elder Hellmesberger, Singer, L. Strauss, Rappoldi, Hauser, etc. He excelled in breadth of tone and style. Wrote string-quartets and violin-pieces. G.

Böhm, Theobald (Munich, 1794-1881, do.). Bavarian flutist and eminent improver of his instrument and its playing, known first as a touring virtuoso, but from about 1831 as the inventor of both new methods of construction and new devices of fingering whereby purity and accuracy of tone and facility of performance were decidedly increased. For many years he was in the court-orchestra at Munich, with the title of Hofmusik. Wrote brilliant pieces and a notable treatise (1847, Eng. ed. enlarged by D. C. Miller, 1922). See also works by Mahillon (1885) and Welch (1896). G.

Böhme, Franz Magnus (n. Weimar, 1827-1898, Dresden). Saxon teacher, pupil of Töpfer, Hauptmann and Rietz, in 1858-78 teacher at Dresden and again after 1885, in 1878-85 teaching counterpoint and history at the Hoch Conservatory, Frankfurt. Author or editor of Gesch. d. Oratoriums, 1861 (2d ed. 1887), Alt-deutsches Liederbuch, 1877 (folk-songs, 12th-17th Cs.), Gesch. d. Tanzes in Deutschland, 1886, Volkstümliche Lieder in 18. u. 19. Jahrh. 1895, Deutsches Kinderlied u. Kinderspiel, 1897, with a new edition of Erk's Deutscher Liederhort, 3 vols., 1893-94, 2 harmony text-books (1880-82) and collections of part-songs and choruses.

Böhme, Willy (Dessau, 1861). Saxon composer, pupil of the Berlin Hochschule, from 1886 head of a music-school in Berlin. Has written the opera Der Cid, 1887, the cantata Kaiser Wilhelms Meerfahrt, 1893, men's choruses, a symphony and an overture.

Böhmer, Karl Hermann Ehrfried (The Hague, 1799-1884, Berlin). Dutch (German) violinist, pupil of Polledro, from 1835 in the court-orchestra at Berlin, composing much for the violin, some orchestral music and 2 short operas.

Bohn, Emil (n. Neisse, 1839-1909, Breslau). Silesian musicologist, pupil in music of J. Schäfer and Baumgart, from 1868 organist at the Kreuzkirche in Breslau, founder of a choral society giving historical concerts, lecturer at the University and leader of its choral society (Ph.D. in 1884), becoming professor in 1908. Author of a bibliography of music-works (to 1700) in the University library (1883), an account of the manuscripts of the 16th-17th centuries in the Breslau city library (1890) and Die National-Hymnen der europäischen Völker, 1908. He also edited piano-works of Mendelssohn and Chopin.

Bohn, Peter (n. Wittlich, 1833). Rhenish teacher, in 1866-1905 at the Treves Gymnasium. Translated several medieval works on music (Franco, Oddo, Glarean, Philippe de Vitry) in the Monatshefte or separate (1880-94).

Böhner, Johann Ludwig (n. Gotha, 1787-1860, do.). Gifted Saxon pianist and organist, pupil of Kluge, M. G. Fischer and Spohr, making a tour in 1810, living for a time at Nuremberg, soon drifting into dissipation. He is supposed to be the original of Hoffman's 'Kreisler' (in his Phantasiestücke), which in turn suggested Schumann's Kreisleriana. Wrote much for orchestra, ensemble, chorus and piano, with an opera. Anonymous memoir, 1898. G.

Bohnke, Emil (Zdunka Wola, 1888). Polish violist, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory and of Gernsheim, for a time teaching at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin and playing in the Bandler Quartet and in 1919-20 in that of Ad. Busch. Has written an overture, orchestral variations, a violin-concerto, a string-quartet, a piano-trio, sonatas for violin, for 'cello and for piano, etc.

Bohrer, Anton (Munich, 1783-1852, Hanover), and Bohrer, Max (Mannheim, 1785-1867 Stuttgart), brothers, sons of the double-bassist Kaspar Bohrer (1744-1809), at Munich from 1778. Violinist and 'cellist respectively, from 1810 touring widely together. From 1834 Anton was concertmaster at Hanover and from 1832 Max was the same at Stuttgart. The latter visited America in 1842-43. G.

Boieldieu, François Adrien (Rouen, [Dec. 16] 1775-1834 [Oct. 8], n. Grosbois). Distinguished French composer, foremost in establishing the opéra comique. His early study was with the organist Broche, a pupil of Martini, but ceased at 12, when he ran away to Paris. There, while developing as a practical composer, he made serious private studies, aided somewhat by Cherubini, Méhul and others. From 1800 he was professor of piano at the Conservatory and in 1817 followed Méhul as professor of composition, besides entering the Académie and (in 1821) the Légion d'Honneur. After 1830 he ceased teaching. His pupils included Zimmerman, Fétis, Adam and Labarre. In 1803-11 he sojourned in Petrograd, where he was conductor of the court-opera. His last years were burdened with consumption, dating from this Russian experience, combined with disappointment over the unexpected failure of his last opera in 1829. He was twice married, to the dancer Mafeuroy in 1802 (separated in 1803) and to the singer Phillis in 1827. His operas were

La Fille Coupable, 1793, Rosalie et Myrta, 1795, Les Deux Lettres, 1796, La Famille Suisse, 1797, L'Heureuse Nouvelle, 1797, Le Père, 1797, Zoraimé et Zulnare, 1798, Le Dot de Suzette, 1798, Les Méprises Espagnoles, 1799, Le Prisonnier, 1799 (with Cherubini), Beniowski, 1800, Le Calife de Bagdad, 1800, Le Baiser et la Quittance, 1802 (with Méhul et al.), Ma Tante Aurore, 1803, Aline, Reine de Golconde, 1804, La Jeune Femme Colère, 1805, Amour et Mystère, 1806, Abderkahn, 1806, Télémaque, 1806, Un Tour de Soubrette, 1807, Les Voitures Versées, 1808, La Dame Invisible, 1808, Rien de Trop, 1810, Jean de Paris, 1812, Le Nouveau Seigneur de Village, 1813, Bayard à Mézières, 1814 (with Cherubini, Catel and Isouard), Les Bearnais, 1814, Angéla, 1814, La Fête du Village Voisin, 1816, Charles de France, 1816 (with Hérold), Le Petit Chaperon Rouge, 1818, Blanche de Provence, 1821 (with Berton, Cherubini, Kreutzer and Paër), La France et l'Espagne, 1823, Les Trois Genres, 1824 (with Auber), Pharamond, 1825 (with Berton and Kreutzer), La Dame Blanche, 1825, Les Deux Nuits, 1829, and La Marquise de Brinvilliers, 1831 (with 8 others).

In early life he also wrote several favorite songs, a piano-concerto, piano-sonatas and duets for harp and piano.

In his gift of characteristic melody and in some points of dramatic instinct he was the French analogue of Weber, though without the latter's power in orchestration. In verve and piquancy he is akin to Auber and Adam. In finish and elegance of detail he successfully overcame the deficiencies of his early training by dint of faithful study and labor. His greatest triumphs were with Jean de Paris, Le Petit Chaperon Rouge and especially La Dame Blanche, the power of the last suggesting that he might have risen to greater heights if his life had been longer. Memoirs by Héquet, 1864, Pougin, 1875, Augé de Lassus, 1908, and letters edited by Robert, 1912. His son, Adrien Louis Victor Boieldieu (1816-1883), wrote several operas (from 1838), including La Hôte du Roi, 1875, masses, cantatas and songs. G.

Boisdeffre, Charles Henri René de (Vesoul, 1838-1906, n. Nancy). French composer, pupil of Ch. Wagner and Barbereau, winner in 1883 of the Prix Chartier for chamber-music. Wrote a symphony (1894), Scènes Champêtres for orchestra, a piano-sextet, 2 quintets, a quartet, 2 trios, piano-sonatas, a mass (1890), the Song of Songs (cantata), Moïse Sauvé des Eaux and other choral works of merit. See Imbert, Nouveaux Profils, 1892. G.

Boise, Otis Bardwell (Oberlin, O. 1844-1912, Baltimore). American organist and theory-teacher, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory and under Kullak, from 1865 working in Cleveland, from 1870 in New York (in the New York Conservatory and at the Fifth Ave. Pres. Church), from 1878, after a year abroad, again in New York (after 1881 in non-musical work), from 1888 teaching with much success in Berlin, and from 1901 at the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore, and critic for the News. Among his pupils were Huss, Brockway, Hutcheson, A. Nevin and Atherton. Wrote symphonies, overtures, concertos, etc., a harmony text-book (1900) and Music and its Masters, 1901. A.

Boismortier, Joseph Bodin de (Perpignan, ?1691-1765?, Paris). French composer from 1724 of over 50 instrumental works (sonatas for flutes, violins, etc., in various combinations, many dances, and other pieces), several cantatas and 3 ballet-opéras (1736-47).

Boisselot, Jean Louis (Montpellier, ?1785-1847, Marseilles). Originally a maker of stringed instruments at Montpellier, but after 1823 founder at Marseilles of a noted piano-making business, with his son Louis (1809-50) as manager and a grandson as successor. Another son, Doménique François Xavier (1811-1893), wrote 3 operas (1847-69), a cantata and an overture. In 1836 he took the Prix de Rome at the Conservatory.

Boito, Arrigo (Padua, 1842-1918, Milan). Eminent poet and composer, son of an Italian painter and a Polish countess. His early education was divided between literature and music, the latter pursued at the Milan Conservatory, mainly under Mazzucato, and he was known as a graceful poet before he essayed much composition. His graduation-cantata in 1862 (partly by Franco Faccio) attracted much attention and led to a medal from the government and a scholarship for two years of foreign travel, spent mostly in Paris and then in Germany. On his return he became absorbed in literary work—poems, a novel, essays for Italian and French reviews, including Mazzucato's important Giornale della Società del Quartetto, with its emphasis upon instrumental music. In 1866 he took part honorably in the war with Austria, and immediately after decided to enter journalistic work in Paris. But in 1867, while waiting for a suitable opening, he was recalled to Milan to oversee the production of his Mefistofele (then in its tentative form). Its first performance (1868) was extraordinarily successful, in spite of its unusual conception and form, but only after remodeling did it make its way elsewhere. His other works are but slightly known, as he did not choose to produce them. Besides his own librettos, he wrote also those of Faccio's Amleto (1865), Ponchielli's La Gioconda (1876) and notably Verdi's Otello (1888) and Falstaff (1893), besides others of less importance. He also translated the texts of Beethoven's 9th Symphony, works by Schumann and Rubinstein, and especially Wagner's Tristan, Rienzi and Liebesmahl der Apostel. His principal lyrics are included in Il Libro dei Versi, 1877 (under the pen-name 'Tobia Gorrio'). His short list of musical works includes only the cantatas Il Quarto di Giugno, 1860, and Le Sorelle d'Italia, 1862 (with Faccio), and the operas Ero e Leandro (lost), Mefistofele, 1868, Nerone and Orestide (both unperformed). His claim to distinction rests on the unique originality and power of Mefistofele. His only official positions were those of director of the Parma Conservatory (1889-97) and inspector-general of conservatories (from 1892). From 1895 he was a member of the French Légion d'Honneur. In Italy he was advanced through several grades of title to that of Commendatore and Senatore (1912). In 1893 Cambridge University made him Mus.D. G, A.

Bolck, Oskar (Hohenstein, 1839-1888, Bremen). An East Prussian, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory, who taught or was conductor or chorusrmaster at Leipzig, Viborg, Liverpool, Würzburg, Aix-la-Chapelle, Riga, Hamburg and Bremen, writing 3 operas, including Pierre Robin, 1876, etc.

Bollinger, Samuel (Fort Smith, Ark. 1871). American composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, also teaching there for a time and serving as organist of the American Church, from 1898 in San Francisco and since 1907 in St. Louis. Has written the orchestral suite The Sphinx, an overture, a violin-sonata, many piano-pieces and songs. A.

Bölsche, Franz (n. Magdeburg, 1869). Saxon theorist and composer, pupil of the Berlin Hochschule, since 1896 teacher at the Cologne Conservatory. Has written a symphony, the overtures Tragödie der Menschen, Judith, Hero und Leander and Othello, a piano-trio, 2 piano-sonatas, a motet and songs, and a harmony text-book (1911, 5th ed. 1919), besides editing Melchior Frank's instrumental works for the Denkmäler deutsche Tonkunst, xvi.

Bolzoni, Giovanni (Parma, 1841-1919, Turin). Italian violinist and composer, trained at the Parma Conservatory, working first at Savona, Perugia and Piacenza, and from 1887 concertmaster at Turin and head of the Istituto Musicale. Wrote 3 operas (1870-81), a symphony, chamber-music, violin-pieces, etc.

Boman, Per Conrad (1804-1861). Swedish composer of the opera Ljungby Horn och Pipa, 1858, music for Kotzebue's Dorf im Gebirge, 1849, the cantata Gustav Wasas Traum, editor of two collections of Swedish folk-songs (from 1845) and author of a translation of Birch's history of dramatic literature (1850) and of various articles on Swedish music.

Bomtempo, João Domingos (Lisbon, 1775-1842, do.). Able Portuguese pianist and composer, studying in Paris and living there till 1818, when he returned to Lisbon, in 1833 becoming director of the new Conservatory. Wrote 6 symphonies, 4 piano-concertos, much chamber-music with piano, piano-sonatas and a method (1816), Requiems for Camoëns, Maria I and Pedro IV, other masses and church-music, and an opera. For some years he conducted orchestral concerts at Lisbon. G.

Bona, Giovanni (1609-1674). 17th C.

Bona, Valerio (?1560 - ?). 16th C.

Bonaventura, Arnaldo (Leghorn, 1862). Italian musicologist, professor at the Royal Institute in Florence. Besides many articles in periodicals has written a Manuale di Storia della Musica, 1898 (4th ed. 1913), Elementa di Estetica Musicale, 1905, Storia degli Stromenti Musicali, 1908, La Vita Musicale in Toscana, 1910, and Saggio Storico sul Teatro Musicale Italiano, 1913.

Bonawitz, Johann Heinrich (Dürkheim 1839-1917, London). Rhenish pianist (of Polish descent), pupil of the Liège Conservatory, brought to the United States in 1852, from 1861 abroad, with some tours with Joachim, in 1872-76 again in America, leading symphony-concerts in New York, giving piano-recitals on tour and producing two operas in Philadelphia, from 1876 in Vienna and from 1887 in London, where he organized a Mozart Society, giving annual concerts largely of Mozart's works. Wrote the operas Diogenes, 1870, The Bride of Messina, 1874, Ostrolenka, 1875, Irma, 1885, and Napoleon, 1911 (parts given in concert), a Requiem, 1881, a Stabat Mater, a piano-concerto and one for two pianos, a piano-quartet, a trio, a violin-sonata, etc. A.

Bonci, Alessandro (Cesena, 1870). Fine Italian lyric tenor, trained at the Pesaro Conservatory, appearing first in 1896 in Italy, followed by many engagements all over Europe, in South America and Australia, from 1906 at the Manhattan, New York, in 1908-09 both at the Metropolitan and at Covent Garden, London, and in 1912-13 with the Chicago Opera Company. His voice and style enable him to excel in song-recital as well as in operas that are not of the heroic or intense order. G.

Bönicke, Hermann (Endorf, 1821-1879, Hermannstadt). Bavarian organist at Quedlinburg and from 1861 leader of the Musikverein at Hermannstadt in Transylvania. Wrote a useful text-book on choral singing, a Kunst des freien Orgelspiels, men's part-songs and an opera.

Boniforti, Carlo (Arona, 1818-1879, n. Bergamo). Italian organist, pupil of Bonazzi and from 1841 his successor at Milan Cathedral and director of the court-chapel, besides from 1852 teaching at the Conservatory. Wrote 2 operas, a symphony and church-music.

Bonini, Severo. 17th C.

Boniventi, Giuseppe (?1660-?). 17th C.

Bonnet, Jacques (Paris, 1644-1724, do.). Author of a music-history (1715) which is said to be a completion of a work by Bourdelot, and a Histoire de la danse, 1723.

Bonnet, Joseph (Bordeaux, 1884). Eminent French organist, pupil of his father and of Guilmant, beginning to play in 1898 at St.-Nicolas in Paris and soon at St.-Michel, and winning the Grand Prix Guilmant. In 1906 he became organist at St.-Eustache (in competition), where he still remains. Since about 1900 his recitals have been increasingly famous, and he has toured all over Europe, everywhere making a profound impression, not only for his technical accomplishments, but for his sympathetic interpretation of the whole of organ-literature, supported by an extraordinary memory. In 1917 he came to the United States for an extended tour, including a set of five historical programs in New York and elsewhere. Has written nearly 50 original and striking organ-works, several motets and other vocal works, and has edited Historical Organ Recitals, 5 vols., containing the works played as above noted.

Bonno [Bono], Josef (Vienna, 1710-1788, do.). Educated at Naples as protégé of the Emperor Charles VI, from 1739 court-composer at Vienna and from 1774 court-director. He was long vice-president of the Tonkünstler-Societät. In 1781 and later he showed courtesy to the young Mozart. Wrote 20 operas (1732-62), 3 oratorios and some church-music. G.

Bononcini, Giovanni (Modena, ?1660-1750?, Venice?), son of Giov. Maria below. Eminent Italian composer, trained by his father, Colonna and Buoni, from 1685 active at Bologna, from 1690 court-cellist at Vienna, continuing there, except for a sojourn at Berlin in 1703-05, till at least 1710, then in Italy, in 1716-33 at London in bitter rivalry with Handel (leaving in disgrace under the charge of plagiarism) and later working at various places (Paris, 1833, where he lost his fortune to an alchemist, Vienna, 1837 and 1848) and was in Venice about 1750. Wrote about 30 operas (from 1694), 5 oratorios (from 1687), masses and other church-music, much instrumental music, etc., often with decided ability. G.

Bononcini, Giovanni Maria (1640-1678). 17th C. G.

Bononcini, Marc' Antonio (Modena, ?1675-1726, do.), son of Giov. Maria above. From 1721 court-director at Modena. Wrote 19 operas (from 1696), 3 oratorios and many cantatas. He was probably the ablest of the family. G.

Bonporti, Francesco Antonio. About 1700 musician to the Emperor Joseph I at Vienna and in 1715-21 working at Trent. Wrote various concerti, partitas, trio-sonatas, motets, etc.

Bontempi [Angelini], Giovanni Andrea (1624-1705). 17th C. G.

Bonvin, Ludwig (Siders, 1850). Swiss Jesuit priest, since 1887 connected with Canisius College in Buffalo, N. Y. He is a specialist upon Gregorian music, with many articles in periodicals and several service-books, original or compiled. Has also written much church-music, including many masses, psalms, etc., a symphony and other orchestral music, several chamber-works, cantatas, choruses and songs. A.

Boom, Jan van (Utrecht, 1807-1872, Stockholm). Prominent Dutch pianist and composer, from 1825 in Stockholm, becoming professor at the Royal Academy in 1849-65. Wrote operas, symphonies, overtures, chamber-music and many piano-works. G.

Boosey & Company. A noted music-publishing business in London, established in 1816 by Thomas Boosey, at first to import foreign music. Later the house issued many original editions of works by Continental composers, especially the operas of Bellini, Donizetti and Verdi, but in 1854 a copyright ruling of Parliament destroyed the value of this business. The Company then turned to the publication of cheap and popular editions in great variety. From 1856 they also took up flute-making under the patents of Pratten, in 1868 bought the factory of Henry Distin, maker of brass instruments, and in 1879 undertook also the making of clarinets and other reed-instruments. G.

Boott, Francis (Boston, 1813-1904, do.). An American amateur who left a fund of $10,000 for an annual prize at Harvard University for a 4-part vocal work. Composed string-quartets, songs, etc. A.

Bopp, Wilhelm (Mannheim, 1863). After study with Jean Becker, F. Langer, at the Leipzig Conservatory and with Paur, followed by work as conductor, taught at the Mannheim Conservatory and in 1900 founded a new Hochschule there, and in 1907-19 Von Perger's successor as head of the Conservatorium der Musikfreunde in Vienna (from 1909 Imperial Academy).

Borch, Gaston Louis Christopher (n. Calais, 1871). French 'cellist, conductor and composer, pupil of Massenet and Delsart, from 1896 conductor at Christiania and Bergen in Norway, in 1899-1906 'cellist in the Thomas and Pittsburgh Orchestras in America, and since 1906 orchestral conductor at Lausanne, Switzerland. He has also made tours as 'cellist or conductor. Has written the short opera Silvio, 1898, a symphony, the symphonic poems Genoveva, Quo Vadis and Friethjof, many orchestral arrangements, a piano-concerto, arrangements of many works for piano-trio, much church-music, piano-pieces and songs.

Borchgrevink, Melchior (? -1632). 17th C.

Bordes, Charles (n. Tours, 1863-1909, Toulon). French church-musician, pupil of Marmontel and C. Franck, from 1887 choirmaster at Nogent, and in 1890-1905 at St.-Gervais, Paris, where his choir became famous for its rendering of old music a cappella. In 1892 this led to a distinct organization of Chanteurs de St.-Gervais and in 1894 (with Guilmant and d'Indy) of the Schola Cantorum for the cultivation of Gregorian and Palestrina music. For both Bordes started publications of representative works. The Schola Cantorum rapidly developed into a large institution. His zeal in its duties broke down his health and brought on apoplexy. But while seeking recovery in the south he founded another Schola at Montpellier. In 1889-90 he collected Basque folk-songs as agent of the French government (100 published in Archives de la Tradition Basque). Besides many articles in periodicals, he wrote an opera (incomplete), the Basque overture Errege Juan, the orchestral Danses Béarnaises, a Rhapsodie Basque for piano and orchestra, a Suite Basque for flute and strings, a cappella choruses, etc. G. A.

Bordese, Luigi (Naples, 1815-1886, Paris). Italian singing-teacher and composer, from about 1835 in Paris, becoming noted as a teacher. His 8 operas (1834-67) were unsuccessful, but he wrote vocalises and methods for singers, a large number of songs, 3 masses, a Requiem, motets, etc.

Bordier, Jules (Angers, 1846-1896, Paris). The founder in 1875 of the influential Association Artistique d'Angers, and from 1893 partner in a Paris publishing-house. Wrote the operas Nadia and Le Fiancé de la Mer, 1895, several symphonic poems, music to De Vigny's Chatterton, violin-pieces, choruses and songs. He was a promoter of interest in Wagner's music.

Bordogni, Giulio Marco (n. Bergamo, 1788-1856, Paris). Noted Italian operatic tenor, pupil of Mayr, appearing from 1813 in Italy and in 1819-33 at the Italiens at Paris, from 1820 professor at the Paris Conservatory, with many distinguished pupils. Wrote useful vocalises. G.

Borghi, Luigi. Fine Italian violinist, pupil of Pugnani, living in London from about 1774. Wrote a large quantity of violin-music, including concertos, sonatas, etc., and some church-music. In 1784 he led the second violins at the Handel Commemoration. G.

Borghi-Mamo, Adelaide (Bologna, 1826-1901, do.). Distinguished Italian operatic mezzo-soprano, making her début in 1846 at Urbino and other Italian cities, in 1853 at Vienna and Paris and in 1860 in England. She was both a musical and a dramatic artist. In 1849 she married Signor Mamo of Malta. Her daughter Erminia made her début as soprano in 1874 at Bologna, followed by successes elsewhere in Italy and at Paris, Madrid and Lisbon.

Borgström, Hjalmar (Christiania, 1864). Able Norwegian composer, trained by Svendsen and Lindeman and at the Leipzig Conservatory, since 1901 active in Christiania. Has written 2 operas, 2 symphonies, the symphonic poems Der Gedanke and Hamlet (with piano), concertos for piano and for violin, 2 string-quartets, violin-sonatas, an oratorio, songs and piano-pieces, besides being critic for the Aftenposten. Since 1914 he has held the title of composer from the government.

Bori, Lucrezia (Valencia, 1888). Spanish operatic soprano, pupil of Vidal, appearing first at Rome in 1908, also at Naples, Milan, Paris, Buenos Aires and since 1913 at the Metropolitan, New York. A.

Bornschein, Franz Carl (Baltimore, 1879). American violinist and composer, trained at the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore, in 1905 becoming instructor there, and in 1910-13 critic for the News, besides other writing. Has written the orchestral suite The Phantom Canoe, the symphonic poems The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, The Sea-God's Daughter and A Hero's Espousal, the ballad Louisiana, the prize-cantata Onowa, 1915, the ballad The Djinns, 1912, for baritone, chorus and orchestra, a prize-madrigal (1906), a sextet for flute and strings, a piano-quintet, a string-quintet and quartet, violin-pieces, choruses and songs. A.

Borodin, Alexander Porfirievitch (Petrograd, 1834-1887, do.). Eminent Russian composer, educated at first in medicine and chemistry (in 1857-62 in governmental employ), and all his life active in scientific circles. From 1862, however, under Balakirev's influence and later that of Liszt, he not only became expert in composition, but one of the five promoters of the New-Russian movement. His early training had included some music, which he continued to pursue in his student-days, and contact with Mussorgsky, Balakirev and their intimates, brought to light intense latent aspirations. Progress was assisted by his marriage in 1863 with an accomplished pianist, by a visit to Liszt in 1877 and later by concert-trips with Cui to Belgium in 1885-86. The Oriental quality in much of his music was probably due to his descent, through his father, from a line of Georgian chieftains. His nationalism tends to the old heroic type, but its expression is not so much based upon folk-song suggestion as with some of his colleagues. The remarkable vigor of his mind was manifest in his ability to keep up production in science and in music simultaneously. His death was sudden (at a fancy ball), due to a ruptured aneurism. His works include symphonies in E-flat (1867), in B min. (1877) and in A min. (two movements, completed by Glazunov), the effective symphonic poem Dans les Steppes (1880), an orchestral scherzo in A-flat, a piano-quintet, string-quartets in A (1878), D min. and one movement of one on B-la-f (Belaiev), a string-trio (1860), a Petite Suite for piano (1886), part of a series of pieces and variations, The Paraphrases, for piano (jointly with others), a Serenata Espagnola for piano (4 hands), about 12-15 songs (some to original words), the finale to the ballet Madama, and the remarkable opera Prince Igor (completed by Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazunov), 1891. Memoirs by Stassov, 1889, and Habets, 1895. G.

Boroni, Antonio (Rome, 1738-1792, do.). Italian composer, pupil of Martini and Abos, from 1765 theater-director in Dresden, in 1770-80 court-director at Stuttgart and from 1785 maestro at St. Peter's in Rome. Wrote about 20 operas (1760-78), mostly at Venice or Stuttgart, much church-music, symphonies, etc.

Borowski, Felix (Burton, 1872). Polish-English violinist and composer, pupil of Jacques Rosenthal, the Cologne Conservatory, Pollitzer and Pearce, from 1892 teacher at Aberdeen, Scotland, from 1897 teacher in the Chicago Musical College (president since 1916) and from 1906 critic for the Evening Post and in 1909-18 for the Record-Herald. Since 1908 he has been the able compiler of program-books for the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Has written for orchestra a Marche Triomphale, 1899, the symphonic poem Eugène Onégin, Valse Pathétique, 1915, Élégie Symphonique, 1917, Trois Peintures, 1918, a piano-concerto (1914), an Allegro de Concert for organ and orchestra, the pantomime-ballet Boudour, 1920, a string-quartet (dedicated to Grieg), 2 organ-sonatas and a suite, a Russian Sonata for piano and many other piano-pieces, a 6-part chorus with organ and 'cello, and about 20 songs. A.

Bortkiewicz, Sergei Eduardovitch (Kharkov, 1877). Russian pianist, trained at Petrograd and under Reisenaur, Jadassohn and K. Piutti, on tour in 1902-04 then (till 1914) professor at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory, Berlin, going thence to Russia and in 1921 to Constantinople. Has written the symphonic poem Othello, a piano-concerto, a piano-sonata and piano-pieces.

Bortniansky, Dimitri Stepanovitch (Gluchov, 1751-1825, Petrograd). Important Ukrainian composer, pupil of Galuppi and others in Italy, from 1779 head of the Empress's Choir in Petrograd and from 1796 of the Imperial Choir. He instituted great reforms in the system of Russian church-music, establishing traditions that later bore significant fruit. Wrote a long list of elaborate church-works, including a mass and 'concertos' for double choir, etc. (complete edition, 10 vols. edited by Tchaikovsky), besides the Italian operas Creonte, 1776, and Quinto Fabio, 1778. G.

Borwick, Leonard (Walthamstow, 1868). Eminent English pianist, trained at the Frankfurt Conservatory, appearing from 1890 in England, from 1895 in Germany, France and Scandinavia and in 1914 in America. His range of interpretation is extensive, including both classical masterpieces and the works of composers like Liszt and Saint-Saëns. G.

Bos, Coenraad van (Leyden, 1875). Excellent Dutch pianist, pupil of J. Röntgen, from 1901 forming a noted Trio (with J. van Veen and J. van Lier) and gaining high repute as a remarkable accompanist. In ensemble and accompaniment he is widely known both in Europe and America (from 1908).

Boschetti, Viktor (Frankfort, 1871). Hessian organist, pupil of Libensky and the Vienna

Conservatory, from 1886 at Vienna churches, in 1896-1921 organist at St. Stephen's, in 1900-03 and since 1914 chorusmaster at the Opera. Has written masses, a Te Deum, an oratorio, 5 operas, including Die Brüder, 1905, a piano-septet (with wind) and other chamber-music.

Boschot, Adolphe (n. Paris, 1871). Since 1910 critic for the Echo de Paris and frequent writer elsewhere. Author of a great biography of Berlioz (3 vols. 1906-13), a work on Berlioz' Faust (1910), Carnet d'Art, 1911, Impressions, Chez les Musiciens, 1922, etc.

Bose, Fritz von (Königstein, 1865). Saxon pianist, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory and of Von Bülow, appearing as soloist from 1888, from 1893 teaching at the Karlsruhe Conservatory and from 1898 at that of Leipzig. He is noted for ensemble-playing and as accompanist (till 1897 often with Alice Barbi). Has written a piano-suite, sonatas, études, etc., and choruses.

Büsendorfer, Ignaz (Vienna, 1796-1859, do.). Founder in 1828 of a piano-making business in Vienna which early acquired a world-wide reputation. He was succeeded by his son Ludwig (1835-1918). The firm has made a specialty of concert-grands. For a time they made one pattern with 8 octaves' compass. G.

Bosio, Angiolina (Turin, 1830-1859, Petrograd). Brilliant Italian operatic soprano, pupil of the Milan Conservatory, from 1846 singing successively at Milan, Verona, Copenhagen, Madrid, Paris (from 1848), Havana and the United States (1848), London (from 1852) and Russia (from 1855), where she succumbed to the rigorous climate. Her rapid rise into popularity was somewhat phenomenal. G.

Bossert, Gustav (Tübingen, 1841). Since 1869 Evangelical pastor in towns in Württemberg (Ph. D. of Tübingen Univ. in 1894) and writer on Reformation history. Author of a history of the Stuttgart Hofkantorei (Würtemb. Vierteljahrsschrift f. Landesgesch. 1898-1916).

Bossi, Marco Enrico (Salò, 1861). Distinguished Italian organist and composer, trained at the Bologna Liceo and the Milan Conservatory, from 1881 organist at Como Cathedral, in 1891-95 professor at the Naples Conservatory, from 1896 director of the Liceo Marcello at Venice, and in 1902-12 director of the Bologna Liceo, then retiring to Como, but since 1916 head of the S. Cecilia school in Rome. In Venice he also conducted the Marcello Concerts. He is a member of the national commission on music, and holds conspicuous decorations from both Italy and Spain. His able and original works include a large number of organ-works, ranging from small pieces to a concerto in A min. and a Concertstück with orchestra, the Res severa magnum gaudium, 2 sonatas, the fugue Fede a Bach, an overture, Inno Trionfale, Marche Héroïque, Étude Symphonique, Processional March, etc., an orchestral overture, suite, impromptu and the Intermezzi Goldoniani (strings), a string-trio, a piano-trio and other chambermusic, the Messa a S. Marco (3 equal voices), 2 Requiems and much other sacred music, the cantatas or scenes Mossa d'Averno, Tota Pulchra, Marinesca, Il Cieco and Giovanna d'Arco, the operas Paquita, 1881, Il Viandante, 1890, and L'Angelo della Notte (melodrama), and the oratorio Il Paradiso Perduto, 1903. Besides these he is the author of a standard Metodo di Studio per l'Organo Moderno, 1893 (with Tebaldini). G. A.

Bossi, Renzo (Como, 1883), son of the above. Italian conductor and composer, trained at the Liceo Marcello in Venice and the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1905 opera-director at Altonburg, Lübeck, Milan (La Scala), Novara, Bologna, etc., and since 1913 organ-teacher at the Parma Conservatory. Has written the orchestral Poema Eroico and Poema Umano, a symphony, a violin-concerto, a violin-suite, Ein Blumenmärchen for chorus, etc.

Bote & Bock. Noted music-publishers in Berlin, the founders in 1838 being Eduard Bote (retired in 1847) and Gustav Bock (d. 1863). From 1863 the manager was Emil Bock (d. 1871), followed by Hugo Bock, the son of Gustav (b. 1848). The firm has issued both standard and popular editions of a great variety of music. From 1847 they also published the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung (till 1896). G.

Botstieber, Hugo (Vienna, 1875). Austrian musicologist, educated at Vienna University (Ph. D. 1895), from 1896 librarian at the Conservatory and from 1900 secretary of various learned societies. Editor of various organ- and piano-works for the Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Oesterreich and of a Musikbuch aus Oesterreich, 1904-11, and author of a monograph on Pachelbel, Jos. Haydn u. das Haus Artaria, 1908, Gesch. der Overture, 1913, and a completion of Pohl's Haydn.

Bott, Jean Joseph (Kassel, 1826-1895, New York). Noted Hessian violinist, pupil of his father, Hauptmann and Spohr, taking the Mozart scholarship in 1841, from 1846 in the court-orchestra at Kassel, from 1857 director of that at Meiningen, in 1865-78 at Hanover, taught at Magdeburg and Hamburg, migrating to New York in 1885. Wrote symphonies, overtures, violin-concertos and other violin-works, the operas Der Unbekannte, 1854, and Aktäa, 1862, etc. A.

Botta, Luca (Amalfi, 1882-1917, New York). Italian operatic tenor from 1911, pupil of Vergine, known in Italy, at Buenos Aires and from 1915 at the Metropolitan, New York, in Italian works. A.

Bottée de Toulmon, Auguste (Paris, 1797-1850, do.). French lawyer, in 1831-48 librarian of the Paris Conservatory. Author of works on mediæval French music (1836-39), on Guido (1837) and on Cherubini's manuscripts (1843). Memoir by Vincent, 1851.

Bottesini, Giovanni (Crema, 1821-1889, Parma). Italian double-bassist and composer, trained at the Milan Conservatory, famous as a virtuoso from 1840, in Havana in 1846-48 (also New York in 1848), in London from 1849, in Paris in 1855-57 as conductor at the Italiens, toured throughout Europe, from 1861 was director at Palermo, in 1863 at Barcelona, founded the Società del Quartetto at Florence, was opera-conductor at Cairo and London, and finally became director of the Parma Conservatory. Wrote the operas Cristoforo Colombo, 1847, L'Assedio di Firenze, 1856, Il Diavolo della Notte, 1859, Marion Delorme, 1862, Vinciguerra, 1870, Ali Baba, 1871, Ero e Leandro, 1879, and La Regina del Nepal, 1880, the oratorio The Garden of Olivet, 1887, symphonies, overtures, quartets and many pieces for double-bass. Memoir by Warnecke, 1910.

Bottrigari, Ercole (1531-1612). 16th C.

Boucher, Alexandre Jean (Paris, 1778-1861, do.). Brilliant French violinist, first appearing at six, in 1787-1805 court-player at Madrid and then known all over Europe as almost Paganini's rival in virtuosity. Wrote 2 violin-concertos. Memoir by Vallat, 1890. G.

Boughton, Rutland (Aylesbury, 1878). English dramatic organizer and composer, pupil of Stanford, in 1904-11 teacher at the Birmingham School of Music, and since 1914 director of a unique enterprise at Glastonbury for producing music-dramas of a highly poetic quality. Has written many choral dramas or poems with orchestra, including The Immortal Hour, The Birth of Arthur, Bethlehem, The Skeleton in Armor, The Invincible Armada, Midnight, The City (a capella), several ballets and some works for orchestra or ensemble. See article in Musical Quarterly, Jan. 1918. A.

Bouhy, Jacques Joseph André (Pepinster, 1848). Eminent Belgian baritone and teacher, pupil of the Liège and Paris Conservatories, making his début at Paris in 1871 with great success, taught in New York in 1885-89 (director of the New York Conservatory) and in 1904-07, and has since been a leading teacher in Paris. He sang at the premières of Massenet's Don César de Bazan (1872), of Carmen (1875) and of Samson et Dalila (1892). Many able singers are his pupils. G.

Bouichère, Émile (?1860-1895, Paris). Brilliant but short-lived French composer of notable chamber-music and chamber-works. He was choirmaster at La Trinité, Paris, and from 1892 directed a vocal school.

Boulanger, Lilli (Paris, 1893-1918, do.). Gifted but short-lived French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1913), writing the opera La Princesse Maleine (incomplete), various choral works, including the cantata Faust et Hélène, 1913, Hymne au Soleil, Les Sirènes, Psalm 129, Prière Hindoue, etc., the symphonic poems D'un Soir Triste, D'un Matin de Printemps, a string-quartet and 13 songs on poems by Jammes.

Boulanger, Marie Julie, née Halligner (1786-1850). Able French opéra-comique singer in 1811-45, excelling in soubrette parts. G.

Bouman, Martin J. (Bois-le-Duc, 1858). Dutch composer, town-director at Gouda. Has written 2 operas, a dramatic overture, masses, etc.

Bourdolot, Pierre (1610-1685). 17th C.

Bourgault-Ducoudray, Louis Albert (Nantes, 1840-1910, Paris). French composer and author, first trained as a lawyer, then at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1862), from 1878 lecturer on music-history there. In 1868 he started an amateur choral society. He traveled in Greece and in Brittany for musical research, publishing several monographs on modern Greek music (from 1876) and a collection of 30 songs, also 30 from Brittany (1885). Wrote 4 operas, including Thamara, 1891, and Myrdhin, 1912, an orchestral fantasia, gavotte, Marche Athénienne, L'Enterrement d'Ophélie, Rhapsodie Cambogienne, the choral La Conjuración des Fleurs (women's voices), a Stabat Mater, 1868, a cantata, and many songs. Elogy by Emmanuel, 1911. G.

Bourgeois, Loys. 16th C. G.

Bourgeois, Louis Thomas (Hainault, 1676-1750, Paris). Belgian composer of about 15 operas, ballets, etc. (from 1713), many cantatas, etc. He was tenor at the Paris Opéra from 1708, having been in 1703-05 director at Strasburg Cathedral. G.

Bourges, Jean Maurice (Bordeaux, 1812-1881 Paris). Eminent French editor of the Revue et Gazette Musicale (from 1839). Wrote the opera Sultana, 1846, a Stabat Mater, 2 piano-trios, 2 piano-sonatas and other pieces, romances, etc., besides a French version of the text of Mendelssohn's Elijah. G.

Bousquet, Georges (Perpignan, 1818-1854, Paris). French violinist and critic, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1838), connected with several journals, besides being leader of the orchestras at the Opéra and the Italiens for brief times. Wrote 2 masses, a Miserere, a cantata, chamber-music and 3 operas, including Tabarin, 1852. G.

Bovy, Jules [Antoine Nicolas Joseph Bovy] (Liège, 1808-1868, Paris). Belgian violinist, self-taught, leader of theater-orchestras in various places in Belgium, Holland and France. Wrote 12 operas and operettas (from 1830).

Bovy-Lysberg, Charles Samuel (n. Geneva, 1821-1873, do.). Swiss pianist, teacher in the Geneva Conservatory and composer of much showy piano-music, with the opera La Fille du Carillonneur, 1854. G (Lysberg).

Bowen, York (London, 1884). English composer, pupil of the Royal Academy, London, and from 1905 piano-teacher there. Has written 2 symphonies, the symphonic poem Tasso, an overture, 2 orchestral suites, a Symphonic Fantasia, 3 piano-concertos, a violin-suite, 2 viola-sonatas, a Phantasy-Trio for viola, 'cello and piano, a viola-quartet, a Phantasy-Septet for wood-wind, strings and piano, a string-quartet, a Poem for viola, harp and organ, and piano-pieces. G, A.

Bowman, Edward Morris (Barnard, Vt. 1848-1913, Brooklyn). American organist, pupil of W. Mason, J. P. Morgan, Bendel, Haupt, Rohde, Weitzmann, Guilman and others, in 1867-72 at St. Louis and again in 1877-87 (2d Baptist Church), in 1887-94 in Newark, N. J., from 1895 at the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, and from 1906 at Calvary Baptist Church, New York, besides in 1891-95 being professor at Vassar College, following Ritter. He was the first American to be enrolled in the Royal College of Organists in England, and from 1884 sought diligently to build up a similar organization in the United States. He was five times president of the Music Teachers' National Association (1883-1905). A.

Boyce, William (London, 1710-1779, do.). Noted English organist and composer, pupil of Greene and Pepusch, from 1734 organist at various London churches, from 1758 at the Chapel Royal, and from 1757 master of the Royal Band. From 1737 he was for some years conductor of the Three Choirs festivals in West England, and from 1757 of the annual festivals at St. Paul's Cathedral. Cambridge University made him Mus.D. in 1749. His great work was the collection Cathedral Music, 3 vols. 1760-68 (begun by Greene), containing church-works of English composers from the 16th century. Wrote several chamber-symphonies, overtures, a violin-concerto, violin-sonatas, an organ-concerto, the oratorios David's Lamentation, 1736, and Noah, the serenata Solomon, 1743, many odes, the masques Peleus and Thetis and The Tempest, about 25 anthems and a service, besides many songs, duets, etc. G.

Boyd, Charles N. (n. Greensburg, Pa. 1875). American organist and conductor, trained in Pittsburgh and since 1894 organist of the North Avenue (M. E.) Church and also music-director at the Western Theological Seminary. Since 1915 he has been one of the directors of the Musical Institute and since 1918 conductor of the Musical Club (women's chorus). Author of Lectures on Church Music, 1912, musical editor of The United Presbyterian Psalter, 1912, associate-editor of the American Supplement to Grove's Dictionary (vol. vi), and in 1910-12 program-editor for the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. In 1918-19 and '23 he was president of the Music Teachers' National Association. A.

Boyer, Louis Joseph Victor Georges (Paris, 1850). French librettist of many lyric operas (such as Chaumet's Hérode, 1892, Massenet's Portrait de Manon, 1894) and music-critic for several Paris papers.

Boyle, George Frederick (Sydney, N. S. W. 1886). Australian pianist, appearing first as a child, later pupil of Busoni, from 1901 touring in Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand, in 1906-10 in Germany, Holland and England. Since 1910 he has been professor at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, with several concert-tours. Has written a piano-concerto in D min. 1911, a 'cello-concerto, 1918, a Symphonic Fan- tasie, 1916, 2 string-trios, a piano-sonata (1916), a 'cello-sonata (1909), the cantatas The Pied Piper of Hamelin and Don Ramiro, other shorter orchestral works, many piano-pieces and songs. A.

Brade, William (1560-1630). 16th C. G.

Bradford, Jacob (London, 1842). English organist, pupil of Goss and Steggall, since 1868 at various London churches, from 1892 at St. Mary's (Newington), also conducting a choral society. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1878. Has written the oratorio Judith, cantatas and church-music.

Bradsky, Wenzel Theodor (Rakonitz, 1833-1881, do.). Bohemian composer, pupil of Caboun and Pischek, member of the Berlin Domchor and from 1874 musician to Prince George of Prussia. Wrote 8 operas (from 1859), including Roswitha, 1860, Jarmila, 1879, and Der Rattenfänger von Hameln, 1881, besides 2 on texts by his patron (1872).

Braga, Gaetano (Giulianova, 1829-1907, Milan). Italian 'cellist, trained at the Naples Conservatory, for many years from 1852 touring in all parts of Europe, later working mostly at Paris and London. Wrote 8 operas (from 1857), including especially La Reginella, 1871, pieces and a method for 'cello, a 'cello-concerto, a cantata, a mass and other vocal music.

Brah-Müller, Karl Friedrich Gustav (n. Oels, 1839-1878, Berlin). Silesian singing-teacher at Pleschen and later at Berlin. Wrote the singspiel Ein Matrose von der Nymphen, 1864, an operetta, a Te Deum, songs, violin-quartets (prize at Milan, 1875), etc.

Braham, John [properly Abraham] (London, 1774-1856, do.). Famous English (Jewish) tenor, pupil of Leoni, Rauzzini and Isola, appearing as a boy in farces and from 1796 in opera in London and again, after several seasons in Italy, in 1801, then beginning a remarkable career of success lasting almost 40 years. His voice had a range of nearly three octaves and his versatility enabled him to shine in both light and serious parts, including oratorio. After 1831 he embarked on ill-starred ventures, losing his whole fortune. In 1840 he visited the United States, but with small success, his voice having almost failed. Wrote many ballads, some extremely popular, songs and other incidental music for various plays. G.

Brahms, Johannes (Hamburg, [May 7] 1833-1897 [April 3], Vienna). One of the masters of German music in the 19th century, eminent both as pianist and as composer in all styles except opera. His father was double-bassist in the Stadttheater at Hamburg and was the boy's first teacher, followed by O. Cossel and after 1843 by Marxsen of Altona. In 1847-49 he appeared four times as pianist, introducing variations of his own. The accent of his early training was on the piano, but his strong impulse to composition was also diligently disciplined, both by his teacher and by his own maturing habits of self-development. In 1853 he made a concert-tour with the violinist Reményi, who at Hanover introduced him to Joachim. The latter sent him to Liszt at Weimar and to Schumann at Düsseldorf, both of whom welcomed him warmly, Liszt hoping to enlist the young genius as one of the revolutionary Weimar group and Schumann hailing him as a sort of musical Messiah and writing about him the famous article 'Neue Bahnen' in the Neue Zeitschrift (Oct. 28, 1853). He also appeared at the Gewandhaus in Leipzig and settled at Hanover for a time. From 1854 his relation to Mme. Schumann became almost like that of a son, and in 1856 he took over some of her pupils. This led to his acting for a time as court-musician at Detmold, but with duties only in the winter months. A position at the Cologne Conservatory he declined, preferring to be relatively free for study and composition, mostly at Hamburg. In 1856 he played at Cologne, in 1857 twice at Leipzig and again in 1859, the last time bringing out his 1st piano-concerto (badly received). In 1860-62 he was chiefly at Winterthur with Th. Kirchner. But he still kept some connection with Hamburg, where he conducted a women's chorus for a time. In 1860 he joined in a protest (with Joachim, Scholz and J. O. Grimm) against the so-called 'Music of the Future,' which linked him with the conservative party in current debates. But he had already become an admirer of Wagner.

In 1862 he went to Vienna, which presently became his headquarters for the rest of his life, though with many tours and sojourns elsewhere. In 1863-64 he was conductor of the Singakademie, and in 1872-75 led the orchestral concerts of the Gesellschaft für Musikfreunde. He kept up relations with Joachim and Mme. Schumann, besides others in his increasing circle of admirers. His hold upon the general musical public grew slowly, since as a performer he made little use of ordinary means of impression and as composer he seemed at first overintricate and later heedless of the tendency to 'program' and impressionistic effects which was characteristic of the time. Hanslick, indeed, exalted him as the apostle of 'absolute' music, though Brahms himself did not deign to become a partisan. More and more it became clear that his development was governed by independent forces within himself. His Requiem (1868) made him known as a choral composer of the first rank, and the series of symphonies (from 1877) set him firmly in the succession to Beethoven. Various other works, especially his quartets and other chamber-music and his steadily growing list of beautiful songs, commended him to different classes of music-lovers. His unique grasp of rhythmic invention, of harmonic structure and contrapuntal development, and his original sense of instrumental color were seen to be marks of a great creative artist. There was obvious charm, also, in his sympathy with lyric poetry, in his use of Hungarian themes and figures, in his dexterity in avoiding slavish adherence to existing patterns, and in his manifest sincerity and sturdy-ness. The difficulty of reducing his genius to easy classification arose partly from his having characteristics that made him seem akin to masters as dissimilar as Bach, Beethoven and Schumann, combined with others that set him quite apart from Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner without thereby seeming of an inferior order. Among the signs of the acknowledgment of his greatness were a Mus.D. from Cambridge University in 1877 (declined), a Ph.D. from Breslau University in 1881 and honors from the Prussian Government in 1886 and from the city of Hamburg in 1889. He was happily spared the pecuniary and other struggles of many musical careers, but his last years were made painful by the pitiless advance of disease (cancer of the liver).

Personally, he was stout and even massive in figure, with a large, expressive and kindly face. Though thoroughly genial with his friends, he often gave the impression of a recluse or even a misanthrope because he hated the emptiness and insincerity of social formality. He was a prodigious reader, had a widely cultivated mind and in his sympathies reached out eagerly toward whatever was noble and ideal.

The list of his works includes 122 bearing an opus-number, but many of these, especially sets of songs, contain several distinct items. The grand total of separate compositions approaches 500. Below is a classified summary (opus-numbers in brackets).

Orchestral Works

Symphonies—

1 [68] C min. (1877) 3 [90] F (1884)

2 [73] D (1878) 4 [98] E min. (1886)

Akademische Fest-Ouverture [80], in acknowledgement of degree at Breslau (1881), Tragische Ouverture [81] (1881).

Concertos—

Piano: 1 [15] D min. (1861); 2 [83] B-flat (1882).

Violin: [77] D 1879.

Violin and 'cello: [102] A min. (1888).

Serenades—

1 [11] D (1860); 2 [16] A (1875).

Orchestration of some of Schubert's songs

Chamber-Works

Sextets for strings in B-flat [18] (1862) and G [36] (1866).

Quintets for strings in F [88] (1883) and G [111] (1891), for piano and strings in F min. [34] (1865), for clarinet and strings in B min. [115] (1892).

Quartets for strings in C min [51] (1873) and B-flat [67] (1876), for piano and strings in G min. [25] (1863), A [26] (1863) and C min. [60] (1875).

Trios for piano and strings in B [8] (1854), C [87] (1883) and C min. [101] (1887), for piano, violin and horn in E-flat [40] (1868), for piano, clarinet and 'cello in A min. [114] (1892).

Sonatas for violin in G [78] (1880), A [100] (1887) and D min. [108] (1889), for 'cello in E min. [38] (1866) and F [99] (1887), and for clarinet in F min., E-flat [120] (1895). Also scherzo in C min. (in sonata for violin with Schumann and Dietrich, 1853), and figured bass filled in for 2 violin-sonatas of K. P. E. Bach.

Among early works, apparently lost, are string-quartets, a string-trio, a violin-sonata and a duet for piano and 'cello.

Piano-Works

Sonatas in C [1] (1853), F-sharp min. [2] (1853), and F min. [5] (1854). Also 2-piano version of Quintet in F min. [34bis] (1872).

Scherzo in E-flat min. [4] (1854).

Variations, Schumann theme [9] (1854), original and Hungarian themes [21] (1861), Schumann theme (4-hands) [23] (1866), Handel theme, with fugue [24] (1862), Paganini theme (studies) [35] (1866), Haydn theme (2 pianos) [56] (1873, for orchestra, 1874).

4 Balladen [10] (1856); 2 Rhapsodies [79] (1880); 7 Fantasien [116] (1892); 3 Intermezzi [117] (1892). Waltzes (4-hands or solo) [39] (1867), Liebeslieder (4-hands, with vocal quartet) [52] (1869) and Neue Liebeslieder (do.) [65] (1875).

Hungarian Dances, 4 books (1869, '80). 18 Pieces [76, 118, 119] (1879, '93).

51 Studies (1893). Also arrangements from Bach, Weber and Chopin (1869), of a Gluck gavotte (1871) and of Schumann's piano-quartet (for 4-hands). Also organ-fugue in A-flat min. (1864), a chorale-prelude and fugue for organ (1881), and 11 chorale-preludes for organ [122] (1902).

Choral Works

Ein deutsches Requiem [45] (1868), partly in memory of his mother.

Schicksalslied [54] (1871).

Triumphlied (8-part) [55] (1872), celebrating victory in the Franco-Prussian War.

Cantata, Rinaldo [50] (1869).

Rhapsodie [53] (1870).

Nänie [82] (1881).

Gesang der Parzen [89] (1883).

Ave Maria [12] (1861).

Begräbnissgesang [13] (1861).

Psalm 13 [27] (1864).

Geistliches Lied [30] (1864).

A cappella motets, 13 in all [29, 37, 42, 74, 110] (1864-90), and Fest- u. Gedenksprüche [109] (1890).

Songs and Part-Songs

About 230 songs [3, 6, 7] (1853-54), [14, 19, 32] (1861-64) [33, 43, 46-9] (1865-68), [57, 58] (1871), [59, 62, 63] (1873-74), [69-72] (1877), [84-6] (1882), [91, 94, 95] (1884), [96, 97] (1886), [103, 106, 107] (1888-89), [121] (1896). Also 14 Volkskinderlieder for Schumann's children (1858), Mondnacht (1872), Deutsche Volkslieder, 7 books (1894) and some early works, now lost.

20 duets [20, 28, 61, 66, 75] (1861-78); 4 trios [17] (1862); 7 Marientlieder [22] (1862); 4 quartets or part-songs [31, 44, 64, 92, 93, 104, 112] (1864-91). Also canons, etc.

He also prepared editions of Handel's chamber-works and of the works of Schumann, Chopin and Couperin.

Memoirs by Deiters, 2 vols. 1880, '98, Köhler, 1888, Mesnard, 1888, Reimann, 1897 (4th ed. 1911), Dietrich, 1898, Widmann, 1898 (3d ed. 1910), Kalbeck, 8 vols. 1904-14 (the chief biography), May, 2 vols. 1905, Erb, 1905, Antcliff, 1905, Jenner, 1905, Imbert, 1905, Henschel, 1907, Pauli, 1907, Leyen, 1908, Von Perger, 1908, Colles, 1908, Fuller-Maitland, 1911, Thomas-San Galli, 1912, Evans, 1912, Lee, 1915, and Niemann, 1920. His letters have been published by the Deutsche Brahms-Gesellschaft, 13 vols. 1906-18. A thematic catalogue of his works was prepared by Simrock (1897, 2d. ed. 1902). For further data and list of critical works, see various memoirs above and Baker, Dict. of Musicians, 1919, p. 112. G.

Brambach, Kaspar Joseph (Bonn, 1833-1902, do.). Rhenish composer, trained at the Cologne Conservatory (Mozart Scholarship) and by Ferd. Hiller, from 1858 teacher at the Cologne Conservatory and in 1861-69 director at Bonn, continuing as private teacher there. Wrote the opera Ariadne, a long list of effective secular cantatas and other choral works, the overture Tasso, a piano-concerto, 2 sextets, 2 piano-quartets, songs, etc.

Brambach, Wilhelm (Bonn, 1841). Rhenish philologist (professor at Freiburg Univ. 1866-72) and in 1872-1904 librarian at Karlsruhe. Author of works on the medieval tone-system (1881), on musical literature to the 11th C. (1883), on Hermannus Contractus (1884), on the Reichenau singing-school (1888), and on the origin of Gregorian music (1895, 2d ed. 1901).

Brambilla, Marietta (n. Milan, 1807-1875, do.). Eminent Italian operatic contralto, pupil of the Milan Conservatory, making her début in 1827 at London, remaining a favorite there, at Vienna and Paris, and in Italy for many years, becoming then a noted teacher at Milan. Wrote songs and vocalises. G.

Brambilla, Paolo (Milan, 1786-1838, do.), father of the above. Italian composer of 4 operas (1816-19) and several ballets (1819-33), mostly for Milan.

Brambilla, Teresa (n. Milan, 1813-1895, do.), sister of Marietta above. Noted Italian operatic soprano, trained at the Milan Conservatory, from 1831 rapidly rising to eminence at Milan, Paris and Venice, besides visiting Spain in 1844-46.

Branberger, Johann (Prague, 1877). Bohemian student of music-history, educated at Prague University (Ph.D. 1905), since 1906 on the staff of the Conservatory, besides editing the Dalibor. Author of Katechismus d. allgem. Musikgeschichte, Ueber d. Musik d. Juden, Rhythmus u. Ton, Wie soll man d. Musik anhören? Gesch. d. Konservatoriums zu Prag, 1911, and Musikgeschichtliches aus Böhmen, 1906.

Branca, Guglielmo (Bologna, 1849). Italian composer of the operas La Catalana, 1876, Hermosa, 1883, and La Figlia di Jorio, 1897.

Brancaccio, Antonio (Naples, 1813-1846, do.). Italian composer, trained at the Naples Conservatory, writing 10 operas (?1830-48) for Naples and Venice.

Brancour, René (Paris, 1862). French writer, since 1904 curator of the museum of the Paris Conservatory and from 1906 also lecturer on æsthetics at the Sorbonne. Author of biographies of Félicien David (1911), Méhul (1912), Bizet (1913) and Ambr. Thomas, besides important articles. Has written a violin-sonata, songs, etc.

Brandeis, Frederic (Vienna, 1835-1899, New York). Austrian pianist and organist, pupil of Czerny and W. Meyerhofer, brought to New York at 14 and making his début in 1851 as pianist, toured for several seasons, and from 1865 was organist at large R. C. churches or synagogues in Brooklyn or New York. Wrote various orchestral pieces, including a suite for strings, a piano-trio, sextets for flute and strings, 3 ballades with orchestra, and many shorter works. A.

Brandes, Friedrich (Aschersleben, 1864). Saxon editor and conductor, pupil of Spitta, Bellermann and Kretzschmar, from 1895 critic and conductor at Dresden, and from 1909 director at Leipzig University, succeeding Reger, besides in 1911-19 editing the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.

Brandl, Johann (n. Ratisbon, 1760-1837, Karlsruhe). Bavarian composer, from 1784 court-director at Bartenstein, from 1789 at Bruchsal and from 1806 at Karlsruhe. Wrote symphonies, much chamber-music, the operas Germania, 1810, and Hermann, 1814, the monodrama Hero und Leander, and many songs, besides some church-music. G.

Brandl, Johann (Kirchenbirk, 1835-1913, Vienna). Bohemian composer of 9 operettas at Vienna (from 1869), with incidental music to about 100 plays.

Brandt, Marianne [Marie Bischof] (Vienna, 1842-1921, do.). Able Austrian operatic contralto, pupil of Frau Marschner and Mme. Viardot-Garcia, appearing first in 1867 at Graz, in 1868-86 engaged at the Berlin Opera, with visits elsewhere, in 1886-90 at the Metropolitan, New York, and after that teaching in Vienna. Her range was so extensive that she often took mezzo-soprano rôles. In 1882 she sang at the première of Parsifal at Bayreuth. Her vocal and dramatic versatility gave her command of works of many schools. G.

Brandts-Buys, Henry (Deventer, 1851-1905, Amsterdam). Dutch conductor from 1878 of a men's chorus in Amsterdam, composing the opera Albrecht Beyling, 1891, and men's choruses.

Brandts-Buys, Jan (Zutphen, 1868), nephew of the above. Dutch composer, pupil of the Frankfort Conservatory, long working in Vienna and since 1910 near Bozen. Has written a piano-concerto (Bösendorfer prize, 1897), chamber-music, the operas Das Veilchenfest, 1909, Das Glockenspiel, 1913, Die drei Schneider von Schönanu, 1916, Der Eroberer, 1918, and songs.

Brandukov, Anatole Andreievitch (Moscow, 1859). Russian 'cellist, trained at the Moscow Conservatory, in 1881-89 active in Paris and London, in 1886 starting a quartet with Marsick, but in 1890 returning to Moscow. Has written various 'cello-pieces.

Branscombe, Gena (Picton, Ont. 1881). Canadian composer, pupil of the Chicago Musical College and of Ganz, Von Fielitz and Humperdinck, since 1910 living in New York (Mrs. J. F. Tenney). Has written about 70 effective songs, many part-songs, pieces for piano or violin and a Festival Prelude for orchestra, 1914. A.

Brant, Jobst vom. 16th C.

Brasart, Johannes. 15th C. G.

Brassin, Gerhard (Aix-la-Chapelle, 1844), brother and pupil of Louis below. Gifted Belgian violinist, from 1863 teacher at Bern, then concertmaster at Gothenburg (Sweden), in 1875-80, after a year in Berlin, conductor at Breslau, and then in Petrograd and later Constantinople. Has written good violin-music.

Brassin, Leopold (Strasburg, 1843-1890, Constantinople), brother and pupil of Louis below. Good pianist, for a time in court-service at Coburg, then with his brothers at Bern, Petrograd and Constantinople. Wrote concertos for one or two pianos and many piano-pieces.

Brassin, Louis (Aix-la-Chapelle, 1840-1884, Petrograd), brother of the two preceding. Noted Belgian pianist, pupil of Moscheles, early on tour with his brothers, then teacher at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, in 1869-79 at the Brussels Conservatory and finally at the Petrograd Conservatory. Wrote an important École Moderne du Piano, 12 concert-études, brilliant transcriptions (as of the Fire-Music from Die Walküre) and pieces, and songs, besides 2 operettas. G.

Brauer, Max (Mannheim, 1855-1918, Karlsruhe). Badenese composer, pupil of V. Lachner and the Cologne Conservatory, from 1880 director at Kaiserslautern and from 1888 court-director at Karlsruhe, where in 1905 he founded a Bachverein. Wrote a serenade for wood and brass, a string-suite, a violin-sonata, works for violin, 'cello or organ as well as piano, besides the operas Der Lotse, 1895 (rewritten, 1913), and Morgiane, 1899.

Braun, Anton (Kassel, 1729-1785, do.). Hessian violinist in the court-band at Kassel and composer of trio- and flute-sonatas and a flute-concerto. His sons were Johann (1753-1795), an expert violinist and writer of concertos for violin, 'cello and horn, etc., also in the Kassel band and from 1785 in court-service at Berlin, and Johann Friedrich (1759-1824), an able oboist. Two sons of the latter were also oboists, both in the court-band at Stockholm.

Braunfels, Walter (Frankfort, 1882). Hessian pianist and composer, pupil of Kwast, Leschetizky, Navrátil and Thuille, since 1903 working in Munich. Has written the operas Prinzessin Brambilla, 1909, Ulenspiegel, 1913, and Die Vögel, 1920, for orchestra; Ariels Gesang, variations and a serenade, a choral setting of Rev. vi, and ultramodern songs and piano-pieces.

Brecher, Gustav (n. Teplitz, 1879). Able Bohemian conductor and composer, pupil of Jadassohn, R. Hofmann and Schlemüller, appearing first as conductor in 1899 at Leipzig, in 1900 at the Vienna Court Opera, in 1902-03 at the Stadttheaters of Olmütz and Hamburg, from 1911 head of the Opera at Cologne and since 1916 of that at Frankfort. Has written the symphonic poem Rosmersholm, 1896, the fantasia Aus unserer Zeit, a revision of Auber's Masaniello, several sets of valuable songs, and essays on the veristic opera, Richard Strauss, and opera-texts and translations.

Bree, Jean Bernard van (Amsterdam, 1801-1857, do.). Important Dutch conductor and composer, pupil of Bertelmann, from 1819 in a theater-orchestra in Amsterdam, from 1829 conductor of the Felix Meritis, in 1840 founder of the Cecilia and head of the school of the Society for the Promotion of Music. Wrote the operas Sappho, 1834, Le Bandit, 1840, and Nimm dich in Acht, 1845?, a symphony, an overture with chorus, 3 string-quartets, 5 masses, cantatas, ballads, melodramas, etc. G (Van Bree.)

Breil, Joseph Carl (Pittsburgh, 1870). American theater-musician from 1891, since 1909 writing many comic operas and music for plays and photo-plays. His The Legend was given in 1919 at the Metropolitan, New York. A.

Breithaupt, Rudolf Maria (Brunswick, 1873). Famous Prussian piano-teacher, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, working since 1897 at Berlin, in 1918 becoming professor at the Stern Conservatory. Author of important text-books on piano-technique (1904-19), Musikalische Zeit- und Streitfragen, 1906, articles in the Neue Zeitschrift, etc., and composer of songs.

Breitkopf & Härtel. This famous and influential business-firm in Leipzig, now the most extensive music-publishers in the world, began as a mere printing-office founded in 1719 by Bernhard Christoph Breitkopf (1695-1777), who in 1745 was succeeded by his son, Joh. Gottlob Emmanuel Breitkopf (1719-1794). The latter promptly turned to reviving and developing the use of movable types in printing music, as well as building up a sales-center for music of all countries, combined with the issue (from 1760) of music-catalogues of unprecedented elaboration—not to speak of other activities in Leipzig and elsewhere. In 1795 the entire business passed into the hands of Gottfried Christoph Härtel (1763-1827), remaining in his family ever since. He vastly extended the firm's business by publishing the complete works of masters like Haydn, Mozart, Clementi and Dussek, introduced the invaluable processes of engraving music on soft-metal plates or stone, in 1798 started the significant Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung and, with workmen from Vienna, set up the first piano-factory in central Germany. All through these early stages, as later, the firm, though becoming foremost in musical publication, was also active in the field of general literature. Härtel was followed in 1827-35 by his nephew Florenz and he by Gottfried's sons, Hermann (1803-1875) and Raimund (1810-1888). To them succeeded their brothers-in-law, Wilhelm Volkmann (1837-1896) and Oskar von Hase (1846-1921), with the latter of whom a son was associated since 1904.

Besides issuing an enormous list of detached works, the firm has been liberal in undertaking complete critical editions of Bach, Beethoven, Berlioz, Chopin, Froberger, Gluck, Grétry, Handel, Haydn, Lassus, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Palestrina, Schein, Schubert, Schumann, Schütz, Sweelinck, Vittoria and Wagner, besides having a more or less central responsibility for the several historical collections under the title of Denkmäler and for the publications of the Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft (1899-1914). They have also put forth a multitude of historical, biographical, critical and theoretical works. The extension of this manifold publishing activity caused their withdrawal in 1871 from instrument-making. See Otto von Hase's history of the firm (2 vols. 4th ed. 1917-19). G.

Brema, Maria [Marie Fehrmann] (Liverpool, 1856), her father being German and her mother American. Distinguished English operatic mezzo-soprano, pupil of Henschel, Mme. Cox and Blume, making her début in concert and opera in 1891, almost immediately being recognized as an artist of the first rank, not only in England, but from 1894 at Bayreuth, in 1895-96 at New York, from 1898 at Paris, etc. She has often been selected for the premières of important works, as of Elgar's Dream of Gerontius (1900) and Stanford's Much Ado about Nothing (1901). For many years she has been professor in the Manchester College of Music. In 1874 she married Arthur Braun of Liverpool. G.

Bremmer, Robert (? -1789, London). From 1754 music-publisher in Edinburgh and from 1762 in London, issuing many excellent editions, especially of Scottish songs. At his death the business was acquired by Preston. G.

Brendel, Karl Franz (Stolberg, 1811-1868, Leipzig). Noted Saxon critic and editor, educated at Leipzig and Berlin Universities, pupil in music of Anacker and Wieck, in 1843 lecturer on music-history at Freiberg and Dresden, from 1844 proprietor and editor of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik at Leipzig, as well as in 1856-61 of the Anregungen für Kunst, Leben und Wissenschaft. From 1846 he also lectured on history and æsthetics at the new Conservatory. He became an ardent partisan of Wagner and Liszt, but from 1861, through the starting of the Allgemeiner deutscher Musikverein, sought to amalgamate the conservative and the New-German groups. Author of Grundzüge d. Geschichte d. Musik, 1848 (5th ed. 1861), Geschichte d. Musik in Italien, Deutschland u. Frankreich, 1852 (revised by Kienzl, 1888, by Hövker, 1902), Die Musik d. Gegenwart u. d. Gesamtkunst d. Zukunft, 1854, Liszt als Symphoniker, 1859, Die Organisation d. Musikwesens durch den Staat, 1865, Geist u. Technik im Klavierunterricht, 1867, and the posthumous collection of essays, Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Geschichte u. Kritik d. neueren Musik, 1888. G.

Brenet, Michel [Marie Bobillier] (Lunéville, 1858-1918, Paris). Gifted and prolific French music-historian, from 1871 resident in Paris. Author of biographical works on Grétry (1884), Berlioz (1889), Okeghem (1893), De Brossard (1896), Goudimel (1898), Rameau (1903), Palestrina (1906), Haydn (1909) and Handel (1913) with a history of the symphony [to Beethoven] (1882), La Musique dans les Processions, 1896, La Musique dans les Couvents des Femmes, 1898, Notes sur l'Histoire du Luth en France, 1899, Les Concerts en France sous l'Ancien Régime, 1900, Additions Inédites de Dom Jumilhac à son Traité, 1902, La Plus Ancienne Méthode Française de Musique, 1907, Les Musiciens de la Sainte-Chapelle, 1910, and Musique et Musiciens de la Vielle France, 1911, besides many periodical and dictionary articles. G.

Brenner, Ludwig von (Leipzig, 1833-1902, Berlin). Saxon violinist and conductor, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, (after tours) from 1857 in the court-orchestra at Petrograd, from 1872 director of the Berlin Symphony Orchestra, from 1876 of the Neue Berliner Symphoniekapelle, and from 1897 Meyder's successor at Breslau. Wrote symphonic poems, overtures and other orchestral pieces, 4 masses and 2 Te Deums.

Brent, Charlotte (? -1802, London). English soprano, appearing from 1755 in light opera and from 1764 in oratorio and at Covent Garden. She continued active till 1785. In 1762 she sang at the première of Arne's Artaxerxes. In 1766 she married the violinist Pinto. G.

Brescianello, Giuseppe Antonio. Director at Stuttgart in 1717-57, writing symphonies, triosonatas, violin-concertos, pieces for the colascione, a mass, cantatas, etc.

Breslaur, Emil (Kottbus, 1836-1899, Berlin). Able Prussian piano-teacher, trained at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, from 1863 teacher at the Kullak Academy, and from 1879 head of various enterprises for training or organizing teachers. Author of Die technische Grundlage d. Klavierspiels, 1874, and many other valuable pedagogical books, with a Melodiebildungslehre, 1896.

Bressler-Gianoli, Clotilde (Geneva, 1875-1912, do.). Brilliant Italian-Swiss operatic contralto (also precocious pianist, pupil of the Geneva Conservatory), trained by Sangiovanni, Giacosa and Ronconi, appearing at Geneva from 1894, at Milan in 1896, then at Brussels, Bordeaux, Lyons and Paris, after 1900 in New Orleans and New York, at the Manhattan, New York, in 1906-08, at the Metropolitan in 1909-10, and then with the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company. Her large répertoire included all the chief Wagner rôles and modern French operas. She sang at the premières of many works, including Charpentier's Louise (1900) and Saint-Saëns' Les Barbares (1901). A.

Bretón y Hernández, Tomás (Salamanca, 1850). Eminent Spanish composer, trained at the Madrid Conservatory, from 1875 producing a long line of original and effective works, including especially the zarzuelas or operas Los Amantes de Teruel, 1889, Juan Garín, 1892, Dolores, 1895, El Domingo de Ramos, 1896, Raquel, 1900, Farinelli, 1903, and Taboré, 1913, besides many orchestral and chamber-works and the oratorio Apocalipsis, 1882. In 1903 he became head of the Madrid Conservatory. G.

Breuer, Hans (Cologne, 1869). Rhenish operatic tenor, pupil of the Cologne Conservatory and of Kniese at Bayreuth, where he made his début in 1896, going thence to Breslau, New York (1897), London, etc. He sang at all the Bayreuth festivals in 1896-1914, in 1906 at the Salzburg festival and in 1907-08 at those at Munich. His greatest success has been in works of Mozart and of Wagner.

Breuning, Stephan von (Bonn, 1774-1827, Vienna), son of Mme. Hélène von Breuning, Beethoven's early friend. Fellow-pupil with Beethoven under Ries at Bonn and from 1801 his friend at Vienna. His son, Moritz Gerhard von Breuning (1813-1892), a leading physician of Vienna, wrote Aus dem Schwarzspanierhaus, 1874 (new ed. 1907), valuable for its personal reminiscences of Beethoven's last years. G.

Breunung, Ferdinand (Brotterode, 1830-1883, Aix-la-Chapelle). Saxon pianist, from 1855 Reinecke's successor as teacher at the Cologne Conservatory and city-director at Aix.

Bréval, Jean Baptiste (n. Laon, 1756-1825, do.). French 'cellist and composer, pupil of Cupis, in 1781-1806 at the Paris Opéra and in 1796-1802 professor at the Conservatory. Wrote an opera, 8 symphonies, 7 'cello-concertos, much chamber-music and a 'cello-method.

Bréval, Lucienne (Männedorf, 1870). Eminent Swiss operatic soprano, trained at the Paris Conservatory, appearing first in 1892 and since then leading singer at the Opéra, with visits to America in 1900-02 and to London. Besides regularly taking chief Wagnerian rôles, she has sung at many premières, as of Guiraud's Frédégonde (1895), Massenet's Grisélidis (1901), Dukas' Ariane et Barbe-Bleu (1907), Bloch's Macbeth (1910), etc.

Bréville, Pierre Onfroy de (Bar-le-Duc, 1861). French composer, pupil of Dubois and Franck, since 1889 professor of counterpoint at the Schola Cantorum and examiner for the Conservatory, besides considerable critical work. Has written the opera Eros Vainqueur, 1910, an overture for Maeterlinck's La Princesse Maleine and incidental music to other plays, Une Overture pour un Drame, the choral 'scène mystique' Sainte-Rose de Lima, the orchestral suites Nuit de Décembre and Stamboul, the choral works Médeia, La Tête de Kenware'h, L'Ordine et le Pêcheur and Bernadette, a mass, motets and other church-music, an organ-suite, etc., besides joining in the completion of Franck's Ghiselle (1896) and writing Sur les Chansons Populaires Françaises, 1901. His close association with Franck in style is notable. G.

Brewer, Alfred Herbert (Gloucester, 1865). English organist, pupil of Lloyd and the Royal College, London, in 1881-82 at St. Catherine's, Gloucester, then at Oxford, in 1885-86 at Bristol Cathedral, from 1886 at St. Michael's, Coventry, in 1892-96 at Tunbridge School, and since then at Gloucester Cathedral, also conducting choral societies and festivals there. Mus.D. from the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1905. Has written several cantatas, including The Holy Innocents, 1904, orchestral pieces, a choral suite, organ-pieces, church-music, etc. G.

Brewer, John Hyatt (Brooklyn, 1856). American organist, pupil of Buck, from 1871 organist in Brooklyn, since 1881 at the Lafayette Ave. Presbyterian Church, and from 1878 accompanist under Buck of the Apollo Club and in 1903 his successor as conductor. Mus.D. of New York Univ. in 1914. Has written a string-quartet, an orchestral suite, the fantasia April Winds, several chamber-pieces, The Lady of the Lake for organ, piano and 'cello, the cantata Lord of the Dunderberg, 1905, the a cappella chorus Bedouin Love-Song, 1906, and many shorter vocal and instrumental works, several of which have won prizes from different organizations. A.

Briard, Étienne. 16th C. G.

Briccialdi, Giulio (Terni, 1818-1881, Florence). Noted Italian flutist, from 1834 in service of the Prince of Syracuse, from 1836 in Naples and Milan, in 1841 toured in Europe and America, and from 1842 lived mostly in London. Wrote the opera Leonora de' Medici, 1855, flute-concertos, pieces and a method.

Bridge, Frank (Brighton, 1879). Able English violist and composer, trained at the Royal College of Music, London, since 1899 playing in various ensemble-groups, especially the Grimson and Motto Quartets, and since 1910 more or less active as opera-conductor, as at the Savoy in 1910-11 and at Covent Garden in 1913. Has written for orchestra the symphonic poem Isabella, 1907, the suite The Sea, 1912, a Rhapsody, a Dance-Rhapsody, 1909, and a Dance-Poem, 1914, string-quartets, a piano-trio and many other chamber-works. G, A.

Bridge, John Frederick (n. Birmingham, 1844). Distinguished English organist, pupil of John Hopkins as a choirboy at Rochester and of Goss, beginning organ-duties in 1861, from 1865 at Windsor, from 1869 at Manchester Cathedral and in 1872-75 also professor at Owens College there, and from 1875 second and in 1882-1918 first organist at Westminster Abbey, London, succeeding Turle. Since 1890 he has been professor at Gresham College, since 1903 professor at the University of London, besides teaching at the Royal Academy of Music and acting as examiner for various Universities. In 1896 he followed Barnby as conductor of the Royal Choral Society and has led several other choral and orchestral organizations, including the Madrigal Society. Among many occasions of note in which he has participated were Queen Victoria's Jubilee in 1887 and Edward VII's Coronation in 1902. He received a Mus.D. from Oxford in 1874 and was knighted in 1897. Has written the overture Morte d'Arthur, 1886, the oratorios Mount Moriah, 1874, and The Repentance of Nineveh, 1890, the cantatas Boadicea, 1880, Rock of Ages (Latin text by Gladstone), 1885, Callirhoe, 1888, The Lord's Prayer (after Dante), 1892, and The Cradle of Christ (Stabat Mater Speciosa), 1894, the choral ballades or motets Hymn to the Creator, 1883, The Festival, Inchcape Rock, The Flag of England, 1897, The Ballad of the Camperdown, 1899, The Forging of the Anchor, 1901, an organ-sonata and other organ-pieces, much church-music, part-songs and songs, besides text-books in harmony, counterpoint and organ-accompaniment, Samuel Pepys, Lover of Musicque, 1903, and an edition of motets by Gibbons (1907). Autobiography, 1918. G.

Bridge, Joseph Cox (Rochester, 1853), brother of the above. Noted English organist, pupil of John Hopkins and his brother, from 1871 organist and student at Oxford, and since 1877 organist at Chester Cathedral, in 1879-1900 reviving and conducting triennial festivals, in 1883 founding the Chester Musical Society and in 1886-89 directing the Bradford Choral Society. Since 1908 he has also been professor at Durham University and is examiner for other institutions. Oxford made him Mus.D. in 1884. He is also active in archaeological circles. Has written the oratorio Daniel, 1884, the cantatas Rudel, 1891, and Resurgam, 1897, a Requiem, 1900, the operetta The Belle of the Area, a symphony (1894), a string-quartet, a 'cello-sonata, much church- and organ-music, songs, etc. G.

Briegel, Wolfgang Karl (1626-1712). 17th C. G.

Briesemeister, Otto (Arnswalde, 1866-1910, n. Berlin). Prussian operatic tenor, pupil of Wiedemann, in 1893 making his début at Detmold, singing then at Aix and Breslau and making a reputation that took him all over Europe. He was especially noted in the rôles of Loge and of Herod (in Salome).

Brighenti, Maria, née Giorgi (Bologna, 1792-?). Italian operatic contralto, first appearing in 1814 and retiring in 1836. She sang at the premières of Il Barbiere (1816) and La Cenerentola (1817), and wrote reminiscences of Rossini (1823). G.

Bright, Dora Estella (Sheffield, 1863). English pianist, pupil of the Royal Academy, London, notable from 1882 for annual series of recitals in London and from 1889 appeared widely on the Continent. In 1892 she married Capt. Knatchbull. Has written 2 piano-concertos (1891-92), variations (1890) and a fantasia for piano and orchestra (1892), a piano-quartet (1893), a suite for piano and violin, a 2-piano duo, a ballet-scene (1907), songs, etc.

Brignoli, Pasqualino (? -1884, New York). Able Italian operatic tenor, appearing in the United States from 1855 with much success, especially with Patti. He also became a useful teacher. A.

Brink, Jules ten (Amsterdam, 1838-1889, Paris). Dutch composer, pupil of Heinze, Dupont and E. F. Richter, in 1860-68 director at Lyons and then in Paris. Wrote the comic opera Calonice, 1870, a symphony, a symphonic poem, an orchestral suite, a violin-concerto, etc.

Brinsmead & Sons. A piano-making firm in London, founded in 1836 by John Brinsmead (1814-?), who in 1863 was joined by his sons Thomas and Edgar. In 1878 the father was admitted to the Légion d'Honneur in recognition of his excellent work, especially his repeating action. Edgar Brinsmead is author of a History of the Pianoforte, 1868 (revised, 1879). G.

Bristow, George Frederick (Brooklyn, 1825-1898, New York). American violinist, organist and composer, from 1842 for over forty years in the New York Philharmonic Society and organist in several churches, besides in 1851-62 conducting the Harmonic Society and later, the Mendelssohn Union. Wrote the operas Rip van Winkle, 1855, and Columbus (incomplete), the oratorios Praise to God, 1860, and Daniel, 1867, the cantatas The Great Republic, 1880, and Niagara, 5 symphonies, including the Arcadian, 1874, 2 overtures, 2 string-quartets and many lesser works. A.

Britton, Thomas (1651-1714). 17th C. G.

Brixel, Franz (Vienna, 1852-1914, do.). Austrian piano-teacher, pupil of Willmers and Horák, from 1870 teaching in the latter's Institute in Vienna and from 1892 succeeding him as director, besides from 1890 conducting the choral club Haydn. Wrote several text-books.

Brixi, Franz Xaver (Prague, 1732-1771, do.). Bohemian composer, from 1756 director at Prague Cathedral. Wrote about 75 masses, a Requiem and much other church-music in a fine contrapuntal style, besides a comic opera and an operetta.

Broadwood & Sons. A famous London piano-making firm, the oldest in the world in continuous existence. The business was founded about 1730 by Burkhard Tschudi [Shudi] (d. 1773), a Swiss harpsichord-maker, whom John Broadwood (1732-1812) joined in 1761, in 1769 marrying his daughter and soon succeeding to proprietorship. The making of pianos began in 1773, at first after Zumpe's models, but in 1780 Broadwood devised his own square and grand, gradually adding improvements that affected progress everywhere. In 1795 his son, James Shudi Broadwood (1772-1851), became a partner and in 1807 another son, Thomas. They were succeeded by James's son, Henry Fowler Broadwood (1811-1893), and his son, Henry John Tschudi Broadwood. Not only have the Broadwoods been the leading English makers, but they have ranked as one of the famous exponents of the industry in the world, developing the distinctively 'English' type of action. G.

Brockway, Howard A. (Brooklyn, 1870). Able American pianist and composer, pupil of Barth and Boise, from 1895 appearing in Berlin and New York, in 1903-10 professor at the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore, and since then again in New York. Has written a symphony (1895), an orchestral suite (1903), ballade (1895) and Scherzino, a Cavatina and Romanza for violin and orchestra, a violin-sonata (1895), 2 'cello-suites, a piano-quintet, a piano-concerto and many sets of piano-pieces, the cantata Sir Oluf, 3 8-part choruses a cappella, including Des Sängers Fluch, etc. He has made special studies of the folk-songs of the Kentucky highlands, published as Lonesome Tunes, 1916. A.

Brod, Henri (Paris, 1801-1839, do.). Noted French oboist, pupil of Vogt and from 1819 his colleague at the Opéra, from 1832 also professor at the Conservatory. He gained admission to the Légion d'Honneur in 1838. Wrote 3 wood-quintets, oboe-pieces and a good method. G.

Brode, Max (Berlin, 1850-1917, Königsberg). Prussian violinist, trained by Gans and Zimmermann and at the Stern and Leipzig Conservatories, as well as by Joachim, for a time leader of a Quartet at Mitau, in 1874-76 taught at the Augsburg Conservatory, was then concertmaster till 1879 at Königsberg, besides promoting symphony-concerts, from 1891 led the Philharmonic there, from 1894 lectured at the University and from 1898 conducted the Singakademie. He held the title of professor from 1897.

Brodsky, Adolf (Taganrog, 1851). Eminent Russian violinist, trained at the Vienna Conservatory and by Laub, from 1868 playing in the Hellmesberger Quartet and for a time also at the Opera, from 1873 in Moscow, becoming in 1875 professor at the Conservatory there, from 1879 orchestral conductor at Kiev, after 1881 making long tours (introduced Tchaikowsky's concerto), from 1883 professor at the Leipzig Conservatory, following Schrädieck, and forming the Brodsky Quartet (with Hans Becker, Sitt [later Nováček] and J. Klengel), in 1891-94 concertmaster of the New York Symphony Society, with tours as soloist, and since 1895 Hallé's successor as head of the Royal College of Music in Manchester, England, there forming a second Quartet of high order. In 1902 Victoria Univ. (Manchester) made him Mus.D. He was a close friend of Grieg, Tchaikovsky and Brahms. His playing is marked by nobility of tone and conception. G.

Brömme, Adolf (Petrograd, 1826-1905, Wiesbaden). German-Russian singing-teacher, pupil of Schletterer, Grell, Bataille and Bordogni, in 1855-69 active in Petrograd, in 1870-78 teacher at the Dresden Conservatory and from 1879 living at Wiesbaden. Wrote a good method (1893).

Bronner, Georg (in Holstein, 1666-1724, Hamburg). In 1693-1702 composer for the Hamburg Opera (7 singspiele) and then organist at the Heilige-Geist-Kirche.

Bronsart [von Schellendorf], Hans von (Berlin, 1830-1913, Munich). Able Prussian pianist, conductor and composer, educated at Berlin University, pupil of Dehn, Kullak and especially Liszt, touring widely from 1857, in 1860-62 conductor of the Leipzig Euterpe and in 1865-66 of the Berlin Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, following Von Bülow, from 1867 opera-director at Hanover and in 1887-95 at Weimar, then retired with the title Geheimrat. Wrote an opera, the symphonies (with chorus) In den Alpen and Schicksalsgewalten, the 8-part cantata Christnacht, the tone-poem Manfred, 1901, a Frühlingsfantasie for orchestra, a piano-concerto, a string-sextet, a piano-trio and many other piano-works, besides the pamphlet Musikalische Pflichten. G.

Bronsart, Ingeborg von, née Starck (Petrograd, 1840-1913, Munich). Swedish-Russian pianist, pupil of Liszt, from 1862 wife of Hans von Bronsart. Wrote the operas Die Göttin zu

Saïs, Jery und Bätehi, 1873, König Hjarne, 1891, and Die Sühne, 1909, piano-concertos, sonatas, fugues and pieces, some chamber-music and songs. G (Starck).

Broome, William Edward (Manchester, 1868). English organist, in 1883-90 at Bangor, Wales, settling in America after a visit in 1893 as conductor of the Penrhyn Male Chorus, in Montreal from 1894 and since 1907 at Toronto, where he is organist and from 1910 conductor of the Oratorio Society. Mus.D. of Toronto Univ. Has written the cantata A Hymn of Trust, the dramatic The Siege of Cardiff Castle, 1908, the chorus Sea-Song, and a large number of other vocal works, several of which have won prizes in Welsh competitions. A.

Brosig, Moritz (Fuchswinkel, 1815-1887, Breslau). Silesian organist, pupil and in 1842 successor of Franz Wolf at Breslau Cathedral, as well as vice-director of the Inst. for Church Music and lecturer at the University. Ph.D. of the Univ. and member of the Accademia S. Cecilia, Rome. Wrote several masses and much other church-music, many organ-pieces, several instruction-books, including a Harmonielehre, 1874 (4th ed. 1899), and Ueber die alten Kirchenkompositionen u. ihre Wiedereinführung, 1880.

Brossard, Sébastien de (1654-1730). 17th C. G.

Brounoff, Platon G. (Elizabethgrad, 1863). Russian teacher, trained at the Warsaw and Petrograd Conservatories, since 1892 in New York, often lecturing on Russian subjects. Has written the dramas Ramona and Xilona, an oratorio, symphonies, suites for piano and for violin, an overture and songs. A.

Broustet, Édouard (Toulouse, 1836). French pianist, pupil of Stamaty, Litolf and Ravina, for a time touring with Litolf and from 1871 settling in Toulouse. Has written a Symphonie Concertante, a piano-concerto, 3 piano-trios, a piano-quintet, etc.

Brown, Eddy (Chicago, 1895). American violinist of Polish-Russian descent, pupil of Hubay and Auer, appearing from 1910 in Berlin and with leading orchestras elsewhere and since 1916 in America. Besides much success as soloist, he has written considerably for his instrument. A.

Brown, James Duff (Edinburgh, 1862). Scottish lexicographer, since 1888 librarian of the Clerkenwell Library, London. Author of a Dictionary of Musicians, 1886, Guide to the Formation of a Musical Library, 1893, British Musical Biography (with S. S. Stratton), 1897, Characteristic Songs and Dances of All Nations, 1901, and Subject-Classification, 1908. G.

Brown, John (1715-1766). English clergyman, author of a dissertation on the Power of Music, 1763, with Remarks on the same, 1764.

Browne, John Lewis (London, 1866). English organist, brought to the United States in 1873 and pupil there of S. P. Warren and Archer, from 1888 at Chicago (R. C.) Cathedral, from 1892 in San Francisco, from 1899 at Atlanta, in 1908-10 at Wanamaker's in Philadelphia, and since 1912 at St. Patrick's, Chicago, and teacher in the Metropolitan Conservatory. He has appeared extensively in recital, and at Atlanta for three years led the Symphony Orchestra. Mus.D. of the Grand Conservatory, New York, in 1902, and since 1914 member of the Philharmonic Academy, Rome. Has written the opera La Corsicana, 1903, a mass (1913), the motet Ecce Sacerdos Magnus, 1912 (Rome), an orchestral suite, an organ-sonata, etc. A.

Bruch, Max (Cologne, 1838-1920, n. Berlin). Distinguished Rhenish composer, pupil of his mother (daughter of Karl Almenräder and a gifted singer), Breidenstein and the Frankfurt Conservatory, with varied sojourns from 1861 in leading musical cities in Germany. He occupied but few official positions in early life—director at Coblenz in 1865-67 and at Sondershausen in 1867-70, conductor of the Stern Chorus in Berlin in 1878-80, of the Liverpool Philharmonic in 1880-83 and of the Breslau Orchestra in 1883-90. From 1892 he was professor at the Berlin Hochschule, retiring in 1910. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1893 and of Breslau Univ. in 1896, corresponding member of the French Académie from 1898, decorated with the Prussian Order of Merit in 1908, etc. In 1881 he married the singer Klara Tucek. In 1883 he visited America.

His compositions covered a very wide range, including every principal form. The vocal works predominate in number over the instrumental, with a strong emphasis upon choral effects. But the abundant melodic and harmonic inspiration, the masterly craftsmanship and a singularly warm and genial spirit are conspicuous in all. In many ways he stood akin to Mendelssohn in his adherence to classical methods, but, on the other hand, in general tone and color he is slightly affiliated with Brahms, though without the latter's profundity of conception. In richness of picturesque and romantic imagination he resembled Schumann.

His works with opus-number run to about 90, besides a few others. It is possible that others may yet appear. The list includes the following (opus-numbers in brackets):

Instrumental Works

Symphonies: 1 [28] E-flat: 2 [36] F min.: 3 [51] E (1887). Concertos: for violin in G min. [26], D min. [44] and D min. [58]; for two pianos [88]. String-quartets in C min. [9] and E [10]. Piano-trio in C min. [5] and set of 8 [83] (or for 3 clarinets).

Violin and orchestra: Fantasie [46] (with harp), In Memoriam [65], Serenade [75], Konzertstück [84] (1911, Norfolk Festival) and Romanze [85]. Violin and piano: Swedish Dances [63] and Songs and Dances (Russian and Swedish) [79].

Cello and orchestra: Kol Nidrei (Hebrew melody) [47] (with harp), Canzone [55], Adagio (Celtic themes) [56], Adagio appassionato [57] and Ave Maria [61]. Cello and piano: 4 Pieces [70].

Phantasie in D min. for 2 pianos [11] and Capriccio for piano, 4 hands [2]. Also 3 Piano-Pieces [12, 14].

Vocal Works

Operas: Die Loreley [18], 1863 (Mannheim), and Hermione [40], 1872 (Berlin). Singspiel, Scherz, List und Rache [1], 1858 (Cologne).

Oratorios: Arminius [43], 1875, Achilleus [50], 1885, and Moses [67].

Kyrie, Sanctus and Agnus Dei [35] (soli and double chorus).

Cantatas, etc.: Jubilate, Amen [3], Die Birken und die Erlen [8], Die Flucht der heiligen Familie [20], Gesang der heiligen drei Könige [21], Frühjoh [23], Schön Ellen [24], Salamis [25], Frühjoh auf seines Vaters Grabhügel [27], Rorate Coeli [29], Die Priesterin der Isis in Rom [30], Die Flucht nach Egypten [31], Normannenzug [32], Römische Leichenfeier [34], Das Lied vom deutschen Kaiser [37], Dithyrambe [39], Odysseus [41], Das Lied von der Glocke [45], Das Feuerkreuz [52], Gruss an die heilige Nacht [62], Leonidas [66], Sei getreu bis in den Tod [69], Gustav Adolf [73], Der Letzte Abschied des Volkes [76] (1888), Damajanti [78], Szene der Marfa [80], Osterkantate [81], Das Wessobrunner Gebet [82, from 19], Die Macht des Gesanges [87] and Heldenfeier [89]. Also various choruses and part-songs [6, 19, 38, 48, 53, 60, 64, 68, 71, 72, 74, 86, with several without opus-n.].

Over 40 Songs [7, 15, 17, 18, 49, 54, 59] and 3 duets [4]. G. A.

Bruch, Wilhelm (Mayence, 1844), distantly related to the above. Rhenish conductor, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, at first theater-conductor at Strasburg, in 1898-1900 director of the Scottish Orchestra at Edinburgh, and latterly conductor of the Nuremberg Philharmonic. Has written the operas Hirlanda, 1886, and Das Winterzeit am Rhein, 1903.

Brocken-Fock, Gerard E. von (Koudekerk, 1859). Able Dutch composer, pupil of Hol, Kiel and Bargiel, long on tour in the Low Countries, France and Germany, and then living at Laren. Has written notable piano-pieces (preludes, Moments Musicaux, Spanish Dances), besides symphonies, a violin-sonata, oratorios, cantatas, choruses and songs.

Brückler, Hugo (Dresden, 1845-1871, do.). Gifted but short-lived Saxon composer of songs. Memoir by Musiol. G.

Bruckner, Anton (n. Linz, 1824-1896, Vienna). Distinguished Austrian organist and composer, at first self-taught, but later pupil of Sechter and Kitzler, from 1855 organist at Linz Cathedral and from 1867 court-organist at Vienna, succeeding Sechter, and professor in the Conservatory, also from 1875 lecturing at the University. In 1869 and 1871 he made notable tours to France and England respectively. His playing was that of a true virtuoso. His style as composer was marked by intense earnestness and much real power, though lacking in contrast and tending to imitate Wagner. His works include Symphonies—1, C min. (1868), 2, C min. (1873), 3, D min. (1877), 4, E-flat, Romantic (1881), 5, B-flat (1894), 6, A (1899), 7, E (1884), 8, C min. (1892), 9, incomplete (1903).

String-quintet in F (1881). Grand Masses in D min. (1867), E min. (1869) and F min. (1872); a strong Te Deum (1885); a Requiem, motets, Psalms and much other church-music. Germanenzug and other works for men's chorus.

Memoirs by Brunner, 1895, Louis, 1905, Funtek, 1910, Gräffinger, 1911, Morold, 1912, Halm, 1914, Krug, 1918, and Grunsky, 1922, besides a large work by Göllicherich not yet published. G.

Brückner, Oscar (Erfurt, 1857). Able Saxon 'cellist, pupil of the elder Grützmacher and Draeseke, after touring in Germany, Russia, Poland and Holland, court-musician at Strelitz and since 1889 in the court-orchestra at Wiesbaden and professor in the Conservatory there.

Bruhns, Nikolaus (1665-1697). 17th C. G.

Brüll, Ignaz (Prossnitz, 1846-1907, Vienna). Noted Moravian pianist and composer, pupil of J. Epstein, Ruffnatscha and Dessoff, appearing as composer in 1861 and as player from 1865, with tours, finally settling in Vienna (in 1872-78 at the Horák Inst.). In 1878 he visited England as pianist. Wrote the operas Die Bettler von Samarkand, 1864, Das goldene Kreuz, 1875, Der Landfriede, 1877, Bianca, 1879, Königin Mariette, 1883, Gloria, 1886, Das steinerne Herz, 1888, Gringoire, 1892, Schach dem König, 1893, and Der Husar, 1898, the ballet Ein Märchen aus der Champagne, 1896, the overtures Im Walde, Pathétique and Macbeth, 3 orchestral serenades and a Tanz-Suite, 2 piano-concertos, a Konzertstück and a Rhapsodie, a violin-concerto, a trio, a violin-suite, violin- and 'cello-sonatas, 4 piano-suites, etc. G.

Brumel, Anton. 16th C. G.

Brun, Fritz (Lucerne, 1878). Swiss composer, trained by Breitenbach, Mengelberg and Fassbänder and at the Cologne Conservatory, from 1901 teaching at Berlin, London and Dortmund, and since 1903 at Bern, where from 1909 he has been conductor of the subscription-concerts, the Cäcilienverein and the Liedertafel. Has written 2 symphonies, the symphonic poem, Aus dem Buche Hiob, a violin-sonata, the choral Verheissung, 1917, and songs.

Brune, Adolf Gerhard (n. Hanover, 1870). North German composer, pupil of his father and of Brennecke, from 1889 organist at Peoria, Ill., and since 1894 in Chicago, in 1898-1917 teaching at the Chicago Musical College, with helpful contacts with Liebling and Ziehn. Has written symphonies in E, E min. and D, the symphonic poems Lied des Singschwans, Evangeline and Ein Dämmerungsbild, a symphonic fantasy in C, variations on a Beethoven theme, 4 overtures, including the Overture to a Drama, piano-concertos in C min. and F min., an organ-concerto, 2 string-quintets, 5 string-quartets, a piano-quartet, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, many organ-works, some of large dimensions, many piano-pieces, the cantata Jerusalem, a 6-part mass, a 10-part setting of Psalm 84, the men's choruses Des Sängers Fluch and Saxons' War-Song, besides other choral pieces, about 50 songs, etc. A.

Bruneau, Louis Charles Bonaventure Alfred (Paris, 1857). Distinguished French composer and critic, trained at the Paris Conservatory (just failed of the Prix de Rome in 1881), writer in 1892-95 for Gil Blas, then for Figaro and latterly for Le Matin, from 1900 on the staff of the Conservatory, succeeding Reyser as inspector in 1909, and in 1903-04 conductor at the Opéra-Comique, besides making long tours throughout Europe. Highly original and in many ways a daring innovator, his skill and persistence in carrying out his harmonic, thematic and dramatic ideas has won for him respect and often admiration. He is certainly one of the notable forces in the impressionistic French school. His works include

Operas: Kérin, 1887, Le Rêve, 1891, L'Attaque du Moulin, 1893, Messidor, 1897, L'Ouragan, 1901, L'Enfant Roi, 1905, Nata Nicoulin, 1907, La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret, 1907, Le Roi Candaule, 1920, Le Jardin du Paradis, 1921.

Ballets: Les Bacchantes, 1912, L'Amoureuse Leçon, 1913, Le Tambour (épisode lyrique), 1916.

Symphonic poems: La Belle au Bois Dormant, Penthésilée.

Overtures: Héroïque, Léda.

A Requiem and the cantata Sainte-Geneviève (1881). Songs: Lièds de France, Chansons à Danser, Les Chants de la Vie.

Various works for strings and wind.

He is also author of Musique d'Hier et de Demain, 1900, La Musique Française, 1901, and Musique de Russie et Musiciens de France, 1903. He entered the Légion d'Honneur in 1895, becoming officer in 1904. Sketches by Hervey, 1907, and Séré, Musiciens d'Aujourd'hui, 1911. G.

Brunelli, Antonio. 17th C.

Brunetti, Gaetano (Pisa, ?1740-1808, Madrid). Italian violinist and composer, pupil of his father and Nardini, apparently before 1770 in court-service at Madrid, where he was associated with Boccherini and finally supplanted him. Wrote a large amount of orchestral and chamber-music. G.

Bruni, Antonio Bartolommeo (Coni, 1759-1823, do.). Piedmontese violinist and composer, pupil of Pugnani and Spezzani, from 1781 playing in a theater-orchestra in Paris and from 1789 conductor at the Opéra-Comique. Wrote 21 operas (1786-1815) and much for the violin in both large and small forms. G.

Bruns-Molar, Paul (Werden, 1867). Prussian tenor-baritone and teacher, educated as a lawyer but with musical study at Leipzig and in Italy. In 1895-1900 he edited at Leipzig (with L. Schultze-Strelitz) the journal Der Kunstgesang and in 1900-02 at Berlin Deutsche Gesangskunst. From 1902 he taught at the Eichelberg Conservatory and since 1906 at the Stern Conservatory. He has published a method (1906) and essays.

Bruyck, Karl Debrois van (Brünn, 1828-1902, n. Amstetten). Moravian critic in Vienna from 1850, settling finally at Waidhofen-an-der-Ybbs. Author of an analysis of Bach's Wohltemperiertes Clavier (1867, 2d ed. 1889), a life of Schumann (1868) and Die Entwicklung der Klaviermusik von Bach bis Schumann, 1880.

Brwynnos, Manuel. 14th C.

Brzezinsky, Franciszek (Warsaw, 1867). Polish composer, till 1903 a practicing lawyer in Warsaw, then studied music in Paris and at the Leipzig Conservatory, living till 1916 in Leipzig and then at Warsaw, where he is critic for the Kurier. Has written a piano-concerto, a Polnisch Suite, a toccata, a Polonaise-Ballade, Stimmungsbilder in Variationenform, etc.

Buchhalter, Simon (Kiev, 1881). Russian pianist, brought up in New York, pupil of Gallico, L. Kramer, J. Epstein and Stocker, appearing in the United States from 1905, since 1913 from Chicago. Has written the opera A Lovers' Knot, 1916 (Chicago Opera), the oratorio A Drama of Exile, Psalm 142, a Sonata Heroic, Prelude and Fugue, Étude de Concert and other works for piano, and songs. A.

Buchholz. A famous organ-making firm in Berlin, started in 1799 by Johann Simon Buchholz (1758-1825), to whom succeeded his son Karl August (1796-1884) and his grandson Karl Friedrich (1821-1885). The chief instrument of the founder was that for the Berlin Domkirche. Karl August introduced a large number of valuable improvements in mechanism and greatly extended the business.

Buchmayer, Richard (Zittau, 1857). Saxon pianist and musicologist, pupil of the Dresden Conservatory and then spending four years in Russia, taught for a time in the Dresden Conservatory and Music School, but has worked chiefly in historical recitals of old clavier-music and in research concerning it. In 1903 he found valuable manuscripts at Lüneburg. Author of important essays in various periodicals.

Buchner, Philipp Friedrich (1614-1669). 17th C.

Büchner, Adolf Emil (n. Naumburg, 1826-1908, Erfurt). Saxon composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, working at first mostly at Leipzig and from 1865 director at Meiningen. Wrote the operas Dame Kobold, 1860?, and Launcelot, a cantata, the overtures Wallenstein and Wittekind (with chorus), besides much other instrumental music.

Buck, Dudley (Hartford, Conn. 1839-1909, Orange, N. J.). Eminent American organist and composer, trained mostly at the Leipzig Conservatory and under Rietz and Joh. Schneider, from 1862 organist in Hartford, from 1869 in Chicago, from 1871 in Boston, from 1875 Thomas' assistant in conducting concerts in New York, and in 1877-1903 organist at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, and director of the Apollo Club. His early tours as concert-player were notably successful and his steady contribution to church-music influential. His solid workmanship and sympathetic imagination gave his works interest as well as popularity. Wrote the operas Deseret, 1880, and Serapis, the oratorio The Light of Asia, 1885, many cantatas, including Hymn to Music, The Legend of Don Munio, The Golden Legend, Psalm 46, The Christian Year (5 works), etc., the overture Marmion, 1880, 2 organ-sonatas and many pieces, much piano-music, a large amount of music for the Episcopal service, etc. Author of a valuable work on choir-accompaniment (1877), The Influence of the Organ in History, 1882, and a dictionary of terms, and editor (with S. P. Warren) of The Organist's Répertoire. His son, Dudley Buck, Jr. (b. 1869), since 1895 has been a concert-singer in England and America, from 1902 living in New York. G, A.

Buck, Percy Carter (London, 1871). English organist and composer, trained at the Royal College, London, from 1891 organist at Worcester College, Oxford, from 1896 at Wells Cathedral, from 1899 at Bristol Cathedral and since 1901 director at Harrow School. In 1910 he also followed Prout as professor at Trinity College, Dublin. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1893. Has written the overture Cœur de Lion, a piano-quintet, a string-quartet, an organ-sonata, a violin-sonata, church-music and songs, besides instruction-books in harmony and organ-playing and (with Mee and Woods) Ten Years of University Music at Oxford, 1894. He has been president of the R. C. O. and the Union of Graduates in Music. G. A.

Buck, Zechariah (Norwich, 1798–1879, Newport [Essex]). English organist at Norwich from 1818, in 1819–77 at the Cathedral, excelling in boy-training. Mus.D. in 1853 from the Archbishop of Canterbury. G.

Buhl, Joseph David (n. Amboise, 1781–?). German-French trumpeter, at first in military employ and in 1816–25 at the Opéra and the Italiens, Paris. In 1823 he introduced the slide-trumpet in France. From 1814 he became leader of the Gardes du Corps and a member of the Légion d'Honneur. Wrote trumpet-pieces and a method. G.

Buhle, Eduard (Leipzig, 1875–1913, n. Berlin). Graduate of the Leipzig University in 1901 and author of Die Blasinstrumente in d. Miniaturen d. frühen Mittelalters, 1903, and Verzeichnis alter Musikinstrumente im Bach-Hause zu Eisenach, 1913, besides editing Sperontes' Singende Muse for the Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst, 35–36.

Bühler, Franz Gregor (n. Nördlingen, 1760–1824, Augsburg). Bavarian Benedictine, from 1778 at Donauwörth, from 1794 director at Botzen and from 1801 at Augsburg Cathedral. Wrote masses and much other church-music, organ-sonatas and preludes, an opera and the oratorio Jesus der göttliche Erlöser, 1816, besides making a collection of German songs.

Buhlig, Richard (Chicago, 1880). American pianist, pupil of Hyllested and Leschetizky, appearing in Europe extensively from 1901, visited America in 1907–08 and returned in 1916, becoming in 1918 teacher at the Institute of Musical Art, New York. A.

Bulant, Jean. A French bassoonist at the Petrograd Opera who in 1772–92 brought out ten operas there, with another in 1811 and a festival cantata for the Jubilee of the Empress in 1787.

Bull, John (1563–1628). 16th C. G.

Bull, Ole Borneman (Bergen, 1810–1880, n. do.). Noted Norwegian violinist, pupil of Paulsen, but largely self-taught, appearing first at Paris in 1832 and then famous throughout Europe and America (5 trips, 1843–45, '52–57, '67–71, '72–73, '79–80). He was a peculiar artist, skillful in effects and often powerful in melodic delivery, but lacking in broad musicianship. Wrote 2 violin-concertos and many pieces in characteristic style. In 1852 he bought a large tract of land in Pennsylvania, planning to found a Norwegian colony, but the enterprise ended in disaster. In 1855 for two months he was lessee of the Academy of Music, New York, and offered a prize of $1000 for an American opera. Memoirs by his wife, Sara C. Bull (married 1868 in Wisconsin, d. 1911), 1883, and by Vik, 1890. G. A.

Bullard, Frederick Field (Boston, 1864–1904, do.). American song-writer, pupil of Rheinberger, working in Boston. Besides many effective songs, wrote choruses and church-music. A.

Bullerian, Rudolf (Berlin, 1858–1910, Moscow). Prussian conductor, trained at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, from 1874 playing in orchestras in Berlin and Sondershausen, from 1884 town-director at Göttingen and from 1890 extensively active in Russia, where he made many concert-tours from Moscow as a center.

Bülw, Hans Guido von (Dresden, 1830–1894, Cairo). Distinguished Saxon pianist and conductor, pupil of Wieck, Eberwein and Hauptmann, besides being much with Wagner and Liszt, appearing from 1853, from 1855 teacher in the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, from 1864 court-pianist at Munich and soon head of the Conservatory, from 1872 living in Florence, from 1878 director at Hanover, in 1880–85 at Meiningen, and after that teacher at Frankfurt and Berlin and conductor in Berlin, Petrograd and (from 1888) Hamburg. He visited America in 1875–76. His first wife was Cosima Liszt, whom he married in 1857 (separated, 1869), and his second the actress Marie Schanzer (from 1882).

His ability, both as player and as conductor, was of the first order, including the most minute attention to detail, absolute self-command, an extraordinary memory and grasp of proportion, and an acute intellectual power of interpretation. His readings of a large range of musical literature became authoritative. He knew how to use his virtuosity with a strongly educative effect, often arranging historical series of notable value. His sympathies were at once conservative and progressive. His compositions were few, but his transcriptions of Berlioz and Wagner and his critical editions, especially of Beethoven, were many and strong. His letters have been collected by his widow, 8 vols. 1895–1908, La Mara, 1898, C. Bache, 1896, and others. Memoirs by Zabel, 1894, Pfeiffer, 1894 (6th ed. 1909), Sternfeld, 1894, Da Motta, 1895, G. Fischer, 1902, in Altmann's Chronik of the Berlin Philharmonic, 1902, Steiner 1906, Reimann, 1908, and Du Moulin-Eckart, 1921. G.

Bulz, Paul (Priegnitz, 1847–1902, Temesvar). Prussian operatic baritone, pupil of G. Engel, appearing variously in Germany from 1876 and from 1889 at the Berlin Opera.

Bulthaupt, Heinrich Alfred (Bremen, 1849–1905, do.). From 1879 city-librarian at Bremen. Author of Dramaturgie der Oper, 2 vols. 1887

(2d ed. 1902), a memoir of Loewe (1898) and Wagner als Klassiker, 1899, besides many opera-librettos, etc.

Bungert, August (n. Cologne, 1846-1915, Leutesdorf). Rhenish composer, pupil of H. F. Kufferath and of the Cologne and Paris Conservatories, as well as of Kiel. Except in 1869-73, when he was director at Kreuznach and then at Karlsruhe, he held no official position, living from 1873 at Berlin, from 1882 near Genoa and later again in Germany. Wrote the comic opera Die Studenten von Salamanca, 1884, the double cyclus Die homerische Welt, including (under Die Ilias) Achilleus and Klytemnestra (other divisions not completed), and (under Die Odyssee) Kirke, 1898, Nausikaa, 1901, Odysseus' Heimkehr, 1896, and Odysseus' Tod, 1903, the symphony Zeppelins erste grosse Fahrt, the symphonic poem Auf der Wartburg, orchestral variations and fugue, the overture Tasso, incidental music to Faust, a piano-quartet, Ein deutsches Requiem, 1907, the 'mystery' Warum, woher, wohin?, 1908, many songs, etc. His style was distinctly Wagnerian, but without large power. Memoir by Chop, 1916. G.

Bunnett, Edward (n. Norwich, 1834-1923, do.). English organist, pupil of Z. Buck and in 1855-77 his deputy at Norwich Cathedral, from 1880 borough-organist, also from 1872 of the triennial festivals and in 1871-92 conductor of the Musical Union. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1869. Wrote the cantatas Rhineland, 1872, and Lora, 1876, Psalm 130, 1880, the comedy Incognita, 1892, much church-music, organ-pieces, a piano-trio, etc.

Bunning, Herbert (London, 1863). English composer, pupil of Ferroni, in 1892-96 theater-conductor in London. Has written the opera Princess Osra, 1902, the scenas Ludovico il Moro, 1892, and Launcelot and Guinevere, 1905, incidental music for Robin Hood, 1906, the overtures Mistral, 1897, and Spring and Youth, 1897, a Village Suite for orchestra, 1896, an intermezzo for horn and strings (1893), part-songs and songs. G.

Bunting, Edward (Armagh, 1773-1843, Belfast). Industrious collector of Irish music, particularly that of the harpers, publishing valuable volumes in 1796, 1809 and 1840, the last with a striking dissertation. G.

Buonamente, Giovanni Battista. 17th C.

Buonamici, Giuseppe (Florence, 1846-1914, do.). Eminent Italian pianist, pupil of Von Bülow and Rheinberger, from 1870 teacher at the Munich Conservatory and from 1873 active at Florence, both as conductor of the Cherubini Society, the founder of the Trio Society and teacher in the Conservatory. Wrote an overture, a string-quartet, valuable studies for the piano, and songs, and edited Beethoven's sonatas and many works of Bach. His son, Carlo Buonamici (1875-1920), from 1908 was a prominent concert-pianist in Boston. G.

Buongiorno, Crescenzo (n. Avellino, 1864-1903, Dresden). Italian composer, pupil of Serrao, living mostly at Dresden. Wrote the operas Etelka, 1887, Das Erntefest, 1896, Das Mädchenherz, 1901, and Michel Angelo und Rolla, 1903, and a dozen Italian operettas, including Abukadabar, 1889, Circe e Calipso, 1892, and La Nuova Saltarella, 1894.

Burbure de Wesembeck, Léon Philippe Marie, Chevalier de (Termonde, 1812-1889, Antwerp). Noted Belgian amateur and investigator. He early became a promoter of musical societies, was industrious in researches at Termonde and elsewhere of local archives and wrote much vocal and instrumental music, sacred and secular, that was popular not only in Belgium, but in Germany. Author of several monographs (1862-70) about music and musicians in Antwerp, about Okeghem, Hanssens, Bosselet and others, about instrument-making, etc., and the more general Les Œuvres des Anciens Musiciens Belges.

Bürde-Ney, Jenny (Graz, 1826-1886, Dresden). Styrian operatic soprano (probably of French descent), pupil of her mother, appearing from 1847 in Austrian cities, at Vienna, Dresden and London (1855-56) and then in Germany, retiring in 1867. In 1855 she married the actor E. Bürde. G.

Burette, Pierre Jean (Paris, 1665-1747, do.). French savant, professor of medicine at the Paris University and author of many learned dissertations on Greek music (in the Mémoires of the Academy of Inscriptions).

Burgk, Joachim a [Joachim Moller] (?1541-1610). 16th C.

Burgmüller, Norbert (Düsseldorf, 1810-1836, Aix-la-Chapelle). Rhenish composer, pupil of Spohr and Hauptmann. Wrote 2 symphonies (one completed by Schumann), quartets, a piano-concerto, etc., of great promise. G.

Burgstaller, Alois (Holzkirchen, 1871). Bavarian operatic tenor, pupil of Kniese, appearing at Bayreuth from 1894, in 1902-09 at the Metropolitan, New York (American première of Parsifal, 1903), then mostly in retirement for study, but resuming brilliantly from 1916.

Burkhardt, Max (Löbau, 1871). Prussian composer, educated at Leipzig (Ph.D. 1897), from 1899 conductor of the Cologne Liederkrantz and since 1906 critic and lecturer at Berlin. Has written the operas König Drosselbart, 1904, and Das Moselgretchen, 1912, the symphony Aus den Bergen der Heimat, the choral Die Mittagsgöttin and other vocal works, and author of several valuable Führer, as to Wagner's dramas (1909, 3d ed. 1913), 1500 concert-works (1911) and Brahms' works (1912).

Burleigh, Cecil (Wyoming, N. Y. 1885). American violinist and composer, pupil of Witek, Leichtentritt, Sauret, Auer and Borowski, appearing from 1907, teaching in Denver from 1909, in Sioux City, Ia., from 1911 and at Montana University in 1914-19, then settling in New York. Has written the tone-poem Evangeline and 3 Mountain Pictures for orchestra, 2 violin-concertos, opp. 25, 43, the violin-sonatas The Ascension and The Life of St. Paul, the violin-suite Jack and the Beanstalk, a large number of characteristic violin-pieces, including Skeleton Dance, Plantation Sketches, Nature's Voices, etc., piano-pieces and effective songs. A.

Burlin, Natalie, née Curtis (d. 1921). American investigator of the music of the American Indians and of the Negroes of both America and Africa. Author of Songs of Ancient America, 1905, The Indian's Book (200 songs from 18 tribes), 1907, Negro Folk-Songs, 4 vols. 1918, and African Folk-Songs. In 1917 she married the painter Paul Burlin of New York. A.

Burmeister, Richard (Hamburg, 1860). German pianist, pupil of Liszt, from 1883 teacher in the Hamburg Conservatory, from 1885 at the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore, from 1898 head of the Scharwenka Conservatory, New York, from 1903 at the Dresden Conservatory and since 1907 at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory, Berlin. He has made many tours in Europe and America. Has written the symphonic fantasy The Chase after Fortune, a piano-concerto, a violin-romanza with orchestra, a piano-capriccio, a rescoring of Chopin's F min. concerto and added an orchestral part to Liszt's Concerto Pathétique. A.

Burmester, Willy (Hamburg, 1869). Famous German violinist, pupil at first of Joachim, but later independent, appearing from 1885 throughout Europe and in America. His technical facility was for a time pushed into the foreground, but he steadily ripened into artistic power. G.

Burney, Charles (Shrewsbury, 1726-1814, London). Famous English critic and historian, pupil of Edmund Baker and Arne, from 1749 organist in London and in 1751-60 at Lynn-Regis, in 1770-73 made two extended trips on the Continent, first in France and Italy and later in Germany, Austria and the Low Countries, to gather facts and impressions for the History which he had been preparing since about 1750. Besides this work he had other literary interests. He was also somewhat engaged at times with composition. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1769. Author of The Present State of Music in France and Italy, 1771 (diary), The Present State of Music in Germany, the Netherlands and United Provinces, 2 vols. 1773, A Plan for a Music-School, 1774, General History of Music, 4 vols. 1776-89, a pamphlet on the Holy Week music at Rome (1784), an account of the Handel Commemoration (1785), Life and Writings of Metastasio, 3 vols. 1796, besides an essay on Crotch as a musical prodigy (1779). His musical works included the plays Alfred, Robin Hood, Queen Mab, 1750, and The Cunning Man (from Rousseau), 1766, 6 violin-concertos, 2 violin-sonatas, 3 piano-trios, etc. His History, appearing at the same time as that of Hawkins, marks an epoch in English musical literature. Memoir by his daughter, Mme. d'Arblay, 3 vols. 1832, and see also Hill, The House in St. Martin Street, 1906. G.

Burnham, Thuel (Vinton, Ia. 1884). American pianist, appearing first as a child, later pupil of W. Mason, Bowman and Leschetizky, touring in England in 1900, from 1904 throughout Europe and since 1915 from New York as a center. A.

Burr, Willard, Jr. (Ravenna, O. 1852). American composer, pupil of the Oberlin Conservatory and of Haupt, from 1880 working at Boston. Has written string-quartets, piano-trios, a violin-sonata, piano-pieces, church-music and songs. A.

Burrian, Karl (Prague, 1870). Noted Bohemian operatic tenor, pupil of Piwoda, appearing from 1892 in Russia and Germany (Bayreuth, 1898), from 1898 at the Dresden Opera (première of Salome, 1905), in 1907-12 at the Metropolitan, New York, and since 1911 at the Vienna Opera, besides often singing at London. Though emphasizing Wagnerian rôles, he has a large répertoire otherwise.

Burrowes, John Freckleton (London, 1787-1852, do.). English pianist, pupil of Horsley, from about 1815 organist at St. James', Piccadilly, London. Wrote an overture, sonatas for violin, for 'cello and for flute, and piano-pieces, besides popular text-books in harmony and piano-playing. G.

Burrowes, Katherine. Canadian teacher, pupil of Batchelder, from 1895 teaching at the Detroit Conservatory and from 1903 head of her own school there. She has specialized in the teaching of children, publishing many text-books (1895-1917). A.

Burtius, Nicolaus (1450-1518). 15th C.

Burton, Frederick Russell (Jonesville, Mich. 1861-1909, Lake Hopateong, N.J.) American student of Indian music, graduating at Harvard University in 1882 with high honor and then spending much of his life among the tribes of the West. In 1896 he organized a choral society in Yonkers, N. Y. For some years he wrote criticisms for the New York Sun. His few compositions include the cantatas Hiawatha, 1882, and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow, 1900, and an Inauguration Ode, 1901 (for President McKinley). His main study was expressed in Songs of the Ojibway Indians, 1903, later developed into American Primitive Music, 1909. He also wrote several novels. A.

Busby, Thomas (London, 1755-1838, do.). English organist, pupil of Battishill, from about 1786 located in or near London. Wrote the oratorio The Prophecy, 1799, odes, incidental stage-music and songs, and a musical dictionary (1786), a music-history (2 vols. 1819), a Grammar of Music, 1818, Concert-Room and Orchestra Anecdotes, 3 vols. 1825, a Musical Manual, 1828, besides The Divine Harmonist, 1792, a collection of church-music. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1800. G.

Busch, Adolf (Siegen, 1891), brother of Fritz below. Able Westphalian violinist, trained by his father, Anders, Elderling, Grütters and the Cologne Conservatory, after extended concert-tours Marteau's successor as teacher at the Berlin Hochschule, where in 1919 he formed a Quartet (with Reitz, Bohnke and Grümmer). Has written a symphony, the overture König Oedipus, orchestral variations on the Radetzky March, variations on a Mozart theme for small orchestra, a Konzertstück for violin and orchestra, a quartet-serenade, a passacaglia for two violins and piano, a prelude and fugue for violin and 'cello, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, variations for one and for two pianos, the choral work Darthulas Grabgesang, songs and piano-pieces.

Busch, Carl (Bjerre, 1862). Danish conductor, pupil of the Copenhagen Conservatory, playing there as violinist under Gade, Svendsen and Dahl, as later under Godard. Since 1887 he has been at Kansas City, Mo., organizing a series of orchestral enterprises, among them since 1912 the Symphony Orchestra, besides activity in choral and church-music. In 1912 he was knighted by the King of Denmark for services to Scandinavian music. Has written the orchestral The Passing of Arthur and Minnehaha's Vision, an Elegy for strings, many cantatas, including the prize-works The Four Winds, May, America, Quivera, The Song of a Star, Alexander's Feast and Ode to Breckenridge, besides a symphony, a string-quartet, 2 orchestral suites and various part-songs, anthems and songs. A.

Busch, Fritz (Siegen, 1890), brother of Adolf above. Able Westphalian pianist and conductor, pupil of the Cologne Conservatory, from 1909 conductor at the Riga Opera, in 1911-12 chorus-leader for the Gotha Musikverein and in 1910-12 also in charge of the summer-concerts at Bad Pyrmont, from 1912 city-director at Aix-la-Chapelle (following Schwickerath), from 1918 Schilling's successor as director at Stuttgart (from 1919 conducting the opera), in 1922 going thence to Dresden.

Buschop, Jules Auguste Guillaume (Paris, 1810-1896, Bruges). Self-taught Belgian composer of many cantatas (especially Le Drapeau Belge, 1834), motets, choruses, etc., besides a symphony, overtures, an opera and a mass.

Busi, Alessandro (Bologna, 1833-1895, do.). Italian 'cellist and composer, pupil of his father, Giuseppe Busi (1808-1871), whom from 1865 he assisted in the Bologna Liceo and in 1871 succeeded as professor of counterpoint. From 1884 he was also head of the School of Singing. Wrote the choral symphony Excelsior, a mass, a Requiem, an Elegia Funebre for Rossini, the choral capriccio In Alto Mare, many songs and some piano-pieces. His brother Leonida wrote biographies of Marcello (1884) and Martini (1 vol. only, 1891).

Busnois, Antoine (? -1492). 15th C. G.

Busoni, Ferruccio Benvenuto (n. Florence, 1866). Distinguished Italian pianist and composer, pupil of his parents and Wilhelm Mayer, appearing as a child and from 1881 with notable success in various parts of Europe and after 1890 also in America. In 1888-89 he taught at the Helsingfors Conservatory, in 1890-91 at the Moscow Conservatory, in 1891-93 at the New England Conservatory, Boston, in 1895-1909 in Berlin and in 1913-15 as head of the Bologna Liceo, settling then in Zurich, but moving to Berlin in 1919. In 1913 he was elected to the Légion d'Honneur. He was already acknowledged as in the first rank of players before his power as composer began to be felt. Has written the operas Die Brautwahl, 1912, and Arlecchino, 1918, the orchestral Symphonische Suite, Geharnische Suite, Symphonisches Tongedicht, Lustspiel-overtüre and Symphonische Nocturne, 2 piano-concertos (one choral, the other, The New World), an Indianische Fantasie for piano and orchestra, 2 violin-concertos, 2 string-quartets, 2 violin-sonatas, a 'cello-suite, incidental music to Gozzi's Turandot, a piano-sonata, Variations and Fugue for piano, various piano-pieces 'in the antique style,' etc., besides fine transcriptions of Bach's organ-works, and editions of his Wohltemperiertes Clavier (with notes and technical studies) and of Liszt's piano-works. Author of an Entwurf einer neuen Aesthetik der Tonkunst, 1907, and Versuch einer organischen Klaviernotenschrift, 1910. G.

Büsser, Paul Henri (Toulouse, 1872). Eminent French organist and composer, trained at the Niedermeyer School and the Paris Conservatory, as well as under Widor, Gounod and Franck (Prix de Rome, 1893). Has written the ballets Colomba, 1921, and Les Noces Corinthiennes, 1922, the pastoral Daphnis et Chloé, 1897, the cantatas Amadis de Gaule, 1892 (2d Prix de Rome), and Antigone, 1893 (1st), the symphonic poem Hercule au Jardin des Hespérides, the orchestral suite A la Villa Médicis, the overture Minerva, 2 suites for small orchestra, a Marche de Fête for orchestra, Le Sommeil de l'Enfant Jésus for violin and orchestra, 2 pieces for harp and orchestra, organ-preludes and fugues, a Messe de Noël, etc.

Bussler, Ludwig (Berlin, 1838-1901, do.). Eminent Prussian theorist, pupil of Dehn, Grell and Wieprecht, from 1865 teaching at the Ganz School in Berlin and from 1879 at the Stern Conservatory, besides from 1883 writing for the National-Zeitung. Author of a long list of valuable text-books (1867-89) in harmony, counterpoint, form, composition, orchestration, etc., and lectures on music-history (1882).

Bussmeyer, Hans (Brunswick, 1853). German pianist, trained at the Munich Conservatory and by Liszt, in 1872-74 touring in South America, then teacher at the Munich Conservatory and since 1904 director, besides in 1879-84 founding and conducting the Munich Choral Society. Has written a piano-concerto, Germanenzug for men's chorus, etc. His brother Hugo (b. 1842), also a pianist, in 1860-67 toured in South America, then visited New York and Paris and finally settled in Rio de Janeiro. Author of Das Heidentum in der Musik, 1871.

Buths, Julius (Wiesbaden, 1851-1920, Düsseldorf). Noted Hessian pianist, pupil of Ferd. Hiller, Gernsheim and Kiel in 1871-72 director of the Wiesbaden Cäcilia, in 1875-79 at Breslau, in 1879-90 of the Elberfeld Musical Society, in 1890-08 city-director at Düsseldorf, in 1902 becoming head of the Conservatory. Wrote a piano-concerto, a piano-quintet, a string-quartet, a piano-suite, etc., and translated Elgar's Dream of Gerontius and The Apostles.

Butler, O'Brien (Cahersiveen, ?1870-1915, on the 'Lusitania'). Irish composer, studying in Italy and with Stanford and Parratt, traveled widely and while in India wrote the Irish opera Muirgheis, 1913 (Dublin). Wrote also a violin-sonata (Irish themes) and songs.

Butt, Clara (Southwick, 1873). Famous English contralto, pupil of the Royal College, London, and of Bouhy and Mme. Gerster, making her début in concert in 1892 and becoming at once a favorite singer at festivals and in oratorio. Works written for her include Elgar's Sea-Pictures (1899), Cliffe's Triumph of Alcestis and Bedford's Romeo and Juliet (both 1902). She visited America in 1899 and 1913, and in 1913-14 made a world-tour with her husband, the baritone R. K. Rumford (married 1900). G.

Butting, Max (Berlin, 1888). Prussian composer, pupil of Dreyer and the Munich Conservatory. Has written a Kammersinfonie, a cello-concerto, a string-quintet, a quintet for oboe, clarinet and strings, 4 string-quartets, a piano-quartet, a string-trio, a violin-sonata, a mass (incomplete) and songs with orchestra.

Büttner, Paul (Dresden, 1870). Saxon composer, trained at the Dresden Conservatory, in 1896-1907 teaching there. Has written 4 symphonies, 2 symphonic fantasies, the overture Napoleon, a Saturnalia for wind and drums, violin-sonatas, the short opera Anka and men's choruses.

Buttstedt, Franz Vollrath (Erfurt, 1735-1814, Rotenburg). Thuringian organist, at first at Weikersheim and from 1784 at the Jacobikirche in Rotenburg. Wrote a Passion, a cycle of cantatas, clavier-sonatas and other instrumental works.

Buttstedt, Johann Heinrich (1666-1727). 17th C. G.

Buus, Jachet de. 16th C. G (Jachet).

Buxtehude, Dietrich (1637-1707). 17th C. G.

Buzzola, Antonio (Adria, 1815-1871, Venice). Italian composer, pupil of his father and of Donizetti, from 1855 director at St. Mark's, Venice. Wrote 6 operas (1836-50) for Venice and much church-music.

Byrd, William (1538-1623). 16th C. G.

Byström, Oskar Fredrik Bernadotte (Stockholm, 1821-1909, do.). Swedish pianist (also in military service till 1857), appearing from 1848, from 1867 inspector at the Stockholm Conservatory, in 1872 becoming professor, and also in 1872-76 conducting concerts at Åbo (Finland). Author of Luthers Kirchenlieder, 1897, and Ur Medeltidens Kyrkosång i Sverige, 1900 (enlarged 1903).

Cabel [Cabu], Marie Joseph, née Dreulette (Liège, 1827–1885, n. Paris). Belgian operatic soprano, pupil of Cabu (whom she married), appearing from 1847 at Paris, from 1849 at Brussels, from 1854 in England and from 1861 at Petrograd, etc., singing at many premières, as of Adam's Le Bijou Perdu (1853), Clapisson's La Promise (1854), Halévy's Jaguarita d'Indienne (1855), Auber's Manon Lescaut (1856), Meyerbeer's Le Pardon de Ploërmel (1859), Grisar's La Chatte Merveilleuse (1862), Thomas' Mignon (1866), etc. In 1878 she had a stroke of paralysis. Her voice, though not large, was highly flexible and sympathetic. G.

Cabezón, Antonio de (1510–1566). 16th C. G.

Cabo, Francisco Javier (n. Valencia, 1768–1832, do.). Important Spanish church-musician, long organist at Naguera and from 1810 successively singer, organist and maestro at Valencia Cathedral, where he wrote much in the Palestrina style.

Caccini, Giulio (?1546–1618). 16th C. G.

Cadeac, Pierre. 16th C. G.

Cadman, Charles Wakefield (Johnstown, Pa. 1881). American composer, pupil of various teachers in Pittsburgh, where for a time he was organist and music-critic, removing in 1910 to Los Angeles. Since 1906 he has been specially interested in the music of the Indians, making original investigations among the Omahas and Winnebagos, lecturing on the subject (assisted by the Indian soprano Tsianina Redfeather) and making use of native themes in many works. Has written the operas The Land of Misty Water (or Daoma), The Garden of Mystery and Shanewis, 1918 (Metropolitan, New York), a piano-trio in D, the Thunderbird suite for orchestra, the cantata for men's voices The Vision of Sir Launfal, 1909 (prize, Pittsburgh), the song-cycles Four American Indian Songs, From Wigwam and Tepee, Idyls of the South Sea, Three Songs to Odysseus, and The Morning of the Year (4 voices soli), with many other songs and part-songs, including the Japanese romance Sayonara, numerous pieces or cycles for piano, and works for violin, organ, etc. A.

Cady, Calvin Brainerd (Barry, Ill. 1851). Able American teacher, trained at the Oberlin and Leipzig Conservatories, from 1874 teacher at Oberlin, from 1880 at the University of Michigan, in 1888–94 at the Chicago Conservatory, where in 1892–94 he also edited The Music Review, from 1901 in Boston, from 1907 at Teachers College in New York, from 1908 at the Institute of Musical Art there, and since 1913 in Portland, Ore., where he conducts the Music-Education School. He has devoted himself to careful studies of the theory of music-teaching, with emphasis upon psychology and the relation of music to spiritual development. Author of Music-Education, 3 vols. 1902–07, articles in the Encyclopedia of Education and magazines, etc. A.

Cafaro, Pasquale (n. Lecce, 1706–1787, Naples). Italian composer, pupil of Leo in Naples and his successor as head of the Conservatorio della Pietà in 1745, besides being for a time maestro at the court. Wrote 8 operas (1751–75), several oratorios and sacred cantatas, masses, motets, including a Stabat Mater, and other church-music. G.

Caffarelli [properly Gaetano Majorano] (Bari, 1703–1783, n. Naples). Famous Italian artificial soprano, pupil at Naples of Porpora, who thought him the greatest singer living (as did Caffarelli himself). From his début at Rome in 1724 his eminence was promptly recognized throughout Italy and for some years after 1730 in Spain, France, England (from 1737) and Austria, but his chief triumphs were at Rome, Naples and Venice. He excelled both in sustained cantabile and in brilliant coloratura, and his vocal virtuosity was supported by a handsome face and good dramatic sense. Becoming very wealthy, he bought the dukedom of Santo Dorato and built a palace. He continued singing till about 1770. G.

Caffi, Francesco (Venice, 1780–1874, Padua). Italian music-historian, author of a notable history of music at S. Marco, Venice, from 1313 to 1797 (2 vols. 1854–55), besides biographies of Furlanetto (1820), Marcello (1830), Lotti (1835), Zarlino (1836), Dragonetti (1846) and Asola (1862). He also left incomplete a history of the theater.

Cagnoni, Antonio (n. Voghera, 1828–1896, Bergamo). Italian composer, trained at the Milan Conservatory, where he produced two operas as a student in 1845–46, followed by the successful opera buffa Don Bucefalo, 1847. From 1852 he was maestro at Vigevano Cathedral, from 1873 at Novara Cathedral, and 1887 at S. Maria Maggiore in Bergamo. Wrote over 20 operas (1845–93), including Francesca da Rimini, 1878, and Rê Lear (unperformed). G.

Cahen, Albert (Paris, 1846–1903, Cap d'Ail). French composer, pupil of Mme. Szarvady and Franck. Wrote the operas Le Bois, 1880, La Belle au Bois Dormant (fairy-story), 1886, Le Vénitien, 1890, and La Femme de Claude, 1896, the ballet Fleur des Neiges, 1888, the biblical drama Jean le Précurseur, 1874, and the mythological poem Endymion, 1875, besides the song-cycle Marines. G.

Cahen, Ernest (Paris, 1828–1893, do.). French pianist, trained at the Paris Conservatory and long an adjunct-teacher there. Wrote the operettas Le Califat, 1853, and Le Souper de Mezzetin, 1859.

Cahn-Speyer, Rudolf (Vienna, 1881). Austrian student of chemistry, also highly trained in music, especially at Vienna, Leipzig and Munich, becoming conductor at Kiel in 1908 and at Hamburg in 1909, and since 1911 teaching at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin. Author of Franz Seydelmann als dramatischer Komponist, 1909, Das Wesen der Oper u. ihre Entwicklung in der Gegenwart, 1913, and a manual of conducting (1919).

Caimo, Joseffo. 16th C.

Caland, Elisabeth (Rotterdam, 1862). Dutch piano-teacher, pupil of Deppe and Rebičėk, in 1898-1915 working in Berlin and then at Gehlsdorf. Has written a series of important textbooks after the Deppe system (from 1897).

Caldara, Antonio (1670-1736). 17th C. G.

Caldicott, Alfred James (Worcester, 1842-1897, n. Gloucester). English composer, a choir-boy at Worcester Cathedral, trained there and at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1864 organist at St. Stephen's, Worcester, and also for the city, from 1883 teacher at the Royal College of Music, London, and from 1894 its director, besides activity as conductor of light opera in London and also with a traveling troupe in America (1890-91). Wrote several cantatas, including The Widow of Nain, 1881 (Worcester Festival), 13 operettas, many glees and part-songs, including Humpty-Dumpty, 1878 (prize at Manchester), and some songs.

Callegari, Antonio (Padua, 1757-1828, do.). Italian composer and author, pupil of Bertoni, from 1801 organist at S. Antonio in Padua and from 1814 maestro there. Wrote 3 operas at Venice (1784-89), several theoretical works (1801-29), and a vocal method (1836).

Callegari, Francesco Antonio (Venice, ? -1740?) A Franciscan, in 1703-27 maestro at S. Antonio in Padua, and then connected with the Church of the Frari in Venice, writing church-music, some organ-music and a treatise on harmony (1732, but not published).

Callegari, Luigi (Padua, ?1780-1849, Venice), nephew of Antonio above. Italian composer of 8 operas (1804-11) for Padua, Venice, Rome and Parma, a ballet and a cantata (1832).

Calkin, John Baptiste (London, 1827-1905, do.). English organist, pupil of his father, from 1846 at St. Columba's College in Ireland, from 1853 at Woburn, and from 1863 in London, becoming in 1899 professor at the Guildhall School. Wrote several services, many anthems, effective glees and part-songs, organ- and piano-pieces, etc., of considerable originality, besides a string-quartet, a string-quintet, a piano-trio and a 'cello-sonata.

Callaerts, Joseph (Antwerp, 1838-1901, do.). Belgian organist, pupil of Lemmens, in 1851-56 at the Jesuit College in Antwerp and long at the Cathedral there, besides teaching at the Music-School from 1876. Wrote a prize symphony (1879), a prize piano-trio (1882), the comic opera Le Retour Imprévu, 1889, organ- and piano-pieces, cantatas and church-music.

Callcott, John Wall (London, 1766-1821, Bristol). Noted English composer of glees, mostly self-taught, but with help from Arnold, Cooke and (in 1790) Haydn. In 1783-1802 he was organist at various churches in London. In 1807 he was appointed to lecture at the Royal Institution, but was soon laid aside by mental disorder. Mus.D. of Oxford in 1800. From 1785 he became famous for a succession of fine glees, part-songs, catches and canons, winning many prizes and becoming one of the leading promoters of the Glee Club (from 1787) and every similar enterprise. From about 1795 he projected an extensive musical dictionary, for which he collected much material. Author of a Musical Grammar, 1806, which became popular. From his many works Horsley edited a Collection of Glees, Canons and Catches, 2 vols. 1824, with a biography. Of his many children, his son, William Hutchins Callcott (1807-1882), attained a good reputation as organist, pianist and composer of popular music. G.

Calmus, Georgy (Berlin, 1874). Prussian violinist, pupil of Joachim, besides musicological study at Berlin University. Has written Die ersten deutschen Singspiele, 1908, and edited afresh Lesage's parody-opera Télémaque and Gay's Beggar's Opera.

Calori, Angiola (Milan, 1732-1790?). Italian soprano of ability, appearing in England in 1758-61, at Dresden in 1770 and in Italy in 1774-83. She sang at the premières of three operas of Cocchi in 1758-60. G.

Calvé [Roquer], Emma (n. Aveyron, 1866). Eminent French operatic soprano, pupil of Puget, Mme. Marchesi and Laborde, appearing first at Brussels in 1882-83, at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, in 1885-87, '91-95, in England from 1892, in New York from 1893, and from 1895 widely throughout Europe. She sang at the premières of Dubois' Aben Hamet (1884), Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (1890), Massenet's La Navarraise (1894) and Sapho (1897), but secured her greatest fame in Bizet's Carmen, to which she brought peculiar gifts of temperament. Her répertoire is mainly confined to works by French composers. Since 1910 she has been heard almost exclusively in concert. Monograph by Wisner, 1902. G.

Calvisius, Sethus (1556-1615). 16th C. G.

Calvocoressi, Michel D. (Marseilles, 1877). Greek-French critic and author, pupil of Leroux, since 1905 professor at the École des Hautes Études Sociales, correspondent for various periodicals, French, English, German and Russian, and widely known also as lecturer, especially upon Russian and French music. With Vallas he has edited the Revue Française de Musique, and has made many fine translations of librettos and song-texts. Officer in the Order of St. Anna from 1908. Author of La Musique Russe, 1907, lives of Liszt (1907), Mussorgsky (1908), Glinka (1913) and Schumann (1913), and translator of Rimsky-Korsakov's Instrumentation (1914).

Calzabigi, Raniero da (Leghorn, 1714-1795, Naples). Italian man of letters, the librettist of Gluck's Orfeo (1762), Alceste (1767) and Paride ed Elena (1769), thus contributing largely to the transformation of his style. Also wrote a dissertation on Metastasio's dramatic poetry (1775). Memoir by Lazzeri, 1907.

Cambert, Robert (?1628-1677). 17th C. G.

Cambini, Giovanni Giuseppe (Leghorn, 1746-1825, Paris). Italian composer, pupil of Martini, from 1770 in Paris, writing about 20 operas (1776-95), an oratorio, 60 symphonies, over 140 string-quartets, etc.

Camerloher, Placidus von (Murnau ?1710-1776, Freising). Bavarian ecclesiastic, from 1748 at St. Veit and later at Freising. Wrote notable sinfonie da camera (1760-62), trio- and violin-sonatas, oratorios and several singspiele, including Melissa, 1739.

Cametti, Alberto (Rome, 1871). Able Italian musicologist, trained at the Accademia S. Cecilia in Rome, maestro at S. Luigi de' Francesi and member of the Papal Commission on Church Music. Author of monographs on Palestrina (1895, 1903), Queen Christina (1911) and Rossi (1912), and articles in the Rivista Musicale about the Roman activities of Bellini (1900), Donizetti (1904-07), Mozart (1907), Frescobaldi (1908), etc.

Camidge, John (York, 1735-1803, do.). English organist, pupil of Nares, Greene and Handel, from 1756 organist at York Minster, where he was followed in 1803-44 by his son Matthew (1764-1844) and he in 1844-59 by his son John (1790-1859), the last being Mus.D. of Lambeth in 1855. All wrote church-music, glees, etc. G.

Camp, John Spencer (Middletown, Conn. 1858). American organist and composer, pupil of E. A. Parsons, Shelley, Buck, S. P. Warren and Dvořák, in 1882-1918 organist at churches in Hartford, Conn., and in 1902-11 conductor of the Philharmonic Society there. Mus.D. of Trinity College in 1921. Has written the overture Der Zeitgeist, the orchestral suite Pilgrim (based on Bunyan's allegory), a string-quartet, other works for orchestra or chamber-ensemble, Psalm 46 and The Song of the Winds for soli, chorus and orchestra, the church-cantatas The Morning Star, The Prince of Peace and The Prince of Life, anthems, songs and piano-pieces. A.

Campagnoli, Bartolommeo (n. Bologna, 1751-1827, Neustrelitz). Noted Italian violinist, pupil of Dall'Ocha, Guastarobba and Nardini, playing first in opera-orchestras at Florence and Rome, in 1777-79 in the service of the Bishop of Freising, in 1780-83 in that of the Duke of Courland at Dresden, from 1783 made tours in northern Europe, in 1788 and again in 1816-18 visited Italy, from 1797 was concertmaster at the Gewandhaus at Leipzig and finally became court-director at Neustrelitz. Wrote a violin-concerto, a flute-concerto, quartets, many violin-pieces and caprices for the viola, etc., and a violin-method. G.

Campana, Fabio (Leghorn, 1819-1882, London). Italian composer and vocal teacher, trained at the Bologna Liceo. Several early operas in Italy (1838-50) had little or no success, and from about 1850 he lived in London as teacher and prolific song-writer, producing also the operas Almina, 1860 (Piccolomini's last appearance) and Esmeralda, 1869 (made notable in London and Homburg by Patti). G.

Campanari, Giuseppe (Venice, 1858). Able Italian 'cellist and operatic baritone, after playing in the La Scala orchestra at Milan and beginning to cultivate his voice, in 1884-93 was in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, besides playing in the Adamowski Quartet in 1888-90. In 1893 he entered the operatic field with Hinrichs' Opera Company in New York, and soon made a hit with the rôle of Tonio in I Pagliacci. Besides engagements with the Juch and Grau troupes, in 1895-98 he sang regularly at the Metropolitan in New York and has since appeared in many places in America and abroad, chiefly in concert. A.

Campanari, Leandro (Rovigo, 1857), brother of the above. Italian violinist and conductor, trained at the Milan Conservatory, from 1877 on tour in Europe and from 1881 in America, where he settled in Boston, in 1883 forming a Quartet and becoming professor at the New England Conservatory and choirmaster at the Jesuit Church. After a European tour in 1887-90, in 1890-97 he was professor at the Cincinnati Conservatory, in 1897-1905 conducted an orchestra in Milan and elsewhere, in 1906 was conductor at the Manhattan, New York, besides substituting for Scheel in the Philadelphia Orchestra, and since 1907 has taught in San Francisco. Has written many songs and a violin-method. A.

Campanini, Cleofonte (Parma, 1860-1919, Chicago). Distinguished Italian conductor, pupil of Ferrarini and Bazzini on the violin, made his début as conductor in 1883 at Parma and in that year was one of the leaders at the new Metropolitan in New York. In 1887 he was again at the Metropolitan, introducing Verdi's Otello. Among constant engagements later the chief was at Covent Garden, London, 1900-12, besides duties at La Scala, Milan, in 1903-06, at San Carlo, Naples, for one season and visits to Spain, Portugal and South America. In 1906-09 he was the leading conductor at the Manhattan, New York, which he raised to distinction. From 1910 he held a similar position with the new Chicago Opera Company, where his brilliant success led to his becoming general director in 1913. He directed the first American performances of about 25 works, mostly French or Italian. In him were united the qualities of culture, experience, sympathy, artistic and masterly leadership that mark a conductor of the first order. A.

Campanini, Italo (Parma, 1846-1896, Villa Vigatto), brother of the above. Eminent Italian operatic tenor, pupil of the Parma Conservatory and of Lamperti, appearing first in 1869 at Odessa, in 1871 at Florence, in 1872 in London and in 1873 in New York, being at once recognized as an artist of magnetic power and zeal, though uneven as an interpreter. He sang at the premières of Balfe's last opera, Il Taisimano (1874), and (in England) of Carmen (1878), Aida (1879) and Mefistofele (1880). His répertoire is said to have included about 100 operas. In 1879-80 he toured in America with Nilsson and in 1892 with Patti. After 1883 he lived mostly in New York. G, A.

Campardon, Émile (Paris, 1834). Author of monographs on the time of the French Revolution, including Les Spectacles des Foires, 1877, Les Comédiens du Roi de la Troupe Italienne, 1880, and L'Académie Royale de Musique, 1884 (in the biographical dictionary of the Opéra).

Campbell, Francis Joseph (Winchester, Tenn. 1832-1914, London). American educator, blind from early childhood, who from 1871 built up a remarkable College for the Blind at Upper Norwood, in the suburbs of London. He was knighted in 1909 and was also Officier de l'Académie. A.

Campbell-Tipton, Louis (Chicago, 1877-1921, Paris). Able American composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1901 living in Paris. Wrote in various forms, including two operas and orchestral works (unpublished), a Suite Pastorale for violin and other violin-pieces, a Sonata Heroic for piano, a piano-suite and other piano-pieces, and about 30 songs. A.

Campenhout, François van (Brussels, 1779-1848, do.). Belgian violinist and operatic tenor, pupil of Pauwels (violin) and of Plantade and Saint-Armand (singing), from about 1800 appearing extensively in Belgium, Holland and France until 1827. Wrote 17 operas (1808-19), ballets, cantatas, choruses, masses and other sacred music, many songs and especially La Brabançonne (1830), which became the Belgian national air. G.

Campion, François. French theorbist, playing in 1703-19 at Paris Opéra and publishing guitar-pieces (1705), manuals of theorbo-playing (1710) and of simple harmony (1716), and extensions of the latter (1739).

Campion, Thomas (1575-1620). 17th C. G.

Campioni, Carlo Antonio (Leghorn, ?1720-1793, Florence). Italian composer of numerous string-trios and duets, with some clavier-pieces and church-music, including a Te Deum and Requiems for Francis I (1766) and Maria Theresa (1781). From 1764 he was court-director at Florence.

Campo y Zabaleta, Conrado del (Madrid, 1879). Fertile Spanish composer and violist, trained at the Madrid Conservatory, where he now teaches. He founded the Quarteto Francés and is a member of the Quinteto Madrid. Has written 6 operas (3 given in Madrid), the symphonic poems La Divina Comedia, Granada and Airíños, the Oriental suite Kacida, 8 string-quartets (including the effective Caprichos Románticos), church-music, etc. His style is not marked by the prevalent impressionism.

Camporese, Violante (Rome, 1785-1839, do.). Italian stage-soprano, appearing first as an amateur, but later pupil of Crescentini at Paris, where for a time she sang in Napoleon's court-concerts. From about 1815 she was increasingly popular in opera at Paris, Milan and London (1817), continuing in high esteem for perfection of voice and style till about 1830. G.

Campos, João Ribeiro de Almeida de. Portuguese church-musician, trained as a priest and from 1800 director at Lamego. Wrote a well-known manual on Plain-Song (1800) and one on musical elements (1786).

Campra, André (1660-1744). 17th C. G.

Camps y Soler, Oscar (Alexandria, Egypt, 1837). Spanish pianist, pupil of Döhler and Mercadante, appearing as early as 1850 and later touring throughout Europe, settling finally in Madrid. Has written piano-pieces, a cantata and songs, besides text-books in harmony, Estudios Filosóficos sobre la Música and a translation of Berlioz' Instrumentation.

Camussi, Ezio (Florence, 1883). Italian composer of the operas La Du Barry, 1912, I Fuochi di S. Giovanni, 1920, and Il Donzello, besides orchestral works, etc.

Canal, Pietro (n. Bassano, 1807-1883, do.). Italian abbat, professor of ancient languages at Padua. He collected a library of valuable books on music (catalogue, 1885) and wrote Della Musica in Mantova, 1881.

Canali, Floriano. 16th C. G.

Candeille, Amélie Julie (Paris, 1767-1834, do.), daughter of the following. French operatic soprano and actress, making her début in 1782 in Gluck's Iphigénie en Aulide, but in 1783-96 mainly occupied in spoken drama, though in 1792 making a hit with the operetta La Belle Fermière (her own text and music). In 1798-1802 she was the wife of Simons, a Brussels manufacturer, and then became a music-teacher till 1821, when she married Piérier, a French painter. Wrote an opera (1807), 3 piano-trios, 4 piano-sonatas, a 2-piano sonata, piano-fantasias and songs.

Candeille, Pierre Joseph (n. Lille, 1744-1827, Chantilly). French composer of motets and operas, many of the latter arrangements or new versions of old works (1778-93), the most successful being Castor et Pollux, 1791 (utilizing some of Rameau's music).

Cange, Charles Dufresne, Sieur du (1610-1688). 17th C.

Cannabich, Christian (Mannheim, 1731-1798, Frankfurt). Important Badenese violinist and conductor, pupil of Stamitz and Jomelli (as protégé of the Elector Palatine), from 1757 concertmaster of the Electoral Orchestra at Mannheim and from 1775 its conductor (after 1778 at Munich). Besides being a superior violin-teacher he became famous for his skill in introducing unheard-of refinements and effects of ensemble-playing in the Mannheim orchestra, making it a model for later times. He became a warm friend of the young Mozart. Wrote some operas and ballets (from 1778), about 100 symphonies, large and small, concertos for violin, flute, etc., much chamber-music, including string-quartets, and many lesser instrumental works (notable examples in the Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Bayern, viii, xv, xvi, G.

Cannabich, Karl (Mannheim, 1764-1806, Munich), son of the above (but see Eitner, who makes him son of Martin Friedrich C.). Violinist and conductor, pupil of Eck and Gratz, developing precociously and early entering the Electoral Orchestra at Munich, becoming concertmaster in 1798 and court-director in 1800. Wrote several operas, many ballets, a symphony, an overture, string-quartets, piano-sonatas and pieces, part-songs, etc. G.

Canniciari, Pompeo (? -1744, Rome). Italian church-composer, in 1709-44 maestro at S. Maria Maggiore in Rome. Wrote many masses, motets, etc., in the Palestrina style. G.

Capellen, Georg (n. Detmold, 1869). Able German theorist, educated at Tübingen, Göttingen and Berlin Universities. Author of Die musikal. Akustik als Grundlage d. Harmonik u. Melodik, 1903, Die Freiheit oder Unfreiheit d. Töne u. Intervalle als Kriterium d. Stimmführung, 1904, Die Zukunft d. Musiktheorie, 1905, Fortschrittliche Harmonie u. Melodielehre, 1908, an article against Riemann's theory of harmonic dualism (Neue Zeitschrift, 1901), etc.

Capet, Lucien (Paris, 1873). Noted French violinist, trained at the Paris Conservatory, where since 1907 he has taught ensemble-playing. He was early soloist for the Lamoureux Orchestra, in 1899-1903 taught at the Bordeaux Conservatory, in 1903 established a Quartet which gained international fame and in 1919 resumed activity with it (other members being C. Delobelle, H. Benoit and M. Hewit). Has written 3 string-quartets.

Capocci, Filippo (Rome, 1840-1911, do.), son of the following. Famous Italian organist, pupil of his father and the Accademia S. Cecilia, from 1873 organist at the Lateran and in 1898 his father's successor as maestro. Wrote 6 organ-sonatas and many other organ-works (11 vols.), and the oratorio S. Atanasio, 1863. As a player he was counted the finest in Italy. G.

Capocci, Gaetano (Rome, 1811-1898, do.). Noted Italian organist, director and church-composer, pupil of Pascoli, Fioravanti and Ciacciarelli and of the Accademia S. Cecilia, from about 1835 organist at S. Maria in Vallicella, from 1839 at S. Maria Maggiore, and from 1855 maestro at the Lateran, following Meluzzi. Wrote many masses, motets, psalms, offertories, etc., in a pure and flowing style, besides the oratorios Battista, 1833, and Assalonne, 1842. He was also an able teacher. G.

Capoul, Joseph Amédée Victor (Toulouse, 1839). Distinguished French operatic tenor, pupil of Réval and Mocker, appearing first in 1861 and then engaged at the Opéra-Comique till 1872, from 1871 becoming known in London and elsewhere, including New York (1873), where in 1892-97 he taught at the National Conservatory. After 1897 he became stage-manager at the Paris Opéra. Among premières at which he assisted are those of Poise's Les Absents (1864), Gounod's La Colombe (1866), Massenet's La Grand Tante (1867), d'Ivry's Les Amants de Vérone (1867), Auber's Le Premier Jour de Bonheur (1868), Offenbach's Vert-Vert (1869), Massé's Paul et Virginie (1876), Flotow's Alma l'Incantatrice (1878), and Godard's Jocelyn (1888, in Paris). His répertoire was chiefly confined to French works, especially to opéras comiques. G.

Capra, Marcello (Turin, 1862). Founder in 1896 of a music-publishing business in Turin, now incorporated as the Società Tipografica Editrice Nazionale. Since 1899 the firm has published the journal Santa Cecilia.

Caprioli, Carlo. 17th C.

Capuzzi, Giuseppe Antonio (Brescia, 1753-1818, Bergamo). Italian violinist, pupil of Nazari and Bertoni, writing 5 operas, many ballets and considerable chamber-music.

Carabella, Ezio (Rome, 1891). Italian composer of music for Frascchetti's Fortunello (1921), an orchestral Prelude, 1916, symphonic variations (1921) and Impressione Sinfonica for small orchestra, 1913.

Caraccioli, Luigi (Andria, 1849-1887, London). Italian composer and singing-teacher, trained by Cesi, Conti and Mercadante, from 1878 head of the vocal department of the Dublin Academy of Music and from 1881 in London. Wrote the opera Maso il Montanaro, 1874, and numerous effective songs.

Caradori-Allan, Maria Caterina Rosalbina, née De Munck (Milan, 1800-1865, Surbiton). French-Italian soprano, pupil of her mother (née Caradori), appearing about 1820 in Italy, France and Germany, at first in concert, but soon in opera, in 1822-27 very popular in England and again after 1835 (with a visit to the United States in 1837), becoming noted as a superior soloist at festivals. She was an artist of refinement and perfection of style. G, A.

Carafo de Colobrano, Michele Enrico (Naples, 1787-1872, Paris). Brought up for a military career, first under Murat in Italy and later under Napoleon, he also had musical training under Ruggi, Feneroli and Cherubini, and began ambitious composition, which he resumed after Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo (1815), at first in Italy, but from 1828 mostly at Paris. In 1837 he succeeded Lesueur in the Académie and from 1840 was professor in the Conservatory. Wrote over 35 operas (1802-38), including Adele di Lusignano, 1817, Le Solitaire, 1822, Masaniello, 1827, and La Violette (with Leborne), 1828, some ballets, cantatas, several masses and other church-music. Masaniello, his best work, was written to compete with Auber's La Muette de Portici and was produced just two months before the latter. Memoir by Bazin, 1873. G.

Cardon, Louis (Paris, 1747-1805?, Russia). Noted Italian-French harpist, who fled from Paris to Russia when the Revolution of 1792 broke out. Wrote 2 harp-concertos (with strings), harp-sonatas, trios and duos, etc., and an important method (1785). G.

Cardoso, Manuel (1569-1650). 17th C. G.

Caresani, Cristoforo (1655-1730?). 17th C. G.

Carestini, Giovanni [stage-name Cusanino] (n. Ancona, ?1705-1760, do.). Famous Italian artificial contralto, first appearing at Rome in 1721 and then at various Italian cities, in 1733-35 was with Handel at London, followed by more than twenty years of brilliant success on the Continent, retiring in 1758. His voice is said to have been one of the most perfect of its kind, used with great artistic skill. G.

Carey, Bruce Anderson (Hamilton, 1877). Canadian baritone and conductor, trained at Hamilton and under Vessetti, Braggrotte, Carrobbi and Neidhardt, since 1905 director of the Elgar Choir at Hamilton and since 1910 teacher in the Hamilton Conservatory. Under his guidance the Choir has secured a wide renown for perfection, especially in a cappella singing. A.

Carey, Henry (?1685-1743, London). English composer, mostly self-taught, from 1715 employed in writing for the London theaters, producing plays and poems as well as music. Wrote 9 ballad-operas (1715-39), the most successful of which was A Wonder, 1735, many cantatas (1724, '32) The Musical Century (100 ballads and songs), 2 vols, 1737 (also '40, '43), besides poems (1713) and dramatic pieces (1743). He is often held to have been the author of both words and music of 'God save the King' in 1740, but without satisfactory reason. G.

Carissimi, Giacomo (?1604-1674). 17th C. G.

Carl, William Crane (Bloomfield, N. J. 1865). Eminent American organist, pupil of S. P. Warren and Guilman, from 1882 at the 1st Presbyterian Church, Newark, and since 1892 at the 1st Presbyterian Church, New York, with many recitals in both cities and elsewhere. Mus.D. of New York University in 1911 and Officier de l'Instruction Publique since 1909. In 1899 he founded the Guilman Organ School in New York, which has had notable success under his direction. Has published many fine collections of organ-works. A.

Carlez, Jules Alexis (Caen, 1836). French organist at Caen, author of many historical and biographical essays, including Les Musiciens Paysagistes, 1870, La Musique à Caen, 1876, and on Auber, (1874, '75), Choron (1882), Catel (1895), etc., as well as on various older composers.

Carlheim-Gyllensköld, Sigrid (Vexlö, 1863). Able Swedish pianist, trained at the Stockholm Conservatory and by Leschetizky, in 1889 founding the Stockholm Music Institute.

Carlsen, Camillo Alphonzo Johannes Peter (Copenhagen, 1876). Danish organist, pupil of the Copenhagen Conservatory, from 1900 in churches there and since 1911 at Roeskilde Cathedral. Has written a piano-quintet, 3 string-quartets, Psalm 80, cantatas, motets, organ- and piano-pieces, etc.

Carmichael, Mary Grant. English pianist, pupil of Beringer, W. Bache, Hartvigson and Prout, much in request as accompanist. Composer of the operettas The Snow-Queen and The Frozen Heart (from Hans Andersen), a mass, 2 marches for military band, a piano-suite (4-hands), many piano-pieces and songs, including the cycle The Stream. Has translated Ehrlich's Pianists of Past and Present.

Carnegie, Andrew (Dunfermline, 1837-1919, Lexox, Mass.). Scottish manufacturer and philanthropist, in the United States from 1848, becoming enormously wealthy in steel industries. Among his numerous benefactions were over 7500 organs given to churches (4100 in America), provisions for organ-recitals at Allegheny and Pittsburgh (from 1889 and 1895), support of the Oratorio and Philharmonic Societies in New York, the erection of Carnegie Hall in that city, and many other similar evidences of musical zeal. The Carnegie Trust in Great Britain, established by him, has for one of its objects the fostering of musical education and the publication of musical works of merit. A.

Carnicer y Batlle, Ramón (Tarrega, 1789-1855, Madrid). Important Spanish composer, pupil of Queralta and Bagner, from 1809 organist in the Balearic Islands, from 1814 in Spain, where, after visiting Italy in 1816, in 1818-20 he directed the Italian opera at Barcelona and, after travels in France and England, in 1828-30 was head of the Madrid Opera and from 1830 professor in the Conservatory. He is regarded as one of the founders of the national type of operetta or zarzuela. Wrote 9 operas in all (1818-47), including Colombo, 1831, Ipermenestra, 1843, and Ismaila, 1847, much church-music, including a mass for 8 voices and orchestra, many songs, some of them national (including the national hymn of Chile), and some instrumental music. G.

Caro, Paul (Breslau, 1859). Fertile Silesian composer, pupil of J. Schäffer, Scholz and the Vienna Conservatory, since 1885 working in Breslau. Has written the operas Hero und Leander, 1912, and Die Hochzeit von Ulfosti, 5 symphonies, several symphonic poems, a piano-quintet, over 30 string-quartets, a piano-trio, 2 serenades for strings, a Faust [Part II], overture, 2 sacred cantatas, a Requiem, a piano-sonata and other piano-pieces, songs, etc.

Caron, Philippe. 15th C. G.

Caron, Rose Lucile, née Meuniez (n. Paris, 1857). Eminent French operatic soprano, trained at the Paris Conservatory and by Marie Sass, making her début at Brussels in 1884 and singing there or in Paris till 1890, when she settled in the latter. Since 1902 she has been professor in the Conservatory and has sung mostly in concert. She has been the leading artist in the introduction of numerous French, Italian and Wagnerian works in Paris, including the premières of Reyser's Sigurd and Salammbô (1884, '90), Massenet's Le Cid and Godard's Jocelyn (1888). She is equally noted for beauty of voice and nobility of style. G.

Caroso, Fabritio. 16th C. G.

Carpani, Giuseppe Antonio (n. Como, 1752–1825, Vienna). Italian littérateur, originally a lawyer, editor of the Gazetta di Milano in 1792–96, then, except for a sojourn at Venice as theater-censor, at Vienna, where he became court-poet. Author of many Italian opera-librettos, including that of Paër's Camilla, and translator of many from French and German, besides his discursive Le Haydine, 1812, and Le Rossinière, 1824 (both pirated in Paris by Stendhal). A Passion by him was set to music by Weigl (1804). G.

Carpenter, John Alden (Park Ridge, Ill. 1876). American merchant and composer, musically trained under Amy Fay, Seeboeck and Ziehn and at Harvard University. Has written a symphony (1917, Norfolk Festival), the orchestral suite Adventures in a Perambulator, 1915, a Concertino for piano and orchestra (1915), a violin-sonata (1913), and many striking songs, including the cycle Gitanjali, 1913. He is vice-president of George B. Carpenter & Co., Chicago. A.

Carpentras [Eleazar Genet] (?1475–1532 ?). 16th C. G.

Carr, Benjamin (1769–1831, Philadelphia). Fine English stage-singer, coming to America in 1793 and soon prominent in Philadelphia as singer, pianist, organist and conductor, besides managing the first music-store there. He was a promoter and an early conductor of the Musical Fund Society. Wrote the ballad-opera The Archers, 1796 (New York), edited The Musical Journal and published collections, etc. A.

Carr, Frank Osmund (n. York, 1858). English composer of numerous comic operas and burlesques (from 1891). Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1891.

Carré, Albert (Strasbourg, 1852). French actor and impresario, musically notable as in 1898–1912 director of the Opéra-Comique in Paris, developing it into a rival of the Opéra.

Carreño, Maria Teresa (Caracas, 1853–1917, New York.) Remarkable Venezuelan pianist, appearing as a child in 1862 in New York, giving series of concerts there and in Boston and Havana, then studying under Gottschalk and later under Mathias in Paris. From 1865 she was constantly engaged in concert-tours in Europe, returning to America in 1875. In 1872, to supply a vacancy, she appeared as Marguerite in Les Huguenots (Edinburgh) and for about ten years was often heard in opera. In 1884, while in Venezuela, for a time she conducted opera-performances. Her fame as the foremost woman pianist of the day became established from 1890 onward. Upon a basis of exceptional technical virtuosity she advanced to great heights of insight and noble interpretation, with extraordinary vigor and dramatic intensity. She was one of the first to hasten the recognition of MacDowell's genius. She was four times married, in 1872 to the violinist Sauret, in 1875 to the singer Giovanni Tagliapietra, in 1892 to the pianist d'Albertain and in 1902 to Arturo Tagliapietra. She wrote a string-quartet, piano-pieces and études, a Festival Hymn for the Bolivar centenary (1883) etc. G. A.

Carrillo, Julián (Ahuualulco, 1875). Talented Mexican violinist and composer, pupil of the Mexico, Leipzig and Ghent Conservatories (prizes at the first and last), in 1899–1902 playing in the Gewandhaus Orchestra. After touring in Mexico, in 1906–07 he taught in the National Conservatory, becoming in 1913–15 its director, organized the Beethoven Symphony Orchestra and Quartet in 1909, and in 1908–12 was also inspector-general for the government. In 1914 he gave some orchestral concerts in New York and since 1915 has worked there. Has written the operas Mathilda and Ossian, 2 symphonies, 2 orchestral suites, a piano-quintet, a string-quartet and sextet, 2 masses and a Requiem, besides several theoretical treatises (from 1913). A.

Carrodus, John Tiplady (Keighley, 1836–1895, London). Eminent English violinist, pupil of Molique, appearing first as a youth in 1849, again in 1863 and thereafter frequently, besides playing from 1854 in the Covent Garden orchestra and becoming its concertmaster, as later in the Philharmonic and at many festivals. He was an able teacher. Wrote a few violin-pieces. Memoir by his son (1897). G.

Carse, Adam [von Ahn] (Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1878). English composer, trained at the Royal Academy, London (Macfarren scholarship). Has written 2 symphonies (1906, '09), the symphonic poems The Death of Tintagiles, 1902, and In a Balcony, 1905, a Prelude to Manfred (1904) and a Concert Overture, 1904, orchestral Variations (1911), 2 suites for small orchestra, a Norwegian Fantasia for violin, a violin-sonata (1919), variations for piano (4-hands), and the opera Fritjof, 1915. Author of two practical text-books. G. A.

Carter, Henry (London, 1837–?). English organist, extensively trained in England and Germany, from 1854 organist at the Quebec (English) Cathedral and founder of the first Canadian oratorio society, from 1864 at the Church of the Advent, Boston, and the new Music Hall, from 1873 at Trinity Church, New York, from 1880 teaching in Cincinnati, and from 1883 at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. He was well-known as a recitalist in many places. Wrote 2 string-quartets, church-music, songs, etc. A.

Carter, William (London, 1838–?), brother of the above. English organist, pupil of his father and Pauer, engaged in various London churches from his tenth year, from 1860 conductor of popular oratorio societies and from the opening of the Royal Albert Hall in 1871 led annual series of concerts there. Wrote the cantata Placida, 1871, anthems and songs.

Cartier, Jean Baptiste (Avignon, 1765-1841, Paris). Able French violinist, pupil of Viotti, in 1791-1821 in the Opéra orchestra and from 1804 also in the court-orchestra (pensioned in 1830). As teacher and editor he was influential in introducing many standard Italian works to French players, especially through his collection L'Art du Violon, 1798, 1801. Wrote 2 operas, 2 symphonies, violin-concertos, etc. G.

Carulli, Ferdinando (Naples, 1770-1841, Paris). Noted Italian guitarist, self-taught, becoming the first artistic virtuoso on his instrument, in Paris from 1808. Wrote nearly 400 guitar-pieces, a method and a text-book on harmony in guitar-playing (1825). G.

Carulli, Gustavo (Leghorn, 1801-1876, Bologna), son of the above. Good vocal teacher and composer of the opera I Tre Mariti, 1825, excellent trios, songs, a method and exercises.

Caruso, Enrico (Naples, 1873-1921, do.). Extraordinarily gifted Italian operatic tenor, trained by Vergine and Lombardi, making his début in 1895 at Caserta in Faust, followed in 1896 by successes at Naples and Milan, then at Genoa, Petrograd and Buenos Aires (1899-1903), besides continuing active in Italy and beginning to be known in England (1902) and America (1903). From that time he held a unique place in the operatic world everywhere. His voice was recognized as one of the most perfectly endowed and disciplined on record, and his dramatic sympathy enabled him to use it with remarkable adaptation to varied demands of plot and situation. From 1903 he made New York his headquarters, and up to 1920 had appeared nearly 600 times there. The twenty-fifth anniversary of his début in Italy was duly celebrated on Mar. 21, 1919. Late in 1920 he suffered a hemorrhage of the throat, followed by serious complications. His repertoire included about 50 operas, mostly Italian and French. He assisted at numerous premières, as of Giordano's Fedora (1898), Mascagni's Le Maschere (1901), Cilea's Adriana Lecouvreur (1902), Puccini's Madama Butterfly (1904), etc. G. A.

Caruso, Luigi [Lodovico] (Naples, 1754-1822, Perugia). Italian composer, pupil of his father and Sala, after sojourns in France and Germany and at Palermo, long maestro at Perugia Cathedral. Wrote nearly 60 operas (1773-1810), 5 oratorios, masses and other church-music. G.

Carvalho [Carvaille], Léon (1825-1897, Paris). French impresario, originally a stage-singer, in 1874-75 stage-manager at the Paris Opéra and from 1875 director of the Opéra-Comique, following Du Locle. In 1887, after the disastrous fire, he was for a time fined and imprisoned, but in 1891 acquitted and reinstated. His administration was on the whole brilliant. G.

Carvalho, Marie Caroline, née Félix Miolan (Marseilles, 1827-1895, n. Dieppe), wife of the above from 1853. Eminent French operatic soprano, pupil of her father and the Paris Conservatory, making her début in 1849 at the Opéra-Comique, where she was engaged till 1856, then at the Théâtre Lyrique and from 1869 often at the Opéra as well, retiring in 1885. She also sang in England from 1859 and in Germany, Russia, etc. She assisted at the premières of Massé's La Reine Topaze (1856), Gounod's Faust (1859), Philémon et Baucis (1860), Mireille (1864), and Roméo et Juliette (1867), etc. She was noted for exquisite delicacy and sympathy in dramatic impersonation. Memoir by Spoll, 1885, and see Curzon, Croquis d'Artistes, 1898. G.

Cary, Annie Louise (Wayne, Me. 1842-1921, Norwalk, Conn.). Famous American contralto, pupil of Wetherbee and Wheeler in Boston and of Corsi in Milan, later with Viardot-Garcia, Strakosch and Bottesini, making her operatic début at Copenhagen in 1868 and singing for a time in Scandinavia, from 1870 constantly engaged in America and abroad in both opera and concert, retiring in the height of her popularity on her marriage in 1882 to Charles M. Raymond of New York (d. 1909). Her rich voice and her nobility and thoughtfulness of style gave her a place of honor everywhere. G. A.

Casadesus, Francis Louis (Paris, 1870). French composer of the dramatic works Cachaprés, Le Moissonneur and Un Beau Jardin de France, a symphony and other large orchestral works, effective songs, etc. In 1921-23 he was in charge of the Conservatoire Américain at Fontainebleau.

Casali, Giovanni Battista (Rome, 1715-1792, do.). Italian church-musician, from 1759 maestro at the Lateran in Rome. Wrote 4 operas (from 1740), 5 oratorios, 4 masses and other sacred music. He was one of the last to cultivate the pure a cappella style. Grétry was one of his pupils. G.

Casals, Pablo (Vendrell, 1876). Eminent Spanish 'cellist, trained by his father, José Garcia, Rodereda, Bretón and Monasterio, from 1895 soloist at the Paris Opéra and in some tours, besides teaching at the Barcelona Conservatory from 1897. Since 1898 in France and England and since 1901 in America he has been hailed as a consummate artist, both as soloist and in ensemble, receiving various distinguished honors. In 1914 he married the singer Susan Metcalfe. Has written 2 symphonic poems, including La Vision de Fray Martin, chamber-music, a Miserere, etc. A.

Casamorata, Luigi Fernando (Würzburg, 1807-1881 Florence). Italian lawyer, critic and composer (in Florence) from 1845 one of the editors of the new Gazzetta Musicale di Milano, and from 1860 founder of the Istituto Musicale at Florence, becoming its director. Wrote an opera (1838), church-music and instrumental pieces, besides many critical and historical essays, including an account of the Istituto. Memoir by Gandolfi, 1906-07 (in Ricordi Musicali Fiorentini).

Casati, Gasparo (? -1643). 17th C.

Casavant Frères. Canadian firm of organ-makers at St. Hyacinthe, Que., founded in 1879 by J. C. and Samuel Casavant, sons of an earlier maker, working in 1845-66. They have built about 850 instruments in Canada and the United States. A.

Case, Anna (Clinton, N. J. 1889). American soprano, pupil of Mme. Ohrstrom-Renard, appearing in 1909-16 at the Metropolitan, New York (American premières of Boris Godunov, 1912, and Der Rosenkavalier, 1913), and since 1916 a favorite singer in recital and concert. A.

Casella, Alfredo (Turin, 1883). Italian pianist, conductor and composer, pupil of his mother and at the Paris Conservatory, from 1900 becoming known throughout Europe as pianist (solo and in ensemble) and also as guest-conductor of leading orchestras, from 1912 conducted popular concerts at the Trocadero, Paris, and taught in the Conservatory, and in 1916-21 was professor at the Liceo S. Cecilia in Rome, where he is also secretary of the Società di Musica Moderna. Has written 2 symphonies, the orchestral rhapsody Italia, a Prologue pour une Tragédie, Notte di Maggio (with chorus), a string-quartet, a 'cello-sonata and other chamber-music, a cycle of Hindu lyrics and other songs, piano-pieces, etc. Sketch by Perinello, 1904.

Casella, Pietro. 13th C.

Casella, Pietro (Pieve, Umbria, 1769-1843, Naples). Italian composer, trained at the Conservatorio S. Onofrio, Naples, maestro at various churches there and from 1817 professor in the Royal Conservatory. Wrote 6 operas (1798-1813), masses and much other church-music. Memoir by Tritto, 1844.

Caserta, Philippus de. 15th C.

Casimiri, Raffaele Casimiro (Gualdo Tadino, 1880). Eminent Italian church-musician, pupil of Bottazzo, from 1901 editor of the Rassegna Gregoriana in Rome, from 1903 teacher and choir-master successively at Calvi, Teano, Capua, Perugia and Vercelli and since 1911 choir-master at the Lateran in Rome. In 1907 at Perugia he established the periodical Psalterium (in 1912 transferred to Rome), contributing important studies on Palestrina, Lassus and E. Bernabei. He has written 2 oratorios and many masses, litanies, motets, etc.

Casimiro da Silva, Joaquim (Lisbon, 1808-1862, do.). Portuguese composer of church-music and some stage-music. See Vieira, Os Musicos Portuguezes, 1900.

Casini, Giovanni Maria (Florence, ?1670-after 1714). Italian priest and organist, pupil of Simonelli and Pasquini, in 1703-14 organist at the Florence Cathedral. He sought to revive the use of the ancient Greek genera by means of a harpsichord with 31 keys to the octave. Wrote 2 oratorios, a cappella motets, other church-music and organ-pieces. G.

Caslova, Marie (in the Ozarks, Mo. 1895). American violinist, pupil of Sevéik, Flesch and Serato, appearing in 1913 in Berlin and New York, then touring with Gadski, etc.

Caspar, Helene (Zittau, 1857-1918, Leipzig). Able Saxon piano-teacher, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, with later study under Winterberger, from 1885 active at Leipzig. Wrote a series of thoughtful text-books (1901, '10, '14).

Cassel, Guillaume (Lyons, 1794-1836, Brussels). French singer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, making his début as stage-singer at Amiens, from 1824 at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, in 1827-32 at the Brussels Opera, and then a successful teacher (Mme. Dorus-Gras one of his pupils). G.

Castel, Louis Bertrand (Montpellier, 1688-1757, Paris). French Jesuit, the first to attempt to illustrate the analogy between the tone-series of the scale and the color-series of the spectrum. His 'clavecin oculaire' (1725), based on the idea that blue, yellow and red correspond to do, mi, sol of the scale, was designed to present appropriate colors to the eye at the same time with the tones. This fruitless undertaking led to several later ones. His writings were published in 1763.

Castellan, Jeanne Anaïs (n. Mâcon, 1819-?). French operatic soprano, trained at the Paris Conservatory, appearing from 1836 in various Italian cities, in Vienna, in the United States and Mexico, from 1844 steadily in England, with some visits elsewhere, becoming a favorite in concerts as well. She sang at the premières of Meyerbeer's Le Prophète (1849), Spohr's revised Faust (1852), Costa's Eli (1855) and Leslie's Judith (1858), besides several other local premières. She retired about 1860. In 1840 she married the singer Enrico Giampetro at Florence. G.

Castelli, Ignaz Franz (Vienna, 1781-1862, do.). Austrian editor and librettist, in 1829-40 founder and editor of the Allgem. musikalischer Anzeiger at Vienna. Author of many favorite plays, the librettos of Weigl's Die Schweizerfamilie (1809), Schubert's Die Verschworenen and other operas, besides translations (as of Meyerbeer's Les Huguenots). Memoirs, 4 vols. 1861 (new ed. 1912), Poems, 6 vols. 1835. Collected Works, 1848, '58. He was intimate with both Beethoven and Weber. G.

Castelmarty [Armand de Castan] (Toulouse, 1834-1897, New York). Able French operatic baritone and bass, singing at the Paris Opéra in 1864-70, then also in England and the United States (from 1879). He had an enormous repertoire, and was noted in the rôle of Mephistopheles. He died during a performance of Martha at the Metropolitan, New York.

Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Mario (Florence, 1895). Gifted Italian composer, pupil of Valle de Paz and Pizzetti, writing various highly characteristic piano-pieces and songs (several with orchestra), some madrigals and part-songs and the opera La Mandragola (not yet finished). Sketch by Galli, 1921 (in Musical Times).

Castéra, René d'Avezac de (Dax, 1873). French critic and composer, trained at the Schola Cantorum, Paris, writing for the Tribune de St. Gervais and in 1902 starting the 'Edition Mutuelle' for the publication of works by contemporaneous musicians and others. Has written the opera Berberetche, the ballet Nausicaa, a Jour de Fête au Pays Basque for orchestra, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, etc.

Castil, Blaze. See Blaze.

Castillon, Alexis de [Vicomte de Saint-Victor] (Chartres, 1838-1873, Paris). French composer, pupil of Massé and later of Franck, who strongly influenced his development. With Duparc and Saint-Saëns, he was a founder of the Société Nationale de Musique in 1871. Wrote the overture Torquato Tasso, 2 orchestral suites and Esquisses Symphoniques, a piano-concerto, a piano-quintet, a string-quartet, a piano-quartet, 2 piano-trios, a violin-sonata, a choral setting of Psalm 84, piano-pieces and songs. He was influential in the revival of French chamber-music. G.

Castro, Jean de. 16th C. G.

Castrucci, Pietro (Rome, 1679-1752, Dublin). Italian violinist, pupil of Corelli, from 1715 concertmaster under Handel in London, continuing till 1737. He invented the violetta marina, (a form of viola d'amore) and was noted as a player upon it (Handel wrote two accompaniments for it in his Orlando and Sosarme). Wrote 12 violin-concertos and many sonatas. G.

Catalani, Alfredo (Lucca, 1854-1893, Milan). Able Italian composer, pupil of his father and F. Magi, with study at the Paris and Milan Conservatories, becoming at length (1886) professor in the latter, succeeding Ponchielli. Wrote the operas La Falce, 1875, L'Elda, 1880, Dejanice, 1883, Ero e Leandro, 1885, Edmea, 1886, Loreley (revision of L'Elda), 1890, and La Wally, 1892, the symphonic poem Ero e Leandro, 1885, other orchestral works, chamber-music, choral pieces, etc., besides an early mass with orchestra (1868). G.

Catalani, Angelica (Sinigaglia, 1780-1849, Paris). Extraordinary Italian operatic soprano, trained at a convent in Rome, appearing first at Venice in 1795, Florence in 1799 and Milan in 1801, going thence to Lisbon in 1804, to Paris in 1805, to London in 1806, to Paris in 1814-17, and then traveling generally through Europe. About 1829 she retired, enormously wealthy, to her estate near Florence. Her voice was phenomenally flexible, accurate and powerful, unexcelled in bravura passages and with extensive range in pitch and quality. Her stage-presence was impressive, but her acting lacked ease and grace. In 1804 she married Valabrègue, an attaché of the French embassy in Portugal, whose greed and gambling marred her whole career. At different times she attempted the direction of operatic enterprises, both in London and in Paris. After 1830 she set up a girls' singing-school at her residence. She was noted for her personal simplicity and excellence and for innumerable acts of generosity. G.

Catel, Charles Simon (Laigle, 1773-1830, Paris). French composer and theorist, pupil of Gossec, Gobert and Sacchini in the École Royale, where he taught from 1787, from 1790 accompanist at the Opéra and deputy-conductor (under Gossec) of the Garde Nationale, from 1795 professor of harmony at the new Conservatory and in 1810-14 one of its inspectors. From 1817 he was a member of the Académie, succeeding Monsigny, and in 1824 was made Chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur. Wrote 11 operas (1802-19), including Les Bayadères, 1810, and Les Auberghistes de Qualité, 1812, considerable chamber-music, various national cantatas and songs, a great amount of military music, and a famous Traité d'Harmonie, 1802, long standard at the Conservatory (Eng. trans. by Lowell Mason, 1832). Memoirs by Carlez, 1895, and Hellouin and Picard, 1910. G.

Catelani, Angelo (Guastalla, 1811-1866, n. Modena). Italian composer and historian, trained at the Naples Conservatory, in 1834-37 opera-conductor at Messina, from 1838 maestro at the Modena Cathedral and the court and from 1859 one of the librarians of the Este Library. Wrote 3 operas, including Caractaco, 1841, some chamber- and church-music, and notices, longer or shorter, on Pietro Aron (1851), Vicentino (1851), Orazio Vecchi (1858), Merulo (1859) and Stradella (1866), on two specimens of the first music-printing from type (1858), and on letters about music by various early musicians (1852-54). His literary remains and a catalogue of his library were edited by Valdrighi, 1882, '93. G.

Catoire, Georg Lvovitch (Moscow, 1861). Russian composer, pupil of Klindworth, Rüfer and Liadov. Has written a symphony, the symphonic poem Mitsjiri, a piano-concerto, a quintet, quartet and trio for strings, a sonata (Poème) for violin, the cantata Russalka, choruses and songs.

Catrufo, Giuseppe (Naples, 1771-1851, London). Italian composer, trained at the Conservatorio de' Turchini at Naples, first working at Malta, but in 1796-1804 in military service, though with intermittent musical work, then successively at Geneva, Paris (1810) and London (1835), becoming a well-known vocal teacher. Wrote about 15 operas (1792-1832), mostly comic, a mass and other church-music, cantatas, songs, a vocal method, solfeggi, etc.

Caurroy, François Eustache du (1549-1609). 16th C. G.

Cavaccio, Giovanni (1556-1626). 16th C. G.

Cavallé-Col, Aristide (Montpellier, 1811-1899, Paris), son of Hyacinthe Cavallé-Col (1771-1862). The most famous of a family of organ-makers, working in Paris from 1833 and erecting many noted instruments there and elsewhere in France and Belgium. He introduced manifold improvements, especially in the action, the use of varying wind-pressures and in details of voicing. Author of several treatises (1849, '56, '75), the last of which was a proposal for a great organ for St. Peter's in Rome. Memoir by Peschard, 1899. G.

Cavalieri, Emilio del (?1550-1602). 16th C. G.

Caualieri, Katharina (Vienna, 1761-1801, do.). Noted Austrian operatic soprano, pupil of Salieri, beginning public appearances from 1775 and continuing a favorite till her retirement in 1793. Mozart was greatly impressed with her ability and wrote several parts for her, especially the rôle of Constanze in his Entführung (1782). She was practically unknown outside of Vienna. G.

Cavalieri, Lina (Rome, 1874). Italian operatic soprano, pupil of Mme. Mariani-Masi, making her début at Lisbon in 1900, then in many Italian cities and in Russia. In 1906 she came to the Metropolitan, New York, in 1908-09 was at the Manhattan and in 1915-16 sang with the Chicago Opera Company. Since 1913 she has been the wife of the tenor Muratore. A.

Cavalli, Francesco (1602-1676). 17th C. G.

Cavallini, Ernesto (Milan, 1807-1874, do.). Noted Italian clarinetist, pupil of the Milan Conservatory, where, after living in Venice and touring, he played in the La Scala orchestra and taught in the Conservatory till 1852, when he went to Petrograd, returning in 1870. He was famous for his virtuosity. Wrote a clarinet-concerto and various pieces. G.

Cavan, Marie [Mary Edith Cawein] (New York, 1889). American operatic soprano, pupil of Rose M. Heilig, Harriet Ware and Charles Clark, appearing in concert in 1909 and since 1910 in opera, at first with the Chicago Opera Company.

Cavazzoni, Girolamo. 16th C.

Cavos, Catterino (Venice, 1776-1840, Petrograd), son of the conductor of the Teatro Fenice. Italian conductor and composer, at first variously employed in Venice and Padua, but from 1797 identified with Petrograd, becoming opera-director from 1799 and exerting a notable influence upon the early growth of the national school. Wrote 13 Russian operas (from 1804), including Ivan Sussanin, 1815, various smaller pieces and ballets, songs, etc. From 1832 he was conductor of the court-orchestra. Memoir by Bloch, 1896-97. G.

Cazzati, Maurizio (? 1620-1677). 17th C. G.

Celani, Enrico. Author of articles in the Rivista Musicale on singers in the Papal Choir in the 16-18th centuries (1907) and on music in Rome in 1550-1650 (1915).

Čelansky, Ludvig V. (Nem Brod, 1870). Bohemian conductor and composer, about 1895 founder of the Böhmisches Philharmonie in Prague. Has written the opera Kamila, 1897, a Te Deum (1916), a Hymnus der Sonne, 1920, a symphony (1915), the symphonic trilogy Adam, Noë, Moses, 1915-19, songs and melodramas. See Festschrift, 1920.

Celega, Nicolò, (Polesella, 1844-1906, Milan) Italian composer, pupil of Mazzucato at Milan. Wrote the opera Marino (unperformed), 2 symphonic poems (one for the Columbus celebration, 1892, and Il Cuore di Fingal), piano-transcriptions from operas, and songs.

Celler, Ludovic [Louis Leclercq] (Paris, 1828-?). Author of studies of the rise of the opera (1868) and of the Holy Week music of the Papal Chapel (1867).

Cellier, Alfred (London, 1844-1891, do.). French-English composer, pupil of Helmore, from 1862 organist in London and again after 1868, in 1865-68 orchestral and choral conductor at Belfast, in 1871-75 theater-conductor at Manchester, and from 1877 in London, partly in combination with Sullivan. Wrote a series of light operas (from 1870), including Dorothy, 1886, Doris, 1889, and The Mountebanks, 1892, the full opera The Masque of Pandora, 1881 (Boston, Mass.), a choral setting of Gray's 'Elegy,' 1883 (Leeds), a Suite Symphonique, part-songs and songs, piano-pieces, etc. In 1879-87 he was mostly in America and Australia. G.

Centola, Ernesto (Salerno, 1862). Italian violinist, trained at the Naples Conservatory and in Berlin, from 1884 teaching in Corfu and from 1889 at the Turin Liceo, in 1893-97 playing at San Carlo in Naples and then head of a music-school in Constantinople. Has written violin-pieces and studies.

Cerone, Pietro (1566-1613?). 16th C. G.

Cerreto, Scipione (1551-1632?). 16th C. G.

Certon, Pierre (? -1572). 16th C. G.

Cerù, Domenico Agostino (Lucca, 1817-?). Italian engineer, author of a life of Bocherini (1864), notes on the music-history of Lucca (1871) and a comparison of German and Italian music (1870).

Červný, Wenzel Franz (Dubeč, 1819-1896. Königgrätz). Famous Bohemian maker of brass-wind instruments, from 1842 at Königgrätz, inventing a long series of new forms (from 1844) and improving others, acquiring a world-reputation.

Cervetto [Bassevi], Giacomo (London, ?1749-1837, do.). Italian-English 'cellist, from 1760 appearing with his father in many concerts till the latter's death in 1783. G.

Cesari, Gaetano (Cremona, 1870). Author of Die Entstehung d. Madrigals im 16. Jahrh. 1908, and Giorgio Giulini Musicista, 1916, besides editing (with Luzio) Verdi's letters (1913).

Cesaris, Johannes. 15th C. G.

Cesi, Beniamino (Naples, 1845-1907, do.). Important Italian pianist, trained at the Naples Conservatory and under Thalberg, from 1866 professor at the Conservatory, from 1885 at the Petrograd Conservatory, and then, owing to paralysis of one hand, returning to Naples. For a time he edited L'Archivio Musicale. His concert-playing was admired throughout Italy, in France, Egypt, etc. Wrote many piano-pieces and a method (1895-97), songs, the opera

Vittor Pisani (unperformed) and a Storia del Piedforte, 1903.

Cesti, Marc' Antonio (1618-1669). 17th C. G.

Chabran, Francesco (in Piedmont, 1723-?). Italian violinist, pupil of Somis (his uncle), from 1747 in the Turin court-band and from 1751 in much favor at Paris and especially London. Wrote violin-sonatas and concertos.

Chabrier, Alexis Emmanuel (n. Thiers, 1841-1894, Paris). French composer, pupil of Semet, Hignard and Wolff. Wrote the operas Gwendoline, 1886, Le Roi Malgré lui, 1887, and Briséis (unfinished), 2 operettas (1877-79), the scena La Sulamite, 1885, À la Musique for chorus, various orchestral works, including the rhapsody España, a Suite Pastorale and several marches, many piano-pieces, including Pièces Pittoresques, etc. Memoirs by Séré, 1911, and Servièrès, 1912. G.

Chadwick, George Whitefield (Lowell, Mass. 1854). Distinguished American composer, trained by Buck, Whiting and Eugene Thayer, at the Leipzig Conservatory and under Rheinberger, from 1880 organist at the South Congregational Church, Boston, and teacher at the New England Conservatory, becoming director of the latter in 1897. In 1889-99 he conducted the Springfield Festivals and in 1897-1901 the Worcester Festivals, and has often served as guest-conductor elsewhere. His administration of the Conservatory has been notably efficient and successful. LL.D. of Tufts College in 1905. His works include Symphonies: 1, in C, 1882, 2, in B-flat, 1886, 3, in F, 1894. Sinfonietta, in D, 1904.

Overtures: Rip Van Winkle, 1879, Thalia, 1882, The Miller's Daughter, 1884, Melpomene, 1886, Adonais, 1889, Euterpe.

Symphonic Poems: Cleopatra, 1905, Aphrodite, 1912, Angel of Death, 1919. Serenade in F, 1890, A Pastoral Prelude, 1891, 3 Symphonic Sketches, 1896, Suite in A, 1896, Suite Symphonique in E-flat, 1917, Symphonic Ballade, Tam O'Shanter, 1917. Incidental music to Everywoman, 1911. Variations for organ and orchestra.

Chamber-works: Piano-quintet in E-flat. String-quartets: 1, in G min. 1878, 2, in C, 1879, 3, in D, 1885, 4, in E min. 1896, 5, in D min. 1898. String-trio in C min.

The lyric drama Judith, 1901, and the tragic opera The Padrone (ms). The operettas The Quiet Lodging, 1892, and Tabasco, 1893. The pastoral opera Love's Sacrifice, 1915.

The Viking's Last Voyage, for baritone and men's chorus, 1880, Dedication Ode, 1883, The Pilgrim's Hymn, 1888, Lovalty Rosballe, 1889, Phoenix Expirans, 1891, Columbian Ode, 1892, The Lily Nymph, 1895, Ecce jam Noctis, 1897, the ballads Lochnair, 1897, and Aghadee, the Christmas pastoral Noël, 1908.

About 50 songs, much church-music and some pieces for piano and organ.

G. A.

Challier, Ernst (Berlin, 1843-1914, Giessen). Music-publisher at Giessen, especially noted for many special catalogues of comprehensive scope, especially of songs and duets (1886, '98), of choruses for men's voices (1900), for women's (1904) and mixed (1903), of music-publishers (1908), etc. He also wrote on musical copyright (1905).

Chamberlain, Houston Stewart (Portsmouth, 1855). Eminent English author, chiefly educated in Germany and devoted to its ideas and culture, but taking his degree in science at Geneva University (1881), from 1885 living in Dresden and from 1889 in Vienna. In 1903 he married Wagner's daughter Eva and settled at Bayreuth, becoming a leading Wagnerian enthusiast. Besides many works in other fields (notably his discussion of the 19th century, 1899-1901), including books on the history of literature and philosophy, author of Das Drama Wagners, 1892 (5th ed. 1913), R. Wagner: echte Briefe an F. Praeger, 1894 (2d ed. 1908), R. Wagner, 1896 (2d ed. 1911), Die ersten 20 Jahre d. Bayreuther Bühnenfestspiele, 1896, and Parzifalmärchen, 1900 (2d ed. 1913). Since 1885 he has been a frequent contributor to German, French and English periodicals. Biography by L. von Schroeder, 1918.

Chambonnieres, Jacques Champion (? 1600-1670?). 17th C. G.

Chaminade, Cécile Louise Stéphanie (Paris, 1861). Talented French pianist and composer, pupil of Lecoupey, Savard, Marsick and Godard, living in Paris, but with many concert-tours elsewhere, especially in England. Has written many very popular and characteristic piano-pieces and songs, and also the ballet-symphony Callirhoë, 1888, the symphonie lyrique Les Amazones, 1888, 2 orchestral suites, a Konzertstück for piano and orchestra, 2 piano-trios and the opéra comique La Sévillane. G.

Champein, Stanislas (Marseilles, 1753-1830, Paris). French composer, precociously developed, becoming choirmaster at Pignans (Provence) at thirteen and writing a mass, a Magnificat and psalms, and in 1770 going to Paris and before long winning popularity as a prolific opera-composer. Wrote in all about 40 comedies (c. 1778-1817), including La Melomanie, 1781, Les Dettes, 1787, Menzikoff et Foedor, 1808, and Le Nouveau Don Quichotte, 1809 (first given under an Italian name). His vogue was short and after 1820 he fell into extreme poverty.

Champlin, John Denison (Stonington, Conn. 1834-1915, New York). American lexicographer, editor (with Apthorp) of a notable Cyclopaedia of Music and Musicians, 3 vols. 1888-90. A.

Chanot, Georges (Mirecourt, 1801-1883, Paris). Excellent French violin-maker in Paris from about 1820, continuing till 1872, assisted by his wife (née Démoliens) and for a time by his son Georges fils (1831-1895), who from 1851 became noted in London. For a short time he attempted to develop an eccentric model devised by his brother François (1787-1823), which the Académie had pronounced (1817) equal to any of Stradivari. G.

Chantavoine, Jean (Paris, 1877). French critic and editor, pupil of Friedländer, writing since 1903 for the Revue Hebdomaire and also (from 1911) for Excelsior and L'Année Musicale and editing Les Maîtres de la Musique, himself the author of volumes on Beethoven (1906) and Liszt (1910), as also of Musiciens et Poètes, 1912. He recovered the score of Liszt's Don Sanche.

Chapi y Lorente, Ruperto (Villena, 1851-1909, Madrid). Popular Spanish composer, trained at the Madrid Conservatory and at Rome, writing 6 operas (from 1873) and over 150 zarzuelas, mostly for Madrid, with extreme grace of form and beauty of orchestration. His last operas were Circe, 1900, and Margarita la Tornera, 1909, and one of the best of the late zarzuelas La Revoltosa.

Chappell, William (London, 1809-1888, do.), son and successor of Samuel Chappell, the founder of Chappell & Co. Promoter of the Musical Antiquarian Society (from 1840) and author of A Collection of National English Airs, 2 vols. 1838-39, Popular Music of the Olden Time, 2 vols. 1845-49, and a History of Music, 1 vol. only, 1874, all marked by much industry and scholarly intelligence. G.

Chappell & Co. Important London firm of music-publishers and piano-makers, founded in 1812 by Samuel Chappell (d. 1834), the pianist J. B. Cramer and F. T. Latour, succeeded in turn by Chappell's sons William (see above), Thomas Patey (1819-1902) and S. Arthur (1834-1904). The business was greatly extended under Thomas' leadership, St. James Hall erected in 1858 and the famous series of Popular Concerts begun in 1859, the latter mainly managed and directed by the younger brother. The Concerts practically ceased in 1898 and the Hall was replaced by a hotel in 1905. G (Popular Concerts, St. James Hall).

Chapple, Samuel (n. Exeter, 1775-1833, Ashburton). English organist, blind from infancy, from 1795 organist at Ashburton (Devon). Wrote 3 piano-sonatas with violin-obbligato, several anthems, glees and songs, etc. G.

Chapuis, Auguste Paul Jean Baptiste (n. Gray, 1862). French organist and composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (several prizes), from 1882 organist at Notre-Dame-des-Champs and since 1887 at St.-Roch, and also from 1894 professor at the Conservatory and inspector-general of music in the Paris schools. Has written various dramatic works, including the unsuccessful operas Enguerrand, 1892, and Tancred, 1898, the cantata Les Jardins d'Armide, a Seven Words, several masses and motets, an orchestral fantasia, a violin-sonata, a string-quartet, a piano-trio, the piano-suite Pulcinelli and another based on an oriental scale, organ-pieces and many other instrumental pieces, choruses and songs, besides a text-book in harmony.

Char, Friedrich Ernst (Cleves, 1865). Rhenish conductor and composer, pupil of the Sondershausen and Cologne Conservatories, since 1886 operatic conductor at different places. Has written the opera Der Schein von Bergen, 1895, the cantata Spielmann, a Hymne for 8-part chorus and orchestra, a piano-concerto, piano-, violin- and organ-pieces and songs.

Chard, George William (Winchester, 1765-1849, do.). English organist, trained as choirboy at St. Paul's, London, from 1787 deputy- and from 1802 chief organist at Winchester Cathedral, as also at Winchester School from 1832. He was expert in developing boys' voices. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1812. Wrote some church-music, glees and songs. G.

Charlier, Marcel. Belgian conductor, pupil of the Liège Conservatory, accompanist, and then conductor at the Monnaie, Brussels, later at Covent Garden, London, in 1906-10 at the Manhattan, New York (for French operas), and since 1910 with the Chicago Opera Company. A.

Charpentier, Gustave (Dieuze, 1860). Eminent French composer, educated at the Lille and Paris Conservatories (Prix de Rome, 1887). In 1912 he succeeded Massenet in the Académie. Has written the operas Louise, 1900, and Julien, 1913, the symphonic drama La Vie du Poète, 1892, the symphonic poem Napoli, 1891, the orchestral suite Impressions d'Italie, the cantata Didon, 1887, the choral Impressions Fausses, 1895, Chant d'Apothéose and Sérénade à la Watteau, and songs, some with orchestra. Operas unproduced include Orphée, Tête Rouge, La Couronnement de la Muse, and a folk-opera in 3 parts. He has always been interested in social enterprises among working-people, founding the Cercle Mimi Pinson and the Conservatoire Mimi Pinson for working-girls. See Séré, Musiciens d'Aujourd'hui, 1911.

Charpentier, Marc' Antoine (1634-1704). 17th C. G.

Chartier, Charles Jean. Founder in 1861 of the Prix Chartier (700 fr.), annually awarded for contributions to chamber-music.

Chase, Mary Wood (Brooklyn, 1868). American pianist, trained at the New England Conservatory and under Raif in Berlin, becoming the latter's assistant for a time. From 1902 she toured in the United States, and since 1906 has been engaged in developing her School of Musical Arts in Chicago. Author of Natural Laws in Piano-Technic, 1910, and many magazine articles. A.

Chatterton, John Balsir (Norwich, 1805-1871, London). Noted English harpist, pupil of Labarre and Bochs, succeeding the latter as professor at the Royal Academy, London, and from 1842 also becoming harpist to Queen Victoria. G.

Chaumet, William (Bordeaux, 1842-1903, do.). French composer, originally trained for a business career, mostly self-taught in music. Wrote the operetta Le Coche, 1865 (not given), the operas La Pêché de M. Géronte, 1872, Bathyle, 1877, Mauprat and La Petite Maison, 1903, the dramatic poems Idée, 1873, Hérode, 1885, and Mam'zelle Piou-piou, 1889, some orchestral pieces, string-quartets, violin- and piano-pieces and songs. His Baythyle received the first award of the Cressent prize in 1875 and Hérode took the Rossini prize in 1885.

Chausson, Ernest (Paris, 1855-1899, n. Mantès). Gifted French composer, pupil of Massenet and Franck. He was active in promoting the Société Nationale de Musique and from 1889 its secretary. Wrote the operas Le Roi Arthur, 1900, and Hélène, incidental music for Les Caprices de Marianne, Shakespeare's Tempest and Boucher's Ste.-Cécile, a Hymne Védique for chorus, the dramatic scenes Le Poème de l'Amour et de la Mer and Chanson Perpétuelle, the lyric scene Jeanne d'Arc, a symphony, the symphonic poem Viviane, the orchestral Un Soir de Fête and Solitude dans les Bois, a piano-concerto, a violin-concerto (with strings), a string-quartet, a piano-quartet, a string-trio and a Poème for violin with orchestra. His individuality, delicacy of imagination and extreme technical skill betokened a genius of high order, whose full development was cut short by his accidental death while bicycling. See Séré, Musiciens d'Aujourd'hui, 1911. G.

Chauvet, Charles Alexis (Marines, 1837-1871, Argentan). Brilliant French organist, pupil of Benoist and A. Thomas (prize in 1860), playing at various Paris churches and from 1869 at the new Ste.-Trinité, but dying at the height of his powers. Wrote many striking organ- and piano-pieces, and was noted as a ready and powerful improviser. G.

Chavanne, Irene von (Gratz, 1868). Noted Styrian operatic contralto, trained at the Vienna Conservatory, since 1885 engaged at the Dresden Court-Opera, becoming 'Kammersängerin' in 1894.

Chelard, Hippolyte André Jean Baptiste (Paris, 1789-1861, Weimar). French composer, pupil of Fétis, the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome in 1811), and of Baini, Paisiello and Zingarelli, making his début as composer at Naples in 1815, was then violinist at the Paris Opéra, after failing with his first opera there went to Munich, becoming court-director in 1828-29, for some years vibrated between Paris and Munich, with many alternations of fortune, in 1836-50 was court-director at Weimar and then for a time lived at Paris. Wrote the operas La Casa a Vendere, 1815 (Naples), Macbeth, 1827 (Paris), 1828 (Munich, rewritten), La Table et le Logement, 1829 (Paris), Mitternacht, 1831, Der Student, 1832, Die Hermannsschlacht, 1835 (all Munich), Die Scheibentoni, 1842, Der Seekadett, 1844 (both Weimar), and L'Aquila Romana, 1864 (Milan), besides a mass and other church-music. His chief work was Die Hermannsschlacht, but other works were notable for sincerity and skill. G.

Chelius, Oskar von (Mannheim, 1859). Badenese general and diplomat (with the embassy at Petrograd in 1914), musically a pupil of F. Steinbach, Reiss and Jadassohn. Has written the operas Haschisch, 1897, Die vernarrte Prinzess, 1905, and Magda-Maria, 1920, a violin-sonata, an orchestral Requiem, Psalm 121, piano-pieces and songs.

Chelleri [Keller], Fortunato (Parma, 1686-1757, Kassel). German-Italian composer, pupil of his uncle, F. M. Bassani, from 1725 court-director at Kassel. Wrote over 15 operas for Italian stages (1707-22), oratorios, masses, psalms, etc., symphonies, overtures, chamber-music, sonatas and fugues for organ and harpsichord, cantatas and songs.

Chemin-Petit, Hans (?-1917, Potsdam). Composer of the operas Der Goldregen, 1889, and Hans Jürge, 1893 and the operettas Der Schweinehirt, 1905, and Der liebe Augustin, 1906.

Chéri [Cizos], Victor (Auxerre, 1830-1882, Paris, suicide). French conductor, trained at the Paris Conservatory, engaged at several theaters there. Wrote the opera Une Aventure sous la Ligue, 1857, ballet-music, a violin-concerto, etc.

Cherniavsky Trio, The. A notable Russian ensemble-group of three brothers—Leo (b. 1890), violinist, Michail (b. 1893), 'cellist, and Jan (b. 1892), pianist, all born at Odessa, sons of a talented pianist. Developing precociously, the Trio was first formed in 1900, with immediate success in Russia, and since 1904 has been heard in all parts of the world (in the United States in 1916-17 and later). A.

Cherubini, Maria Luigi Carlo Zenobio Salvatore (Florence, [Sept. 14] 1760-1842 [Mar. 15], Paris), son of the cembalist at the Pergola. Distinguished Italian composer, very early trained by his father, the brothers Felice, Bizàrri, Castucci and Sarti (with the latter as protégé of the Grand Duke of Tuscany). He became an expert contrapuntist while still a boy, writing a mass at thirteen and at first devoting himself to church-music. But in 1780 he also entered the operatic field, which he cultivated assiduously first in Italy, from 1784 also in London and from 1786 in Paris, where in 1789-92 he conducted Italian opera at the Théâtre de la Foire de St.-Germain, at the same time effecting a remarkable change of style in his own work, so as to adapt it to the dramatic demands of the French public. From 1795 he was one of the inspectors at the new Conservatory, but steadily added to his list of dramatic works, achieving the highest success with Les Deux Journées in 1800 and with Faniska in 1806 (Vienna). He was never a favorite with Napoleon and from 1808 for a time was more or less in retirement, turning to sacred composition once more. In 1815-16 he was displaced at the Conservatory and made a notable visit to London, but in 1816 he returned as professor of composition and in 1821 was made director, a post held with great energy and significant result until his retirement in 1841. He stands out in the early 19th century as one of the ablest of Italian musicians, eminent alike for learning in every feature of strict composition, enterprise and skill in utilizing the new orchestral resources that the Viennese composers had disclosed, and extremely adroit in combining all these with the novel feeling for dramatic expression that characterized the rising French school. His fertility and breadth of interest were remarkable, but were controlled by great seriousness of purpose and a resolute avoidance of devices for mere popularity. His influence as teacher and organizer of instruction was profound and lasting, being one of the reasons for the subsequent eminence of the Paris Conservatory. From him dates much of the best modern interest in counterpoint.

His works include the following:

Operas

Il Quinto Fabio, 1780 (Alessandria, Piedmont), re-written 1783 for Rome, Armida, 1782 (Florence), Adriano in Siria, 1782 (Leghorn), Il Mesenzio, 1782 (Florence), Lo Sposo di Tré, 1783 (Venice), L'Idalide, 1784 (Florence), Alessandro nell'Indie, 1784 (Mantua), La Finta Principessa, 1785, Il Giulio Sabino, 1786 (both London), Ifigenia in Aulide, 1788 (Turin), Démophon, 1788, Lodovica, 1791, Elisa, 1794, Médée, 1797, L'Hôtelier Portugaise, 1798, La Punition, 1799, Les Deux Journées, 1800 (elsewhere known as The Water-Carrier), Anacréon, 1803 (all at Paris), Faniska, 1806 (Vienna), Pimmallione, 1809, Le Crescendo, 1810, Les Abencérages, 1813, Blanche de Provence, 1821 (with Berton, Boieldieu, Kreutzer and Paër), Ali Baba, 1833 (all at Paris) besides 3 pasticcios, 4 works left unfinished, and the ballet Achille à Scyros, 1804, 2 intermezzi and about 15 cantatas, odes, etc., either dramatic or occasional (1774-1815).

Other Vocal Works

11 solemn masses—in D, 1773, in C, 1774, in C, 1775, in F, 1808-09, in D min. 1811, in C, 1816, in E-flat, 1816, in E, 1818, in G, 1819 (Coronation of Louis XVIII), in B-flat, 1821, in A, 1825 (Coronation of Charles X).

2 Requiems—in C min. 1816, in D min. 1836 (men's voices).

7 motets, 3 Psalms, about 50 detached ritual pieces. About 125 solos (arias or romances), many duets, trios, quartets, choruses, etc., and about 160 solfeggi.

Instrumental Works

Symphony in D, 1815 (London).

Overture in G, 1815 (London).

Many marches, dances, etc., for orchestra.

String-quintet in E min. 1837. String-quartets in E-flat, 1814, C, 1829 (based on symphony), D min. 1834, E, 1835, F, 1835, and A min. 1837.

Sonata for two organs, 1780.

10 piano-sonatas, a chaconne, a fantasia, a capriccio, and other piano-pieces.

(For complete list, totaling 430 numbers, see Bellasis' memoir and also Eitner.)

Theoretical Works

His chief work was the Cours de Contrepoint et de Fugue, 1815, though the text of this was drawn up by his pupil Halévy. He also drafted similar text-books in harmony and solfeggio in collaboration with members of the staff of the Conservatory. But literary expression was not his forte.

In 1785-86 he was court-composer in England. In 1815 he became a member of the Légion d'Honneur and also of the Académie. From 1816 he was made co-director of the Chapelle Royale. Among his innumerable contacts with musicians, old and young, that with Beethoven in 1805 at Vienna is notable. Personally, he was grave and rather distant, with a tendency to depression. In 1795 he married Cécile Tourette (d. 1864), daughter of a musician in the Chapelle Royale, and there were three children, a son and two daughters, all of whom were associated with artistic life. Memoirs by Loménie, 1841, Miel, 1842, Place, 1842, Rochette, 1843, Picchianti, 1844, Stierlin, 1851, Denne-Baron, 1862, Nisard, 1867, Gamucci, 1869, Bellasis, 1874, Crowest, 1890, Wittmann, 1895, L'Épine, 1913, and the elaborate work of Hohenemser, 1913. G.

Chessin, Alexander Borissovitch (Petrograd, 1869). Russian conductor, pupil of the Petrograd Conservatory and of Nikisch, from 1901 deputy-conductor of the Musical Society in Petrograd and in 1908-11 full conductor, later directing the orchestra organized by Count Scheremetiev. Since 1903 he has also been conductor of the Moscow Philharmonic.

Chevé, Émile Joseph Maurice (Douarnenez, 1804-1864, Paris). French physician, author of a Méthode Élémentaire de Musique Vocale, 1844, and a Méthode Élémentaire d'Harmonie, 1846 (both with his wife, née Nanine Paris, who herself published a harmony in 1844), besides various essays, in which he advocated the system of Galin and Paris (Mme. Chevé's brother). G.

Chevillard, Camille (Paris, 1859-1923, do.), son of the following. French composer, trained in part at the Paris Conservatory, but largely self-taught, from 1886 assistant-conductor of the Lamoureux Concerts and from 1897 Lamoureux successor as chief (marrying his daughter), from 1907 professor at the Conservatory and from 1913 concertmaster at the Opéra. In 1903 he took the Prix Chartier for chamber-music and was lately president of the Chamber-Music Society. He was an Officer of Public Instruction and member of the Légion d'Honneur. Wrote a piano-quintet, 2 quartets and a trio, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, a Ballade Symphonique, the symphonic poem Le Chêne et le Roseau, a Fantaisie Symphonique, incidental music for Schuré's La Roussalka, piano-variations and an Étude Chromatique, and some songs with orchestra. In 1887 he assisted at the first rendering of Lohengrin in Paris. G.

Chevillard, Pierre Alexandre François (Antwerp, 1811-1877, Paris). Noted Belgian 'cellist, from 1859 teacher at the Paris Conservatory and the founder in 1835 of the Société des Derniers Quatuors de Beethoven, the pioneer chamber-music society in France. G.

Chiaromonte, Francesco (Castrogiovanni, 1809-1886, Brussels). Sicilian operatic tenor and composer, pupil of Ragusa, Raimondi and Donizetti, from 1845 professor at the Naples Conservatory and conductor at San Carlo, in 1848 was imprisoned as a revolutionist and in 1850 banished, going thence to Genoa, Milan, Paris and London, becoming chorusmaster in the Italian Opera at the last two, from 1862 singing-teacher in Brussels and from 1871 professor in the Conservatory. Wrote 8 operas (1844-55), including Caterina di Cleve, 1850, the oratorio Hiob, 1884, a mass and a Méthode de Chant.

Chickering, Jonas (New Ipswich, N. H. 1798-1853, Boston). Eminent American piano-maker, trained in Boston by Osborn from 1818, from 1823 in business independently, the firm becoming Chickering & Mackay in 1829 and Chickering & Sons about 1850. Besides giving attention to every detail of technical improvement he was especially notable for his introduction of the full metal plate for squares in 1837 and for grands in 1843, as also for his early development of the upright. He took out numerous patents and his instruments acquired a national reputation which his sons made international. G. A.

Chickering & Sons. Piano-makers in Boston (see preceding article). Jonas Chickering's sons were Thomas E. (1824-71), C. Frank (1827-91) and George H. (1830-96), of whom the second was the ablest. In 1867 he became a member of the Légion d'Honneur, at the time when the firm won first prize at the Paris Exposition. Since 1908 the business has formed part of the American Piano Company of New York. G. A.

Chignell, Richard (Romsey, 1882). English baritone and composer, trained at the Royal College of Music, London, and by C. W. Clark. Has written 2 symphonic poems, a Sérénade Humoresque for orchestra, a violin-concerto and Romanza, 2 scenes for baritone from Heine's Nordsee and the opera Romeo and Juliet (prelude given 1912). He was soloist with the Sheffield Choir on a world-tour.

Child, William (1606-1697). 17th C. G.

Chilesotti, Oicare (Bassano, 1848-1916, do.) Able Italian musicologist, trained (in law) at Padua University, working at Milan, where he has long been a voluminous contributor to the Gazzetta Musicale and other periodicals. He was an enthusiast on the revival of the lute-music of the olden time, and gave numerous lectures (illustrated) on the subject in several Italian cities, besides editing a great Biblioteca di Rarità Musicali, 9 vols. from 1883, with monographs on a 15th-century lute-book (1890), on the lutenists of the 16th century (1891) and on 16th-century canzonets (1896). Author also of I Nostri Maestri del Passato, 1882, Saggio sulla Melodia Popolare del XV secolo, 1889, Di Besardo e del suo Thesaurus Harmonicus, 1886, Sulle Gamme e suoi Suoni di Combinazione, 1898, Note circa alcuni Liutisti Italiani, 1902, and L'Evoluzione nella Musica, 1911, etc., with an essay on tablatures in Lavignac's Encyclopédie and some translations from Schopenhauer. He has published a modern version of Roncalli's guitar-caprices (1881). G.

Chiostri, Luigi (Florence, 1847-1894, do.) In 1866-80 violist in Becker's Florentine Quartet and a favorite teacher.

Chipp, Edmund Thomas (London, 1823-1886, Nice). English organist, variously employed in London from 1843, at Belfast from 1862, and from 1866 at Ely Cathedral. Mus.D. of Cambridge University in 1860. Wrote the oratorio Job, a cantata, etc. G.

Chitz, Arthur (Prague, 1882). Bohemian student of music-history, educated as a technical engineer at Prague and Dresden (Ph.D. at Prague), becoming lately teacher at Dresden. Has written several essays upon various points in Beethoven's first period, as well as a dissertation on the Capelle of Emperor Rodolf II.

Chladni, Ernst Florens Friedrich (Wittenberg, 1756-1827, Breslau). Noted Saxon physicist (originally trained in law at Leipzig, with degree in 1780), who from 1785 made important researches in acoustics and spent much effort upon novel instruments ('Euphon,' 'Clavicylinder') that were more ingenious than serviceable. Besides several detached essays on sound-phenomena (1787-1801, '27'), wrote the important treatise Die Akustik, 1802, with later Beiträge, '17, '21, and two Nachrichten of the Clavicylinder (1800, '37). His studies are the basis of modern scientific acoustics. Autobiography in Cäcilia, 1827. Memoirs by Bernhardt, 1856, Melde, 1866, and Kohlschütter, 1897. G.

Chollet, Jean Baptiste Marie (Paris, 1798-1892, Nemours). French operatic tenor (originally baritone), trained at the Paris Conservatory, from 1818 appearing in the provinces and at Brussels (also in 1832-35), in 1825-32 and 1835-44 at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, and then at various places (Hague, Paris, London) till 1872. Though his voice was imperfectly developed, his skill and versatility as an actor made him popular, so that he sang at the premières of a long list of works by Hérold, Halévy, Adam, Auber and Balfe, including Fra Diavolo (1830), Zampa (1831), Le Postillon de Longjumeau (1836), Le Roi d'Yvetot (1842), etc. G.

Chop, Max (Greussen, 1862). Thuringian critic, working mostly at Berlin. Besides writing 2 piano-concertos, 2 orchestral suites, a piano-trio, etc., author of Zeitgenössische Tondichter, 2 vols. 1888-90, biographies of Bungert (1899 and 1916), Delius (1907) and Verdi (1913), analyses of Liszt's symphonic poems and of the music-dramas of Wagner and Bungert, Wagner im Spiegel d. Kritik seiner Zeit, 1906, and several Führer, as for music-history or for operas (both 1912), etc. He is an enthusiast upon Bungert and since 1911 has edited Der Bund, the organ of the Bungert Society. He has often used the pen-name 'M. Charles.'

Chopin, Frédéric François (n. Warsaw, [Feb. 22] 1810-1849 [Oct. 17], Paris). Extraordinary Polish pianist and composer, son of a French teacher who came to Warsaw about 1787 and a mother of good Polish family. He had a fair education in the Warsaw Gymnasium and excellent musical training from the Bohemian Zywny and the Silesian Elsner, developing so rapidly that he played a concerto of Gyrowetz in public when but eight. In 1825 he published his first composition and from that time also appeared more or less in concerts. In 1828 he visited Berlin and in 1829 Vienna, thus beginning acquaintance with the musical world. In 1830, after farewell concerts at Warsaw, he started for Paris, with visits on the way at Breslau, Dresden, Prague, Vienna, Munich and Stuttgart. From his arrival in 1831 he became a social and artistic favorite in Parisian circles, speedily securing contact with important musicians there and abroad. Schumann had already hailed him in 1831, and he now began relations with Mendelssohn, Berlioz, Liszt and many others. Until 1835 he often appeared as virtuoso, but after that time only occasionally and chiefly to introduce new works. He had many pupils among the French and Polish aristocracy, and was constantly adding to his list of compositions, mostly for piano alone, but including a piano-trio (1833), the concertos (1833, '36) and the Krakowiak and the Polonaise with orchestra (1834, '36).

Early in 1837 began his connection with Mme. Dudevant ('George Sand'), with whom he spent the winter of 1838-39 in Majorca and many summers at Nohant. In 1838 he had a severe illness and from that time began to develop the consumption that ultimately cut short his career. In 1847 took place the separation from Mme. Dudevant. Their relation remains one of the curiosities of history, as the contrast between her coarse and aggressive temperament and Chopin's extreme refinement was extreme.

Although much worn in health, in 1848, on the eve of the Revolution, he visited England, giving some recitals and concerts there and in Scotland. Early in 1849 he returned to Paris, where some months later he died. The funeral at the Madeleine was an imposing ceremony (including the singing of Mozart's Requiem) and the burial was at Père-Lachaise.

As a player, he was not only intuitively master of all ordinary dexterities, but peculiarly gifted in bringing out pianistic effects that were novel, especially in the treatment of lace-like decorations, the extension of chord-effects through arpeggiation and the like, and the development of extremely telling variations of tone-color. Though usually preferring dreamy and pathetic passages, he had the capacity for intense passion and majestic power on occasion. His instinct was essentially that of a poet, but balanced by a delicate and acute intellectuality. As a rule, he was not successful as the interpreter of others' works, but was unique in the rendering of his own. In early life he was noted for striking improvisation. With him begins the modern conception of piano-playing, with its flexible manipulation, its facile conquest of technical difficulties, its development of sonority and color by means of dextrous treatment of the pedals, the study of every device of 'pathetic' or discriminative dynamics and its liberation of rhythm through the use of the tempo rubato.

As a composer, he is notable among the greater musicians because of the rather small number of works produced and the fact that by far the largest part of them belong wholly to one field. But the breadth of content and the variety of mood and manner in them imply a scope of high musicianship that links him with the greatest masters. His genius was eminently romantic in essence, and its poetic sentiment was heightened both by his strong Polish sympathies and by his growing physical disability. His sentimentality often verges upon the morbid, but is held in check by an innate impulse toward the noble and the beautiful. To an extraordinary degree the peculiar quality of his genius has seemed to correspond with a universal artistic craving for expression, so that his works possess a persistent charm for hearers and players of all lands and classes. Although he seldom essayed forms that require either extended structural elaboration or the use of concerted forces, within the limited field of his choice he exhibited remarkably original powers in lyric and rhythmic form, in the extension of harmonic procedure and in the marshalling of elements for the maximum of artistic impression.

A summary of his about 200 works is as follows (opus-numbers in brackets):

Concerted Works

Piano with orchestra: Concertos in E min. [11] (1833) and F min. [21] (1836); Variations on 'Là ci darem'; [2] (1830); Krakowiak in F [14] (1834); Polonaise in E-flat [22] (1836); Fantaisie on Polish airs [13] (1834).

Piano-trio in G min. [8] (1833).

Piano with 'cello: Sonata in G min. [65] (1847); Introduction and Polonaise in C [3] (1833); Duo Concertant in E on themes from Robert le Diable (1833). Two pianos: Rondeau in C [73] (1828).

For Piano Solo

Sonatas: in C min. [4] (1828), in B-flat min. [35] (1840), in B min. [58] (1845).

Allegro de Concert in A [46] (1841).

Scherzos: in B min. [20] (1835), in B-flat min. [31] (1837), in C-sharp min. [39] (1840), in E [54] (1843). Rondos: in C min. [1] (1825), in F [5] (1827), in E-flat [16] (1834).

Nocturnes: in B-flat min., E-flat and B [9] (1833), in F, F-sharp and G min. [15] (1834), in C-sharp min. and D-flat [27] (1836), in B and A-flat [32] (1837), in G min. and G [37] (1840), in C min. and F-sharp min. [48] (1841), in F min. and E-flat [55] (1844), in B and E [62] (1846), in E min. [72] (1827).

Ballades: in G min. [23] (1836), in F [38] (1840), in A-flat [47] (1841), in F min. [52] (1843).

Impromptus: in A-flat [29] (1837), in F-sharp min. [36] (1840), in G-flat [51] (1843).

Berceuse in D-flat [57] (1845).

Barcarolle in F-sharp [60] (1846).

Variations on 'Je vends des scapulaires' [12] (1833), (or Largo) from the Hexameron (1841).

Mazurkas: in F-sharp min., C-sharp min., E and E-flat min. [6] (1832), in B-flat, A min., F min., A-flat and C [7] (1832), in B-flat, E min., A-flat and A min. [17] (1834), in G min., C, A-flat and B min. [24] (1835), in C min., B min., D-flat and C-sharp min. [30] (1837), in G-sharp min., D, C and B min. [33] (1838), in C-sharp min., E min., B and A-flat [41] (1840), in G, A-flat and C-sharp min. [50] (1847), in B, C and C min. [56] (1844), in A min., A-flat and F-sharp min. [59] (1846), in B, F min. and C-sharp min. [63] (1847), in G, G min., C and A min. [67] (1835-49), in C, A min., F and F min. [68] (1830-49), in A min. (1842).

Polonaises: in C-sharp min. and E-flat min. [26] (1836), in A and C min. [40] (1840), in F-sharp min. [44] (1841), in A-flat [53] (1843), in A-flat [61] (1846), in D min., B-flat and F min. [71] (1827-29).

Waltzes: in E-flat [18] (1834), in A-flat, A min. and F [34] (1838), in A-flat [42] (1840), in D-flat, C-sharp min. and A-flat [64] (1847), in F min. and B min. [69] (1829-30), in G-flat, F min. and D-flat [70] (1830-43), in E (1829), in E min.

Bolero in C [19] (1834).

Tarentelle in A-flat [43] (1841).

Ecosaises in D, G and D-flat [72] (1830).

Marche Funèbre in C min. [72] (1829).

Fantaisies: in F min. [49] (1841), in C-sharp min. [66] (1834).

Études: in C, A min., E, C-sharp min., G-flat, E-flat min., C, F, F min., A-flat, E-flat and C min. [10] (1833), in A-flat, F min., F, A min., E min., G-sharp min., C-sharp min., D-flat, G-flat, B min., A min. and C min. [25] (1837), in F min., A-flat and D-flat (1840).

24 Préludes [28] (1839), in C-sharp min. [45] (1841).

Vocal Works

17 Polish songs [74].

Of the several comprehensive editions of the above works those of Joseffy (15 vols.) and Friedmann (12 vols.) are notable. Breitkopf & Härtel issue a Thematiches Verzeichnis, 1870 (2d ed. 1888, with full bibliography).

The Chopin literature is very extensive, including formal biographies, several collections of letters, innumerable books, articles and essays of critical estimate. Memoirs by Karasowski, 2 vols. 1877 (4th ed. 1914), Schucht, 1879, Niggli, 1879, Audley, 1880, Niecks, 2 vols. 1888, Willeby, 1892, Huneker, 1900, Hadden, 1902, Hoesick, 2 vols. 1903 (2d ed. 3 vols. 1912), Leichtentritt, 1905, Poirée, 1906, Opieski, 1909, 1912, Redenbacher, 1911, Weissmann, 1912 (2d ed. 1914), Ganche, 1914, and Scharlitt, 1919. Among analytical works special note is due of Kelly, Chopin the Composer, 1913. G.

Chorley, Henry Fothergill (in Lancashire, 1808-1872, London). English critic, in 1833-71 on the staff of the Athenæum, besides wide travels. Author of Musical Manners in France and Northern Germany, 3 vols. 1841, Modern German Music, 2 vols. 1854, Handel Studies, 1859, Thirty Years' Musical Recollections, 2 vols. 1862, Autobiography, etc., 2 vols. 1873, National Music of the World, 1880 (3d ed. 1912), the last two edited by Hewlett, a musical novel (1866), some cantata-librettos and translations of the texts of Faust, Zampa, etc. G.

Choron, Alexandre Étienne (Caen, 1772-1834). French theorist and author, self-taught for the most part, from 1805 engaged in music-publishing in Paris, from 1812 promoter of choir-schools and other enterprises, in 1816-17 director of the Opéra, then founded the Institution de Musique Classique et Religieuse, which was influential until 1830, educating many noted musicians. Author of works on the principles of the Italian school (1804, '08), a Dictionnaire Historique des Musiciens (with Fayolle), 2 vols. 1810-11, several text-books in plain-chant and a cappella singing (1811-18), an edition of Francœur's Traité Générale des Voix et des Instruments d'Orchestre, 1813, translations of treatises on composition by Albrechtsberger and Azopardi (1814-30), and an unfinished Manuel Complet de Musique, ou Encyclopédie Musicale (with Lafage), 8 vols. 1836-38. In these works and through his Institution he laid the foundation for modern French musical pedagogy. Memoirs by Lafage, 1834, Réty, 1873, Carlez, 1882, and Vauthier, 1909. G.

Choudens, Antony (Paris, 1849-1902, do.), son of Antoine de Choudens, the publisher. French composer of the operas Graziella, 1877, and La Jeunesse de Don Juan, several Essais Symphoniques, a set of 20 songs, piano-pieces, etc.

Choudens fils. A firm of music-publishers in Paris, founded in 1845 by Antoine de Choudens

(d. 1888), who was succeeded by his son Paul. They have published important editions of Berlioz, Gounod, Reyher, Lalo, Bruneau, etc. G.

Chouquet, Adolphe Gustave (Havre, 1819-1886, Paris). French writer, from 1840 teaching in New York and from 1860 in Paris, becoming in 1871 keeper of the collection of instruments at the Conservatory and contributing many articles to various periodicals. Published a Histoire de la Musique Dramatique en France, 1873, Le Musée du Conservatoire, 1875, and a catalogue of the collection, besides cantata-texts. G.

Chovan, Koloman (Szarvas, 1852). Hungarian pianist and composer, trained at the Vienna Conservatory and University, in 1876-89 teacher in the Horák Institute there and then head of the piano-section of the Pest Academy. Has written about 50 notable piano-works, including a 4-hand sonata, 4 Hungarian Rhapsodies, Hungarian and Rumanian Dances, etc., with many études and pedagogical pieces, besides a piano-trio, a violin-Romanza and Rondo, etc.

Christ, Wilhelm (Geisenheim, 1831-1906, Munich). Hessian philologist, in 1860-1902 professor at Munich University. Author of Metrik d. Griechen u. Römer, 1874, Gesch. d. griech. Literatur, 1888, and Grundfragen d. melischen Metrik d. Griechen, 1902, with shorter works that bear upon the development of Byzantine music.

Christensen, Alfred Ferdinand (Randers, 1856). Danish pianist, taken in childhood to England, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, since 1883 teaching at Leeds. Has written the opera Belphegor, the cantatas The Discontented Maidens and Kenilworth, violin-sonatas, trios and songs.

Christiani, Adolf Friedrich (Kassel, 1836-1885, Elizabeth, N. J.). Hessian pianist, in London from 1855, then in America at Poughkeepsie, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, from 1877 in New York and from 1880 at Elizabeth. Wrote The Principles of Expression in Pianoforte-Playing, 1886. A.

Christmann, Johann Friedrich (Ludwigsburg, 1752-1817, n. do.). Württemberger clergyman, educated at Tübingen, from 1783 at Heutingsheim. Wrote an able Elementarbuch der Tonkunst, 2 parts, 1782, '90, and articles for musical journals, besides editing a chorale-collection (with Knecht), for which he composed many melodies. He played on several instruments. G.

Chrysander, Friedrich (Lübtheen, 1826-1901, n. Hamburg). Mecklenburger editor and musicologist, educated at Rostock University (Ph.D. 1852), in 1868-71 and 1875-82 editor of the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung at Leipzig, in 1884-95 (with Spitta and Adler) of the Vierteljahrschrift für Musikwissenschaft, in 1863 and '67 of the Jahrbuch für musikal. Wissenschaft, and from 1856 the indefatigable promoter (with Gervinus) of the Deutsche Händelgesellschaft. For the Zeitung he wrote many articles, some historical and some controversial (against modern tendencies), and with Gervinus completed a monumental edition of Handel's works (100 vols. 1859-94), based upon the most elaborate original research, the work being supported by aid from the Hanoverian and Prussian governments and from 1864 executed at Hamburg under his own mechanical supervision. He also wrote pamphlets on the minor mode in folk-song and on the oratorio (both 1853), edited an edition of Bach's clavier-works (4 vols. 1856), as well as the Denkmäler der Tonkunst, to which Joachim and Brahms also contributed. His lifelong enthusiasm for Handel, while extremely fruitful, led to undue bias against some older and many modern composers. His extensive biography of Handel (in part, 1858-67) has since his death been continued by Seiffert. Notices by Fleischer in the I. M. S. Zeitschrift, 1901, Volkert in the Musical Times, 1901, Kretzschmar in Peters' Jahrbuch, 1902, and Adler in Bettelheim's Jahrbuch, 1904. G.

Chrysanthos, Archbishop of Durazzo (Albania). Author of two works on Byzantine church-music (1821, '32), in which he revolutionized the notation-system to its great improvement.

Church Company, The John, of Cincinnati, was established in 1854 as a music-publishing business by John Church. Since 1908 piano-making has been added, and the Company now controls the Everett and Harvard pianos. A.

Chvála, Emanuel (Prague, 1851). Bohemian critic, pupil of Jos. Förster and Fibich, writing for the Dalibor and the Politik. Has written Ein Vierteljahrhundert böhmischer Musik, 1887, an orchestral Sinfonietta, a piano-quintet, etc.

Chwatal, Franz Xavier (Rumburg, 1808-1879, in the Tyrol). Bohemian teacher at Magdeburg (from 1835) and composer of many salon-pieces for piano, 2 methods and men's quartets. G.

Chybinski, Adolf (Cracow, 1880). Able Polish musicologist, trained at the Munich Conservatory and University (Ph. D. 1908), with theory under Thuille. Since 1912 he has been lecturer at Lemberg University. Author of numerous monographs and articles upon points in the history of music in Poland, besides works on Chopin and Delacroix (1907) and on Bach (2 vols. 1913), with Beiträge zur Gesch. des Takt-schlagens u. Dirigierens, 1912. He has worked with Opieski on a general history of Polish music and also translated Hausegger's Musik als Ausdruck (1913).

Ciaja, Azzolino Bernardino della (1671-?). 17th C. G.

Ciampi, Legrenzio Vincenzo (Piacenza, 1719-?). Italian composer, from 1748 with an Italian company in London. Wrote nearly 25 operas (1737-73), including Bertoldo alla Corte, 1749 (1762, London), and Didone, 1754, church-music, chamber-music and harpsichord-sonatas. G.

Cianchettini, Pio (London, 1799-1851, Cheltenham), son of the pianist Veronica Cianchettini, née Dussek. Italian-English pianist, pre-cociously developed and playing in public at five, composing at ten and soon after associated with the singer Catalani as composer and director. Wrote 2 piano-concertos, fantasias, variations, considerable vocal music, including a cantata on a text from Paradise Lost and 60 Italian notturni for 2-4 voices. G.

Cibber, Susanna Maria, née Arne (London, 1714-1766, do.). Eminent English actress, making her début in 1732 as an operatic contralto and long continuing to be known as a competent singer. Handel wrote the solos in The Messiah and Samson for her. G.

Ciconia, Johannes. 15th C.

Cifra, Antonio (1575-1638?). 17th C. G.

Cilèa, Francesco (Palmi, 1866). Able Italian composer, trained at the Naples Conservatory, where he made his mark with chamber-works and a first opera, taught there in 1890-91, in 1897-1905 was professor at the Florence Istituto, from 1913 director of the Palermo Conservatory and since 1916 of that at Naples. Has written the operas Gina, 1889, La Tilda, 1892, L'Arlesiana, 1896 (revised, 1898), Adriana Lecouvreur, 1902, and Gloria, 1907, a Poema Sinfonica, 1913, an orchestral suite (1887), a piano-trio (1886) and a 'cello-sonata (1894). G., A.

Cimarosa, Domenico (Aversa, 1749-1801, Venice). Distinguished Italian composer, trained at the Conservatorio di S. Maria in Naples, appearing as writer of an oratorio and an opera while still a student, till 1781 lived at Naples and Rome alternately, then elsewhere in Italy, in 1789-92 was court-composer at Petrograd, sojourned for a year at Vienna, in 1793-99 was again in Naples, was there arrested for revolutionary sympathies, at first condemned to death, but finally banished, and died at Venice on the way to Russia. His fertility was enormous—about 75 operas, 500 works during three years at Petrograd, etc.—but his genuine invention as a melodist and his gift of symmetry and delicacy in ensemble-writing seemed inexhaustible. He excelled in comedy, but was also strong in opera seria. He was Paisiello's chief rival in the Italian field and is often compared with Mozart. His greatest triumph, with Il Matrimonio Segreto in 1792, was secured at Vienna, when he was court-director for Leopold II, succeeding Salieri. It is probably unfortunate that none of his works except this has remained in general musical knowledge. From his many operas may be named La Stravaganza del Conte, 1772, La Finta Parigina, 1773, L'Italiana in Londra, 1774, Il Fanatico per gli Antichi Romani, 1777, Il Matrimonio per Raggio, 1779, Cajo Mario, 1780, Artaserse, 1781, Il Convito di Pietra, 1782, La Ballerina Amante, 1782, Il Pittore Parigino, 1783, L'Olimpiade, 1784, L'Impresario in Angustie, 1786, Giannina e Bernardone, 1788, La Vergine del Sole, 1791, Il Matrimonio Segreto, 1792, Le Astuzie Femminili, 1794, Gli Orazi e Curiazj, 1794, and Semiramide, 1799. In addition, he wrote the oratorios Giuditta, 1770, Absalon, 1782, and Il Sacrificio d'Abramo, 1786, many masses, including 2 Requiems, and other church-music, several cantatas, a few harpsichord-sonatas, etc. Memoirs by Tari, 1875, Cambiasi, 1901, Hirschfeld, 1901, and Polidoro, 1902. G.

Cipollini, Gaetano (Tropea, 1857). Italian composer, pupil of Coppà. Has written the melodrama Gennerello, 1891, the operetta Ai Bagni di Mare, 1892, the comedies Il Piccolo Haydn, 1893, and Ninon de Lenclos, 1895, and the opera Simeta, besides many songs and piano-pieces.

Cirri, Giovanni Battista (Forlì, ?1740-?). Italian composer, long resident in London, finally returning to Italy. Wrote 2 quartets, string-trios, a 'cello-concerto, 'cello-sonatas and duets, etc.

Cisneros, Eleonora de, née Broadfoot (New York, 1880). Gifted American operatic mezzosoprano, pupil of Mme. Murio-Celli, Jean de Reszké, Maurel, Trabadello and Lombardi, first appearing in 1900 and since 1902 constantly engaged in many different countries, including South America and Australia. In 1906-08 she was at the Manhattan, New York, and since 1910 has been identified with the Chicago Opera Company. In 1909 she sang at the première of Strauss' Elektra in Italy. In 1901 she married Count Francesco de Cisneros at Havana. A.

Claassen, Arthur (Stargard, 1859-1920). Prussian conductor and composer, trained at the Weimar Music School, from 1880 theater-conductor at Göttingen and Magdeburg, from 1884 head of the Arion Society, New York, as well as of the Liederkrantz and many festivals, and since 1910 choral and orchestral conductor at San Antonio, Tex. Has written the symphonic poem Hohenfriedberg, an orchestral suite, a Waltz-Idyll for strings and other works for orchestra, the choral Festival Hymn and The Battle, and many part-songs and songs, including the prize-work Der Kamerad. A.

Clagget, Charles (Waterford, ?1755-1820, London). Irish violinist, employed in Dublin till 1776 and then busy in London with a long list of ingenious inventions for improving the intonation of many different instruments—violin, horn, organ, etc., including a keyboard-instrument with thirty-nine tones to the octave. His various devices were exhibited in 1791 and described in his Musical Phenomena, 1793. G.

Clapisson, Antoine Louis (Naples, 1808-1866, Paris). French-Italian violinist and composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory, where he was professor from 1861 and keeper of the instrument-collection, much of which came from his private collection (catalogue, 1866). He was admitted to the Légion d'Honneur in 1847 and to the Académie in 1854. Wrote over 20 operas (1838-60), including La Promise, 1854, and La Fanchonette, 1856, over 200 songs, part-songs, etc. G.

Clapp, Philip Greeley (Boston, 1888). American composer, trained at Harvard University (Boott Prize in 1907, Ph.D. 1911) and under Schillings, from 1911 taught in the vicinity of Boston, from 1915 was music-director at Dartmouth College, and since 1919 has been professor at the State University of Iowa. Has written symphonies in E min. (1911), E-flat (1916) and A (1919), the tone-poems Norge, 1908, and A Song of Youth, 1910, the orchestral prelude In Summer, 1913, stage-music for the Amherst Pageant (1920), a string-quartet in C min. (1909), a Dramatic Poem for trombone and orchestra (for the new Sax 7-valve instrument), songs and part-songs. A.

Clari, Giovanni Carlo Maria (1669-1754). 17th C. G.

Clark, Frederick Horace (1860-1917, Zurich). American pianist, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory and of Deppe, long resident near Berlin. Wrote a series of extravagant essays on piano-playing and piano-music (1885-1914).

Clark, Frederick Scotson (London, 1840-1883, do.). English clergyman and organist, extensively trained by Sargent, E. J. Hopkins, at the Royal Academy, London, and in Leipzig and Stuttgart, began as organist in 1854, in 1865 started a music-school in London which later became the London Organ School, and in 1878 was English organist at the Paris Exposition. Wrote about 400 organ- and about 100 piano-pieces, many of which have had much popularity, besides vocal music. G.

Clark, J. Moir (Aberdeen, 1863?). Scottish composer, pupil of Prout and various German teachers. Has written a Scotch Suite for orchestra, 1895, a piano-quintet in F (1892), a suite for piano and flute (1893), piano-variations (1889), etc. G.

Clarke, Hugh Archibald (n. Toronto, 1839). Canadian organist and able theorist, pupil of his father, from 1859 in Philadelphia, continuing as organist till 1897, since 1875 professor in the University of Pennsylvania (Mus.D. 1886). Has written music for Aristophanes' Acharnians (1886) and for Euripides' Iphigenia in Tauris, the oratorio Jerusalem, 1891, a piano-quartet, several violin-sonatas, some songs, text-books in harmony, counterpoint, organ-playing, etc., a Dictionary of Musical Terms, 1896, Music and the Comrade Arts, 1899, and Highways and Byways of Music, 1901, besides the fanciful Scratch Club. A.

Clarke, James Hamilton Smea (Birmingham, 1840-1912, Banstead). English organist and composer, trained at Queen's College, Oxford, and organist there from 1866, and from 1872 at St. Peter's in London (South Kensington). director for various theaters and theatrical troupes, as from 1878 at the Lyceum Theatre (with Irving) and from 1893 with the Carl Rosa Company. Wrote 2 symphonies, 6 overtures, a piano-concerto, string-quartets, a piano-quartet, 6 organ-sonatas and many pieces, incidental music to several Shakespeare and many other plays, many operettas and short comedies, the cantata Praise, the 8-part anthem The Lord is my Light (prize, 1864) and much other church-music, school-cantatas, part-songs and songs—about 400 works in all.

Clarke, James Peyton (1808-1877, Toronto), father of Hugh above. Scottish organist, active in Edinburgh from 1829, came to Canada in 1835, from 1840 was in Toronto, in 1845 becoming instructor in the University, conducted choral societies and was long organist at St. James Cathedral. Mus. D. of Toronto University in 1856. In 1848 wrote the 8-part anthem Arise, O Lord. A.

Clarke, Jeremiah (?1670-1707). 17th C. G.

Clarke-Whitfield, John (Gloucester, 1770-1836, n. Hereford). English organist, pupil of Hayes, from 1789 organist at Ludlow, from 1794 at Armagh Cathedral, from 1799 at Trinity and St. John's Colleges, Cambridge, and from 1820 at Hereford Cathedral, besides being professor at Cambridge from 1821. Mus.D. of Dublin University in 1795 and of Cambridge in 1799. Wrote the oratorio The Crucifixion and the Resurrection, 1822, 4 vols. of services and anthems (1805), a harp-concerto, piano-sonatas, etc., and edited Handel's vocal works (17 vols. 1809). G.

Clarke, William Horatio (Newton, Mass. 1840-1913, Reading, Mass.). Able American organist from 1856, first in Dedham and Boston, from 1871 at Dayton, O., and at Indianapolis, and in 1878-87 at Tremont Temple, Boston. He was an expert upon organ-construction and from 1890 had a unique music-chapel at his home in Reading. Author of An Outline of the Structure of the Pipe-Organ, 1877, The Organist's Retrospect, 1896, and Standard Organ-Building, 1913, besides instruction-books and collections of organ-pieces. A.

Clarus, Max (Mühlberg, 1852). Saxon conductor and composer, pupil of his father and the Berlin Inst. für Kirchenmusik, from about 1875 conductor at various theaters, from 1882 at the court-theater, Brunswick, and from 1890 court-director, besides conducting choral societies. Has written the operas Des Königs Rekrut, 1889, and Prinzessin Ilse, 1895, the fairy-operas Der Wunschpeter, 1910, Hans Däumling, 1911, and Der Zwerg Nase, 1912, several ballets, the choral works Fürstengruss, Die Wacht vor Samoa, Festgesang, etc.

Clasing, Johann Heinrich (Hamburg, 1779-1829, do.). North German teacher and composer at Hamburg, pupil of Schwencke. Wrote the operas Micheli und sein Sohn, 1806 (sequel to Cherubini's Wasserträger), and Welcher ist der Rechte?, 1811, the oratorios Belzazar and Die Tochter Jephthas, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, a 'cello-fantasia, etc. He also edited an edition of Handel's works with piano.

Class, Franklin Morris (New York, 1881). American physician (M.D. 1907) and composer, pupil of J. K. Paine at Harvard, long on the staff of the Bellevue Hospital, New York, and prominent in the MacDowell Club. Has written a string-quartet, pieces for violin, 'cello and flute, a large number of piano-pieces and about 30 songs. A.

Claussen, Julia (Stockholm, 1879). Swedish operatic soprano, trained at the Royal Academy, Stockholm, and at the Royal Academy, Berlin, first appearing from 1903 at Stockholm, from 1913 at London, Paris, Stuttgart and with the Chicago Opera Company, and since 1917 at the Metropolitan, New York, with extensive concert-tours in the United States. Her fine voice has made her notable in some 30 rôles. A.

Clausz-Szarvady, Wilhelmine (Prague, 1834-1907, Paris). Eminent Bohemian pianist, pupil of the Proksch Institute, Prague, beginning tours in 1849 and soon settling in Paris, where she became famous as a thoughtful and self-effacing interpreter, especially of Bach and Beethoven, securing general recognition in Germany and England. In 1857 she married the author Friedrich Szarvady (d. 1882).

Clavé, José Anselmo (Barcelona, 1824-1874, do.). From 1851 noted promoter of men's singing-societies in Spain and conductor of their annual festivals (from 1860). Wrote some zarzuelas and many choruses and songs.

Clavijo del Castillo, Bernardo (?-1626). 16th C.

Clay, Frédéric (Paris, 1838-1889, Great Marlow). English-French composer, pupil of Molique and Hauptmann, from 1859 writing a long series of extremely effective operettas, including Court and Cottage, 1862, Constance, 1865, Ages Ago, 1869, Happy Arcadia, 1872, Don Quixote, 1875, The Merry Duchess, The Golden Ring, both 1883, etc., incidental music to Twelfth Night and Orlana, the cantatas The Knight of the Cross, 1866, and Lalla Rookh, 1877, and many popular songs. G.

Clegg, Edith. Able English contralto, trained at the Guildhall School, London, and by Klein and Bouhy, appearing first in concert and festival and from 1906 in opera, when she sang at the première of Liza Lehmann's Vicar of Wakefield, and later touring in Germany in song-recitals.

Clegg, John (Dublin, 1714-1750?, London). Irish violinist, pupil of Dubourg and G. B. Bononcini, playing a concerto of Vivaldi's in London when but nine and remaining one of the best players in England till 1744, when he became insane. G.

Clemens, Charles Edwin (Devonport, 1858). English organist, trained at the Royal College of Music, London, having already served as organist since 1869. From 1889 he taught at the Klindworth Conservatory in Berlin and played at the English Chapel and as organist to the Dowager Empress Victoria. From 1896 he was organist at St. Paul's in Cleveland, going thence in 1911 to the Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church. From 1899 he lectured at Western Reserve University, soon becoming organist and professor (Mus.D. 1916). Has published instruction-books for the organ and written a text-book in harmony. A.

Clemens, Clara (Elmira, N. Y. ). American contralto, but first trained as pianist by Moszkowski and Leschetizky. Her début as singer was at Florence in 1904, but for some years her career was checked by ill-health. Since 1912 she has sung much in concert in America and Germany. In 1909 she married the pianist Gabrilowitch. A.

Clemens non Papa. See Clément, Jacques.

Clément, Edmond (Paris, 1867). Eminent French operatic tenor, pupil of Warot, appearing first in 1889 at the Opéra-Comique, where he remained till 1910, with many engagements throughout Europe. In 1909-10 he sang at the Metropolitan, New York, then with the Boston Opera Company, and in 1913 made a concert-tour of the United States and Canada. In 1915 he was wounded in the World War, but while convalescing gave many concerts for war-charities. While at the Opéra-Comique he assisted at the premières of numerous works, including Bruneau's L'Attaque du Moulin (1893), Saint-Saëns' Phryné and Hélène (1893, 1904), Godard's La Vivandière (1895), Dubois' Xavière (1895), Erlanger's Le Juif Polonais (1900) and Vidal's La Reine Fiamette (1908), and his répertoire includes all the leading French and Italian operas. A.

Clément, Félix (Paris, 1822-1885, do.). French music-historian, in 1843-60 teacher at the Collège Stanislas, in 1849 had charge of musical services at the Sainte-Chapelle and later was musical director at the Sorbonne and the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. He wrote many articles for Didron's Annales Archéologiques and was author of a Histoire Générale de la Musique Religieuse, 1861, Les Musiciens Célèbres depuis le 16<sup>e</sup> Siècle, 1868 (2d ed. 1879), the valuable opera-catalogue Dictionnaire Lyrique, 1869, with 4 supplements to 1881 (revisions by Pougin, 1897, 1904), and a Histoire de la Musique, 1885, besides text-books in plain-song, singing and the organ. He also edited several collections of church-music (from 1843). G.

Clement, Franz (Vienna, 1780-1842, do.). Eminent Austrian violinist, precociously appearing when but nine and touring as far as London in 1790, soon made court-violinist in Vienna, in 1802-11 conductor at the new Theater an der Wien, then toured for several years in Russia and Germany (for a short time Weber's successor at Prague), in 1818-21 returned to the Vienna Opera and then toured with the singer Catalani. His technique was flawless and his musicianship extraordinary. Beethoven wrote his violin-concerto for him and he was the first to perform it (1806). Wrote 6 violin-concertos, many concertinos and pieces, a piano-concerto, 3 overtures, an opera, a melodrama, etc. G.

Clément, Jacques [Clemens non Papa] (?1500-1557?). 16th C. G.

Clementi, Muzio (Rome, 1752-1832, Evesham). Eminent Italian pianist, pupil of Buro-ni, Cordicelli, Carpani and Santarelli, beginning as organist in 1761. In 1766 he appeared as pianist and became the protégé of Peter Beck-ford, an English gentleman, who took him to England, where from 1770 he became famous as both player and composer, and in 1777-80 directed the Italian Opera (as harpsichordist). In 1781 he made a tour on the Continent (on Dec. 24 competing with Mozart before the Emperor at Vienna). In 1782-1802 (except for a visit to Paris in 1785) and again from 1810 (except for a sojourn at Leipzig in 1820-21) he lived in London. The interval of 1802-10 was occupied by a brilliant trip to Russia with his pupil Field and varied experiences in Germany and Italy. After 1810 he gave up public playing. He had early begun to engage in the business of piano-making and lost heavily in the failure of Longman & Broderip in 1798, but at once established a new firm, which, under the name of Clementi & Co. (later Collard & Collard), had great success. He was a distinguished teacher, forming players like Field, Cramer, Kalkbrenner, Moscheles and others, and both by precept and by example founded the strong, virile school of piano-playing which Beethoven and his successors established and made standard. In this and other ways he powerfully aided the rise of the piano in place of the harpsichord as the typical keyboard-instrument. As a composer, he wrought out the keyboard-sonata to its complete and final form through a series of works of much originality and power, though presently overshadowed by those of masters of greater absolute inspiration. Some of his sonatas, however, are not likely to be forgotten, while his great series of études remain in universal use.

His works include several symphonies (only 2 published) and overtures, over 100 piano-sonatas, of which about 45 include accompaniments by violin, 'cello or flute, 2 duos for two pianos, 6 4-hand duets, a large variety of fugues, toccatas, variations, caprices, etc., a collection of Points d'orgue (op. 19), an Introduction à l'Art de Toucher de Piano (opp. 42-43), and the famous Gradus ad Parnassum, 1817 (op. 44). Editions of the sonatas have been published by Breitkopf & Härtel and by Holle (edited by Julius Knorr), and Von Bülow edited 50 of the études from the Gradus, while Vogrich has issued a complete edition in progressive order. Memoirs by Frojo, 1878, and Unger, 1913, besides sketches by Clément, Chilesotti, Shedlock, etc. A large biography by Parabeni is promised. G.

Clementi & Co. See preceding article and also Collard & Collard.

Clérambault, Louis Nicolas (Paris, 1676-1749, do.). French organist, pupil of Raison and his successor at St-Jacques, later at St-Sulpice. Wrote sets of pieces for clavecin and for organ, and 5 books of Cantates Françaises, with and without instruments (1710-26).

Clérice, Justin (Buenos Aires, 1863-1908, Toulouse). Argentine composer, working mostly in Paris, pupil of the Conservatory there. Wrote the comic operas Le Meunier d'Alcala, 1887, Figarella, 1887, Le 3<sup>e</sup> Hussards, 1894, the ballet-opera Au Temps Jadis, 1905, the ballet Au Pays Noir, 1891, and some lighter works.

Clérycy Blanc du Collet, Marie (n. Nice, 1850). French vocal teacher, specializing in the treatment of injured voices and publishing several manuals (from 1895).

Cleve, Halfdan (Kongsberg, 1879). Norwegian pianist, pupil of his father, Winter-Hjelms, Raif and the Scharwenkas. Has written 4 piano-concertos and other pieces, besides some songs.

Cleve, Johannes de (1529–1582). 16th.C.

Clicquot, François Henri (Paris, 1728–1791, do.). Important French organ-maker, in partnership with Pierre Dallery from 1765. His largest instruments were at St.-Sulpice, Paris, and the Poitiers Cathedral. G.

Cliffe, Frederick (n. Bradford, 1857). English organist, pianist and composer, beginning organ-playing at eleven at Wyke and in 1873–76 organist for the Bradford Festivals, then studying at the National Training-School, London. From 1883 he was professor at the new Royal College, and from 1901 at the Royal Academy. In 1888–94 he was organist for the Bach Choir and also accompanist at Drury Lane and Covent Garden. Since 1898 he has made long tours in Australia, South Africa and America. Has written symphonies in C min. (1889) and E min. (1892), the symphonic poem Cloud and Sunshine, 1890, a violin-concerto (1896), the contralto scena The Triumph of Alcestis, 1902, a choral Ode to the North-East Wind, 1905, some church-music and songs. G.

Clifford, James (1622–1698). 17th.C. G.

Clifton, Chalmers (Jackson, Miss. 1889). American composer, trained at the Cincinnati Conservatory and Harvard University (Sheldon Fellow, 1912–14) and by d'Indy. In 1914 he conducted the Peterboro Festival and in 1915 the Lexington Pageant (composer of the music used), in 1915–17 was conductor of the Boston Cecilia Society and in 1919, while engaged in war-work at the University Union in Paris, directed a concert of American music at the Conservatory. Has written a suite for trumpet and orchestra, a violin-sonata, 2 piano-sonatas, the poem The Poppy for tenor and orchestra, and some songs, besides contributing articles to the Boston Transcript and to The Art of Music. A.

Clippinger, David A. (in Ohio, 1860). American singing-teacher and conductor, pupil of Wheeler, F. W. Root, Hey, Behnke and other London teachers, since 1887 active in Chicago, both as a leading teacher and from 1900 as founder and director of the Chicago Madrigal Club and other choral organizations. Author of several text-books and many articles on singing. A.

Clive, Catherine [Kitty], née Raftor (London, 1711–1785, Twickenham). From 1728 till her retirement in 1769 a favorite English soprano in light opera, mostly at Drury Lane under Colley Cibber and Garrick. In 1742 she sang in the first performance of Handel's Samson. From 1734 for a short time she was the wife of the barrister George Clive. G.

Closson, Ernest (n. Brussels, 1870). Belgian historian, assistant-curator of the instrument-collection at the Brussels Conservatory and from 1913 professor of history, specializing in folk-music (using the pen-name 'Paul Antoine'). Author of Siegfried de Wagner, 1891, Grieg, 1892, La Musique et les Arts Plastiques, 1897, Le Manuscrit dit 'des Basses Dances', 1912, Notes sur la Chanson Populaire en Belgique, 1913, Esthétique Musicale, 1921, and many important articles, besides collections of Belgian provincial songs (1905) and old French carols (1911).

Clough-Leighter, Henry (Washington, D.C. 1874). American organist, pupil of G. W. Walter, E. Kimball, Zander and Anger, from 1888 playing at various churches in Washington, in 1899–1901 in Providence, and since 1901 in editorial work in Boston, besides playing at Milton. Has written 5 cantatas, the lyric suite The Day of Beauty, the odes Lasca, Recessional and The Christ of the Andes, many other choral works, song-cycles and songs, besides pedagogical works. A.

Cluer, John (?–1729, London). English printer and engraver, who improved music-type and perhaps invented engraving on tin plates. He issued fine editions of Handel's Suites de Pièces (1720), 9 operas (1724–29) and 12 overtures. G.

Coates, Albert (Petrograd, 1882). English-Russian conductor, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, director of the opera at Elberfeld from 1906, in 1910 one of the conductors at Dresden and at Mannheim (with Bodanzky), from 1911 chief conductor at the Petrograd Opera, besides serving as guest-conductor elsewhere, and in 1914 becoming conductor of the Philharmonic in London, of the Symphony Concerts and at Covent Garden. In 1923 he was engaged to take charge of the new Symphony Orchestra in Rochester, N. Y. Has written the opera Sardanapalus, 1916.

Coates, John (n. Bradford, 1865). Eminent English operatic tenor, pupil of J. C. Bridge and Shakespeare, making his début in 1894 and singing first in light opera, but from 1901, after study with Bouhy, in grand opera as well. He has since been recognized as the chief tenor in both opera and concert in England, besides constantly appearing in Germany, in South Africa and Australia (with several trips to the United States). Among the premières at which he has assisted are Stanford's Much Ado about Nothing (1901) and Bantock's Omar Khayyâm (1906–09), besides many important performances of Elgar's Dream of Gerontius (from 1902). He has been a foremost promoter of opera in English and is as successful in song-recitals as upon the stage. G.

Cobb, Gerard Francis (in Kent, 1838–1904, Cambridge). English composer, from 1863 fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, musically trained at Dresden, much identified with music in Cambridge University. Wrote a piano-quintet, a violin-suite, the piano-suite Voices of the Sea, Psalm 62 for soli, chorus and orchestra, 1892, 7 services and other church-music, prize glees and madrigals, songs, etc.

Cocchi, Claudio. 17th C.

Cocchi, Giocchino (Padua, ?1715–1804, Venice). Italian composer from 1735, working first at Rome and Naples, from 1753 maestro at the Conservatorio degli Incurabili, but with a long sojourn in London in 1757–73, at first as composer to the Opera. Wrote 12 operas (1743–61), mostly comic, and some church-music. G.

Coccia, Carlo (Naples, 1782–1873, Novara). Italian composer, trained at the Naples Conservatory, was early accompanist for Joseph Bonaparte's concerts, from 1808 produced many operas throughout Italy, from 1820 was at Lisbon and in 1823–28 at London, where for a time he taught in the new Royal Academy, and, except for another visit to London in 1833, was then in Italy, in 1840 succeeding Mercadante as maestro at Novara. Wrote nearly 40 operas (1808–41), of which 4 were produced at Lisbon and 2 at London (Maria Stuarda, 1827), many masses and much other church-music, considerable chamber-music and some cantatas. His most popular opera was Clotilde, 1815. Memoir by Carotti, 1873. G.

Coccon, Nicolò (Venice, 1826–1903, do.). Able Italian organist and composer, pupil of Fabio, publishing motets as early as 1841 and becoming in 1856 organist and in 1873 director at S. Marco in Venice, besides from 1882 teaching at the Liceo Marcello (Franchetti one of his pupils). Wrote 30 masses, 8 Requiems, much other church-music, the oratorio Saul, the sacred melodrama Manasse in Babilonia, 1877, the operas Zaira, 1884, and Uggero il Danese, the operatta I Due Orangotani, 1879, etc.—in all over 400 works.

Cochlaeus, Johannes (1479–1552). 16th C.

Cocks & Company, Robert. A prominent music-publishing firm in London, founded in 1823 by Robert Cocks (1796–1887), with whom from 1868 were associated his two sons. From 1887 the business was continued by Robert M. Cocks, but in 1898, on his retirement, was purchased by Augener & Co. G.

Coclicus, Adrian Petit (?1500–1563?). 16th C.

Coelho, Manoel Rodriguez. 17th C.

Coenen, Franz (Rotterdam, 1826–1904, Leyden). Eminent Dutch violinist, pupil of Molique and Vieuxtemps, from 1848 toured in the West Indies and South America with Herz and Ernst Lübeck, from about 1855 settled in Amsterdam, becoming court-violinist, teacher in the Conservatory and till 1895 its director, founder and leader of a noted Quartet, etc. Wrote a symphony, string-quartets and other chamber-music, Psalm 32 and several cantatas. G.

Coenen, Johannes Meinardus (The Hague, 1824–1899, Amsterdam). Dutch bassoonist, conductor and composer, trained at the Hague Conservatory, player in the court-orchestra, from 1851 theater-conductor at Amsterdam, in 1857–65 followed Van Bree as director of the Felix Meritis and then till 1896 devoted himself to the music at the Palais voor Volksvlijt, where he developed a famous orchestra. Wrote a Chant de Fête, 1875 (at 600th anniversary of Amsterdam), and other cantatas, incidental music for several plays, the opera Bertha en Siegfried, ballet-music, 2 symphonies, several overtures, concertos for clarinet and for flute, a quintet for piano and wind, etc. G.

Coenen, Louis (Rotterdam, 1856–1904, Amsterdam). Dutch pianist, trained by his father, Sikemeyer and Liszt and at the Berlin Hochschule, from about 1880 court-pianist at The Hague and from 1895 teacher at the Amsterdam Conservatory. Wrote 4-hand piano-sonatas, characteristic pieces, etc.

Coenen, Willem, (Rotterdam, 1837–1918), brother of Franz above. Dutch pianist, working first in South America and the West Indies, from 1862 recitalist and teacher in London, and since 1909 retired at Lugano, Italy. While in England he introduced the chamber-works of Brahms. Has written the oratorio Lazarus, 1878, cantatas, masses, piano-pieces and songs. G.

Coerne, Louis Adolphe (Newark, N. J. 1870–1922, Boston). American composer, trained mostly at Harvard University (Ph.D. 1905) and the Munich Conservatory, from 1894 organist and conductor at Buffalo, from 1897 at Columbus, in 1902–03 taught at Harvard and in 1903–04 at Smith College, in 1907–09 director at Troy, N. Y., in 1909–10 director at Olivet College in Michigan (Mus.D. 1910), from 1910 professor at the University of Wisconsin and from 1915 at Connecticut College, besides considerable editorial work for the Ditson Company. Wrote over 500 works in a great variety of forms, including the operas A Woman of Marblehead, 1897, and Zenobia, 1905 (Bremen), the melodrama Sakuntala, the operetta The Maiden Queen, several sacred and secular cantatas, the symphonic poem Hiawatha, 1893, and 2 orchestral tone-poems, overtures, an orchestral fantasia and a Jubilee March for military band, 1893, the ballet Evadne, 1894, a string-suite, a concerto for organ, strings, horns and harp, 1892, 2 violin-concertos (Romantic and Swedish, 1904), a string-quartet and piano-trios, a trio for flute, 'cello and harp, many pieces for piano, violin or organ, and many songs, besides an a cappella mass for six voices, and many anthems and part songs. Author of a notable work on The Evolution of Modern Orchestration, 1908. A.

Cœurroy, André [Jean Belime] (Dijon, 1891). French literary scholar and composer, in music pupil of Reger and the École Normale Supérieure in Paris, from 1919 fellow of Paris University and from 1920 associated with Prunières on the Revue Musicale. His specialty is the relation between music and literature, on which he has already published several important studies touching France, England and Germany. He is also preparing a monograph on Weber. Has written several chamber-works.

Cogan, Philip (Cork, 1750-1834, Dublin). Irish organist, in 1780-1806 at St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin, and then a teacher there. Mus.D. of Dublin Univ. Wrote a concerto for strings and wind, violin- and piano-sonatas, anthems, etc. G.

Cohen, Hermann (Koswig, 1842). In 1875-1912 professor of philosophy at Marburg University, a leader in the Neo-Kantian movement. Among his writings are books on Kant's aesthetics (1889, 1912), and on Die dramatische Idee in Mozarts Operntexten, 1916.

Cohen, Jules Émile David (Marseilles, 1830-1901, Paris). French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (three first prizes, 1850-54). from 1865 professor there in ensemble-singing and from 1877 chorusmaster at the Opera. Wrote several operas, including Les Bleuets, 1867, choruses for several dramatic works, masses, oratorios, 2 symphonies and some overtures, cantatas and choral works, many piano-pieces and songs. G.

Cohen, Karl Hubert (n. Aix-la-Chapelle, 1851). Rhenish priest, trained musically at Aix and Ratisbon, from 1876 teacher at the latter, from 1879 director at Bamberg Cathedral and in 1887-1910 at Cologne Cathedral. Has written much church-music and a manual of ritual singing (1901).

Colasse, Pascal (1649-1709). 17th C. G.

Colbran, Isabella Angela (Madrid, 1785-1845, Bologna). Noted Spanish operatic soprano, pupil of Pareja, Marinelli and Crescentini, from 1806 widely known in Italy, though after 1815 increasingly unable to sing in tune, but otherwise a competent artist. In 1822 she married Rossini and appeared more or less in his works (as in London in 1824). G.

Colburn, George (Colton, N. Y. 1878). American teacher and conductor, trained at the American Conservatory, Chicago, from 1903 teacher there, and since 1915 municipal director at Winona, Wis. Has written the symphonic poem Spring's Conquest, 1913, music for several masques and pageants, a piano-quartet and trio, etc. A.

Cole, Belle (Chautauqua, N. Y. 1845-1905, London). American contralto, taught by her father, from about 1865 active and increasingly successful in concert, both in America and from 1888 mostly in England, though with world-wide tours. A.

Cole, Blanche (Portsmouth, 1851-1888, London). English operatic soprano, appearing from 1869, from 1879 with her own troupe or with the Carl Rosa Company. In 1868 she married the pianist Sidney Naylor. G.

Cole, Rossetter Gleason (Clyde, Mich. 1866). Talented American teacher and composer, trained at the University of Michigan, in Berlin and elsewhere, from 1892 professor at Ripon College (Wisconsin), in 1894-1901 at Grinnell College (Iowa), in 1907-09 at the University of Wisconsin, and in 1901-07 and since 1909 teaching in Chicago, where he is also organist. Since 1908 he has had charge of summer-courses at Columbia University, New York. In 1902, '09 and '10 he was president of the Music Teachers' National Association. Has written about 100 works, marked by skill and refinement, including the overture Pioneer, 1919, the orchestral Symphonic Prelude, 1915, and The Passing of Summer, 1888, a violin-sonata, The Ballad for 'cello and orchestra, 1909, 3 melodramas, including King Robert of Sicily, 1906 (often given by Bispham), the cantatas The Broken Troth, 1907 (women's voices) and The Rock of Liberty, 1920 (for the Pilgrim Tercentenary), many effective organ- and piano-pieces, besides songs. In 1917 he edited Vol. vi of The Art of Music (Church and Choral Music). His wife, née Fannie Louise Gwinner, is an excellent pianist, and has translated Marx' Introduction to Beethoven's Piano-forte Works (1895) and edited Music for the Child-World. A.

Coleman, Charles (?-1664). 17th C. G.

Coleman, Edward (?-1669). 17th C. G.

Coleridge-Taylor, Samuel (London, 1875-1912, n. do.). English composer of part-Negro descent, trained at the Royal Academy and by Stanford, developing as a gifted composer from 1894 and from 1898 being violin-teacher at the Academy. In 1911 he joined the faculty of the Guildhall School. In 1904 and '06 he visited the United States, conducting concerts of his music in many cities. His about 100 works include

For Orchestra—Symphony in A min. 1896; symphonic poem Toussaint l'Ouverture; Ballade in A min. 1898; African Suite; Solemn Prelude, 1899; Idyll, 1901; Scenes from an Everyday Romance, 1900; Symphonic Variations on an African Air, 1906; Petite Suite de Concert; the rhapsodic dance Bamboula, 1910; 4 Novelletten (strings); incidental music for Herod (1900), Ulysses (1901), Nero (1902), Faust (1908), Othello and The Forest of Wild Thyme; Hiawatha ballet; Ethiopia Saluting the Colours; Hemo Dance; violin-concerto in G min. 1911.

Chamber-Works—Nonet in F min. for piano, strings and wind; piano-quintet; quintet in F-sharp min. for clarinet and strings; the string-quartet Fantasiestücke, 1895; Ballade in D min., Legend, Romance in G, all for violin and orchestra; Hiawathan Sketches, Gipsy Suite, Valse Caprice, Romance, Danse Nègre, Ballade in C min., 4 African Dances, all for violin and piano; a few pieces for violin alone.

Choral Works—the oratorio The Atonement, 1903; the cantatas The Gitanos (women's voices), The Song of Hiawatha, 1898-1900 (Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast, The Death of Minnehaha, Hiawatha's Departure), The Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé, 1901, Meg Blane, 1902, Kubla Khan, 1906, Endymion's Dream, Bonbon Suite, 1909, Sea-Drift (a cappella) and A Tale of Old Japan; 5 Choral Ballads, 1905 (from Longfellow); Morning and Evening Service in F; 7 anthems (from 1892).

The opera Thelma and the operetta Dream-Lovers. For Piano—Suite de Pièces; 2 Moorish Tone-Pictures; 4 Characteristic Waltzes; 3 Humoresques; Nourmahal's Song and Dance; Moorish Dance; 3 Cameos; 24 Negro Melodies; Scènes de Ballet; Forest-Scenes; Valse Suite, Scenes from an Imaginary Ballet; 2 Impromptus. Also 3 Impromptus for organ.

For Solo Voice—The Soul's Expression (4 Songs), Moorish Ballad, Waiting, Red o' the Dawn, all with orchestra; 6 Children's Songs; 6 African Romances;

In Memoriam (3 rhapsodies); 6 American Lyrics; 6 Sorrow-Songs; 2 Song-Albums; about 25 detached songs.

15 Part-Songs and 3 Duets.

The extraordinary originality and power of characterization in his music has given him a unique place, not simply as the most gifted of Negro composers, but as a modern tone-poet. Memoirs by M. Byron, 1912, and Sayers, 1915, with the anonymous Golden Hours, 1913. G. (Taylor), A.

Colin, Pierre Gilbert. 16th C.

Colla, Giuseppe (Parma, ?1730–1806, do.). Italian composer, court-director at Parma. Wrote 6 operas (1763–74). In 1780 he married the soprano Agujari. G.

Collard & Collard. The London piano-makers who succeeded to the business originally founded in 1798 by Clementi. F. W. Collard (1772–1860) seems to have been associated with the latter from the first. He was followed by C. L. Collard (d. 1891) and he in turn by J. C. Collard. G.

Colles, Henry Cope (London, 1879). English critic, trained by Parry, Davies and Alcock and at Oxford University, from 1905 on the staff of the London Academy and Times and since 1919 teacher of music-history at the Royal College. Author of a life of Brahms (1909), a text-book in history (3 vols. 1912–16) and a memorial of Parry (1920), besides many articles.

Collet, Henri (Paris, 1885). French author and composer, pupil of Joseph Thibaut, Barès and Olmeda [with special studies at Madrid of Spanish literature]. Author of Le Mysticisme Musical Espagnol au XVII<sup>e</sup> Siècle, 1913, a life of Vittoria (1914), and other historical essays in periodicals. Has also written the symphonic poem El Escorial, a piano-quintet, a string-quartet and songs.

Colombani, Orazio. 16th C. G.

Colombi, Giuseppe (1635–1694). 17th C.

Colonna, Giovanni Paolo (1637–1693). 17th C. G.

Colonne, Judas [called Édouard] (Bordeaux, 1838–1910, Paris). Eminent French violinist and conductor, trained at the Paris Conservatory (two first prizes) and from about 1860 leader of its orchestra, in 1873–75 founder and conductor of the Concert National, which later developed into the far more important Concerts du Châtelet. These later gained their original eminence by taking up works by younger composers and especially by carefully reviving the larger works of Berlioz, and thus became the leading orchestral institution of Paris. Colonne was conductor at the Exposition of 1878, at the Opéra in 1892 and often guest-conductor outside of France (England from 1896, New York, 1905). G.

Colyns, Jean Baptiste (Brussels, 1834–1902, do.). Belgian violinist, pupil of the Brussels Conservatory, from 1850 teaching there and playing in the opera-orchestra, and from 1888 in similar work at Antwerp. He made many concert-tours on the Continent and in 1873 to England. In 1876 he was invited to important posts at Dresden, but declined. Wrote the operas Sir William, 1877, and Capitaine Raymond, 1881, and violin-pieces. G.

Combarieu, Jules Léon Jean (Cahors, 1859–1915, Paris). Able French musicologist, professor at the Collège de France. Author of Les Rapports de la Poésie et de la Musique au point de vue de l'Expression, 1893 (doctor's dissertation), L'Influence de la Musique Allemande sur la Musique Française, 1895, Études de Philologie Musicale, 3 parts (a critique of Westphal's theory of rhythm as applied to modern music, on the origin of the neumes, and a study of unedited passages in music from the Aeneid), 1896–98, Éléments de Grammaire Musicale Historique, 1906, La Musique, ses Loix, son Évolution, 1907 (10th ed. 1913), Histoire de la Musique, 3 vols. 1912–15, besides many articles in various journals. G.

Comes, Juan Bautista (1568–1643). 16th C.

Comettant, Jean Pierre Oscar (Bordeaux, 1819–1898, n. Havre). Facile French critic, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, appearing first as a pianist, but, after spending 1852–55 in the United States, critic for the Siècle and author of many books, such as Trois Ans. aux États-Unis, 1858, a life of Adolphe Sax (1860), Musique et Musiciens, 1862, La Musique, chez les Différents Peuples du Monde, 1869, a life of François Planté (1874), etc., with many articles uncollected. Wrote some vocal and instrumental music, and managed a music-school. G.

Commer, Franz (Cologne, 1813–1887, Berlin). Rhenish church-musician, pupil of Rungenhagen, A. W. Bach and Marx, early employed in the library of the Inst. für Kirchenmusik, from 1846 choirmaster at the Hedwigskirche and singing-teacher at various schools. In 1844 he was one of the founders of the Tonkünstlerverein and in 1868 of the Gesellschaft für Musikforschung, becoming its president. From 1845 he was a member of the Academy and received several titles of honor. He is best known as the editor of four great collections of the music of the 16–18th centuries in nearly 50 vols. Wrote much church-music, including 16 masses, 2 cantatas and music for Aristophanes' Frogs and Sophocles' Electra, all for men's voices and orchestra, incidental music for Clothilde Montalvi, part-songs and songs. G.

Compère, Loyset (?–1518). 15th C. G.

Concone, Giuseppe (Turin, 1810–1861, do.). Italian singing-teacher, from 1832 in Paris and from 1848 court-organist at Turin. Wrote over 160 solfeggi and vocal studies of much skill and grace, besides other vocal works and 2 operas, including Un Episodio del San Michele, 1836. G.

Coninck, Jacques Félix de (Antwerp, 1791–1866, Brussels). Belgian pianist, trained at Antwerp and the Paris Conservatory (harmony-prize, 1813), from 1818 at Antwerp, in 1825 Malibran's accompanist in America, then in Paris and later again at Antwerp, where he founded and led the Société d'Harmonie. Wrote piano-concertos, sonatas, etc.

Conradi, August (Berlin, 1821-1873, do.). Prussian composer, pupil of Rungenhagen, from 1843 organist in Berlin, from 1849 theater-director at Stettin, Düsseldorf and Cologne, besides various engagements at Berlin. For a time he was in the Liszt circle at Weimar. Wrote a ballet (1847), the operas Rübezahl, 1849, Muza Haireddin, 1855, Die Braut des Flussgottes, 1859, Die Sixtinische Madonna, 1864, Knecht Ruprecht, 1865, So sind die Frauen, 1867, Im Weinberge des Herrn, 1867, and Das schönste Mädchen im Städtchen, 1868, besides 5 symphonies, overtures, chamber-music and many arrangements. Memoir by Kruse (in Musik, xii).

Conradi, Johann Georg. 17th C. G.

Conradi, Johann Gottfried (Tönsberg, 1820-1896, Christiania). Norwegian conductor, from 1853 active at Christiania, writing music for several plays, part-songs and songs, besides an essay on Norwegian music.

Conried, Heinrich (Bielitz, 1855-1909, Meran). Austrian impresario, originally an actor at Vienna and in 1877 in charge of the Bremen Stadttheater. From 1878 he managed various theaters, mostly in New York, especially from 1882 that in Irving Place, and in 1903-08 was director of the Metropolitan Opera House. His régime was made notable by the American premières of Parsifal in 1903 and of Salome in 1907. A.

Consolo, Federigo (Anconà, 1841-1906, Florence). Italian violinist, pupil of Giorgetti, Vieuxtemps, Fétis and Liszt, favorably known as player till 1884, when a nervous affection forced his retirement. Has written concertos for violin and for piano, Oriental Suites, Hebraic Melodies, etc., besides works on the transcription of the neumes, on the origin of church-music (1897) and on the force of the term 'Selah' (1904).

Constantin, Titus Charles (Marseilles, 1835-1891, Pau). French conductor and composer, pupil of Ambroise Thomas, conductor of various theaters in Paris from 1866, including the Opéra-Comique from 1875. Wrote the comic opera Dans le Forêt, 1872, the ballet Bek, 1867, the cantatas David Rizzio and Le Salut, overtures, etc.

Conti, Carlo (Arpino, 1796-1868, Naples). Italian composer, trained at the Naples Conservatory and by Mayr, in 1846-58 noted teacher of counterpoint at the Conservatory and from 1862 Mercadanti's assistant as director. He was prominent in the Accademia and as member of other societies. Wrote 11 operas (1825-31), including L'Olimpia, 1829, 6 masses, 2 Requiems and songs.

Conti, Francesco Bartolommeo (Florence, 1682-1732, Vienna). Italian theorist and composer, from 1701 court-theorbist at Vienna and from 1713 court-composer. Wrote 16 operas (1706-28), including Don Chisciotte in Sierra Morena, 1719, 9 oratorios, many cantatas and 13 Feste Teatrali or serenades, etc.

Conti, Gioacchino [called Gizzliello] (Arpino, 1714-1761, Rome). Italian artificial soprano, pupil of Gizzi, appearing first at Rome in 1729, then at Naples, London (1736-37, under Handel), Madrid, Lisbon, etc., retiring in 1753. His excellent voice was combined with much artistic feeling. He was of great service to Handel at a critical time in his affairs. G (Gizzliello).

Contino, Giovanni. 16th C.

Converse, Frederick Shepherd (Newton, Mass. 1871). American composer, pupil of Baermann and Chadwick and of the Munich Conservatory, from 1899 teaching at the New England Conservatory, Boston, and in 1901-07 at Harvard University. Has written a symphony in D min. 1898, the symphonic poems or romances The Festival of Pan, 1900, Endymion's Narrative, 1903, The Mystic Trumpeter, 1905, Ormazd, 1912, and Ave atque Vale, 1917, the overtures Youth, 1897, and Euphrosyne, a violin-concerto, incidental music for Mackaye's Jeanne d'Arc, 1906, and for the Masque of St. Louis, 1914, 2 string-quartets, a violin-sonata, 2 Poems for piano and orchestra, an orchestral march, the operas The Pipe of Desire, 1906 (also the first American work to be given at the Metropolitan, New York, 1910), and The Sacrifice, 1911, the cantatas Job, 1907, and The Peace-Pipe, 1916, the contralto scena Hagar in the Desert, 1908, the baritone ballad La Belle Dame sans Merci, 1902, the choral Laudate Dominum and Serenade (both for men's voices), some 4-hand waltzes for piano, a piano-suite, and a few songs. A.

Conversi, Girolamo. 16th C. G.

Conze, Johannes (Lippstadt, 1875). Westphalian composer, trained at the Gregoriushaus in Aix, the Berlin Hochschule and the Gernsheim Meisterschule, since 1911 teacher at the Louise Conservatory and on the staff of the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung. Has written the symphonic fantasy Sappho, 1914, 3 string-quartets, a piano-quartet, sonatas for violin, for 'cello and for organ (on B-A-C-H), the choral works Klage der Ceres and Kolumbus, 4 masses, other church-music, including organ-pieces, men's choruses and songs.

Cooke, Benjamin (London, 1734-1793, do.). English organist, pupil and successor of Pepusch as conductor of the Academy of Ancient Music in 1752. When but twelve he acted as Robinson's deputy at Westminster Abbey, from 1757 was his choirmaster and in 1762 his successor as organist. From 1782 he was also organist at St. Martin-in-the-Fields. Wrote 2 services, about 20 anthems, some organ-pieces, several odes (for the Academy), and many noted glees, canons and catches (prizes from the Catch Club). Of the latter he published a collection in 1775. Mus.D. of Cambridge in 1775 and of Oxford in 1782. In 1784 he was an assistant-conductor at the Handel Commemoration. G.

Cooke, Henry (? -1672). 17th C. G.

Cooke, James Francis (Bay City, Mich. 1875). American editor, pupil of Woodman, Eberhard and the Würzburg Conservatory, from about 1890 teacher and organist in New York and Brooklyn, and since 1907 editor of The Etude in Philadelphia, where he has been prominent in musical and dramatic circles. Author of The Standard History of Music, 1910, Great Pianists upon Piano-Playing, 1913 (reports of conferences), Mastering the Scales and Arpeggios, 1913, Musical Playlets, 1917, Music-Masters Old and New, besides plays, stories and a novel. Mus.D. of Ohio Northern Univ. in 1919. Since 1917 he has been at the head of the Presser Foundation. A.

Cooke, Robert (London, 1768-1814, do.), son of Benjamin above. English organist, in 1793 succeeding his father at St. Martin's and in 1802 becoming also organist at Westminster Abbey, where his career was cut short by sudden insanity and suicide. Wrote a service, an anthem and several songs and glees (Catch Club prizes). G.

Cooke, Thomas Simpson (Dublin, 1782-1848, London). Irish singer and composer, pupil of his father and Giordani, from 1797 theater-conductor in Dublin, from 1813 appeared in London as stage-tenor, after 1815 being steadily engaged at Drury Lane, besides duties as manager or conductor at Covent Garden and elsewhere, and as teacher at the Royal Academy. In 1846-48 he led the Concerts of Antient Music. Wrote about 20 ballad-operas (1814-40), many arrangements of works by others, several glees and catches (Catch Club prizes), and 2 text-books of singing. G.

Coombs, Charles Whitney (Bucksport, Me. 1859). American organist, trained mostly at Stuttgart and Dresden, in 1887-91 organist at the American Church in Dresden, from 1892 at Holy Communion in New York and since 1908 at St. Luke's. Has written 4 sacred cantatas, about 25 anthems and some 75 songs. A.

Cooper, George (London, 1820-1876, do.). Able English organist, pupil of his father (assistant at St. Paul's), whom he succeeded in 1838 at St. Paul's and in 1843 at St. Sepulchre's as well. He also was employed at Christ's Hospital and from 1856 was organist to the Chapel Royal. He was gifted in extemporization and an expert in Bach's works. Published several valuable organ-collections and a method, with some songs. G.

Coperario [John Cooper]. 17th C. G.

Coppet, Edward J. de (New York, 1855-1916, do.). American banker, from 1886 a liberal promoter of chamber-music and in 1902 founder and patron of the famous Flonzaley Quartet. A.

Coppola, Piero (Milan, 1888). Italian opera-conductor, pupil of the Milan Conservatory and for a time active at La Scala and elsewhere in Italy, in 1912-13 at the Monnaie, Brussels, and then in London, but with trips to Scandinavia.

Has written the operas Sirmione and Nicita, 2 orchestral Poemeti, 1914, etc.

Coppola, Pietro [Pier] Antonio (Castrogiovanni, 1793-1877, Catania). Sicilian composer, largely self-taught, working mostly in Italy, but in 1839-43 and from 1860 at Lisbon. Wrote 18 operas (1816-50), including the very popular Nina Pazza per Amore, 1835, Enrichetta di Baienfeld, 1836 (Vienna), Gli Illinesi, 1837, La Bella Celeste degli Spadari, 1837, Inès de Castro, 1842, and Il Folletto, 1843, besides some church-music. His success might have been greater but for the vogue of Rossini. Memoir by his son, 1899. G.

Coppola, Raffaele (Capua, 1854). Italian composer of the operas Demetrio, 1877, Il Cid, 1884, and La Fidanzata di Corinto, 1905.

Coquard, Joseph Arthur (Paris, 1846-1910, Noirmoutier). French lawyer, critic and composer, pupil of Franck, on the staff of Le Monde and Écho de Paris and from 1892 teacher at the Blind Institution. Wrote the operas L'Épée du Roi, 1884, Le Mari d'un Jour, 1886, L'Oiseau Bleu, 1894, La Jacquerie, 1895 (1st act by Lalo), Jahel, 1900, and La Troupe Jolicœur, 1902, the oratorio Jeanne d'Arc, several dramatic scenas, etc. besides De la Musique en France depuis Rameau, 1892 (prize from the Académie). G.

Corbach, Karl (n. Dortmund, 1867). Westphalian violinist, pupil of the Cologne Conservatory, from 1891 court-concertmaster at Sondershausen and teacher in the Conservatory, in 1911 becoming court-director and also head of the Conservatory.

Corbett, Samuel (Wellington, 1852). English organist (blind from childhood), pupil of Stimpson and Macfarren, engaged at Wellington in 1867-74, Bridgnorth in 1875-85, Derby in 1886-92 and then at Bournemouth. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1879. Has written the cantata Bethlehem, Ps. 4, services, anthems, a piano-sonata, etc.

Corbett, William (?1669-1748, London). English violinist, playing in theaters from 1700 and in the Queen's band till 1711, when he went to Rome. In 1714, however, he gave a concert in London and in 1716-47 was enrolled in the court-band, though until 1740 he was still much in Italy, collecting music and many valuable violins. This collection he bequeathed to Gresham College, but, being there declined, it was sold at auction. Wrote incidental music for several plays and many concertos and sonatas for various instruments, publishing a collection of 36 pieces in 1720. G.

Cordans, Bartolommeo (Venice, 1700-1757, Udine). Italian composer, for a time a Franciscan monk, from 1735 maestro at Udine Cathedral. Wrote 3 operas (1729-31) an oratorio (1727) and apparently an incredible amount of church-music, most of which he ordered to be burnt at his death, though at Udine there are said to be 60 masses, 100 Psalms and many motets still preserved.

Cordella, Giacomo (Naples, 1783-1847, do.). Italian composer, pupil of Fenaroli and Paisiello, long teacher in the Naples Conservatory, director at San Carlo and maestro at various convents. Wrote about 20 operas (1807-26), 2 cantatas (1841, Milan), masses and much other church-music.

Corder, Frederick (London, 1852). English composer, trained at the Royal Academy (Mendelssohn Scholar, 1875-79) and of Ferdinand Hiller, from 1880 conductor at the Brighton Aquarium, from 1886 professor at the Royal Academy, London, and also from 1889 curator there, besides engaging in much literary work. Has written the operas Morte d'Arthur (1878), Nordisa, 1887, and Ossian (1905), several operettas, incidental music for The Tempest (1886), The Termagant (1898) and The Black Tulip, the cantatas The Cyclops, 1881, The Bridal of Triermain, 1886, The Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé, 1888 and The Sword of Argantyr, 1889, an Empire Pageant Masque, 1910, the biblical scene The Angels (6 choirs), 1911, the 50-part motet Sing unto God, 1912, the choral ode Dreamland, 1883, and, for orchestra, the overtures Ossian, 1882, and Prospero, 1885, the symphonic poem Pippa Passes, 1897, the suites Im Schwarzwald, 1876, and Roumanian, 1887, etc. Author of the texts of most of the above vocal works, text-books in composition (1891, 1909), The Orchestra, 1895 (2d ed. 1902), and a Musical Encyclopedia, 1915. G.

Corder, Paul (London, 1879), son of the above. English composer, pupil of the Royal Academy and since 1907 professor there. Has written the operas Grettir the Strong and Rapunzel, the wordless drama Dross, the overture Cyrano de Bergerac, the orchestral fantasia Morar, the ballet The Dryad, the dance-fantasy The Moon Slave, etc.

Cords, Gustav (Hamburg, 1870). Violinist, pupil of Riemann, in 1894-1911 playing in the opera-orchestra at Wiesbaden and since then president of the Allgem. Deutscher Verband at Berlin. Has written the opera Sonnwendnacht, 1919, the symphonic poems Gudrun and Hellas, 2 overtures, a piano-quartet, etc.

Corfe, Joseph (Salisbury, 1740-1820, do.). English organist, pupil of Stephens, from 1783 singer in the Chapel Royal, in 1792-1804 organist at Salisbury Cathedral, writing church-music and glees, and text-books in singing and harmony. At the Cathedral he was succeeded by his son, Arthur Thomas Corfe (1773-1863), who organized a festival at Salisbury in 1828. Among the many children of the latter were Charles William (1814-1883), organist at Christ Church, Oxford, from 1846 (Mus.D. 1852), and John Davis (1804-1876), organist at Bristol Cathedral in 1825-65. G.

Cornelius, Peter (Mayence, 1824-1874, do.). Gifted Rhenish composer and author, at first trained as an actor, but also pupil of Dehn. From 1852 he was Liszt's helper at Weimar in organizing the New-German movement and in promoting interest in Wagner, especially through able articles in the Neue Zeitschrift. From 1858 he was in Vienna, where in 1861 he met Wagner, in 1865 going with him to Munich, becoming reader to King Ludwig and later professor in the reorganized Conservatory. It was the failure of his Barbier in 1858 through unjust criticism that led Liszt to leave Weimar. Wrote the operas Der Barbier von Bagdad, 1858, The Cid, 1865, and Gunlöd (completed by Lassen), 1892, Trauerchöre for men's voices, and many beautiful songs and duets (Lieder-Cycilus, Weihnachtslieder, Bräutlieder, etc.), being the author of the libretti and most of the song-texts. Author of Lyrische Poesien, 1861, and of important essays, letters, etc., published in 1904-05 (4 vols.). Breitkopf & Härtel issued a complete edition of his compositions in 1905-06. Memoirs by Sandberger, 1887, Kretzschmar, 1890?, Istel, 1904, Hasse, 1904, and Sulger-Gebing, 1908. G.

Cornelius, Peter (n. Fredensborg, 1865). Danish operatic tenor, pupil of Nyrup and Rosenfeld, making his début at Copenhagen in 1892. In 1906 he sang at Bayreuth and in 1907-12 in London, making a special name as a Wagner singer.

Cornell, John Henry (New York, 1828-1894, do.). Able American organist and theorist, trained in New York, Germany and England, from 1848 at St. John's, New York, from 1868 at St. Paul's and in 1877-82 at the Brick Church (Presbyterian). Author of A Primer of Musical Tonality, 1877, The Practice of Sight-Singing, The Theory and Practice of Musical Form (based on Bussler), 1883, Easy Method of Modulation, 1884, a Manual of Roman Chant, The Introit Psalms (original chants), 1871, and a Congregational Tune-Book. Among his translations were Langhans' Gesch.d.Musik, 1886, and Ambros' Die Grenzen d. Musik u. Poesie, 1893. A.

Cornet, Julius (Santa Candida, 1793-1860, Berlin). Tyrolese operatic tenor, pupil of Sallieri, after much success as singer in Austria and Germany became opera-director at Hamburg in 1842, in 1854-58 at the Court Opera in Vienna and then in Berlin. Author of Die Oper in Deutschland, 1849, and translator of operas by Auber, Hérold and Adam. His wife, Franziska, née Passy (1806-1870), was also a well-known stage-singer.

Coronaro, Antonio (Vicenza, 1851), brother of Gaetano and Gellio below. Italian composer of the operas Seila, 1880, and Falco di Calabria, 1901.

Coronaro, Arrigo (Vicenza, 1880), son of the above. Composer of the opera Turridu, 1905.

Coronaro, Gaetano (Vicenza, 1852-1908, Milan), brother of Antonio and Gellio. Italian composer, pupil of Faccio, long professor in the Milan Conservatory. Wrote the operas La Creola, 1878, Malacarne, 1894, and Un Curioso Accidente, 1903, and the choral work Un Tramonto, 1873, besides symphonies and other instrumental music.

Coronaro, Gellio Benvenuto (Vicenza, 1863), brother of Antonio and Gaetano. Italian pianist and composer, appearing as a child in 1871-72 and graduating at the Liceo Rossini in Bologna in 1883. Has written the operas Jolanda, 1883, Claudia, 1895, and Bertoldo, 1910, the dramatic sketch Festa a Marina, 1893, an operetta, 2 masses, a string-quartet, etc.

Corrette, Michel. Probably a Belgian, about 1738 organist at the Jesuit College at Paris. Wrote many pieces for violin, organ and clavecin, masses and motets, a series of methods for various instruments and for singing (about 1735-58), etc., and edited a valuable collection of violin-music.

Corri, Domenico (Rome, 1744-1825, London). Italian music-publisher and singing-teacher at Edinburgh and London, composing 4 operas (1774-1806) and some other music. G.

Corri & Co. Domenico Corri started two publishing enterprises, one in Edinburgh, from 1779 managed by his son, John Corri, the other in London, from 1792 in partnership with his son-in-law Dussek. For a few years both houses had considerable success, but passed into other hands about 1805. G.

Corri-Paltoni, Frances (Edinburgh, 1801-?), niece of Domenico Corri above, Good mezzo-soprano, pupil of Catalani, appearing from 1820 in England, Germany, Italy and Spain. She married the singer Paltoni in Italy. G.

Corsi, Giuseppe. 17th C.

Corsi, Jacopo (?1560-1604). 16th C. G.

Cortecchia, Francesco Bernardo di (?-1571). 16th C. G.

Cortellini, Camillo. 16th C. G.

Cortesi, Francesco (Florence, 1826-1904, do.). Italian singing-teacher and composer, pupil of Rossini, from 1880 at Florence, with many excellent pupils. Wrote the operas Il Trovatore (or La Schiava), 1852, Michaela, 1855, L'Etra, 1857, Almina, 1859, La Dama a Servire, 1859, La Colpa del Cuore, 1870, Mariulizza, 1874, and L'Amico di Casa, 1881.

Cortolezis, Fritz (Passau, 1878). Able Bavarian conductor, trained by Bussmeyer and Thuille, active from 1903 at Schwerin, Berlin, Ratisbon and Nuremberg, from 1907 opera-director at Hamburg, in 1911 assistant to Beecham in London, in 1912 at Berlin and since 1913 court-director at Karlsruhe. Has written the operetta Rosemarie, 1919.

Cortot, Alfred Denis (Nyon, 1877). Eminent French-Swiss pianist, trained at the Paris Conservatory, making his début in 1896 with great success. In 1898-1904 he was absorbed in studies of the Wagnerian dramas at Bayreuth, where till 1901 he was repetitor at the festivals, and in promoting their popularity with the general public of Paris through the medium of a series of concerts which he conducted (1902-04). From 1904 he undertook tours as pianist throughout Europe with great applause, and also formed a Trio (with Thibaud and Casals) of the finest quality. Since 1907 he has been professor at the Paris Conservatory. He is a member of the Légion d'Honneur and the Order of Isabella.

Cossmann, Bernhard (Dessau, 1822-1910, Frankfurt). Eminent Saxon 'cellist, pupil of Espenhahn, Drechsler, Theodor Müller and Kummer, from 1840 playing at the Opéra or Opéra-Comique in Paris, in 1847-48 at the Gewandhaus in Leipzig (where he studied composition with Hauptmann), from 1850 under Liszt at Weimar, in 1866-70 professor at the Moscow Conservatory, and then, after living at Baden-Baden, from 1878 professor at the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt. Besides being a soloist of the first rank, he was a remarkable ensemble-player. G.

Cossoul, Guilherme Antonio (Lisbon, 1828-1880, do.). Able Portuguese 'cellist, from 1861 professor and from 1863 director in the Lisbon Conservatory. Wrote 6 overtures, a piano-trio, pieces for 'cello and for harp, church-music and 3 short comic operas (1850-52).

Costa, Michael Andrew Agnus (Naples, 1808-1884, Brighton). Distinguished Italian (Spanish descent) conductor and composer, pupil of his father (a pupil of Leo) and the Naples Conservatory, producing operas from 1826. In 1829 Zingarelli sent him to England to conduct a work of his (in which, however, through misunderstanding he appeared as tenor). From 1830 he was engaged at the opera at the King's Theatre, London, soon becoming conductor and director. In 1846 he took charge of the Philharmonic Orchestra and also the Italian Opera at Covent Garden, and in 1848 of the Sacred Harmonic Society as well. From 1849 till 1882 he conducted the Birmingham Festivals, besides many other similar festivals. He retired from the Philharmonic in 1854. From 1871 he was director, composer and conductor at Her Majesty's Opera. In 1869 he was knighted. Thus for more than fifty years he held a commanding position in the London musical world. His work as composer included 3 symphonies, the operas Il Sospetto Funesto, 1826, Il Delitto Punito, 1827, Il Carcere d'Ildegonda, 1828, Malvina (or Malek Adel), 1829, and Don Carlos, 1844 (London), the oratorios La Passione, 1825, Eli, 1855, and Naaman, 1864 (both Birmingham), 3 cantatas, a mass, etc. G.

Costa, P. Mario (Taranto, 1858), nephew of the above. Italian composer of chamber-music, an opera (1889), the pantomime Histoire d'un Pierrot, 1893, and many popular songs.

Costantini, Alessando and Fabio. 17th C. G.

Costanzi, Giovanni Battista (Rome, ?-1778, do.). Italian composer, from 1754 maestro at St. Peter's, Rome. Wrote much church-music, 3 oratorios, including San Pietro Alessandrino, 1746, and the opera Carlo Magno, 1729. Some of his motets are in 16 parts for 4 choirs. G.

Cotes, Ambrosio de (?-1603). 16th C.

Cottlow, Augusta (Shelbyville, Ill. 1878). American pianist, pupil of Wolfsohn and Gleason, appearing in Chicago in 1889 and in New York in 1891. In 1896 she studied further with Busoni and Boise at Berlin, and then toured extensively in Europe, returning to America in 1900 and making many tours there. After another sojourn in Berlin, where in 1912 she married Edgar A. Gerst, she again returned to the United States. A.

Cotto [Cotton], John. (11–12th C.) G.

Cottrau, Giulio (Naples, 1836). Composer of the popular Italian operas Griselda, 1878, La Lege Lombarda, 1907 (privately given in 1891 as Imelda), and Cordelia, 1913.

Couperin, Armand Louis (Paris, 1725–1789, do.). Expert French organist, at the court, St.-Gervais, St.-Barthélemy, Ste.-Marguerite and Notre Dame. Wrote harpsichord-sonatas and trios, besides church-music. His wife, née Blanchet, was also a remarkable keyboard-player. She appeared in public in 1810, when past eighty. G.

Couperin, François (1631–1698). 17th C. G.

Couperin, François [called le Grand] (Paris, 1668–1733, do.). Eminent French organist and harpsichordist, son of Charles Couperin and his successor as organist at St.-Gervais, Paris, having previously played at the court-chapel at Versailles since 1693. His historic importance rests upon his original works for the harpsichord, in which for the first time not only was its distinctive style (apart from that of the organ and also from that of choral writing) fully recognized, but a beginning made in various forms of picturesque expression that had not before been much appreciated. Couperin's distinction arose both from his instinctive sense of the technical possibilities of his instrument and from the vigor of his artistic imagination in adapting the French taste for delineative dancing and piquant declamation to keyboard presentation. His publications include 4 Livres de Pièces de Clavecin, 1713, '16, '22, '30, Les Goûts Réunis, ou Nouveaux Concerts, augmentés de l'Apothéose de Corelli en trio, 1717, L'Apothéose de l'Incomparable Lully, L'Art de Toucher le Clavecin, 1717, Les Nations, Sonades et Suites de Symphonies en trio, 4 books, 1726, Leçons de Ténèbres à une et deux voix, and some string-trios and early motets. In the keyboard-works all embellishments are carefully indicated in full, with minute marks as to rendering. See Brahms' edition in Chrysander's Denkmäler and Quittard, Les Couperins, 1913. G.

Couperin, Louis (1630–1665). 17th C. G.

Courboin, Charles Marie (Antwerp, 1886). Able Belgian organist, pupil of Blockx and the Brussels Conservatory (several prizes in 1901–02), from 1902 at Antwerp Cathedral, with many concert appearances in France, England and Germany. In 1904 he came to Oswego, N. Y., and soon went to the First Baptist Church in Syracuse. He has also served in various capacities elsewhere, as municipal organist in Springfield, Mass., in 1917–18, at the Wanamaker Auditoriums in Philadelphia and New York since 1919, and in many recitals besides. In 1919 he produced Widor's 6th Symphony (dedicated to him) with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Stokowski. Has written masses and other choral works and a Toccata. A.

Courtois, Jean. 16th C. G.

Courvoisier, Karl (Basel, 1846). Able Swiss violinist, pupil of David, Röntgen and Joachim, playing at Frankfort from 1871, at Düsseldorf in 1875–76, then conducting choral societies for several years, and since 1885 has been singing-teacher at Liverpool. Has written a symphony, 2 overtures, a violin-concerto, a short book on Die Violintechnik, 1878 (English translation by Krebhiel), an École de la Vélocité, and a method (1892).

Courvoisier, Walter (n. Basel, 1875). Swiss composer (originally educated as a physician, taking his degree in 1900), pupil of Bagge and Thuille, from 1907 teaching in Munich, besides assisting as conductor of the popular concerts of the Kaim Orchestra, and since 1910 professor at the Munich Conservatory. Has written the music-drama Lanzelot und Elaine, 1917, a symphonic prologue to Spitteler's Olympischer Frühling, the orchestral 'lied' Die Muse, the choral works Gruppe aus dem Tartarus, Der Dinurstrom and Das Schlachtschiff Téméraire, and many fine songs.

Coussemaker, Charles Edmund Henri de (Bailleul, 1805–1876, n. Calais). Eminent French jurist and musicologist, musically trained by Pellegrini, Payer, Reicha and V. Lefebvre, from 1831 composing much, but from 1835 engrossed in historical research. Author of Mémoire sur Huchald, 1841, Notices sur les collections . . . de Cambrai, 1843, Histoire de l'Harmonie au Moyen Âge, 1852, Trois Chants Historiques, 1854, Chants Populaires des Flamands de France, 1856, Drames Liturgiques du Moyen Âge, 1861, Les Harmonistes des XII<sup>e</sup> et XIII<sup>e</sup> Siècles, 1864 (see Gerbert), L'Art Harmonique aux XII<sup>e</sup> et XIII<sup>e</sup> Siècles, 1865, Œuvres Complètes d'Adam de la Halle, 1872. Memoir by Desplanques, 1870. G.

Cousser. See Kusser.

Coutagne, Henri (?–1896, Lyons). French physician, author of Gaspard Duifoproucart et les Luthiers du XVI<sup>e</sup> Siècle, 1893, and Les Drames Musicaux de R. Wagner, 1893.

Coward, Henry (Liverpool, 1849). Noted English choral conductor, trained at the Tonic Sol-Fa College, London, but brought up at first as a maker of cutlery in Sheffield and then engaged as a school-teacher, so that he was nearly forty before his professional career began. About 1890 he became famous for his remarkable training of the Sheffield Music Union, with which he made a tour round the world, followed from 1895 by equally fine work as chorusmaster for the new Sheffield Festivals. He also took charge of choral societies in Barnsley, Huddersfield and Chester. Since 1904 he has taught at Sheffield University. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1894. Has written the cantatas Magna Charta, 1882, Queen Victoria, 1885, The Story of Bethany, 1891, The King's Error, 1894, and Heroes of Faith, 1895, besides Tubal-Cain for chorus and orchestra and The Fairy Mirror for women's voices, anthems, etc. In 1904 he was one of the editors of the Methodist Hymn Book. Sketch in Musical Times, Jan. 1902. G.

Coward, James (London, 1824-1880, do.). Able English organist, from 1857 at the Crystal Palace, London, and also for a time of the Sacred Harmonic Society and the Grand Lodge of Freemasons, besides conducting the Western Madrigal Society in 1864-72 and other clubs. Wrote excellent glees, some anthems, organ- and piano-pieces and songs. He was also skillful as an improvisator. G.

Cowen, Frederic Hymen (Kingston, 1852). Distinguished English (Jamaican) conductor and composer, trained by Goss, Benedict and Kiel and at the Leipzig Conservatory, in 1887-92 Sullivan's successor as conductor of the London Philharmonic and again in 1900-07, in 1896-1914 of the Liverpool Philharmonic, also in 1896-99 Hallé's successor at the Manchester Concerts, from 1896 of several series at Bradford, including the Festival, of the Scottish Orchestra from 1900, of the Scarborough Festival in 1899, of the triennial Handel Festivals at the Crystal Palace in 1903, '06, '09, '12 '20, and '23, and of the Cardiff Festivals in 1902, '04, '07 and '10. In 1888-89 he went to Australia to be musical director at the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition. Mus.D. of Cambridge and Edinburgh Univs. in 1900 and 1910. Knighted in 1911. His works include Symphonies—1, in C min. 1869, 2, in F min. 1872, 3, Scandinavian in C min. 1880, 4, Welsh, in B-flat min. 1884, 5, in F, 1887, 6, Idyllic, in E, 1897.

Overtures—in D min. 1866, Festival, 1872 (Norwich), Niagara, 1881, The Butterfly's Ball, 1901.

Other orchestral works—the suites The Language of Flowers, 1880, In the Olden Time (strings), 1883, and In Fairyland, 1896; 4 English Dances in the Olden Style; Sinfonietta in A, 1881; A Fantasy of Life and Love, 1901 (Gloucester); Indian Rhapsody, 1903 (Hereford); several marches, including the Coronation March, 1902 (for Edward VII); Childhood and Girlhood, for small orchestra, 1903.

Piano-concerto in A min. 1839; Concertstück for piano and orchestra, 1900.

Chamber-music—string-quartet in C min. 1866; piano-trio in A, 1865; the suite Flower-Fairies; Réverie for violin and piano (also for orchestra).

Piano-works—sonata; fantasia; allegretto grazioso; Petite Scène de Ballet (4 pieces); many detached pieces.

Operas—Pauline, 1876, Thorgrim, 1890, Signa, 1893, Harold, 1895. Operettas—Garibaldi, 1860, One too Many, 1874. Incidental music to The Maid of Orleans, 1871. The pantomime Monica's Blue Boy, 1917, and the comedy-ballet Cupid's Conspiracy, 1918.

Oratorios—The Deluge, 1878, Ruth, 1887 (Worcester). The Veil, 1910. Sacred cantatas—St. Ursula, 1881 (Norwich), Song of Thanksgiving, 1888 (Melbourne), The Transfiguration, 1895 (Gloucester).

Cantatas—The Rose Maiden, 1870, The Corsair, 1876, (Birmingham), The Sleeping Beauty, 1885 (Birmingham), St. John's Eve, 1889, The Water-Lily, 1893 (Norwich), John Gilpin, 1904. For women's voices—Summer on the River, Christmas Scenes, The Rose of Life, A Daughter of the Sea, Village Scenes, The Fairies' Spring. Also Jubilee Ode, 1897 (for Victoria), Ode to the Passions (Collins), 1898, and Coronation Ode, 1902 (Norwich, for Edward VII).

The Dream of Endymion, for tenor and orchestra, 1897; Nights of Music, duet with orchestra, 1900. Nearly 300 songs. Many part-songs, anthems, etc.

Besides making his place as an extremely skillful conductor and as a dextrous and imaginative composer, excelling in delicate and fanciful delineation, he has written My Art and my Friends, 1913, and the humorous glossary, Music as She is Wrote, 1915. Sketch in Musical Times, Nov. 1898. G, A.

Cowles, Walter Ruel (New Haven, Conn. 1881). American pianist and composer, trained at the Yale School of Music and the Schola Cantorum, Paris, teaching at Newport, R. I., in 1907-10 and at the Yale School since 1911. Has written a piano-concerto (1907), a piano-trio (1916), a violin-sonata (1914), music for the Yale Pageant of 1916, etc. A.

Crabbé, Armand (Brussels, 1884). Belgian operatic baritone, trained at the Brussels Conservatory, in 1904-08 appearing at the Monnaie there, in 1908-10 at the Manhattan, New York, and since 1910 with the Chicago Opera Company, as well as at Covent Garden, London, since 1905 and at Berlin in 1909. In 1904 and later he sang in the local premières of Massenet's Jongleur at Brussels, London, New York and elsewhere in America, and in 1911 created the rôle of Pico in Herbert's Natoma.

Craft, Marcella (Indianapolis, 1880). American soprano, pupil of C. R. Adams, Guagni and Mottino, from 1901 singing in concert throughout New England, from 1902 appeared in opera in Italy, from 1905 at Mayence, from 1907 at Kiel, from 1909 at Munich, and since 1914 variously in the United States, both in opera and in recital. A.

Cramer, Johann Baptist (Mannheim, 1771-1858, London), son of Wilhelm below. Distinguished German-English pianist, pupil of his father, Schroeter, Clementi and Abel, appearing first when but ten and from 1788 beginning extensive tours throughout Europe from London as a center, becoming recognized as one of the foremost players of the time. In 1824, with Addison and Beale, he founded the publishing-firm of Cramer & Co. in London, continuing at its head till 1842. Between 1832 and 1845 he lived mostly abroad, at Munich and Paris, and then retired. As a player he had remarkable expressiveness, supported by great development of both hands equally and of each finger, extreme readiness in sight-reading and extemporization, and absorption in interpretation rather than display. Historically, he was overshadowed by the older Clementi and the younger Hummel, as still more by his near contemporary Beethoven. But he contributed worthily to the general progress of modern pianism, especially on its technical side. Wrote 7 piano-concertos, a piano-quintet, a piano-quartet, over 100 piano-sonatas and many pieces, and, now most notable of all, the Grosse praktische Pianoforte-Schule, 5 parts, containing famous Daily Studies and the monumental 84 Études (selection of 50 edited by Von Bülow). Memoir by Gathy in the Neue Zeitschrift, 1849, and analysis of the Études by Pembaur, 1901. G.

Cramer, Wilhelm (Mannheim, 1745-1799, London). Badense violinist, pupil of the elder Stamitz and Cannabich, in 1761-72 playing in the Mannheim orchestra and then removing to London, where he became director of the King's Band and concertmaster at the Opera, the Pantheon and the Antient and Professional Concerts, being considered the finest soloist in England. He led the orchestra at the Handel Commemorations of 1784 and '87, also at the Gloucester Festival in 1799. Wrote 8 violin-concertos, 12 string-quartets, trios, etc. G.

Cramer & Co. A leading firm of music-publishers in London, founded in 1824 by J. B. Cramer, Robert Addison and T. Frederick Beale and finely developed after 1830. In 1845 Addison was replaced by W. Chappell (till 1861), and from 1863 George Wood became sole owner, followed in 1893 by two nephews and in 1897 by a limited company. Wood extended the business to the making and selling of pianos. G.

Cranz, August. A music-publishing firm in Hamburg and (since 1897) Leipzig, with branches in Vienna, Brussels and London. It was founded in 1813 by August Heinrich Cranz (1789-1870), who was succeeded by his son Alwin and (in 1896) also his grandson Oskar. In 1876 the firm took over the business of Spina in Vienna and in 1886 that of Böhme in Hamburg. Branches were established in Brussels in 1883 and in London in 1890.

Craywinkel, Ferdinand Manuel de (Madrid, 1820-?). Brought up in Bordeaux and pupil there of Bellon. Wrote good church-music, including 6 grand masses, a Stabat Mater, motets, canticles, etc.

Crecquillon, Thomas (? -1557). 16th C. G.

Crescentini, Girolamo (n. Urbino, 1766-1846, Naples). Celebrated Italian artificial soprano, pupil of Gibelli, making his début at Rome in 1783 and soon after at other Italian cities and in London (1786-87). In 1796 he was at Vienna, in 1797-1801 at Lisbon and in 1806-12 at Paris, where he was a favorite of Napoleon and received the Order of the Iron Crown. After this the beauty of his voice deteriorated, and from 1816 he was professor in the Naples Conservatory. He sang at the premières of Zingarelli's Giulietta e Romeo (1796) and Maleagro (1797), Cimarosa's Gli Orazi e Curiazj (1794), Mayr's Alfonso e Cora (1803), etc. Wrote many Ariettes (from 1797) and a vocal method (1811). G.

Creser, William (York, 1844). English organist and composer, pupil of his father and Macfarren, beginning occasional playing at twelve and from 1859 held various positions in York, Grindon, Scarborough and (from 1881) Leeds. In 1891-1902 he was organist at the Chapel Royal (St. James), London, becoming widely known as recitalist and choir-trainer, and since 1902 has been examiner for Trinity College, this last involving visits to different parts of the Empire. Has written an Old English Suite for orchestra, a string-quartet, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, organ-pieces, the oratorio Micaiah, the cantatas Eudora, 1882 (Leeds), The Golden Legend, The Sacrifice of Freia, 1889 (Leeds), Tegnér's Drapa, the operetta Naxine, a mass, 2 Psalms, etc. G.

Cressent, Anatole (n. Paris, 1824-1870, do.). French lawyer, whose will established the Prix Cressent, awarded triennially for the best opera and the best libretto—first awarded in 1875 to Chaumet.

Creutzburg, Harald (Goldingen, 1875). Courlander organist, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory and by Riemann, from 1897 teaching in Riga and in 1906 succeeding Bergner as cathedral-organist, where he has made the choir famous. Has written an orchestral suite and other pieces, organ-pieces, Psalms, motets and songs.

Creyghton, Robert (?1639-1734). 17th C. G.

Crist, Bainbridge (Lawrenceburg, Ind. 1883). American lawyer and composer, pupil of Juon, Emerich and Shakespeare, since 1914 working in Boston as teacher. Has written the orchestral suite Egyptian Impressions, 1915, the dance-drama Le Pied de la Momie, 1914, the string-quartets Japonaise and Clavecin, arias with orchestra, piano-pieces and many striking songs. A.

Cristofori, Bartolommeo (1655-1731). 17th C. G.

Crivelli, Arcangelo (1546-1617). 16th C.

Crivelli, Gaetano (Bergamo, 1774-1836, Brescia). Famous Italian operatic tenor, from 1793 appearing throughout Italy, in 1811-17 at the Italian Opera, Paris, in 1817-18 at London, and then (till 1829) in Italy, though with much less success. He was noted not only for his superb voice, but for his acting and general artistic feeling. His son, Domenico Crivelli (1793-1857), was a singing-teacher in Naples and London, and wrote an opera buffa. G.

Crivelli, Giovanni Battista (? -1682). 17th C.

Croce, Giovanni della (?1557-1609). 16th C. G.

Croes, Henri Jacques de (Antwerp, 1705-1786, Brussels). Belgian violinist, from 1729 director at Ratisbon for the Prince of Thurn and Taxis, in 1749-55 court-choirmaster at Brussels and then director for Prince Charles of Lorraine. Wrote symphonies, sonatas and much church-music.

Croft, William (n. Stratford, 1678-1727, Bath). English organist and composer, pupil of Blow as choirboy in the Chapel Royal, becoming singer there in 1700, joint-organist (with Clarke) in 1704 and sole organist in 1707, as well as from 1708 organist at Westminster Abbey and Blow's successor as head of the Chapel Royal. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ., in 1713. Wrote many fine anthems and a Burial Service (in Musica Sacra, 2 vols. 1724, and also in the collection Divine Harmony, 1712, often ascribed to him), 2 odes (1713) on the Peace of Utrecht, sonatas for violin and for flute, and incidental music for several plays (1700-03). His tunes 'St. Anne's' and 'Hanover' are well known. G.

Cronhamn, Johan Peter (n. Halmstad, 1803-1875, Stockholm). Swedish artisan (glazier) who by extreme diligence rose to a high judicial office (1834-70). From 1835 he was active in Stockholm as leader of singing-classes, after 1842 teaching in the Music Academy and from 1870 becoming its secretary. Wrote many choruses and edited text-books (1851-1870). His son Frithjof August (1856-1897) was from 1883 librarian at the Academy and in 1888-92 secretary at the Opera, writing historical articles for the Svensk Musiktidning.

Crosdill, John (London 1755-1825, Eserick). English 'cellist', at first a choirboy at Westminster Abbey, but from 1769 employed as leading 'cellist at the Three Choirs' Festivals, at the Antient Concerts, in the court-band, etc., continuing till about 1790, when he became wealthy by marriage. He left a bequest of £1000 to the Royal Society of Musicians, of which he had been a member. G.

Cross, Michael Hurley (Philadelphia, 1833-1897, do.), son of Benjamin Cross (1786-1857), one of the pioneer musicians of Philadelphia. American organist, pupil of Meignen, Hommann and Engelke, from 1848 organist in Philadelphia at various churches, including the Roman Catholic Cathedral (from 1862) and Holy Trinity (from 1881), besides directing various organizations. He was an influential teacher. A.

Cross, Thomas. 17th C. G.

Crosse, John (Hull, 1786-1833, York). Author of an account of a festival held in York in 1823, which contains notes on various musicians and on the rise of festivals in England. G.

Crossley, Ada Jessica (n. Bairnsdale, 1874). Australian (Gippsland) mezzo-soprano, pupil of Mme. Fanny Simonson, Santley and Mme. Marchesi, from about 1890 became noted in Australian cities and from 1895 in England, appearing in many festivals and before Queen Victoria. In 1904 she made a brilliant tour in Australia and has also visited South Africa and the United States. In 1905 she married Dr. F. E. Muecke and lives in London. G.

Crotch, William (Norwich, 1775-1847, Taunton). Able English organist and composer, so precocious that he played in public at four and wrote an oratorio at fourteen. In 1786-88 he assisted Randall, the organist of Trinity and King's Colleges at Cambridge and then spent two years at Oxford preparing to take orders in the Church, but from 1790 was organist at Christ Church (College) and from 1797 organist at St. John's College and St. Mary's as well as professor in the University. At intervals from 1804 and steadily from 1820 he lectured at the Royal Institution in London, as earlier at the Oxford Music School, and in 1822-32 was principal of the new Royal Academy, London. In 1808 he conducted the Birmingham Festival. Mus.D. of Oxford in 1799. Wrote the oratorios

Palestine, 1812, and The Captivity of Judah, 1834 (same title as of his early work in 1789, but a wholly new production), 10 anthems, several odes and glees, 3 organ-concertos, piano-sonatas and pieces, besides 2 text-books in harmony (from 1812) and rescripts of his lectures in Oxford and London. In 1779 Burney wrote of his attainments as a prodigy in Philosophical Transactions (vol. lxi.), as also Daines Barrington in his Miscellanies (1781). G.

Crouch, Frederick William Nicholls (London, 1808-1896, Portland, Me). English 'cellist and singer, pupil of Bochsa and the Royal Academy, London, beginning as a theater-player at nine and for some years before 1832 in Queen Adelaide's band. He is said to have invented the process of music-printing by zincography. About 1838 he lectured on Irish songs and legends (his famous ballad 'Kathleen Mavourneen' dates from this time). From 1849 he was in America as 'cellist, conductor and singing-teacher, working in New York, Boston, Portland, Philadelphia, Washington, Richmond and Baltimore. Wrote 2 stage-works and edited several song-collections. G. A.

Crowest, Frederick (London, 1850). Prominent English editor and author, musically educated in London and Italy, early in the employ of the publishers Cassell, Petter and Galpin, in 1886 being promoted to their editorial staff, continuing till 1900 in various capacities. Since 1901 he has been manager of the Walter Scott Publishing Co. Besides contributing often to periodicals like Blackwood's, the National and Westminster Reviews, etc., he has been the founder and editor of The Year's Music, of the Master Musicians Series and of the Music-Story Series—all important and successful efforts to popularize musical knowledge. Author of The Great Tone-Poets, 1874, a Book of Musical Anecdote, 2 vols. 1877 (revised as Musical Wit, etc., 1902), Advice to Singers, 1878, Phases of Musical England, 1881, Musical History and Biography (catechism), 1883, Musical Ground-work, 1890, Dictionary of British Musicians, 1895, The Story of British Music, 1895 (vol. i only), The Story of Music, 1902, and lives of Cherubini (1890), Beethoven (1899) and Verdi (1897)—the first two in the Great Musicians Series.

Crüger, Johann (1598-1662). 17th C. G.

Crusell, Bernhard Henrik (Nystad, 1775-1838, Stockholm). Noted Finnish clarinetist, from 1793 in the court-band at Stockholm, with some concert-tours. Wrote clarinet-concertos, a quintet for oboe and strings, quartets for clarinet and strings, an operetta, some other stage-music and songs. See Svensk Musiktidning, 1887.

Cruvelli [Crüwell], Johanne Sophie Charlotte (Bielefeld, 1826-1907, Monaco). Famous Westphalian operatic soprano, first appearing in 1847 at Venice, from 1848 at London and from 1851 at Paris. In 1856 she married Count Vigier (d. 1882). Her sister Frederike Marie (1824-1868) was for a time from 1851 well known at London.

Cucuel, Georges (Dijon, 1884-1918, Grenoble). French student of music-history (Litt.D. of the Sorbonne, 1913). Author of Études sur un Orchestre, 1913, La Pouplinière et la Musique de Chambre au XVIII<sup>e</sup> Siècle, 1913, and Les Créateurs de l'Opéra Française, 1914, with source-material for the history of the Opéra-Comique (L'Année Musicale, 1913).

Cui, César Antonovitch (Vilna, 1835-1918, do.). Distinguished Russian military engineer and composer (son of a French officer who had served under Napoleon), pupil in music of Moniuszko and Balakirev. In 1857 he graduated from the Imperial School of Military Engineering, where or in similar schools he continued all his life as instructor or lecturer. An accidental meeting with Balakirev in 1857 led to a life-long alliance with him in the development of the National or New-Russian school. From 1864 he was more or less constantly active as a caustic critic, writing for both Russian and French periodicals. In 1885-86, with Borodin, he gave concerts in Belgium that did much to introduce the new Russian ideals to the West. Although professedly a radical and an ardent nationalist, particularly outspoken in his attacks upon Rubinstein and Tchaikovsky as not typically Russian, he himself was unable to escape relationship as a composer with non-Slavic styles (as those of Schumann and Chopin). He excelled in lyric characterization, in delicate and tender effects, in neatness and conciseness of structure, and was stronger on the vocal side than on the orchestral. Yet none of his operas attained great success. The list of his works includes Operas—The Mandarin's Son, 1859, The Captive in the Caucasus, 1859 (extended in 1881), William Ratcliff, 1869, Angelo, 1876, Le Filibustier, 1894 (Paris), The Saracen, 1899, A Feast in Time of Plague, 1901 (originally a cantata), Mam'zelle Fifi, 1903, Matteo Falcone, 1908, The Captain's Daughter, 1911. Orchestral Works—2 Scherzos (1857); Tarantella, 1859; Marche Solennelle, 1881; Suites—1, Miniature, 2 (1887), 3, d'Argenteau (1887), 4, in modo popolare. Suite Concertante for violin and orchestra (1883). 2 pieces for 'cello and orchestra.

Chamber-Works—string-quartet in C min.: Petite Suite for violin, with 19 Miniatures, 6 Bagatelles, Tarantella, and many short pieces; 5 duets for flute and violin.

Piano-Works—Suite (dedicated to Liszt), Valse Caprice (and other waltzes); 2 Polonaises, 3 Impromptus, 2 Bluettes, Theme and Variations, 6 Miniatures; and many other pieces.

Choruses and other vocal works—over 30 choruses for mixed voices, 2 with orchestra and 7 a cappella; mystic chorus for women's voices a cappella (1885); 2 choruses for men's voices; Les Oiseaux d'Argenteau for children's voices. Over 200 songs to Russian, Polish, French or German words.

Critiques by Comtesse Mercy-Argenteau, 1888, Koptiaev, 1895, and Weimarn, 1897. Catalogue of works by Findeisen, 1894.

Culbertson, Sasha (b. 1893). Precocious Russian violinist, pupil of Suchorukov and Sevčik, appearing first at Vienna in 1908 and then entering upon brilliant tours in Europe. His technical achievements are phenomenal.

Culp, Julia (Groningen, 1881). Remarkable Dutch contralto, originally aiming to be a violinist, pupil of Cornelia van Zanten and Mme. Gerster, appearing as violinist in 1895 and as singer in 1899 (Berlin) and, more formally, in 1901 (Magdeburg). Then followed a series of brilliant tours in Europe, being everywhere recognized as a song-singer of exceptional gifts. Since 1913 she has extended her fame throughout the United States. In 1919 she married Willi Ginski of Vienna.

Culwick, James C. (West Bromwich, 1845-1907, Dublin). English organist, pupil of T. Bedsmore, until 1881 at Lichfield and other posts in England and then at Dublin as organist to the Chapel Royal, professor in Alexandra College and conductor of choral societies. Mus.D. of Dublin Univ. in 1893. Wrote the cantata The Legend of Stauffenberg, 1890, and Psalm 104 for chorus and orchestra, an overture, a piano-quartet, an organ-sonata, a piano-suite and other pieces, anthems and services, and author of The Rudiments of Music, 1880, The Study of Music, 1882, and The Works of Sir Robert Stewart, 1902.

Cummings, William Hayman (n. Exeter, 1831-1915, London). Able English tenor, editor and teacher, trained as a choirboy by Hawes and E. J. Hopkins, from 1847 organist at Waltham Abbey, but soon engaged in various London choirs, including Westminster Abbey and the Chapel Royal, from about 1860 increasingly prominent in oratorio, especially in Bach's Matthew Passion, from 1871 more than once sang in America, taught at the Norwood Blind College, from 1879 at the Royal Academy and in 1896-1910 followed Barnby as head of the Guildhall School. In 1885-88 he was conductor of the revived Sacred Harmonic Society. In 1876 he was a leader in founding the Purcell Society, of whose publications he was subsequently editor, besides being active in various other societies. Wrote a life of Purcell (1882), a Dictionary of Musicians, 1892, and many contributions to Grove's Dictionary (from 1880), besides an elementary Primer, 1877, the cantata The Fairy King, glees, part-songs and songs. He collected a remarkable musical library, containing many autographs. Mus.D. of Dublin Univ. in 1900. G.

Cundell, Edric (London, 1893). English composer and conductor of the Westminster Orchestral Society, writing the symphonic poems Serbia and The Tragedy of Deidre, 2 orchestral suites, a piano-concerto, a string-quartet, a piano-quartet, piano-pieces, etc.

Cunningham, Claude (Manchester, Va. 1880). American baritone, pupil of Toedt, Sbriglia and Granier, making his début in 1903 in connection with Mme. Patti's final tour. Although importuned to take up opera, he has devoted himself to oratorio and song-recitals, making a notable mark in England and Germany as well as America. A.

Curci, Giuseppe (Baretta, 1808-1877, do.). Italian singing-teacher and composer, trained at the Naples Conservatory, beginning active composition about 1833 there and at Turin and Venice. From about 1840 he was a favorite teacher in Vienna and in 1848-56 in Paris, whence he returned to Barletta. Wrote 10 masses and much church-music, several operas, a cantata, etc.

Curry, Arthur Mansfield (Chelsea, Mass. 1866). American composer, pupil of Kneisel and MacDowell, after various experience in directing choral and orchestral societies, since 1914 has been harmony-teacher at the New England Conservatory. Has written the overtures Blomidon, 1902, and Élégie, the symphonic poem Atala, 1908, the Keltic legend The Winning of Amarac for reader, women's chorus and orchestra, choruses, songs and piano-pieces. A.

Cursch-Bühren, Franz Theodor (Troppau, 1859-1908, Leipzig). Silesian editor and composer, pupil of Succo and Paul, from 1898 critic for the Leipzig Tageblatt and editor of Chorge-sang. Wrote a series of effective light operas or singspiele, including Emol As (parody on Strauss' Salome), men's choruses, etc.

Curschmann, Karl Freidrich (Berlin, 1804-1841, n. Danzig). Prussian singer and song-composer, pupil of Hauptmann and Spohr, from about 1830 active in Berlin, with tours to France and Italy. He was known as a writer of beautiful songs before Schubert was generally recognized or Schumann had begun to write. Published Lieder, 2 vols. 1871, a few other songs for 2-3 voices (some with Italian words), canons, the scena Romeo, and wrote the opera Abdul und Erinnieh, 1828, and some church-music. Memoir by Meissner, 1899. G.

Curti, Francesco [Franz] (Kassel, 1854-1898, Dresden). Hessian dentist and composer, pupil of Kretschmer and Schulz-Beuthen at Dresden. Wrote the operas Hertha, 1887, Reinhard von Ufenau, 1888, Erlöst, 1894, Lila-Tsee (Japanese fairy-story), 1896, and Das Rösli vom Sântis, 1898, the melodrama Schneefried, 1895, the cantata Die Gletscherjungfrau and incidental music to Die letzten Menschen (Kirschbach). Memoir by Jelmoli, 1909.

Curtis, Henry Holbrook (New York, 1856-1920, do.). American laryngologist, author of Voice-Building and Tone-Placing, 1894. A.

Curtis, Natalie. See Burlin.

Curwen, John (Heckmondwike, 1816-1880, Manchester). English Nonconformist minister (1838-64) and organizer of the Tonic Sol-Fa movement, the principles of which he took from Sarah Ann Glover, beginning from 1841. In 1853 he founded the Tonic Sol-Fa Association and in 1863 the Tonic Sol-Fa College in London, besides the Tonic Sol-Fa Reporter (from 1851) and the publishing-firm of J. Curwen & Sons. Author of a Grammar of Vocal Music, 1843, The Standard Course, 1861 (revised 1872), How to Observe Harmony, 1861 (revised 1872), Musical Statics, 1874, The Teacher's Manual, 1875, a Primer of Tonic Sol-Fa (in the Novello series), Musical Theory, 1879, and a large number of smaller text-books, etc., editions of choral works, hymn-books and song-books. Memoir by J. S. Curwen, 1882. G.

Curwen, John Spencer (Plaistow, 1847-1916, London), son of the foregoing and his assistant and successor as head of the Tonic Sol-Fa movement, president of the Tonic Sol-Fa College, etc. Author of Studies in Worship-Music, 2 series, 1880-85, Musical Notes in Paris, 1882, Memorials of John Curwen, 1882, Music at the Queen's Accession, 1901, and many historical and critical articles. G.

Curzon, Émanuel Henri Parent de (Havre, 1861). Noted French editor and critic, from 1889 on the staff of the Gazette de France and editor of the Guide Musical and the Bulletin of the Society of Theatrical History. Author of Les Dernières Années de Piccini, 1890, La Légende de Sigurd (in Reyer's opera), 1890, Musiciens du Temps Passé, 1893, Croquis d'Artistes (Faure, Maurel, Viardot-Garcia, Carvalho, Nilsson, Krauss), 1898, Les Lieder de Schubert, 1899, and a biography, 1899, État Sommaire des Pièces et Documents concernant la Musique, 1899, Guide de l'Amateur d'Ouvrages sur la Musique, 1901, Pedrell et Les Pyrénées, 1902, Les Lieder de Beethoven, 1905, Essai de Bibliographie Mozartine, 1906, biography of Grétry, 1907, L'Évolution Lyrique au Théâtre, 1908, biography of Meyerbeer, 1910, Documents Inédits sur le Faust of Gounod, 1912, La Vie Artistique aux XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> Siècles, La Musique (in Bibliothèque Française), 1914, biographies of Mozart, 1914, and Rossini, 1920, besides translations of Mozart's letters (1888, '98), Schumann's Schriften (1894, '98), Hoffmann's Fantaisies (1891) and several opera-librettos. G.

Cusins, William George (London, 1833-1893, in Ardennes). English teacher and composer, trained at the Brussels Conservatory and the Royal Academy, London, from 1849 working as pianist, organist and violinist, from 1851 teaching at the Royal Academy and later becoming professor, in 1867-83 conductor of the Philharmonic Society, following Bennett, from 1870 leader of the Queen's Music, from 1875 examiner at Queen's College and from 1876 for the National Training School, and from 1885 professor at the Guildhall School and director of the London Select Choir, besides teaching at Trinity College. Knighted in 1892. Wrote a Royal Wedding Serenata, 1863, the overtures The Toilers of the Sea, 1865, and Love's Labour's Lost, 1875, a piano-concerto, a wind-septet, a piano-trio, the oratorio Gideon, 1871 (Gloucester), etc. G.

Cutter, Benjamin (Woburn, Mass. 1857-1910, Boston). American violinist and theorist, pupil of Eichberg, Emery, Singer, Goetschius and Seifriz, at first working in Boston as violinist (in the Symphony Orchestra in 1882-89), but from 1888 valued teacher of composition at the New England Conservatory. Wrote a mass, the cantata Sir Patrick Spens, chamber- and choral music, besides harmony text-books (1901, '02) and How to Study Kreutzer, 1903. A.

Cuzzoni, Francesca (Parma, 1700-1707, Bologna). Famous Italian operatic soprano, pupil of Lanzi, appearing in 1719 at Venice, in 1722-28 at London in many works of Handel (returning in 1734), then at Vienna, Venice and later in Holland, where she was imprisoned for debt. From 1750 she was in Italy, falling into extreme poverty and misery. From 1720 to 1735 she was in constant rivalry with Faustina Bordoni. Both had brilliant and also sympathetic voices, of equal range, and both were genuine artists, but Cuzzoni was inferior in appearance and in temper. G.

Czapek, Joseph (Prague, 1825-1915, Gothenburg). Bohemian organist, trained at the Prague Conservatory, from 1847 working in Gothenburg (Sweden), until 1878 as music-master of an artillery regiment, for fifty years also organist at the Synagogue, as well as till 1890 at the Evangelical Church, for a time teaching at the Gymnasium and then conductor of the Philharmonic Society, besides leading a Quartet. Wrote symphonies, masses, cantatas, etc. See Svensk Musiktidsning, 1886, 1905.

Czernohorsky, Bohuslav (Nimburg, 1684-1740, Gratz). Bohemian monk and church-musician, early maestro at S. Antonio, Padua, from 1715 organist at Assisi and later at two churches in Prague. At Assisi he was teacher of Tartini and at Prague of Gluck. Wrote organ-pieces (in Schmid's Orgelwerke altböhmischer Meister) and much church-music (largely destroyed by fire). G.

Czerny, Karl (Vienna, 1791-1857, do.). Distinguished Austrian pianist, teacher and composer, chiefly taught by his father and in 1800-03 by Beethoven. In 1804 he was about to begin tours as virtuoso, but was hindered by the political unrest of the time and soon after gave up public playing. He became the foremost teacher of Vienna, remaining in great request for nearly fifty years. He accepted only advanced or promising pupils, devoting himself largely to work as editor or composer. Wrote in all at least 1000 works of every description (except opera), including symphonies, overtures, concertos, string-quartets and trios, masses, Requiems and much other church-music, innumerable piano-pieces, and a long series of masterly methods for all departments of piano-playing, besides a vast number of arrangements. Author of Umriss der ganzen Musikgeschichte, 1851, and an autobiography. His larger pedagogical works were published as the Complete Theoretical and Practical Pianoforte School, 3 vols. G.

Czerwinski, Adalbert. Author of Gesch. d. Tanzkunst, 1862, Die Tänze d. 16. Jahrh. 1878, and Brevier d. Tanzkunst, 1879.

Czibulka, Alphons (Szepes-Várallya, 1842-1894, Vienna). Hungarian bandmaster and composer, from 1865 director of the Karl-theater, Vienna, then bandmaster there or in Prague, and finally writer of operettas and piano-music at Vienna. Wrote the opera Signor Annibale, 1893, and the lighter Pfingsten in Florenz, 1884, Der Glücksritter, 1887, Gül Blas, 1889, and Der Bajazzo, 1892.

Dachs, Joseph (Ratisbon, 1825–1896, Vienna). Bavarian pianist, trained by Halm, Czerny and Sechter, from 1844 teaching in Vienna, after 1861 at the school of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde (pupils included De Pachmann, Hans Schmitt, Laura Rappoldi, etc.).

Daffner, Hugo (Munich, 1882). Bavarian composer and critic, pupil of the Munich Conservatory (Ph.D. 1904) and of Reger, from 1904 assistant-conductor at the Munich Opera, from 1907 critic for the Königsberg Zeitung, from 1909 for the Dresden Nachrichten, and since 1910 teaching in Berlin. Has written the operas Macbeth, Truffaldino and Der eingebildete Kranke, 2 symphonies, 2 piano-quintets, 2 string-quartets, 2 piano-trios, 2 violin-sonatas, 'cello-, piano- and organ-sonatas, a Fantasie and Fugue and other piano-works, and over 300 songs. Author of Die Entwicklung d. Klavierkonzerts bis Mozart, 1908, Salome, ihre Gestalt in Geschichte u. Kunst, 1912, and Francesca da Rimini in d. Musik, 1912, and editor of Nietzsche's annotations to Carmen (1912) and K. P. E. Bach's Art das Klavier zu spielen (1914).

Dahms, Walter (Berlin, 1887). Prussian critic, pupil of Ad. Schulze, from 1912 writing for the Kleines Journal and publishing good lives of Schubert (1912), Schumann (1916) and Mendelssohn, (1919).

Delayrac, Nicolas (n. Toulouse, 1753–1809, Paris). Prolific French composer, pupil of Langlé, writing about 60 operas (from 1781), including Le Corsaire, 1783, L'Amant Statue, 1785, Nina, 1786, Azémiä, 1786, Fanchette, 1788, Raoul de Créqui, 1789, Adèle et Dorsan, 1795, Adolphe et Clara, 1799, Maison à Vendre, 1800, Une Heure de Mariage, 1804, etc. His works, though only moderate in ability, paved the way for the later masters of opéra comique. Member of the Légion d'Honneur from 1800. Memoirs by Pixérécourt, 1810, and Fourgaud, 1856. G.

Dalberg, Johann Friedrich Hugo, Freiherr von (Aschaffenberg, 1752–1812, do.). Bavarian ecclesiastic at Treves, Coblenz and Worms, pianist and author of Blicke eines Tonkünstlers in d. Musik d. Geister, 1787, Vom Erfinden u. Bilden, 1791, Ueber d. Ursprung d. Harmonie, 1800, Die Aeolsharfe (allegory), 1801, Ueber griech. Instrumentalmusik, Phantasien aus dem Reich d. Töne, 1806, and a translation of Jones' Musical Modes of the Hindus (1802), besides piano-quartets, trios and sonatas, 4 cantatas, etc. G.

Dalcroze. See Jaques-Dalcroze.

Dale, Benjamin James (London, 1885). English organist, trained at the Royal Academy and now professor there, besides positions in London churches. Has written a symphony, overtures in G min. and Tempest, 1904, '02, a

Fantasia for organ and orchestra, 1903, an Introduction and Andante for 6 violas, 1913, a suite for viola, 1907, and a Phantasy, 1911, an English Dance for violin, 1916, a piano-sonata (1905), the cantata Before the Paling of the Stars, 1912, songs and carols. G., A.

Dale, Joseph. A London music-publisher from 1778 till after 1835, who issued editions of many ballad-operas, songs, piano-music in much variety. From 1806 the business gradually passed into the hands of his sons. G.

D'Alheim, Pierre, Baron (Laroche, 1862). French journalist and novelist, active in promoting interest in Russian music, writing a monograph on Mussorgski (3d ed. 1896). His wife, Marie Olenina (b. 1872), is a noted interpreter of Mussorgski's songs and author of Les Legs de M. 1908.

Dallam, George, Ralph, Robert, and Thomas. 17th C. G.

Dall'Olio, Cesare (Bologna, 1849–1906, do.). Italian composer, pupil of A. Busi, professor in the Bologna Liceo and composer of the operas Ettore Fieramosca, 1875, Don Riego, 1879, and Atal-Kar, 1900, besides text-books in solfeggio and composition (1887).

Dalmorès, Charles (Nancy, 1871). French hornist and operatic tenor, trained at the Nancy and Paris Conservatories, from 1890 playing in the Colonne and Lamoureux orchestras and from 1894 teacher in the Lyons Conservatory. Turning to singing, after lessons with Dauphin, in 1899 he made his stage-début at Rouen, followed by varied engagements at Brussels, London and New York (Manhattan) until 1910, when he joined the Chicago Opera Company. At intervals he has also sung on all the leading European stages (except in Italy and Russia), including Bayreuth in 1908, often at local premières of important works. A.

Dalvimare, Martin Pierre (Dreux, 1772–1839, Paris). French harpist, from 1800 at the Paris Opéra and from 1806 in Napoleon's employ. Wrote harp-sonatas and pieces, some with violin or horn, and an opera (1809).

Dam, Hermann Georg (Berlin, 1815–1858, do.). Swedish-Prussian composer of 2 operas (1831–42), 2 oratorios (1847–49), overtures and entr'actes, written while in court-service at Berlin.

Dambois, Maurice (Liège, 1889). Excellent Belgian 'cellist, trained at the Liège Conservatory, first appearing at twelve and from 1905 beginning extensive tours, in 1910–14 director of the Liège Académie and teacher in the Conservatory, then in England and from 1917 in America (at first with Ysaÿe). Has written an orchestral Cortège, pieces for strings, trios, 'cello- and piano-pieces, and about 75 songs.

Damcke, Berthold (Hanover, 1812–1875, Paris). Able teacher, pupil of Aloys Schmitt and Ferd. Ries, from 1837 conductor at Potsdam and from 1841 at Königsberg, but from 1845 teaching at Petrograd, from 1855 at Brussels and from 1859 at Paris, where he was intimate with Berlioz. Wrote an opera (1845), 3 oratorios, cantatas, Psalms, overtures and songs. Anonymous memoir, 1855.

Damoreau, Laure Cinthie, née Montalant [early known as Mlle. Cinti] (Paris, 1801–1863, Chantilly). Able French operatic soprano, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, first appearing from 1819 at the Italiens, from 1826 at the Opéra and after 1835 at the Opéra-Comique, with several visits to London, to America (1843), to Belgium, Holland and Russia, by many regarded the foremost singer of the time. From 1834 till her retirement in 1856 she held the place of professor at the Paris Conservatory. In 1827 she married the actor Damoreau at Brussels. Rossini wrote revisions of his Moïse and Siège de Corinthe for her. In 1829 she appeared in Il Matrimonio Segreto with both Sontag and Malibran. G.

Damrosch, Frank Heino (Breslau, 1859), son of Leopold below. Silesian conductor and teacher, pupil of Pruckner, Jean Vogt, Von Inten and Moszkowski, besides his father, brought to America in 1871, from 1882 in Denver as choral conductor and music-supervisor in the schools, in 1885–91 chorusmaster at the Metropolitan, New York, and also from 1887 choral conductor in Newark, from 1892 active in promoting People's Singing-Classes, as well as in 1897–1904 music-supervisor in the New York schools. For different periods he directed various societies and clubs in New York and Philadelphia, notably the New York Oratorio Society in 1898–1912 and the Musical Art Society in 1893–1920. In 1905 was founded under his leadership the Institute of Musical Art, to which he now devotes his whole energy. Mus.D. of Yale Univ. in 1904. Has written Some Essentials in the Teaching of Music, 1916, and a text-book in sight-singing (1894), and has edited many choral works, especially for the historical programs of the Musical Art Society. G, A.

Damrosch, Leopold (Posen, 1832–1885, New York). Distinguished German violinist, conductor and composer, educated as a physician (M.D. of Berlin Univ., 1854), pupil in music of Hubert Ries, Dehn and Böhmer, at first toured as soloist, in 1855–59 was in the court-orchestra at Weimar and intimate with Liszt and Wagner, in 1859–60 conducted the Breslau Philharmonic Concerts and in 1862 founded the Orchester-verein there, besides leading various other enterprises and often appearing as player. In 1871 he came to New York as conductor of the Arion Society (continuing till 1884), founded the Oratorio Society in 1873 and the Symphony Society in 1878, organized the first large festival in New York in 1881, and in 1884–85 directed a brilliant season of German opera at the Metropolitan Opera House. His whole career evinced unusual power and enthusiasm in organizing and directing musical interest into lines of permanent effectiveness. He was a zealous advocate of the new movements represented by Wagner and Liszt, but his sympathies took in the whole range of musical art. Wrote a symphony, a Festival Overture, 3 violin-concertos and a Concertstück for violin, orchestral marches, incidental music for Schiller's Joan of Arc, various scenas and arias for solo voice with orchestra, 7 cantatas, including Ruth and Naomi and Sulamith, choruses, glees and many songs, besides numerous works for violin. Mus.D. of Columbia in 1880. G, A.

Damrosch, Walter Johannes (Breslau, 1862), son of the above. Eminent conductor and composer, pupil of his father, Rischbieter, Draeske, Von Inten, Boekelman, Pinner and Von Bülow. He came to New York as a child in 1871, in 1885 succeeded his father as conductor of the Oratorio and Symphony Societies, continuing with the former till 1898 and resuming in 1917, but retiring once more in 1921. In 1894–99 he carried forward the Damrosch Opera Company, touring through the United States giving German opera, especially Wagnerian works. In 1900–02 he conducted Wagner operas at the Metropolitan, and in 1902–03 led the Philharmonic Society. In 1920 he took the Symphony Society to Europe for an extended tour in England, France and Italy. Mus.D. of Columbia Univ. in 1914. Has written the operas The Scarlet Letter, 1896, The Dove of Peace, 1912, and Cyran de Bergerac, 1913, incidental music to Euripides' Iphigenia in Aulis and Medea and to Sophocles' Electra, The Manilla Te Deum, 1898, a violin-sonata, songs, etc. He has directed the first American productions of numerous works, including many symphonies and some operas. G, A.

Damse, Joseph (Sokolów, 1788–1852, n. Warsaw). Galician clarinetist, writing 4 operas, a ballet, popular Polish songs and dances, 2 masses, etc.

Danbé, Jules (Caen, 1840–1905, Vichy). French violinist and conductor, trained at the Paris Conservatory, from about 1860 playing in turn in all the leading orchestras, becoming till 1892 assistant-conductor of the Conservatory Concerts, in 1877–98 conductor at the Théâtre Lyrique and from 1899 at the Opéra-Comique. Wrote violin-pieces and a method.

Danby, John (1757–1798, London). Noted English glee-composer, winning ten of the Catch Club prizes, his works appearing in four collections. For many years he was organist at the chapel of the Spanish embassy, writing some masses and motets. G.

Dancla, Jean Baptiste Charles (n. Tarbes, 1818–1907, in Tunis). Eminent French violinist, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, from 1834 playing at the Opéra-Comique, at intervals winning various prizes for playing or composition, becoming a favorite soloist at the Société des Concerts, and in 1857 joining the faculty of the Conservatory and entering the Légion d'Honneur. He organized a notable Quartet, in which his two brothers assisted, giving soirées that were long popular. Wrote 4 symphonies, 6 violin-concertos, 8 string-quartets, 4 piano-trios, and a large number of facile violin-works of varied form, besides 5 instructive works and many études, Les Compositeurs Chefs d'Orchestre, 1873, and Miscellanées Musicales, 1877. Rivarde was one of his pupils. His brothers, Arnaud (1820-1862) and Léopold (1823-1895), respectively 'cellist and violinist, were both excellent players and to some extent composers for their instruments. G.

Dando, Joseph Haydon Bourne (London, 1806-1894, Godalming). English violinist, pupil of Mori, from 1831 playing in leading London orchestras and from 1835 a pioneer in giving concerts of chamber-music alone, forming a Quartet that at first included Blagrove, Henry Gattie and Charles Lucas (continued, with some changes, till 1853). G.

D'Andrieu, Jean François (Paris, 1684-1740, do.). French organist, from about 1724 employed at the court in Paris. Wrote many suites and pieces for clavecin (1724-34), a book of organ-pieces (1729), trio- and violin-sonatas, and a text-book on accompanying on the clavecin (1725?). See article by Pirro in I. M. G. Sammelbde. 1905.

Danhauser, Adolphe Léopold (Paris, 1835-1896, do.). French singing-teacher, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (several prizes), music-supervisor in the public schools and later teacher in the Conservatory. Wrote an opera, the choral drama Le Proscrit, 1866, and a text-book in theory, besides editing a collection of 3-part choruses for equal voices.

Daniel, Salvador (Bourges, ?1830-1871, in battle). Having taught in Algiers, author of La Musique Arabe, 1863 (in English, 1915), a book on the French chanson and a collection of Arab songs.

Danjou, Jean Louis Félix (Paris, 1812-1866, Montpellier). French organist, from 1840 at Notre-Dame, and a zealous student of plain-song. In 1847 he recovered the famous Montpellier antiphony. He was also interested in organ-making, losing his fortune in partnership with Daublaine and Callinet. After 1849 he turned to journalism at Marseilles and Montpellier. Author of État de l'Avenir du Chant Ecclésiastique, 1844, and Revue de la Musique Religieuse, 1845-49, and editor of the important Répertoire de Musique Religieuse, 3 vols. 1835.

Dankers, Ghiselin. 16th C. G.

Danning, Sophus Christian (Copenhagen, 1867). Danish conductor and composer, pupil of the Sondershausen and Leipzig Conservatories, at first teaching in Finland and at Copenhagen, becoming in 1899 (on Grieg's recommendation) conductor of the Bergen Opera and of the choral society Harmonie, in 1907-11 opera-conductor at Christiania, and since 1914 city-director at Odense. Has written the operas Gustav Adolf, Elleskudt and Kynthia, the operetta Columbine, 1912, music for Svanehvide and Aladdin (1916), several symphonies (including Dante), overtures, a violin-concerto, cantatas, choruses, etc.

Dannreuther, Edward George (Strasbourg, 1844-1905, London). Able Alsatian pianist, as a child educated in America (Cincinnati), with lessons from F. L. Ritter, then pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory. From 1863 he was a prominent and influential factor in London musical life, introducing many modern works for piano, promoting interest in chamber-music (recitals in 1874-93), advocating Wagnerian ideas and yet maintaining a cordial interest in older styles as well. From 1895 he was professor at the Royal Academy, besides many lectures elsewhere. He made several visits to the United States. Author of Wagner and the Reform of the Opera, 1872, Wagner, his Tendencies and Theories, 1873, Musical Ornamentation, 2 vols. 1893-95, The Romantic Period (in the Oxford Hist. of Music, vol. vi), 1905, and articles in Grove's Dictionary (from 1880), besides translations of several of Wagner's essays. G.

Dannreuther, Gustav (Cincinnati, 1853), brother of the above. Excellent American violinist, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, from 1873 in London with his brother, from 1877 a member of the Mendelssohn Quintette Club in Boston, from 1880 in the Beethoven Quartette there and in the new Symphony Orchestra, from 1882 conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Society, and from 1884 variously active in New York, where he promptly formed a Quartet (in 1894-1917 called by his name), besides since 1907 teaching at Vassar College in Poughkeepsie. Has published valuable pedagogical works. A.

Danzi, Franz (Mannheim, 1763-1826, Karlsruhe). Rhenish 'cellist and composer, pupil of Vogler, playing in the electoral orchestra (Munich) at fifteen, in 1790-96 toured in Germany and Italy with his wife (née Marchand), for short periods was court-director at Munich and Stuttgart, and from 1808 at Karlsruhe. Wrote 16 operas or operettas (1779-1815), including Iphigenia in Aulis, 1807, the oratorio Abraham auf Moria, 1808, Psalm 128, masses, cantatas, much orchestral and chamber-music, choruses and songs. See Reipschläger, Schubaur, Danzi u. Poissl, 1911. G.

Da Ponte, Lorenzo (Ceneda [now Vittorio], 1749-1838, New York), of Jewish parentage. An Italian, at first educated for the priesthood, but from 1868 living a varied, adventurous life. After teaching rhetoric at Treviso, he went to Dresden and Vienna, where he wrote the librettos of Mozart's Figaro and Don Giovanni (1786-87), thence to Paris, London and finally New York (1805). He was somewhat employed by Garcia in 1825-26, was manager for Montessor in 1832, projected an opera-house for Rivafinoli in 1833 and taught Italian at Columbia University, besides making some commercial ventures. Author of Memorie, 4 vols. 1823-27. Memoirs by Löhner, 1882, and Marchesan, 1900. G (Ponte), A.

Daquin, Louis Claude (Paris, 1694-1772, do.). French harpsichordist and organist, pupil of Marchand, from 1706 at St.-Antoine and from 1727 at St.-Paul. Wrote many clever Pièces and Noëls and the cantata La Rosa. G.

Dargomijsky, Alexander Sergievitch (n. Tula, 1813-1869, Petrograd). Russian composer, educated at Petrograd and till 1835 in governmental employ, but without formal musical training except as a ready player of salon-music. From 1833, however, he was drawn into association with Glinka and became imbued with the latter's enthusiasm for a truly Russian style, though not at first in any such sense as at a later point. In 1845-46 he visited Germany, Brussels and Paris, gaining a new insight into Western progress. In 1864 he made a similar trip, being received in Belgium with special cordiality. In his last years he was intimate with Balakirev and the New-Russian circle. From 1867 he was head of the Russian Musical Society. His works include the operas Esmeralda, 1847 (written in 1839), Russalka, 1856, Rogdane (fairy-opera, unfinished), and The Stone Guest, 1872 (orchestrated by Rimsky-Korsakov), the ballet The Triumph of Bacchus (1847), the orchestral pieces Cossack Dance (Kazachok), Baba-Jaga, The Dance of Mummies, and Finnish Fantasia, a Tarentelle Slave for piano (4-hands), about 90 remarkable songs and romances, 15 duets, 3 trios, 2 quartets and 12 trio-choruses (Petersburg Serenades). The texts of Russalka and The Stone Guest are taken from Pushkin. From the first it was evident that the composer's greatest gift lay in his power of translating words into tonal expression, as in his songs and in his last opera. G.

Daser, Ludwig (?1525-1589). 16th C.

Daube, Johann Friedrich (1730-1797, Augsburg). Court-musician at Stuttgart and later secretary of the Augsburg Academy of Sciences. Wrote Generalbass in drei Akkorden, 1756 (based on Rameau), which Marpurge criticized, Der musikalische Dilettant, 1771, and Anleitung zur Erfindung d. Melodie, 2 parts, 1788-98.

Dauney, William (Aberdeen, 1800-1843, Georgetown, British Guiana). Scottish lawyer who discovered at Edinburgh the 'Skene Manuscript,' a collection of about 115 English and Scottish tunes in tablature, which he deciphered and published (1838), with an able dissertation. G.

Daurat, Louis François (Paris, 1781-1868, do.). Noted French hornist, trained at the Paris Conservatory, as a youth played in military bands (under Napoleon), from 1806 was in a theater-orchestra at Bordeaux, in 1808-31 in that of the Paris Opéra, was chamber-musician to Napoleon from 1811 and to Louis XVIII from 1816, and in 1816-42 taught at the Conservatory. Wrote symphonies, horn-concertos, chamber-music with horn, a horn-method and text-books in theory.

Dauriac, Lionel Alexandre (Brest, 1847). Distinguished French professor of philosophy and psychology, in 1882-99 at Montpellier University. In 1896-1903 he lectured at the Sorbonne, Paris, on musical æsthetics and psychology. In 1899-1907 he was head of the French section of the International Musical Society. Author of an Introduction à la Psychologie du Musicien, 1891, La Psychologie dans l'Opéra Français, 1897, Essai sur l'Esprit Musical, 1904, and lives of Rossini (1906), Wagner (1908) and Meyerbeer (1913).

Daussoigne-Méhul, Louis Joseph (Givet, 1790-1875, Liège). French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1809), in 1827-62 director of the Liège Conservatory. Wrote 5 operas (1812-24), including Aspasie, 1820, a cantata and the choral symphony Une Journée de la Révolution, 1834. He completed his uncle Méhul's Valentine de Milan, 1822. His work at Liège was dignified and efficient.

Dauvergne, Antoine (Clermont-Ferrand, 1713-1797, Lyons). French violinist and composer, from 1739 in Paris, from 1741 in the court-orchestra and at the Opéra, in 1762-69 conductor of the Concerts Spirituels, retiring to Lyons in 1790. From 1753 he was active in transforming the lighter French stage-plays into a style like that of the Italian intermezzi, though retaining spoken dialogue. Wrote 15 operas (1753-76), the first, Les Troqueurs, being counted the pioneer opéra comique, 15 motets, string-trios (1740) and other instrumental music. G.

Davari, Stefano. Librarian of the Archivio Gonzaga at Mantua, author of La Musica a Mantova, 1884, and a life of Monteverde (1885).

Davaux, Jean Baptiste (n. Grenoble, ?1737-1822, Paris). French composer who took up the new orchestral style of Mannheim, writing many symphonies, string-quartets and also some operas.

Davenport, Francis William (n. Derby, 1847). English composer, pupil (and son-in-law) of Macfarren, from 1879 professor at the Royal Academy and from 1882 at the Guildhall School. Has written 2 symphonies, the overture Twelfth-Night, an orchestral prelude and fugue, a piano-trio, 'cello- and piano-pieces, part-songs, songs and several text-books. G.

Davey, Henry (Brighton, 1853). Eminent English scholar, trained in music at Leipzig, in 1876-1903 teaching at Brighton. He is a Shakespearean expert and has written on many subjects, especially for the Dictionary of National Biography. His musical books are The Student's Musical History, 1891 (7th ed. 1919), History of English Music, 1895 (revised edition preparing), Handel, 1912 (in Masterpieces of Music), and many articles in German periodicals, with contributions to Riemann's Gesch. d. Musik seit Beethoven and Soubies' Histoire. A.

Davico, Vincenzo (Monaco, 1889). Italian composer of the short opera La Dogressa, 1920, the choral work La Tentation de St. Antoine, a Requiem (for the Princess of Monaco), the orchestral works La Princesse Lointaine and Im- pressions Romanes, a string-trio, a 'cello-sonata, many piano-pieces in a style like that of Debussy and some songs. Sketch by Galli, 1921 (in Musical Times).

David, Adolphe Isaac (Nantes, 1842-1897, Paris). French composer of 3 pantomimes (1891-94), the comic opera Diana de Sparre and many piano-pieces.

David, Ernest (Nancy, 1844-1886, Paris). French writer, pupil of Fétis, author of La Musique chez les Juifs, 1873, Histoire de la Notation Musicale (with Lussy), 1882, lives of Bach (1882), and Handel (1884) and a work on Mendelssohn and Schumann (1886), with articles in journals.

David, Félicien César (Cadenet, 1810-1876, St.-Germain-en-Laye). Eminent French composer, precociously developed at Aix as singer and composer before he was fifteen, then studied in the Jesuit college there, in 1828 becoming theater- and church-conductor, and in 1830-31 studied at the Paris Conservatory. In 1831-33 he was associated with the Saint-Simonist movement, writing songs for it and in 1833 making a concert-trip to Marseilles and thence to the Orient, where he remained till 1835, much impressed with its romantic charm. After that he lived in Paris as composer. In 1862 he was made Officier in the Légion d'Honneur, in 1867 won a prize of 20,000 fr. for his second opera, and in 1869 succeeded Berlioz in the Académie. Though lacking in dramatic instinct, he exercised a profound influence through his mastery of orchestral expression, especially on the sides of pictorial and imaginative suggestion, so that he is associated with Berlioz as the founder of modern French instrumental styles. His works include the operas La Perle du Brésil, 1851, Herculanéum (originally La Fin du Monde), 1859, Lalla Rookh, 1862, Le Saphir, 1865, and La Captive (not given), the oratorio Moïse au Sinai, 1846, the 'mystery' L'Éden, 1848, a symphony in F (1838), the symphonic poems Le Désert, 1844, and Christophe Colomb, 1848, 2 wind-nonets, 24 small string-quintets (Les Quatre Saisons), 12 'cello-melodies, Les Brises d'Orient and Les Minarets (piano-melodies), and Les Perles d'Orient (6 songs). His fame was established by the extraordinary success of Le Désert and by his first two operas. From 1869 he was Berlioz' successor as librarian of the Conservatory. Memoirs by Saint-Étienne, 1845, Azevedo, 1863, Bellaigue, 1898 (in Études Musicales), Prod'homme, 1907 (in the Mercur Musical), and Brancour, 1911. G.

David, Ferdinand (Hamburg, 1810-1873, in Switzerland). Distinguished North German violinist, pupil of Spohr and Hauptmann, appearing first at fifteen at the Gewandhaus, from 1827 in a Berlin orchestra, in 1829-35 head of a quartet maintained in Russia by Baron von Liphardt (whose daughter he married), and from 1836 concertmaster of the Gewandhaus Orchestra under Mendelssohn, as well as from 1843 professor in the Leipzig Conservatory.

Besides being a player of the first rank, he excelled also in ensemble and in teaching (Joachim and Wilhelmj among his pupils). In 1844 he collaborated with Mendelssohn in the completion of the latter's violin-concerto. Wrote the opera Hans Wacht, 1852, 2 symphonies, 5 violin-concertos, a sextet, a quartet and other chamber-works, many violin-pieces, including the Bunte Reihe (piano-transcription by Liszt), a famous Violinschule and many editions of violin-classics, especially in the collection Die hohe Schule d. Violinspiels. Memoir by Eckardt, 1888. G.

David, Karl Heinrich (St. Gall, 1884). German-Swiss teacher in 1910-14 at the Basel Conservatory, removing then to Germany. Has written vocal works with orchestra, a quartet and the opera Tredeschin.

David, Samuel (Paris, 1836-1895, do.). French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1858), from 1861 professor at the Collège de Ste-Barbe and from 1872 music-director for the Paris synagogues. Wrote many operettas (from 1858) and some operas, including La Fée des Bruyères, 1878, and I Maccabei (in Italian, not given), 4 symphonies, the effective symphonic ode Le Triomphe de la Paix, 1878, the cantata Jephtha, 1859, for men's chorus and orchestra, other vocal works and L'Art de Jouer en Mesure, 1862.

Davide, Giacomo (n. Bergamo, 1750-1830, do.). Italian tenor, pupil of Sala, from about 1770 noted as a church-singer in Naples, in 1785 heard at Paris and in 1791 at London, from 1802 located at Florence and from 1812 at Bergamo. His son Giovanni (1789-1851?) was noted for a voice of great range and brilliance. From 1810 he was much employed in opera in Italy and at Vienna, Paris and London, Rossini writing several rôles for him. G.

Davidov, Karl (n. Libau, 1838-1889, Moscow). Eminent Russian 'cellist, pupil of H. Schmitt, Karl Schuberth and Hauptmann, from 1859 leading player in the Gewandhaus Orchestra at Leipzig and teacher in the Conservatory, and from 1862 in similar positions at Petrograd, in 1876-87 being director of the Conservatory. From 1862 he was occasionally heard in London. Wrote an orchestral sketch and suite, the symphonic poem The Gifts of Terek, 4 'cello-concertos, a piano-quintet, a string-sextet and quartet, many 'cello-pieces and admirable songs, besides a good 'cello-method. Memoir by Hutor, 1899. G.

Davidov, Stepan Ivanovitch (1777-1825, Moscow). Russian composer, pupil of Sarti, director of the Moscow Opera. Wrote the opera Russalka, 1805, choruses for Amboar and Arungseb (1814), a concert-overture and much church-music.

Davies, Benjamin [Ben] Grey (n. Swansea, 1858). Noted Welsh operatic tenor, pupil of the Royal Academy, London, appearing in opera from 1881 and soon still more in concert and festival, becoming a foremost artist in both England and the United States (from 1893). He sang at the premières of Stanford's Canterbury Pilgrims (1884), and Sullivan's Ivanhoe (1891). G.

Davies, David Thomas Ffrangcon (Bethesda, 1860). Eminent Welsh baritone, educated at Oxford (at first for the Church) and at the Guildhall School, London, with lessons also from Randegger and Shakespeare, appearing first in 1890 and at once becoming a favorite singer at concerts and festivals. He has rarely sung in opera, though he assisted at the première of Sullivan's Ivanhoe (1891). Since 1896 he has repeatedly visited America, and in 1898–1901 he lived in Berlin, extending his success among German audiences. He has a fine reputation in songs and ballads. Since 1903 he has been professor at the Royal Academy, London. Author of Singing of the Future, 1906. G.

Davies, Fanny (in Guernsey, 1861). Excellent English pianist, trained mostly at the Leipzig and Frankfort Conservatories, from 1885 appearing in England and soon becoming known there and on the Continent as a gifted interpreter, especially of Schumann and Brahms. Her repertoire includes more than 30 concertos and about 500 other works. G.

Davies, Henry Walford (Oswestry, 1869). Eminent English organist and composer, trained by Parratt and at the Royal College, London, from 1890 organist in London, especially since 1898 as successor to E. J. Hopkins at the Temple Church. In 1901–13 he conducted the Church Choir Association, in 1903–07 the Bach Choir, and in 1910–13 was examiner for both Oxford and Cambridge, besides since 1895 teaching at the Royal College. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1894 and LL.D. of Leeds in 1904, and knighted in 1922. In 1923 he became national music-director for Wales. Has written the oratorio The Temple, 1902, the cantatas Hervé Riel, 1896, Three Jovial Huntsmen, 1900, Everyman, 1904, Ode on Time, 1908, Five Sayings of Jesus, 1911, and Song of St. Francis, 1912, the choral suites Songs of a Day, 1908, and Noble Numbers, 1909, a short Requiem a cappella, 1915, the symphonies in D (1895), Lift up your hearts (sacred, 1906) and in G (1912), 2 overtures, the orchestral suites Parthenia, 1911, and Wordsworth, 1913, Holiday Tunes for orchestra, 1907, Prospect for baritone and strings, 1898, 3 piano-quartets, 2 string-quartets, 3 violin-sonatas, a horn-sonata, church-music and many part-songs and songs. Author of Music and Christian Worship, 1913. G. A.

Davies, Mary (London, 1855). Welsh soprano, pupil of the Royal Academy, London, making her début in concert in 1873 and continuing until 1900 in constant request for concerts and festivals, in song-recitals and oratorio, especially under Hallé and Richter. In 1888 she married W. C. Davies. G.

Davis, John David (Edgbaston, 1869). English composer, pupil of the Frankfort and Brussels Conservatories, from 1889 teaching at Birmingham, in 1893–1904 at the Midland Institute there and since 1905 at the Guildhall School of Music, London. Has written the opera The Zaporogues, 1903 (Antwerp), the symphonic poem The Maid of Astolat, 1910, the symphonic ballad The Cenci, the overture Germania, a prelude to Maeterlinck's L'Intruse, Coronation March for orchestra, 1902, Symphonic Variations and Finale, 1905, the suite Miniatures and an Elegy for small orchestra, a Song of Evening for strings, a string-quartet, 2 violin-sonatas and other pieces, a piano-sonata, etc. G.

Davison, James William (London, 1813–1885, Margate). Prominent English critic, pupil of W. H. Holmes and Macfarren, in 1842–44 editing the Musical Examiner and in 1844–85 the Musical World, besides exercising a wide influence as critic for the London Times in 1846–79 and writing often for the Saturday Review, the Pall Mall Gazette and the Graphic. In 1859 he was a leading promoter of the Monday Popular Concerts, for which he prepared analytical programs till his death, as for the Hallé concerts. He was a friend and admirer of Mendelssohn, and his taste adhered to music upon classical lines, often very strenuously, though he was intimately familiar with romantic and impressionistic styles. In early life he composed much, but published only an overture (piano, 4-hands) to the fairy-story Fortunatus, some piano-pieces and songs. In 1859 he married his pupil Arabella Goddard, the pianist. Memoir by his son, Henry Davison, From Mendelssohn to Wagner, 1912. G.

Davy, John (n. Exeter, 1763–1824, London). English composer of music for nearly 20 plays (1800–20) and many popular songs. He was also a violinist in the Covent Garden orchestra. G.

Davy [Davys], Richard. 15th C. G.

Day, Alfred (London, 1810–1849, do.). English physician in London, author of a remarkable Treatise on Harmony, 1845, which contains an original survey of the nature, nomenclature and notation of chords that has great symmetry as well as ingenuity. G.

Day, Charles Russell (n. Norwich, 1860–1900, So. Africa). English military officer (major), serving in India in 1882–87 and in South Africa in 1899–1900. While in India he made original researches in Indian music, becoming an authority on instruments, so that he was a member of the English committee at the Vienna Exposition of 1892 and was invited for that at the Paris Exposition of 1900. Author of Music and Musical Instruments in Southern India and the Deccan, 1891, and an important catalogue of instruments exhibited in London in 1890. G.

Day, John (1522–1584). 16th C. G.

Dayas, William Humphries (New York, 1864–1903, Manchester, Eng.). American pianist, pupil of S. P. Jackson, S. P. Warren, Mills, Joseffy, Kullak, Ehrlich, Urban, Haupt and Liszt, as a youth was organist in New York, in 1888 toured in Europe with Senkrah, from 1890 taught at the Helsingfors Conservatory, from 1894 was in Düsseldorf, Wiesbaden, Cologne and New York, and from 1896 was Hallé's successor at the Royal College in Manchester, England. Wrote a suite for strings, a string-quartet, sonatas for violin, 'cello, organ and piano, 6 Psalms, piano-pieces and 3 sets of songs. His daughter Karin Elin (b. Helsingfors, 1892), pupil of the Weimar and Cologne Conservatories, has made a name in Germany, England and Russia as a pianist, specializing in modern works. A.

De Ahna. See Ahna.

De Angelis, Alberto (Rome, 1885). Italian journalist (editor of the Tribuna), author of a dictionary of musicians (1918, 2d ed. 1922).

De Angelis, Girolamo (Civitavecchia, 1858). Able Italian violinist, pupil of Bazzini and the Milan Conservatory, where from 1881 he was professor, besides being soloist at La Scala and in the Società del Quartetto, and since 1897 professor at the Royal Academy, Dublin. In 1894 he made a tour to South America.

Deakin, Andrew (Birmingham, 1822-1903, do.). English printer and critic, in 1876-94 writing for the Birmingham Gazette. Author of Outlines of Musical Bibliography, 1900, covering English publications in the 15th-18th centuries.

Debain, Alexandre François (Paris, 1809-1877, do.). From 1834 maker of pianos and organs in Paris and from 1840 inventor of the harmonium (free-reed organ), the antiphonal and the harmonichorde, besides improving the accordion. G.

Debefve, Jules (Liège, 1863.) Belgian pianist, trained at the Liège Conservatory, for many years professor there and from 1897 also conductor of popular concerts. Has written a Walloon Rhapsody for orchestra, various vocal works, sacred and secular (Walloon Crâmnions), a comic opera, 12 large piano-études, etc.

Debillemont, Jean Jacques (Dijon, 1824-1879, Paris). French violinist and composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, early playing at the Opéra-Comique, then at Dijon, but from 1859 again at Paris, where he conducted for the Société des Beaux-Arts and at a theater. Wrote about a dozen operas, mostly light, ballets, cantatas, etc.

De Boeck, Auguste (n. Ypres, 1865). Belgian organist and composer, trained at the Brussels Conservatory, where from about 1890 he was teacher, besides being organist at the Carmelite and St. Boniface churches, and also from 1908 theory-teacher at the Antwerp Conservatory. Has written the operas Théroigne de Méricourt, Winternachtsdroom, De Ryndwergen and Reinart de Bos, the ballets La Phalène and Cendrillon and other stage-music, a symphony, a Rhapsodie Dahomienne, a violin-concerto, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, organ- and piano-pieces, and songs.

Debussy, Claude Achille (St.-Germain-en-Laye, 1862-1918, Paris). Distinguished French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (many prizes, Prix de Rome, 1884), and then devoting himself to the gradual development of his eminently individual and poetic style. He speedily became the leader in the movement toward impressionistic expression, not simply for its pictorial effect, but as the embodiment of delicate and subtle inner experience. For the setting forth of this highly subjective conception of music he did not hesitate to diverge from established notions of tonal construction, utilizing scale-series that were unusual (often avoiding semitones), seeking novel harmonic successions, even to the reversal of accepted procedures, tending toward plastic and even vague rhythmic patterns, and everywhere more interested in color progressions and contrasts than in those of figure and contour. His own instinct was sure and fertile enough to make his artistic program important and instructive, though his imitators may readily lose themselves in formless vamping. The total amount of his composition is impressive, especially as it is relatively consistent with itself, so that it has a massive unity more weighty than the effect of any one work. Whether this type of art is to be regarded as the peculiar fruit of his own peculiar individuality or simply an outcome of somewhat diffused tendencies in his race or the age, is perhaps a question that cannot yet be determined with assurance.

A summary of his works is as follows:

Orchestral Works

Symphonic poem, Almanzor, 1886, Marche Écossaise, 1891, Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune, 1892, 3 symphonic sketches La Mer, 1903-05, 3 Images (3d set, see below), 1909, ballet Jeux, 1912, 'légende dansée' Khamma, 1912, incidental music to King Lear, 1897-99, Le Martyre de St.-Sébastien, 1911, Psyché, 1913, and Le Poison Noir, 1917. With chorus—symphonic suite Printemps, 1887 (revised 1913), 3 Nocturnes, 1897, cantata L'Enfant Prodigue, 1884, La Démoniaque Élie (women's voices), 1887. Lyric drama, Pelléas et Mélisande, 1892-1902. With piano—Fantaisie, 1889. With harp—Danse Profane, Danse Sacrée, 1904 (or for piano and strings).

Chamber-Works

String-quartet, 1893. Sonatas for violin, 1917, for 'cello, 1915, for flute, viola and harp, 1916. Rhapsody for clarinet, 1910.

Piano-Works

About 75 pieces, singly or in groups, including Suite Bergamasque, 1890, Estampes, 1903, 6 Images (1st and 2d sets) 1905, '07, 12 Préludes, 1910, 12 Études, 1915, Petite Suite and 9 other pieces for 4 hands, etc.

Songs

About 50 songs, mostly in sets, including Fêtes Galantes (2 sets), 1892, 1904, Proses Lyriques (texts by composer), 1894-95, etc.

Transcriptions

For orchestra—Satie's Gymnopédies, nos. 1 and 3. For piano solo—Schumann's À la Fontaine. For piano, 4 hands—Glück-Saint-Saëns' Caprice sur les Aïrs de Ballet de Alceste. For 2 pianos—Saint-Saëns' Introduction et Rondo Capriccioso, 2d Symphony in A min., and Balletman overture, and Schumann's 6 Studies in canon.

His numerous essays in various journals are collected under the title Monsieur Croche, Anti-Dilettante, 1918. Memoirs or monographs by Daly, 1908, Liebig, 1908, Laurencie, 1909, Laloy, 1909, Sartoliquido, 1909, Caillard and De Bérays, 1910, Setaccioli, 1910, Rivière, 1911, Séré, 1911, Rolland, 1912, Chennevière, 1913, Paglia, 1913, Jean-Aubry, 1916, Liebig, 1918, and Cortot, 1922, besides many articles. G. A.

Dechert, Hugo (Dresden, 1860). Saxon 'cellist, pupil of the Berlin Hochschule, since 1884 soloist with the Royal Orchestra at Berlin, besides playing in the Halir Quartet till 1909 and in the Hess Quartet since 1910, with much teaching.

Dechevrens, Antoine (n. Geneva, 1840-1912, do.). Swiss Jesuit priest, professor at Angers University. Author of Du Rythme dans l'Hymnographie Latine, 1895, Études de Science Musicale, 3 vols., 1898, Composition Musicale et Littéraire, 1911, and an article on Chinese music in I. M. G. Sammelbde. ii.

Decker, Konstantin (Fürstenau, 1810-1878, Stolp). Prussian pianist and composer, pupil of Dehn, working successively at Halle, Leipzig, Breslau, Königsberg, Petrograd (for many years), Potsdam and (from 1859) Stolp. Wrote 3 operas (1837-52), a string-quartet, 2 pianosonatas, fantasias and songs.

Decreus, Camille (Paris, 1876). Excellent French pianist, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (many prizes), in 1896-1900 accompanist or répétiteur at the Opéra, from 1906 increasingly conspicuous as soloist and ensemble-player both in Europe and in America, touring with Calvé in 1906 and '08, with Ysaÿe in 1912-14 and in 1915-16 with Tournet. Since 1912 he has lived in Washington.

Decsey, Ernst (Hamburg, 1870). German critic, trained at the Vienna Conservatory, from 1899 on the Gratz Tagespost and since 1908 its editor. Author of a notable life of Hugo Wolf, 4 vols. 1903-06 (6th ed. 1919).

Dedekind, Constantin Christian (1628-1697). 17th C. G.

Dedekind, Euricius (?-1619) and Henning (?-1628). 16th C. G.

Dedler, Rochus (Oberammergau, 1779-1822, Vienna). Composer of the music for the Oberammergau Passion-play.

Deering, Richard (?-1630). 17th C.

Defesch, Willem (Amsterdam, ?1700-1760?, London). Dutch violinist, in 1725-31 choir-master at Antwerp Cathedral and then in London. Wrote 2 oratorios, a mass, much chamber-music and songs. G.

Deffès, Louis Pierre (Toulouse, 1819-1900, do.). French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1847), active at Paris from 1852 and from 1883 head of the Toulouse branch of the Conservatory. Wrote 15 operas (from 1855), including Les Petites Violons du Roi, 1859, Les Croqueuses de Pommes, 1868, Le Marchand de Venise and especially Jessica, 1898, a symphony (1851), a grand mass (1857) and other church-music, overtures, men's choruses and songs.

Degele, Eugen (Munich, 1834-1886, Dresden). Bavarian operatic baritone, pupil of the Munich Conservatory and of Rauscher, from 1856 engaged at Hanover and from 1861 at the Dresden court-opera. He was chosen to sing at the premières of several of Marschner's operas.

Degner, Erich Wolf (n. Glauchau, 1858-1908, n. Weimar). Saxon composer, trained at Weimar and Würzburg, at first teaching at Ratisbon and Gotha, from 1885 at Pettau in Styria, from 1888 at Weimar, from 1891 head of the Gratz Musikverein and from 1902 director of that at Weimar. Wrote a symphony for organ and orchestra, an overture, a serenade for small orchestra, the cantata Maria und die Mutter, organ- and piano-pieces, songs, etc., and Anleitungen u. Beispiele zum Bildung von Kadenzzen, 1902.

Degtarev, Stepan Ankievitch (1766-1813). Russian church-musician in the employ of Count Scheremetiev. Wrote about 60 choir-pieces and the choral works Minin and Poscharsky, The Deliverance of Moscow and The Flight of Napoleon (unfinished).

De Haan, Willem (Rotterdam, 1849). Dutch conductor and composer, pupil of Nicolai, De Lange, Bargiel and the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1873 director at Bingen, from 1876 choral conductor at Darmstadt and since 1895 court-director there. Has written the operas Die Kaiserstochter, 1885, and Die Inkasöhne, 1895, various cantatas for mixed or men's chorus, songs, etc.

Dehn, Siegfried Wilhelm (Altona, 1799-1858, Berlin). Important German theorist, pupil of Bernhard Klein, from 1842 music-librarian in the Berlin Library, in 1842-48 editor of Cäcilia, and an extremely effective teacher (Rubinstein, Kullak, Glinka, Kiel and many more among his pupils). Wrote a Theoretisch-praktische Harmonielehre, 1840 (2d ed. 1860), Lehre vom Kontrapunkt, dem Kanon u. der Fuge, 1859 (2d ed. 1883), edited a Sammlung älterer Musik aus dem 16. u. 17. Jahrh., 12 books, 1837, and translated Delmotte's life of Lassus (1837), besides issuing an analysis of some fugues of Bach and G. M. Bononcini (1858). G.

Deiss, Michael 16th C. G.

Deiters, Hermann Clemens Otto (Bonn, 1833-1907, Coblenz). Rhenish educator, trained at Bonn University (degrees in law and philosophy, 1858), from 1858 teacher in gymnasia at Bonn and Düren, from 1874 gymnasium-director at Konitz, Posen and Bonn, and from 1890 in the Ministry of Public Worship at Berlin. Wrote numerous musical articles in the Deutsche Musikzeitung, the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung and other periodicals, contributed to the 3d edition of Meyer's Konversations-Lexikon and a life of Brahms to Von Waldersee's Sammlung (1882, '98), and translated Thayer's Beethoven (5 vols. 1866-1908). In 1889 and 1905 he edited the 3d and 4th editions of Jahn's life of Mozart. His interest in problems of Greek music and in Brahms illustrate the breadth of his scholarship. G.

DeKoven, Henry Louis Reginald (Middletown, Conn. 1859–1920, New York). American critic and composer, educated in England and musically trained at Stuttgart, Frankfort, Florence, Vienna and Paris, from 1889 critic in Chicago, from 1891 in New York, mostly for the World, and in 1902–05 conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra in Washington, which he organized. Wrote about 20 very successful light operas, including Robin Hood, 1890, The Knickerbockers, 1893, The Mandarin, 1896, Red Feather, 1903, The Golden Butterfly, 1907, and Her Little Highness, 1913, the grand operas The Canterbury Pilgrims, 1917 (New York), and Rip van Winkle, 1920 (Chicago), more than 400 extremely popular songs and some piano-pieces, besides a piano-sonata, an orchestral suite and several ballets. A.

Delaborde, Élie Miriam (Chaillot, 1839). Able French pianist and teacher, pupil of Alkan, Moscheles and Liszt, for some years touring as soloist and from 1873 professor at the Paris Conservatory. Has written the overture Attila, the opera La Reine Dort, a piano-quintet and pieces, songs, etc. G.

DeLamarter, Eric (Lansing, Mich., 1880). American organist and conductor, pupil of Mary W. Chase, Middelschulte, Guilman and Widor, from 1911 conductor of the Chicago Musical Art Society and in 1918–19 of the Symphony Orchestra, and since 1914 organist at the Fourth Presbyterian Church, besides serving as critic since 1908, from 1910 on the Inter-Ocean. Has written the overture The Faun, 1915, chamber-music, piano- and organ-pieces, songs and incidental music for plays. A.

De Lara [-Cohen], Isidoro (London, 1858). Italian-English composer, trained at the Milan Conservatory, since 1876 working in London, except for a sojourn at Monte Carlo in 1896–1900. Has written the operas The Light of Asia, 1892 (originally a cantata), Amy Robsart, 1893, Moïna, 1897, Messalina, 1899, Le Réveil de Bouddha, 1904, Sanga, 1906, Solea, 1907, Naïla, 1912, and Les Trois Masques, 1912.

Delâtre, Claude Petit-Jan and Oliver. 16th C.

Deldevez, Édouard Marie Ernest (Paris, 1817–1897, do.). Able French violinist, conductor and composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory, from 1859 second conductor at the Opéra and the Conservatory concerts and first at the Opéra in 1873–77 and at the Conservatory in 1872–83, retiring in 1885. Wrote the operas Mazarina, Yanko le Bandit, Samson and Le Violon Enchanté, 4 ballets (1844–51), 3 symphonies, chamber- and church-music, songs, etc., besides Curiosités Musicales, 1873, La Notation de la Musique Classique, L'Art du Chef d'Orchestre, 1878, La Société des Concerts, 1860–85, 1887, De L'Exécution d'Ensemble, 1888, Le Passé à propos du Présent, 1893, and Mes Mémoires, 1890. G.

Delezenne, Charles Édouard Joseph (Lille, 1776–1866, do.). French physicist, publishing important acoustical researches (in the Proceedings of the Lille Société des Sciences, 1827–57).

Delhasse, Félix (Spa, 1809–1898, Brussels). Belgian editor at Brussels, in 1854 the founder of the Guide Musical and till 1887 its editor, besides connection with many other periodicals. Published the important Annuaire Dramatique, 1839–47, and Galerie de Portraits d'Artistes Musiciens du Royaume de Belgique, 1842–43.

Delibes, Clément Philibert Léo (St.-Germain-du-Val, 1836–1891, Paris). Eminent French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory, from 1853 accompanist at the Théâtre-Lyrique, in 1865–72 chorusmaster at the Opéra and from 1881 professor at the Conservatory. In 1884 he took Massé's place in the Académie. For a time he served on the government commission for music in the schools at St. Denis and Sceaux, in connection with which he wrote a mass and some children's choruses. Similar interest in the Société Orphéonique led to choruses for men's voices. But his main work was as a composer for the stage. Wrote nearly 20 operettas and other light works (1855–69), the extremely popular ballets La Source, 1866, Coppélia, 1870, and Sylvia, 1876, the opéras comiques Le Roi l'a Dit, 1873, Jean de Nivelle, 1880, Lakmé, 1883, Kassya (completed by Massenet), 1893, and sketches of Le Roi des Montagnes, incidental music to Le Roi s'Amuse (1882), the dramatic scene La Mort d'Orphée, 1878, ballet-music for Adam's Le Corsaire (1882), the cantata Alger, 1865, and a set of 15 songs or lieder. G.

Delieux de Savignac, Charles (Lorient, 1830). French pianist and composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (grand prix in counterpoint, 1846). Wrote the opera Yvonne et Loïc, 1854, many characteristic piano-pieces and a piano-method.

Delius, Frederick (Bradford, 1863). German composer (born in England), self-taught in 1883–86 (while living in Florida as an orange-planter) and then studying at the Leipzig Conservatory. Since 1890 he has lived in or near Paris, developing a remarkably unique quality as an independent composer in many forms, with a marked mastery of orchestral expression. Has written the lyric dramas Irmelin (1890), The Magic Fountain (1894), Koanga, 1904, Romeo and Julia auf dem Dorfe, 1907, Margot la Rouge (1902) and Fennimore und Gerda, 1919, many works for orchestra, including the fantasia overture Over the Hills and Far Away, incidental music to Heiberg's Folkaraadet, 1897 (later also as a suite), the symphonic poems Life's Dream, The Song of a Great City (Paris), Brigg Fair and In a Summer Garden, a Dance Rhapsody, North-Country Sketches, a piano-concerto in C min., the American tone-poem Appalachia (with choral finale), Sea-Drift (with baritone and chorus), A Mass of Life (with soli and chorus), Songs of Sunset

(with baritone, soprano and chorus), The Song of the High Hills (with chorus), An Arabesk (with baritone and chorus), 2 Tone-Poems for small orchestra, a Requiem (with soli and chorus), an orchestral Ballade, besides a violin-concerto, a concerto for violin and 'cello, a Légende for violin and orchestra, and about 30 striking songs. Since 1900 his works have had repeated presentation, especially in Germany. Sketch by Chop, 1907. G. A.

Della Maria, Pierre Antoine Doménique (Marseilles, 1769–1800, Paris). Italian-French composer, pupil for a time of Paisiello, from 1796 in Paris. Wrote about 15 operas, including Il Maestro di Cappella, 1793 (Trieste) and especially Le Prisonnier, 1798 (Paris).

Deller, Florian Johann (Drosendorf, 1729–1773, Munich). Austrian violinist, from 1751 in the court-band at Stuttgart and later concert-master, going in 1771 to Vienna and thence to Munich. Wrote several singspiele and other stage-works, including the popular ballet Orpheus und Euridice, 1763, some symphonies and 6 trio-sonatas.

Delle Sedie, Enrico (Leghorn, 1826–1907, Paris). Famous Italian singing-teacher, pupil of Galeffi, Persanola and Domeniconi, from 1851 appearing on Italian stages and from 1861 at the Italiens in Paris, where soon he became professor at the Conservatory and there widely influential. Wrote the standard Arte e Fisiologia del Canto, 1876, and L'Estetica del Canto, 1886 (also both in English), with a condensed summary called A Complete Method of Singing. G.

Dellinger, Rudolf (Graslitz, 1857–1910, Dresden). Bohemian conductor and composer, trained at the Prague Conservatory, at first clarinetist and conductor at Brünn, from 1883 conductor at a Hamburg theater and from 1893 conductor at Dresden. Wrote the effective operettas Don César, 1885, Lorraine, 1886, Capitan Fracassa, 1889, Saint-Cyr, 1891, Die Chansonnette, 1894, Jadwiga, 1901, and Der letzte Jonas, 1910.

Dell' Orifice, Giuseppe (n. Ortona, 1848–1889, Naples). Italian composer, pupil of the Naples Conservatory, from 1878 conductor at San Carlo there. Wrote the operas Romilda de' Bardi, 1874, Egmont, 1878, Il Segreto della Duchessa, 1879, and L'Oasi, 1886, a ballet, songs and piano-pieces.

Delmas, Jean François (Lyons, 1861). Eminent French operatic bass, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, since 1886 a leading and popular artist at the Opéra, especially in Wagnerian works. He has sung at the premières of Salvayre's La Dame de Monsoreau (1888), Massenet's Le Mage (1891) and Thaïs (1894), Reyer's Salammbô (1892), Leroux' Astarte (1901), Saint-Saëns' Les Barbares (1901), etc., besides covering the whole range of modern French opera. See Curzon, Croquis d'Artistes, 1898.

Delmotte, Henri Florent (Mons, 1799–1836, do.). Belgian lawyer and librarian at Mons, author of a life of Orlandus Lassus (1836) and collected material for one of Philippe de Mons. G.

Delna, Marie [name originally Ledan] (n. Paris, 1875). Eminent French operatic contralto, pupil of Mme. Laborde, from 1892 highly successful at the Opéra-Comique and in 1898–1901 also at the Opéra, in 1903–08 in retirement, but then again in much favor. In 1910 she sang at the Metropolitan in New York.

Delprat, Charles (1803–1888, Pau). French singing-teacher in Paris, author of L'Art du Chant (2d ed. 1870), and La Question Vocale, 1885.

Delsarte, François Alexandre Nicolas Chéri (Solesmes, 1811–1871, Paris). Noted French teacher of the combined arts of expression through voice and action. He was at first a tenor-singer, pupil of Garaudé and Ponchard. In 1855 he invented an apparatus to facilitate piano-tuning. Memoir by Arnaud, 1859.

De Luca, Giuseppe (Rome, 1876). Eminent Italian operatic baritone, since 1897 a favorite in Italy, from 1902 mostly at Milan, and since 1915 highly successful in New York. He assisted at the premières of Cilea's Adriana Lecouvreur, (1902), Giordano's Siberia (1903), Puccini's Madama Butterfly (1904), Franchetti's Notte di Leggenda (1914) and Granados' Goyescas (1916). He has received official orders from Italy, Rumania and Portugal. A.

Delune, Louis (Charleroi, 1876). Belgian conductor at Brussels, pupil of Tincl and prize-winner at the Conservatory. Has written a cantata, a piano-concerto, sonatas for violin and for 'cello, songs and piano-pieces.

Del Valle de Paz, Edgardo (Alexandria, Egypt, 1861). Italian pianist and composer, pupil of the Naples Conservatory, appearing when but sixteen in Italy and Egypt and then settling in Florence, becoming professor in the Conservatory in 1890, organizing the Circolo Del Valle in 1893 and managing La Nuova Musica in 1896–1914. Has written suites for orchestra and for piano, chamber-music, a piano-sonata, the opera Oriana, 1907, and a widely-used piano-method.

Demachi, Giuseppe. Italian violinist, about 1740 in the court-orchestra at Turin and from 1771 at Geneva. Wrote quartets, trios, violin-sonatas and other chamber-music.

Demantius, Christoph (1567–1643). 16th C. G.

Demarest, Clifford (Tenaflly, N. J. 1874). American organist, pupil of his mother and Woodman, since 1900 at various New York churches, latterly at the Church of the Messiah. In 1916–19 he was warden of the Am. Guild of Organists. Has written 2 cantatas, many organ-works, including a Pastoral Suite and a Fantasy for organ and piano, besides a work on accompaniment. A.

Demenyi, Desiderius (Pest, 1871). Hungarian priest, editor and composer, pupil of Herzfeld and Bachó, from 1897 chaplain at the Gran gymnasium and since 1913 choirmaster at St.

Stephen's in Vienna. He has thrice taken the Zichy prize for the orchestral works Ungarische Tanzsuite, Festouvertüre and Rhapsodie. In 1902 he founded the important journal Zene-közlöny. Has written 4 masses a cappella, 2 Bilder aus Algier, a Serenata Sinfonica, an operetta, 4 melodramas and about 100 songs.

Demeur, Anne Arsène, née Charton (n. Saintes, 1827-1892, Paris). French stage-soprano, pupil of Bizot, making her début at Bordeaux in 1842, going thence to Toulouse, Brussels and London (1846-50), after 1853 mostly in Italian works at Petrograd, Vienna and in America, besides often at Paris. In 1847 she married the flutist Demeur at Brussels. After 1866 she retired from the operatic stage, through occasionally singing in concert. She assisted at the première of Berlioz' Les Troyens (1863), and at important productions of others of his works. G.

De Mol, Pierre (Brussels, 1825-1899, Alost). Belgian 'cellist and composer, trained at the Brussels Conservatory, taught first at Besançon, later at Alost, where he became head of the Conservatory. Wrote an opera, an oratorio, a mass, a Te Deum, 3 cantatas, 12 string-quartets, etc. His nephew François Marie (1844-1883) was organist at Brussels and later at Marseilles, where he also conducted concerts and from 1875 taught in the Conservatory, but returned to Brussels in 1877. He also wrote an opera.

De Munck, Ernest (Brussels, 1840-1915, London), son of the next. Able Belgian 'cellist, pupil of his father and Servais, early touring or teaching in England, from 1868 in the Maurin Quartet at Paris, from 1870 in the court-orchestra at Weimar, in 1879 married Carlotta Patti and lived again in Paris, and from 1893 was professor at the Royal Academy, London, and later at the Guildhall School. G (Munck).

De Munck, François (Brussels, 1815-1854, do.). Brilliant Belgian 'cellist, pupil of the Brussels Conservatory, where he succeeded Platel as professor in 1835, from 1845 toured in Germany and from 1848 for a time played at His Majesty's, London. G (Munck).

Denefve, Jules (Chimay, 1814-1877, Mons). Belgian 'cellist, pupil of Platel and the elder De Munck, spending his life at Mons as head of the Music School, conductor of the Société des Concerts and from 1841 also of the Roland de Latre choral society. Wrote 3 operas, several cantatas, a Requiem, orchestral pieces and men's choruses. G.

Denéréaz, Alexandre (Lausanne, 1875). Swiss teacher, pupil of the organist Blanchet and of the Dresden Conservatory, since 1896 at the Lausanne Conservatory and conductor of a men's chorus. Has written orchestral and choral works, and also L'Évolution de l'Art Musical, 1919.

Dengremont, Maurice (Rio de Janeiro, 1866-1893, Buenos Aires). Precocious Brazilian violinist, from 1877 winning much notice in Europe.

Dennée, Charles Frederick (Oswego, N. Y. 1863). American pianist and teacher, trained at the New England Conservatory, Boston, and under Von Bülow, since 1883 professor at the Conservatory and till 1897 also very active as recitalist. Has written many operettas, an overture, a violin-sonata, a 'cello-suite, a text-book on playing and many études and pieces, besides editing the revised edition of the Century Library of Music and part of Music and Musicians. A.

Denner, Johann Christoph (Leipzig, 1655-1707, Nuremberg). A maker of wood-wind instruments at Nuremberg who about 1700 evolved the clarinet out of the old French chalumeau and then started its manufacture and widespread adoption. He is the hero of the opera Der Klarinettenmacher of Weigmann (1913).

Dent, Edward James (n. Harrogate, 1876). Able English musicologist, pupil of Lloyd, C. Wood and Stanford, since 1902 fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Author of a life of Alessandro Scarlatti (1905), Mozart's Operas, a Critical Study, 1913, and important contributions to the Riemann Festschrift (1909), the Musical Antiquary, the I. M. G. Sammelbde., the Musical Quarterly and other journals.

Dente, Josef (Stockholm, 1838-1905, do.). Swedish violinist and conductor, pupil of d'Aubert, Winge, Berwald and Léonard, at first playing in the court-orchestra at Stockholm, from 1861 répétiteur at the Opera, from 1868 concertmaster and in 1879-85 conductor, and also in 1882-1903 professor at the Conservatory. Wrote a prize-symphony (1888), an overture (1885), a violin-concerto, the operetta In Marocco, 1866, etc.

Dentice, Scipione (1560-1633). 16th C.

Denza, Luigi (Castellammare, 1846-1922, London). Italian composer, pupil of the Naples Conservatory, from 1879 working in London, from 1898 professor at the Royal Academy. Wrote the opera Wallenstein, 1876, and at least 600 songs of great popularity (including 'Funiculi Funiculà'), G.

Denzler, Robert F. (Zurich, 1892). Swiss conductor, trained at the Zurich Conservatory and in Cologne, where and later at Bayreuth he was chorusmaster at the opera. From 1912 he was city-director at Lucerne and since 1915 opera-conductor at Zurich, besides from 1918 directing the choral society and from 1921 acting as artistic director at the Stadttheater. Has written a symphony (with chorus and soloists), 2 orchestral fantasias, a suite for two violins, solo, etc. His wife is an accomplished singer.

Deppe, Ludwig (n. Detmold, 1823-1890, Pymont). Noted North German conductor and piano-teacher, pupil of Marxsen and Lobe, from 1860 working at Hamburg, where till 1868 he led a choral society, and from 1874 in Berlin, from 1886 as court-conductor, besides directing the Silesian Festivals from 1876 and winning great reputation as a teacher. Wrote a symphony, 2 overtures, some songs, and the books Armleiden der Klavierspieler, 1885, and Zwei Jahre Kapellmeister, 1890. On his method, see Amy Fay's Music-Study in Germany, 1881, and books by Klose (1886) and Elisabeth Caland (1897). G.

De Reszké, Édouard (Warsaw, 1855-1917, n. Piotrków). Eminent Polish operatic bass, pupil of his brother (see below), Ciaffei, Steller and Coletti, making his début at Paris in 1876, going to Italy in 1878 and to London in 1880, then mostly in Paris and London with his brother, the two making a great impression in New York in 1891-1901. In 1906 he retired, finally settling on his estate in Poland. Sketch by H. Klein in Musical Times, July, 1917. G (Reszké).

De Reszké, Jean (Warsaw, 1850), brother of the above. Eminent Polish operatic tenor, pupil of Ciaffei, Cotogni and Sbriglia, appearing first in 1874 at Venice (as baritone) and then throughout Italy, at Madrid from 1879 (as tenor) and from 1884 at Paris. From 1888 he was a reigning favorite at Covent Garden, London, and in 1891-1901 at the Metropolitan, New York, beginning with Wagnerian rôles in 1895. In 1902 he retired from the stage, becoming a teacher in Paris. He sang at the première of Massenet's Le Cid (1885). He and his brother were often associated, as especially in America. To a remarkably rich and sympathetic voice he adds the charm of a singularly delicate dramatic insight. [The family-name is properly Meczislaw]. G (Reszké).

De Sanctis, Cesare (Albano, 1830). Italian theorist, after being maestro or director in churches and theaters in Rome, from 1876 professor of harmony at the new Conservatory. Has written an overture, a Requiem, 100 fugues a cappella in strict style, and text-books in harmony and counterpoint.

Désaugiers, Marc Antoine (Fréjus, 1742-1793, Paris). French composer, self-taught, from 1779 writing about a dozen bright operettas, the cantata Hiérodrame, 1790 (on the fall of the Bastille) and a Requiem for Sacchini (1786).

Deshayes, Prosper Didier. French composer of various operettas, ballets and other stage-pieces in Paris in 1782-99, 2 oratorios (1780, '86), 3 cantatas, some symphonies, etc.

Deslandres, Adolphe Édouard Marie (Paris, 1840-1911, do.). French composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (several prizes), from about 1862 organist at Ste-Marie des Batignolles. Wrote 3 light operas (1872-76), a Seven Words, masses, patriotic odes and cantatas, etc.

Desmarets, Henri (1662-1741). 17th C. G.

Després, Josquin (1450-1521). 15th C. G (Josquin).

Dessau, Bernhard (Hamburg, 1861). North German violinist, pupil of Schradieck, Joachim and Wieniawski, from about 1880 concertmaster at Görlitz, Königsberg, Brunn, Prague, Rotterdam and (since 1898) at the Royal Opera, Berlin, teaching somewhat at the Stern Conservatory and receiving the title of professor in 1906. Has written much for violin, including a concerto.

Dessauer, Heinrich (Würzburg, 1863-1917, Linz). Bavarian violinist, pupil of Joachim and Sauret, from about 1885 for a time teaching at the Breslaur Seminary in Berlin and then living at Linz. He sought to improve the viola by using thicker strings and almost a violin-model. Author of a Violinschule, 1907, and Die Verbesserungversuche im Bau d. Viola, 1912.

Dessauer, Josef (Prague, 1798-1876, n. Vienna). Bohemian composer, pupil of Tomaschek and D. Weber, widely famous for the charm of his many songs, chamber-music and piano-pieces, besides 5 operas (1836-60), overtures, etc. Memoir by Hédouin. G.

Dessoff, Felix Otto (Leipzig, 1835-1892, Frankfurt). Saxon conductor, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1854 theater-director at various places, from 1860 court-director at Vienna, conductor of the Philharmonic orchestra and teacher in the Conservatory, from 1875 court-director at Karlsruhe, and from 1881 at the Frankfurt theater. Wrote a piano-quintet, a piano-quartet, piano-sonatas, etc. G.

Dessoir, Max (Berlin, 1867). Professor of philosophy at Berlin University and author of various treatises, including Aesthetik u. allgemeine Kunstwissenschaft, 1906, and editor of the Zeitschrift für Aesthetik. His wife, née Susanne Triepel (b. 1869), is a noted oratorio- and lieder-singer. He has edited a collection of songs from before Schubert's time.

Destinn, Emmy [name originally Kittl] (Prague, 1878). Distinguished Bohemian operatic soprano, pupil of Mme. Loewe-Destinn [whence her stage-name], making her début in 1898 at Berlin and at once engaged there at the Royal Opera. She first appeared in London in 1905 and in 1908 joined the staff of the Metropolitan, New York, besides visiting Paris in 1901 and also singing at Bayreuth (first performance there of Der fliegende Holländer). She was chosen by Strauss to assist at the Berlin premières of Feuersnot and Salome (1901, '06), and she also sang at the première of Puccini's Girl of the Golden West (1910, New York). To her répertoire of over 80 works she brings a voice of great richness and warmth of color, with eminent dignity of interpretation. She is also a literary artist, having written a drama, poems and novels. Sketch by Brieger-Wasservogel, 1908. G, A.

Destouches, André Cardinal (Paris, 1672-1749, do.). French composer, pupil of Campra and a favorite of Louis XIV and XV, becoming director of the Opéra in 1713, of the Chapelle Royale (for church-music) in 1726 and court-choirmaster in 1728. Wrote several operas (1697-1718), 3 ballets, including Le Carnaval et la Folie, 1704, 2 cantatas, a Te Deum (1732) and other church-music. Memoir by Dulle, 1909. G.

Destouches, Franz Seraph von (Munich, 1772-1844, do.). Bavarian composer, pupil of Haydn, from 1797 director at Erlangen, from 1799 in the Weimar orchestra, succeeding Kranz as concertmaster in 1804-08, from 1810 professor at the Landshut University (till its removal to Munich in 1826), and in 1826-42 court-director at Homburg, then retiring to Munich. Wrote 2 operas, an operatta, incidental music to many plays by Schiller, Werner and Kotzebue, a piano-concerto, a piano-trio, piano-sonatas, etc. Memoir by his grand-nephew, Ernst von Destouches (1843-1917), 1904, who also wrote on the Munich court-theater (1878) and on Lassus (1894).

Destranges, Louis Augustin Étienne Rouillé- (Nantes, 1863). French critic and author, since 1890 editor of the Ouest-Artiste at Nantes. Author of L'Évolution Musicale chez Verdi, 1895, Consonances et Dissonances, 1906, several works on Wagner and Bayreuth (1888-99), on Saint-Saëns and Franck, and thematic guides to Bruneau's Le Rêve and Messidor, d'Indy's Le Chant de la Cloche and Fervéal, Wagner's Flying Dutchman, Chabrier's Briséis, Berlioz's Les Troyens, Jaques-Dalcroze's Sancho and Humperdinck's Hänsel und Gretel. G.

Desvignes, Victor François (Treves, 1805-1853, Metz). French violinist, trained at Paris, from 1835 founder and director of the Metz Conservatory (since 1841 affiliated with that at Paris). Wrote 2 operas, a symphony, 9 overtures, chamber-music, a Stabat Mater, 1833, choruses and songs.

Deswert, Jules (Louvain, 1843-1891, Ostend). Able Belgian 'cellist, pupil of Servais, touring from about 1860, from 1865 concertmaster at Düsseldorf, in 1868 in the Weimar orchestra, in 1869-73 court-'cellist at Berlin and professor in the Hochschule, then at Wiesbaden and Leipzig, and from 1888 head of the Ostend Music-School, teaching also at Ghent and Bruges. Wrote the operas Die Albigenzer, 1878, and Graf Hammerstein, 1884, the symphony Nordseefahrt, 3 'cello-concertos, etc. G (Swert).

Déthier, Édouard (Liège, 1885), brother of the following. Belgian violinist, trained at the Liège and Brussels Conservatories, teaching also at the latter and making his début in 1903. Since 1906 he has taught at the Inst. of Musical Art, New York, and toured as soloist. A.

Déthier, Gaston Marie (Liège, 1875). Brilliant Belgian organist, pupil of the Liège Conservatory and of Guilman, from 1894 organist at St. Francis Xavier's, New York, and since 1907 professor at the Inst. of Musical Art, besides much concertizing. In 1915 he and his brother (see above) gave notable sonata-recitals (violin and piano). A.

Dett, Robert Nathaniel (Drummondville, Que. 1882). Noted Negro pianist and composer, pupil of the Oberlin Conservatory, since 1913 teacher and choral conductor at Hampton Institute in Virginia. Has written a piano-sonata, the piano-suites The Magnolia and In the Bottoms, the cantatas The Chariot Jubilee and The Death of Moses, the song-cycle The Heart of a Poet, etc. A.

Dettmer, Wilhelm (n. Hildesheim, 1808-1876, Frankfurt). Hanoverian operatic bass, pupil of Miksch, in 1842-74 popular at Dresden and Frankfurt in both comic and serious rôles.

Deutsch, Moritz (Nikolsburg, 1818-1892, Breslau). Moravian cantor, trained at the Vienna Conservatory and the Breslau Institut, from 1842 singing in a Vienna synagogue and from 1844 prominent at Breslau both as an artistic interpreter of the Jewish ritual and also as oratorio-singer. In 1859 he founded a school for cantors, besides teaching at the Jewish Theological Seminary. Wrote 12 organ-preludes, songs for synagogue and school (1867), a Vorbeterschule, 1872 (collection of synagogue-intonations), with continuations in 1890, Breslauer Synagogengesänge, 1880, etc.

Deutsch, Otto Erich (Vienna, 1883). Austrian student of the history of art and literature, since 1905 writing many essays on various composers, especially Schubert. Author of Schubert-Brevier, 1905, and (with Scheibler), Franz Schubert die Dokumente seines Lebens u. Schaffens, 1913, with bibliography and thematic catalogue, besides his Brevier u. Schriften, 1919.

Devienne, François (Joinville, 1759-1803, n. Paris). French flutist and bassoonist, playing in various Paris orchestras and from 1795 teaching in the Conservatory. Wrote 11 operas, numerous works for orchestra or ensemble that gave an impetus to music for wind-instruments, and a flute-method.

Devrient, Philipp Eduard (Berlin, 1801-1877, Karlsruhe). Prussian actor, at first a baritone singer, pupil of Zelter, in 1853-69 director of the court-theater at Karlsruhe. Author of Briefe aus Paris, 1840, and Erinnerungen an Mendelssohn, 1869 (3d ed. 1891), many librettos, including that for Marschner's Hans Heiling (1833), at the première of which he sang. Wrote also a general history of the German stage (5 vols. 1848-74).

Deyo, Ruth Lynda (Poughkeepsie, N. Y. 1884). American pianist, pupil of Mason, Mosenenthal, MacDowell, Stepanoff and Mme. Carreño, making her début at Berlin in 1904 and repeatedly touring in Europe, besides since 1913 in America (in 1915-16 with Casals).

Dezède [Desaides] (Lyons, ?1740-1792, Paris). French composer of 18 operas and opérettes (from 1772), including Blaise et Babet, 1783, and Alemdor, 1787. Memoir by Pougin, 1862.

Diabelli, Antonio (n. Salzburg, 1781-1858, Vienna). Austrian priest, educated at Munich and a musical pupil of the two Haydns, from 1803 at Vienna, from 1818 becoming a music-publisher and in 1824 forming the firm of Diabelli & Co., among whose clients were Beethoven, Czerny and especially Schubert. Wrote an opera (1809), masses, cantatas, chamber-music, piano-music, etc., in a fluent style. In 1852 the firm became C. A. Spina and in 1872 F. Schreiber (from 1876 owned by Cranz of Hamburg). G.

Díaz de la Peña, Eugène Émile (Paris, 1837-1901, Coleville), son of the famous painter.

French composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory. Wrote the operas Le Roi Candaule, 1865, La Coupe du Roi de Thulé, 1867 (prize-work), and Benvenuto Cellini, 1890, and many songs.

Dibbern, Karl (Altona, 1855). North German composer, after work at Lübeck and Dresden, stage-manager at the Amsterdam Opera, writing many operettas (from 1888) and the operas Erik Jensen, 1899, and Odja, 1900.

Dibdin, Charles (n. Southampton, 1745–1814, London). Versatile English stage-singer, playwright and manager, from 1760 variously active in London, often at Covent Garden and Drury Lane, but from 1782 in enterprises of his own, including 'table-entertainments' (monologues, songs, etc.). Wrote about 70 stage-pieces, many of which were long popular (usually both words and music), some 30 entertainments, and many effective songs, especially those of sea-life. G.

Dickinson, Clarence (LaFayette, Ind. 1873). American organist, variously trained in Chicago, Berlin and Paris, from about 1905 organist and choral conductor in or near Chicago, and since 1909 organist at the Brick (Presbyterian) Church, New York, and of Temple Beth-El, and from 1912 also professor at Union Theological Seminary, besides for a time leading the Mendelssohn Glee Club. Has written 2 light operas, an organ-symphony and many other organ-works, choruses and church-music, edited series of choruses and organ-pieces, and (with his wife) Excursions in Musical History, 1917. Mus.D. of Northwestern Univ. in 1917 and Litt.D. of Miami Univ. in 1920.

Dickinson, Edward (West Springfield, Mass. 1853). Eminent American teacher, pupil of the New England Conservatory, Boston, and of Klindworth and Langhans, from 1872 organist in Springfield, Mass., from 1879 at Elmira, N. Y., where in 1883–92 he was director at Elmira College, and since 1893 professor in Oberlin College (Litt.D. 1911). Author of Music in the History of the Western Church, 1902, The Study of the History of Music, 1905 (3d ed. 1914), The Education of the Music-Lover, 1911, and Music and the Higher Education, 1915, besides many articles. A.

Diémer, Louis (Paris, 1843–1919, do.). Eminent French pianist, trained at the Paris Conservatory (many prizes from 1856), from about 1860 soloist at important concerts (Alard, Pachelbel, Conservatory), and from 1887 Marmontel's successor as professor at the Conservatory. In 1889 he gave a remarkable series of historical recitals and thereafter specialized in playing old keyboard-music. Member of the Légion d'Honneur from 1889. Many noted composers dedicated works to him. Wrote concertos for piano and for violin, a Concertstück for piano, much chamber-music, including a piano-septet, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, etc., and numerous characteristic piano-pieces, besides editing the Clavecinistes Français, 2 vols. In 1890 he founded the Société des Anciens Instruments, an ensemble-group that became noted both in Paris and in London. G.

Diener, Franz (Dessau, 1849–1879, do.). Saxon operatic tenor (at first violinist), from 1872 a leading singer at Cologne, Berlin, Nuremberg, Hamburg and Dresden.

Diepenbrock, Alfons J. M. (Amsterdam, 1862–1921, do.). Able Dutch composer, self-taught, from 1895 teaching in Amsterdam. Wrote a Te Deum for double choir, settings of both Stabat Maters, a mass for men's voices, Les Elfes for women's voices, sacred songs, etc. Memoir by Adajewski, 1921.

Dieren, Bernard van (b. 1884). Dutch composer, self-taught, living in London. Has written 2 symphonies (one with chorus and soloists), an orchestral epilogue to Shelley's Cenci, an overture and serenade for small orchestra, an elegy for 'cello and orchestra, 3 string-quartets, a sonata for violin alone, the choral works Belshazzar and Les Propos des Beweurers, motets, songs with small orchestra, an opera buffa, a piano-toccata and other pieces, etc.

Diës, Albert Karl (Hanover, 1755–1832, Vienna). A landscape-painter, author of Nachrichten von Jos. Haydn, 1810.

Diesener, Gerhard. 17th C.

Diet, Edmond Marie (Paris, 1854). French composer, pupil of Franck and Guiraud. Has written 3 comic operas (1887–1906) and about 10 operettas, ballets and pantomimes (to 1900), church-music and songs.

Dieter, Christian Ludwig (Ludwigsburg, 1757–1822, Stuttgart). Württemberger composer, court-musician at Stuttgart. Wrote 12 comic operas or singspiele (1779–1802, including Laura Rosetti, 1787, and many concertos for violin or wind-instruments. See Abert, Die dramatische Musik am Hofe Herzog Karl Eugens, 1905.

Dietrich, Albert Hermann (n. Meissen, 1829–1908, Berlin). Important Saxon composer, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory, Otto and especially Schumann, from 1855 conductor and from 1859 town-director at Bonn, in 1861–90 court-director at Oldenburg, retiring then to Berlin, where he was entitled royal professor from 1899. He was a leading representative of Schumann's influence. Wrote the operas Robin Hood, 1879, and Das Sonntagskind, 1886, incidental music to Cymbeline, 1891, a noted symphony, the overture Normannenfahrt, a violin-concerto, a 'cello-concerto, piano-trios, a 'cello-sonata, the cantatas Morgenhymne, Rheinemorgen and Altchristlicher Bittgesang, and many lesser instrumental and vocal works. Author of Erinnerungen an Brahms, 1898. G.

Dietrich, Sixtus (†1490–1548). 16th C. G.

Dietsch, Pierre Louis Philippe (Dijon, 1808–1865, Paris). French conductor, pupil of Choron and the Paris Conservatory, from 1830 choir-master at St.-Eustache and then at the Madeleine and teacher in Niedermeyer's Church-Music School, and in 1860–63 conductor at the Opéra. In 1842 he produced at the Opéra a setting of the text of Wagner's Fliegende Holländer under the title Le Vaisseau Fantôme, and in 1861 it was he who directed the disastrous performances of Tannhäuser. Wrote masses, etc. G.

Dietz, Max (Vienna, 1857). Austrian musicologist, educated at Vienna University (Ph.D.) and, after research-work at Paris, from 1886 lecturer and since 1908 professor there. Besides much critical writing in many periodicals, author of Gesch. d. musikal. Dramas in Frankreich während d. Revolution, 1885, and editor of selected works by Leopold I (1891) and other old music.

Dieupart, Charles (? -1740, London). French violinist and harpsichordist, from 1707 assistant at the Italian Opera in London and later cembalist under Handel. Wrote 6 harpsichord-suites and 6 overtures for harpsichord and violin. On one of the former set Bach based the Prelude to his so-called Suites Anglaises. G.

Diggle, Roland (London, 1885). English organist, from 1908 in Canada, from 1911 in Quincy, Ill., and since 1914 in Los Angeles, with many concert-tours. Has written an orchestral suite, string-quartets, organ-sonatas, etc. A.

Dilliger, Johann (1593-1647). 17th C.

Dimler, Anton (Mannheim, 1753-1819?, Munich). Badenese composer, from 1767 hornist in the Mannheim orchestra, continuing from 1778 at Munich, where he became double-bassist. Wrote 3 operettas (from 1794), nearly 200 ballets, symphonies, concertos and chamber-music.

Dinger, Hugo (n. Meissen, 1865). Saxon dramatic scholar, now professor at Jena University. Author of two books on Wagner (1892), Dramaturgie als Wissenschaft, 2 vols. 1904-05, and Das Recht des Künstlers, 1913.

Dippel, Johann Andreas (Kassel, 1866). Hessian operatic tenor and impresario, pupil of Hey, Lenoi and Ress, appearing at Bremen in 1887-92, at Breslau in 1892-93 and at the Vienna Opera in 1893-98, with visits to America in 1890-92, in 1898-1908 at the Metropolitan, New York, but with trips to London, Munich and Bayreuth, in 1908-10 administrative manager of the Metropolitan and in 1910-13 of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Company. Since 1913 he has given light opera with his own company. His extensive repertoire as singer includes about 150 operas in German, French and Italian, about 60 oratorios, etc. A.

Diruta, Agostino. 17th C. G.

Diruta, Girolamo (?1560-?). 16th C. G.

Ditson Company, The Oliver. An important publishing-firm in Boston, founded in 1835 by Oliver Ditson (1811-1888) and since the Civil War advanced by him, his sons and various partners to great prominence. In 1860 a branch was started in Cincinnati (now the John Church Co.), in 1867 one in New York (C. H. Ditson & Co.), and in 1875 another in Philadelphia

(J. E. Ditson & Co.), discontinued in 1910. The firm published Dwight's Journal of Music in 1858-78, The Musical Record in 1878-1903 and The Musician in 1903-18. G., A.

Dittberner, Johannes (n. Neustettin, 1869-1920, Sorau). Pomeranian organist, trained at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, from 1897 at Sprottau and from 1906 at the Marienkirche in Sorau and from 1913 director there. Besides writing much choral music he edited various publications of vocal works by Schütz, K. P. E. Bach, W. and J. W. Franck.

Dittersdorf, Karl Ditters von (Vienna, 1739-1799, n. Neuhaus). Distinguished Austrian violinist and composer, pupil of Ziegler, Bonno and Trani (as protégé of Prince Joseph of Hildburghausen), playing in orchestras from early youth and in 1761-64 in the court-orchestra at Vienna, with a trip to Italy with Gluck in 1761. From 1764 he was in the service of the Bishop of Gross-Wardein in Hungary (following M. Haydn), and in 1765-95 director for the Bishop of Breslau at Johannesburg. He was one of the foremost violinists of his time and as composer a notable forerunner and contemporary of Mozart, though the memory of his works has been overshadowed by the latter's power. He was one of the first to extend the instrumental advance started by the Mannheim circle. He received his title of nobility in 1773 from the Emperor, and in 1770 the Pope made him Knight of the Golden Spur. His numerous works include 28 operettas (from 1767), mostly humorous, of which the most successful were Doctor und Apotheker, 1786, Betrug durch Aberglauben, 1786, Liebe im Narrenhaus, 1787, Hieronymus Knicker, 1787, and Rotkäppchen, 1788, all first given in Vienna (the first often there and elsewhere), the oratorios Isaak, 1767, Esther, 1773, and Hiob, 1786, many cantatas and masses, about 115 symphonies, including 12 based on Ovid's Metamorphoses, over 25 cassations, divertimenti, etc., 35 concertos for violin, piano or other instruments, 12 string-quintets, 6 string-quartets and 2 with orchestra, 14 string-trios, 17 violin-sonatas, 30 piano-sonatas (18 for 4 hands), besides many lesser pieces. A considerable number of his instrumental works have been published afresh in recent years. He was also author of essays on Die Grenzen d. Komischen u. Heroischen in d. Musik and Die Behandlung italienische Texte bei d. Komposition (both 1798), and of an autobiography (dictated to his son during his last illness). Memoirs by Arnold, 1810, Krebs, 1900 (with thematic catalogue, augmented by Istel in I. M. G. Ztschr. iv), Klob, Drei musikal. Biedermänner, 1911, and Riedinger, 1914 (in Adler's Studien). G.

Dittrich, Rudolf F. (n. Cracow, 1861-1919, Vienna). Galician organist, trained at the Vienna Conservatory, in 1888-94 director of the Music Academy in Tokio, from 1901 court-organist at Vienna and from 1906 professor in the Akademie. Wrote organ- and piano-pieces, choruses, settings of Japanese folk-songs and Beiträge zur Kenntnis d. japanischen Musik (Ostasien-Gesellschaft).

Divitis, Antonius. 16th C. G.

Dizi, François Joseph (Namur, 1780–1840?, Paris). Belgian harpist, self-taught, going at 16 to London, where, with Érard's help, he soon secured pupils and employment in theaters, wrote many harp-pieces and a method (1827), and worked at improvements in the instrument. In 1830 (with Pleyel) he started a harp-factory in Paris, but with small success, and taught in the royal family.

Blabacz, Gottfried Johann (n. Kolin, 1758–1820, Prague). Bohemian librarian and choir-master at a monastery in Prague. Author of Allgem. histor. Künstlerlexikon für Böhmen, 3 vols. 1815–18, and articles in periodicals. G.

Diiski, Erasmus (in Podolia, 1857). Russian composer, pupil of the Petrograd Conservatory. Has written the operas Romano, 1895, and Urwasi, 1901, a Slavic Rhapsody for orchestra, a string-quartet and many songs.

Döbber, Johannes (Berlin, 1866–1921, do.). Prussian conductor and composer, trained at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, appearing first as pianist, but soon becoming theater-director at Berlin, Darmstadt, Coburg and Hanover, settling in 1908 in Berlin as critic and singing-teacher. Wrote 7 operas and operettas (from 1893), including Der Schmied von Gretna-Green, 1893, and Die Grille, 1897, a symphony and numerous songs.

Dobroven, Issaye Alexandrovitch (Nijni Novgorod, 1893). Russian pianist and conductor, trained at the Moscow Conservatory (gold medal, 1911) and under Godowsky, in 1917–21 professor at the Philharmonie in Moscow and since 1919 conductor at the Great Theater. Has written the musical fairy-play 1001 Nacht, 1922, music for Verhaeren's Philip II, 2 piano-sonatas and many pieces, a violin-sonata, etc.

Dobrzynski, Ignaz Felix (in Volhynia, 1807–1867, Warsaw). Polish pianist and composer, pupil of his father (violinist) and Elsner (thus a fellow-student with Chopin), becoming operatic conductor at Warsaw, but with extended tours in Germany as pianist. Wrote 2 operas, including Die Flibustier, 1861, 2 symphonies, an orchestral fantasia, a piano-concerto, a string-sextet, 2 string-quintets and quartets, a string-trio, a violin-sonata, piano-pieces, songs, etc.

Doenhoff, Albert von (Louisville, Ky. 1880). American pianist, pupil of the Cincinnati College of Music, Lambert, X. Scharwenka and Joseffy, teaching at the National Conservatory, New York, in 1899–1907, and from 1905 appearing much in concert. A.

Döhler, Theodor (Naples, 1814–1856, Florence). German-Italian pianist, pupil of Benedict, Czerny and Sechter, from 1831 pianist to the Duke of Lucca, but with many tours throughout Europe and long sojourns in Russia and France, and from 1848 living in Florence. He was a showy salon-player. Wrote the opera

Tancredi, 1880 (Florence), and numerous graceful but superficial piano-works. G.

Dohnányi, Ernst von (Presburg, 1877). Distinguished Hungarian pianist and composer, pupil of his father, Forstner, d'Albert and the Pest Academy, appearing from 1897 throughout Germany, Austria, England, the United States (since 1898) and Russia with the highest success, and becoming teacher in the Berlin Hochschule, where from 1908 he was professor, and since 1919 head of the Pest Hochschule, succeeding Mihalovich. Has written the opera Tante Simona, 1912, a ballet-pantomime (1910), 2 symphonies (1897, 1913), the overture Zrinyi, 1897, an orchestral suite, variations for piano and orchestra, 2 piano-concertos, a Konzertstück for 'cello and orchestra, 4 Rhapsodies, a string-sextet, a piano-quintet, 2 string-quartets, a serenade for string-trio, 3 'cello-sonatas, a violin-sonata, 2 piano-sonatas, a piano-suite, a piano-passacaglia, Humoresken, songs, etc. Brahms' early admiration for him has proved well founded, especially as his poetic endowment has become evident. G.

Dohrn, Georg (n. Magdeburg, 1867). Saxon conductor, educated as a lawyer and pupil in music of the Cologne Conservatory, from 1895 occupying theater-positions in Munich, Flensburg and Weimar, in 1899–1901 second conductor of the Kaim Orchestra at Munich and since then director at Breslau of the Orchesterverein and the Singakademie.

Doles, Johann Friedrich (n. Schmalkalden, 1715–1797, Leipzig). Saxon teacher, pupil of J. S. Bach (though not following his style), from 1744 cantor at Freiberg (Saxony) and in 1756–89 cantor at the Thomasschule, Leipzig (succeeding Harrer). Wrote Passions, masses, a Te Deum, choruses and songs in a fluent, popular style. G.

Dolmetsch, Arnold (Le Mans, 1858), son of a piano-maker. French expert in the music and instruments of pre-classical times, such as the harpsichord, clavichord, lute and viol, and a foremost promoter of interest in them through historic lecture-recitals, often with a Trio of which his wife was a member. After working thus in England, in 1902–09 he was in America, where Chickering & Sons gave him facilities for reproducing various old instruments. Since 1909 he has lived in London again. He is there known as a good violin-teacher, having in his youth been a pupil of Viëuxtemps. A.

Domaniewski, Boleslaus (Gronówiek, 1857). Able Polish pianist, pupil of Lorer, Wieniawski and the Petrograd Conservatory, in 1878–87 touring widely, from 1890 professor at the Cracow Conservatory, and since 1900 in Warsaw, becoming in 1902 director of the Music School and in 1906 leader of the Musikgesellschaft. Has written a valuable Vademecum pour le Pianiste and other teaching-manuals, besides piano-pieces.

Domarto, Petrus de. 15th C.

Dominiceti, Cesare (Desenzano, 1821–1888, n. Monza). Italian composer, trained at the Milan Conservatory, where he finally was professor, after gaining a fortune by long residence in Bolivia. Wrote 6 operas (from 1841), including Morovic, 1873, Il Lago delle Fate, 1878, and L'Ereditiera, 1881.

Dommer, Arrey von (Danzig, 1828–1905, Treysa). Prussian librarian, educated at Leipzig and pupil of Richter, Lobe and Schallenberg, at first teacher there, from 1863 lecturer and critic at Hamburg, becoming in 1873–89 secretary of the city-library. Ph.D. of Marburg Univ. in 1892. Wrote an elementary text-book (1862), a Musikalisches Lexikon, 1865 (revised from Koch), Handbuch d. Musikgeschichte, 1867 (3d ed. by Schering, 1914), many articles for the Allgem. Deutsche Biographie, and an 8-part a cappella Psalm. G.

Domnich, Heinrich (Würzburg, 1767–1844, Paris). Noted Bavarian hornist, pupil of Stich, from 1795 teacher in the new Paris Conservatory. Wrote concertos, duets and solos, besides a method (1805). Two brothers were also hornists (one moving to America).

Donalda, Pauline [name originally Lightstone] (Montreal, 1884). Canadian operatic soprano, pupil of E. Duvernoy, appearing from 1904 in Italy, at Brussels, London and New York (1906–07), and then mostly at the Opéra-Comique, Paris. In 1906 she married the tenor Seveilhac. A.

Donati, Baldassare (?–1603). 16th C. G.

Donati, Ignazio. 17th C. G.

Donatus de Florentia. 15th C.

Donaudy, Stefano (Palermo, 1879). Sicilian composer (of French-Italian parents), trained at the Palermo Conservatory. Has written 6 operas (from 1892), including Theodor Körner, 1902, a symphonic poem and songs 'de style ancien'.

Done, William (Worcester, 1815–1895, do.). English organist, a choirboy at Worcester Cathedral and pupil there of the organist Clarke, to whom he became assistant in 1839 and successor in 1844, besides also conducting the festivals of the Three Choirs at Worcester. Mus.D. from the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1894.

Doni, Antonio Francesco (1519–1574). 16th C. G.

Doni, Giovanni Battista (1594–1647). 17th C. G.

Donizetti, Alfredo name properly Ciommei (Smyrna, 1867). Italian-Asianic composer, trained at the Milan Conservatory, continuing at Milan as teacher of counterpoint. Has written 6 stage-works, including the short operas Nama, 1889, and Dopo l'Ave Maria, 1897, a symphony and several other orchestral pieces, a good Stabat Mater, many piano-pieces, and songs.

Donizetti, Gaetano (Bergamo, 1797–1848, do.) Distinguished Italian composer, trained at the Bergamo Music School and the Bologna Liceo, beginning ambitious composition from 1816, though against much family opposition, which drove him to enlist in the Austrian army for a time (released in 1822, after the success of his Zoraide). From 1822 he was in great request in different Italian cities as a youthful competitor of Rossini, whose style he at first echoed. From 1830, however, the rise of Bellini roused him to more original efforts, beginning with Anna Bolena and culminating with Lucia in 1835, when he became professor at the Naples Conservatory and in 1837–39 its director, following Zingarelli. The censor's prohibition of Poliuto led to his abrupt removal to Paris in 1839, where he continued active for several years more, though evidently overstrained. In 1845 he was stricken with paralysis. But to this last period belong La Favorite, 1840, Linda, 1842 (Vienna) and the sparkling Don Pasquale, 1843. In some of his later works are touches that seem slightly to prefigure the verve of his successor Verdi. But on the whole his type was that of sentimental melody and graceful construction rather than strong characterization of personages or the development of dramatic situations.

A summary of his works as is follows:

Operas and Operettas—Enrico di Borgogna, 1818. Il Falegname di Livonia, 1819 (both Venice), Le Nozze in Villa (Mantua), La Zingara, La Lettera Anonima (both Naples), Chiari e Serafina (Milan), all 1822, Il Fortunato Inganno, Ariste, Alfredo il Grande (all Naples), Una Follia (Venice), all 1823, L'Aio nell'Imbarazzo (Rome), Emilia (Naples), both 1824, Alahor in Granata, Il Castello degli Invalidi (both Palermo), Elvira (Naples), all 1826, Olivo e Pasquale (Rome), Il Borgomastro di Saardam, Le Convenienze Teatrali, Otto Mesi in Duo Ore (all Naples), all 1827, La Regina di Goiconda (Genoa), L'Esule di Roma, Gianni di Calais, Giovetti Grasso (both Naples), all 1828, Il Paria, Il Castello di Kenilworth, both 1829 (Naples), Il Diluvio Universale, I Pazzi per Progetto, Francesca di Foiz, Isnela de' Lambertazzi, La Romanziera e l'Uomo Nero (all Naples), Anna Bolena (Milan), all 1830, Ugo, Conte di Parigi, l'Elisir d'Amore (both Milan), Fausta, Sancia di Castiglia (both Naples), all 1832, Il Furioso, Torquato Tasso (both Rome), Parisina (Florence), Lucrezia Borgia (Milan), all 1833, Rosamunda d'Inghilterra (Florence, or as Eleonora di Guenna, Naples), Maria Stuarda (Naples), Gemma di Vergy (Milan), all 1834, Marino Faliero (Paris), Lucia di Lammermoor (Naples), both 1835, Belisario (Venice), Il Campanello di Notte, Betty, L'Assedio di Calais (all Naples), all 1836, Pia de' Tolomei (Venice), Roberto Devereux (Naples), both 1837, Maria di Rudenz, 1838 (Venice), Gianni di Parigi, 1839 (Milan), La Fille du Régiment, Les Martyrs (revision of Poliuto), La Favorite, all 1840 (Paris), Adelasia (Rome), Maria Padilla (Milan), both 1841, Linda di Chamounix, 1842 (Vienna), Maria di Rohan (Vienna), Don Pasquale, Don Sebastiano (both Paris), all 1843, Caterina Cornaro, 1844 (Naples), with the posthumous Poliuto, 1848 (Naples), Rita, 1860 (Paris), Gabriella di Vergy, 1869 (Naples), and Il Duca d'Alba, 1882 (Rome).

In addition, 2 masses, a Requiem (for Bellini), a Miserere, 2 Ave Marias, several cantatas, hymns and songs, besides 12 string-quartets and some orchestral and piano-pieces.

Memoirs by Cicconnetti, 1864, Alborghetti, 1875, Verzino, 1896–97, Malherbe, 1897 (in Rivista Musicale), Cametti, 1907, and one by Bonesi, not yet published. Several sets of letters have also appeared. G.

Dont, Jakob (Vienna, 1815–1888, do.), son of the 'cellist Jos. Valentin Dont (1776–1833). Austrian violinist, trained at the Vienna Conservatory, where from 1873 he was professor, having previously played in the court-orchestra (from 1834) and taught at the Akademie. Wrote about 50 violin-works, including noted études collected as Gradus ad Parnassum. G.

Donzelli, Domenico (Bergamo, ?1790–1873, Bologna). Italian operatic tenor (or baritone), known in Italy from 1815, in Vienna from 1822, in Paris in 1824–31, in London in 1829–34, and then singing in Italy till his retirement in 1841. Though not a remarkable artist, Rossini is said to have written Torvaldo e Dorliska for him (1815) and Mercadante Elisa e Claudio (1821), and he was member of both the Bologna and the Rome Academies. G.

Door, Anton (Vienna, 1833–1919, do.). Able Austrian pianist, trained by Czerny and Sechter, appearing from 1850 in Germany and Italy, in 1856–58 court-pianist at Stockholm, in 1859 began to teach at the Moscow Institute and from 1866 was professor at the Conservatory, going thence in 1869 to the Vienna Conservatory, continuing in high repute as a teacher of the first order till 1901. In 1877 he toured with Sarasate in Hungary, besides other notable travels in western Europe.

Dopper, Cornelis (n. Winschoten, 1870). Gifted Dutch conductor and composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, writing operas, 7 symphonies, choral works, etc. Since 1910 he has been assistant-conductor of the Concertgebouw-Orkest in Amsterdam.

Doppler, Adolf (Graz, 1850–1906, do.). Styrian piano-teacher, pupil of Buwa, Thiériot and W. Mayer, from 1878 head of a successful school in Graz. Wrote the opera Viel Lärm um Nichts, 1896, piano-sonatas, choruses and songs.

Doppler, Albert Franz (Lemberg, 1821–1883, n. Vienna), brother of Karl below. Galician flutist and composer, pupil of his father (oboist at Warsaw and Vienna), from about 1840 touring widely with his brother Karl (see below), from 1847 in the opera-orchestra at Pest, and from 1858 at the Vienna Opera, where he was also ballet-conductor, besides from 1865 teaching at the Conservatory. Wrote 7 operas (from 1847), including Judith, 1870, many ballets, such as Margot, 1891, overtures, flute-concertos, etc. G.

Doppler, Arpad (Pest, 1857), son of the following. Austro-Hungarian pianist, pupil of his father and the Stuttgart Conservatory, where since about 1877 he has been teacher or professor (except at the Grand Conservatory, New York, in 1880–83), besides being from 1889 chorus-master at the court-theater. Has written 2 orchestral suites, an overture and other orchestral pieces, a Wiegenlied for strings, choruses, songs and piano-works. G.

Doppler, Karl (Lemberg, 1825–1900, Stuttgart), brother of Albert above. Galician flutist, trained by his father and brother, from soon after 1840 touring with the latter and then director at the Pest Opera, from 1862 conductor at the Vienna Opera, and in 1865–98 court-director at Stuttgart. Wrote 2 Hungarian operas (1852–54), ballets and flute-pieces. G.

Dorati, Nicola. 16th C.

Doret, Gustave (Aigle, 1866). Swiss conductor and composer, trained (mostly as violinist) at the Berlin Hochschule and the Paris Conservatory, appearing as composer from 1891, from 1893 in Paris, assisting at the Concerts Harcourt and Société Nationale, besides in 1896 leading concerts at the Geneva Exposition, appearing as guest-conductor in London, Amsterdam and Rome, and in 1913 directing the Saint-Saëns festival at Vevey. In 1907–09 he was conductor at the Opéra-Comique. He is a member of the Légion d'Honneur. Has written 4 operas, beginning with Les Armaillies, 1906, the cantata Voix de la Patrie, 1891, for men's voices, the legend Lojls, 1913, incidental music to Julius Cæsar and plays by Morax, Dans les Bois for women's voices, Sonnets Pâiens for solo and orchestra, a Seven Words, 1895, orchestral pieces and about 150 songs.

Dörfel, Alfred (Waldenburg, 1821–1905, Leipzig). Saxon librarian and editor, pupil of Kloss, Fink, C. G. Müller, Mendelssohn and Schumann, appearing in 1837 as pianist, writing for the Neue Zeitschrift and other journals (in 1865–81 critic for the Leipzig Nachrichten), in 1860 Becker's successor in the music-division of the City Library, and from 1861 organizing a circulating library for music that became the Musikbibliothek Peters, besides acting as one of the chief editors of the 'Edition Peters'. Ph.D. of Leipzig Univ. in 1885. Author of a short memoir of Rochlitz (1868), a Führer durch d. musikal. Welt, 1868, an important Gesch. d. Gewandhauskonzerte 1771–1881, 1884, a translation of Berlioz' Instrumentation (1863, 4th ed. 1888), and a catalogue of his own library (1861, '90). G.

Döring, Karl Heinrich (Dresden, 1834–1916, do.). Saxon piano-teacher, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1855 teaching there and from 1858 at the Dresden Conservatory. Wrote excellent pedagogical piano-works and pieces, besides suites for strings, a mass, motets and choruses for men's voices, and an essay on the invention of the piano (1898).

Dorn, Alexander Julius Paul (Riga, 1833–1901, Berlin), son of the following. German-Russian pianist, pupil of his father, at first teaching in Poland and in 1855–65 at Cairo and Alexandria, Egypt, from 1865 conductor of the Crefeld Liedertafel and from 1868 professor at the Berlin Hochschule. Wrote the cantata Der Blumen Rache, 3 masses for men's voices, operettas for women's voices, piano-concertos and pieces, songs, etc.

Dorn, Heinrich Ludwig Egmont (Königsberg, 1804–1892, Berlin). Eminent Prussian conductor and composer, trained by Berger, Zelter and Klein, from 1828 theater-director at Königsberg, from 1829 at Leipzig, in 1831–42 cathedral-director at Riga, from 1843 city-director at Cologne, where he founded the school that in 1850 became the Cologne Conservatory and also conducted the Rhenish Festivals in 1844–47, and in 1849-69 director at the Berlin Court Opera, gaining the title of royal professor. He was on the staff of both the Post and the Musikzeitung. Wrote the operas Die Rolandsknapen, 1826, Der Zauberer, 1827 (melodrama), Die Bettlerin, 1828, Abu Kara, 1831, Das Schwärmermädchen, 1832, Der Schöffe von Paris, 1838, Das Banner von England, 1841, Die Musiker von Aix-la-Chapelle, 1848, Artaxerxes, 1850, Die Nibelungen, 1854, Ein Tag in Russland, 1857, and Der Botenläufer von Pirna, 1865, the operetta Gewitter bei Sonnenschein, 1865, the ballet Amors Macht, 1830, a Requiem (1851), church-music, cantatas, various orchestral pieces, such as Siegesklänge, 1866, piano-pieces and many effective songs. His Aus meinem Leben, 6 parts, 1870-79, contains many critical and other essays. G.

Dorn, Otto (Cologne, 1848), son of the above. Rhenish composer, pupil of his father and the Stern Conservatory, Berlin (Meyerbeer Scholar), from 1884 teacher and critic at Wiesbaden, gaining the titles of director in 1899 and of professor in 1905. Has written the operas Afraja, 1891, Närodal, 1901, and Die schöne Müllerin, 1906, the symphony Prometheus, the overtures Hermannsschlacht and Sappho, many songs and piano-pieces.

Dorus-Gras, Julie Aimée Joséphe, née van Steenkiste (Valenciennes, 1805-1896, Paris). Able French operatic soprano, trained at the Paris Conservatory, appearing from 1825 in concert and soon in opera, engaged at the Paris Opéra in 1830-45, in London in 1847-48 and retiring in 1850. She sang at the premières of Meyerbeer's Robert le Diable and Huguenots (1831, '36) and of Halévy's Juive (1835). She married M. Gras in 1843. Sketch by Eyma and Lucy in Écrivains et Artistes Vivants, 1840. G (Gras).

Doss, Adolf von (Pfarrkirchen, 1825-1886, Rome). Bavarian Jesuit, stationed successively at Bonn, Münster, Mayence, Liège and Rome. Wrote 6 operas, including Baudouin du Bourg, 1850, 2 operettas, a mass (prize from Brussels Academy), much church-music (3 collections from 1862), 3 symphonies, etc. Memoir by Pfülf, 1887 (2d ed. 1900).

Dost, Walter (Schneeberg, 1874). Saxon composer, trained in both theology and music, the latter at the Thomasschule in Leipzig, since about 1900 settled in Plauen as choral conductor and teacher. Has written 3 operas (1903-19, all given at Plauen), various other dramatic works, men's choruses, songs and a violin-concerto.

Dotzauer, Justus Johann Friedrich (n. Hildburghausen, 1783-1860, Dresden). Distinguished Saxon 'cellist, pupil of Heuschkel, Gleichmann, Rüttinger, Hessner, Kriek and B. Romberg, in 1801-05 in the Meiningen court-orchestra, and in 1811-52 in the Dresden court-orchestra, retiring on pension. He taught many fine pupils, including Karl Schubert, Drechsler and his own son, Karl Ludwig (1811-1897), who in 1830-97 was 'cellist in the Kassel court-orchestra. Wrote the opera Graziosa, 1841, symphonies, overtures, 12 'cello-concertos, including one for 2 'cellos, 9 quartets, many 'cello-pieces and études and a method. G.

Douglas, Charles Winfred (Oswego, N. Y. 1867). American Episcopal clergyman, musically trained at Syracuse University and under Mocquereau, from 1889 organist or director at Syracuse, New York, Denver, Fond du Lac, Wis., and since 1914 in or near New York, specializing in Gregorian music. Has written or edited several masses and other church-music (collected as St. Dunstan Edition, 1923), besides essays and lectures. A.

Dourlen, Victor Charles Paul (Dunkirk, 1780-1864, n. Paris). French theorist and composer, pupil of the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1805), and professor there in 1812-42. Wrote 9 light operas (1806-22), a piano-concerto, a piano-trio, piano, violin- and flute-sonatas, and 3 text-books on harmony (1834, '40), based upon Catel.

Douty, Nicholas (Philadelphia, 1870). Gifted American tenor, pupil of Pyne, Castle, Mrs. Dexter, Randegger and Sbriglia, beginning as organist in 1887, but soon becoming a favorite singer in concert and oratorio throughout the eastern United States. He has sung at all the Bach Festivals at Bethlehem, Pa., where his fine musicianship has made his interpretations famous. Has written many essays for periodicals, pieces for organ and for piano, part-songs and songs. A.

Downland, John (1562-1626). 16th C. G.

Downland, Robert (? -1641). 17th C. G.

Draeseke, Felix August Bernhard (Coburg, 1835-1913, Dresden). Eminent Saxon composer and theorist, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory and under Liszt, with whom he was much associated in the Weimar circle, in 1864-74 teaching at the Lausanne Conservatory (but in 1868-69 at the Munich Conservatory), from 1876 lived in Dresden, from 1884 as professor in the Conservatory, receiving various titles of honor (Ph.D. of Berlin Univ. in 1912). His very numerous works were at first regarded as eccentric in many regards, but his style grew steadily more solid and powerful. His works may be summarized as follows:—

Operas—Sigurd (fragments only), 1867, Gudrun, 1884, Bertrand de Born (text and music), Herrat (his chief work), 1892, Fischer und Kalif, 1905, Merlin, 1913.

Choral Works—the 'mystery' Christus, including the prelude Die Geburt des Herrn, and the three parts or oratorios Christi Weihe, Christus der Prophet and Tod und Sieg des Herrn (given complete 1912, Dresden); masses in F-sharp min. and a capella: Requiem in B min.; Psalm 93; Salvum fac, offertorium and 3 graduals; Adventlied; Osterscene from Faust; Columbus; Pausanias (baritone scena); many choruses and part-songs, as well as solo songs and ballads.

For Orchestra—symphonies in G, in F, in C min. (Tragica) and in E min. (Comica); Akademische Festouvertüre; Jubelouvertüre; symphonic preludes to Calderon's Das Leben ein Traum and Kleist's Penthesilea; Serenade in D; Trauermarsch; Der Thuner See; Concertos for piano and for violin.

Chamber-works—2 string-quintets (one with violotta, the other with 2 cellos), a piano-quintet (with horn); string-quartets in C min., E min. and C-sharp min.; sonatas for 'cello and for clarinet.

Piano-works—a sonata; many pieces, such as Dämmerungsdräume, Rückblicke, Scheidende Sonne, etc.; (in strict style) Ghaselen, a fugue, 3 sets of canons (one for 4 hands), etc.

His theoretical writings included handbooks on modulation (1876) and harmony (1884), Der gebundene Stil, 2 vols. 1902 (counterpoint and fugue), and Die Konfusion in der Musik, 1907 (a trenchant critique of Strauss), besides numerous contributions to the Neue Zeitschrift and other journals. Sketch by Platzbecker, 1909 (in Monographien moderner Musiker). G.

Draghi, Antonio (1635–1700). 17th C. G.

Draghi, Giovanni Battista. 17th C. G.

Dragonetti, Domenico (Venice, 1763–1846, London). Extraordinary Italian double-bassist, almost wholly self-taught, playing at thirteen in the opera-orchestra and at eighteen succeeding Berini at St. Mark's. In 1794 he visited London and was at once engaged for concert and opera at the King's Theatre, besides forming an intimate connection with the 'cellist Lindley which continued for more than a half-century (they often appeared at the Antient and the Philharmonic Concerts). At intervals he made tours on the Continent (even in 1845 assisting brilliantly at the dedication of the Beethoven monument at Bonn). His instrument was a remarkable specimen of da Salò's art. This he bequeathed to St. Mark's, while his collections of scores, rare instruments and engravings went to the British Museum. His phenomenal execution enabled him to undertake the 'cello-parts in string-quartets and to introduce in his own works passages that no one else could play. Wrote concertos, sonatas, arrangements from Bach's organ-works (with piano) and vocal canzonets. Memoir by Caffi, 1846. G.

Dragoni, Giovanni Andrea (1540–1598). 16th C.

Drake, Earl R. (Aurora, Ill. 1865–1916, Chicago). American violinist, pupil of Rosenbecker, Schradieck, Hild, Koelling and Joachim, from 1893 teaching in Chicago, head of the Drake Quartet (tours in 1895–1910) and in 1900 founder of his own music-school. Wrote the operas The Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé, 1914, and The Mite and the Mighty, 1915 (comic), an orchestral Dramatic Prologue and Ballet, a violin-concerto, Gypsy Scenes for violin and orchestra, and violin-pieces. A.

Drake, Erik (in Ostergötland, 1788–1870, Stockholm). Swedish theorist, in 1830–59 teacher, librarian and inspector at the Stockholm Music Academy. Wrote many text-books (1830–46), including a Harmonielehre, 3 vols. 1839–40, translated Zöllner's Orgelschule and Gollmick's Lexikon, and arranged Swedish folk-songs for Arvidson's and Afzelius' collections, besides composing the singspiel Berggubben, 1817, 2 string-quartets, etc.

Drangosch, Ernesto (Buenos Aires, 1882). Argentine pianist, pupil of the Berlin Hochschule and of Ansoerge and Humperdinck, touring in Europe and from 1905 director of the Buenos Aires Conservatory. Has written piano-sonatas and pieces. A.

Draud, Georg (1573–1636?). 17th C.

Drechsler, Hermann (Bremen, 1861), son and successor of the piano-maker of the same name. Ultramodern song-composer, pupil of O. Schröter and Trenckler. Has published about 60 works, including some for orchestra and for piano.

Drechsler, Joseph (Wallischbirken, 1782–1852, Vienna). Notable Bohemian composer, pupil of an organist in Florenbach, for a time employed at the Vienna Opera as répétiteur, chorumaster and from 1812 assistant-director, then theater-conductor at Baden and Presburg, in 1815–44 organist or director at various Vienna churches and also in 1822–30 director at the Leopoldstadt-Theater, and from 1844 Gänsbacher's successor as director at St. Stephen's. Wrote about 60 stage-works, over 20 masses, a Requiem, 3 cantatas and much other church-music, string-quartets, piano-sonatas, organ-pieces, songs, etc., besides an organ-method, a text-book in harmony, an edition of Pleyel's piano-method and a guide to preluding. G.

Drechsler, Karl (Kamenz, 1800–1873, Dresden). Eminent Saxon 'cellist, pupil of Dotzauer, in 1820–71 an honored member of the Dessau court-orchestra and the teacher of many fine pupils (Cossmann, Grützmacher, Lindner and K. Schröder). G.

Dregert, Alfred (Frankfort-on-Oder, 1836–1893, Elberfeld). Prussian conductor and composer, trained at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, opera-director at various places and then conductor of men's choruses at Stralsund, Cologne and Elberfeld. Wrote fine men's choruses and songs, besides orchestral, chamber- and piano-pieces.

Dresden, Sem (Amsterdam, 1881). Dutch conductor and composer of extreme tendency, pupil of Zweers and Pfitzner, since 1907 teacher at the Amsterdam Conservatory, from 1914 leader of a madrigal-society and in 1920–21 conductor of the Dutch Opera. Has written a string-sextet, several sextets for piano and wind, a trio for oboes and English horn, a suite for two pianos, sonatas for piano, for violin and for flute and harp, a cappella choruses and songs.

Drese, Adam (1620–1701). 17th C.

Dresel, Otto (Andernach, 1826–1890, Beverly, Mass.). Able Rhenish pianist, pupil of Ferd. Hiller and Mendelssohn, coming in 1848 to New York, where in 1851 he joined Eisfeld in chamber-concerts, in 1852–68 the leading pianist in Boston and then an influential teacher there. He was an intimate friend of Franz and always in correspondence with him (made a piano-version of Franz' reorchestration of The Messiah). Wrote a piano-quartet, a piano-trio, the ballad In Memoriam (tribute to Agassiz) for soprano and orchestra, 1857, and an Army Hymn for solo and chorus, 1863, besides some piano-pieces and songs. He also edited (with Franz) Bach's Wohltemperiertes Clavier. A.

Dreszer, Anastasius Wilhelm (Kalisch, 1845-1907, Halle). Noted Polish pianist, trained mostly at the Dresden Conservatory, after work at Leipzig and Paris, from 1868 at Halle, founding a music-school. Wrote 2 symphonies, a string-quartet, piano-sonatas and pieces, besides the opera Valmoda.

Dreszler, Gallus (1533-?). 16th C.

Dreves, Guido Maria (Hamburg, 1854-1909, n. Kronach). North German Jesuit priest, living by turns at Vienna and at Exaeten, Holland, finally from 1906 at Würzburg. He was an expert on mediæval hymnody. Ph.D. of Munich Univ. Author of Analecta Hymnica, 53 vols. 1886-1911, Die Hymnen von Johannes von Jenstein, 1886, Cantiones Bohemicae, 1886, Aurelius Ambrosius, 1893, Psalteria Rhythmica, 1901, Die Kirche d. Lateiner in ihren Liedern, 1908, etc.

Dreyschock, Alexander (Zack, 1818-1869, Venice). Expert Bohemian pianist, pupil of Tomaschek, playing in public when but eight, in 1838-48 touring constantly throughout Europe and gaining applause for his phenomenal dexterity, especially with the left hand, and from 1862 at Petrograd as court-pianist, director of the Opera Music-School and teacher in the new Conservatory, but soon laid aside by ill-health. Wrote a piano-concerto and many salon-pieces, an overture, an orchestral rondo, a string-quartet and the opera Florette. G.

Dreyschock, Raimund (Zack, 1824-1869, Leipzig), brother of the above. Good Bohemian violinist, pupil of Pixis, from 1850 concert-master at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, and teacher at the Conservatory. His wife, née Elizabeth Nose (1832-1911), was a fine contralto, after 1870 a successful teacher in Leipzig and Berlin, and his son Felix (1860-1906) was a good pianist in Berlin.

Drieberg, Friedrich Johann von (Charlottenburg, 1780-1856, do.). Prussian military officer and ultimately Royal Chamberlain at Charlottenburg Castle. He was a pupil of Spontini, and wrote several stage-works, including Don Tacagno, 1812, and Der Sänger und der Schneider, 1814, but is chiefly known by a series of works on Greek music (1818-58) which have been generally regarded as of slight or no account.

Drinkwelder, Otto (Krems, 1880). Austrian priest, taking degrees at Freiburg, where he studied with Peter Wagner, from 1902 organist or choir-master at various places. Author of text-books on Gregorian music (1906-14) and the dissertation Ein deutsches Sequentiar des 12. Jahrh. 1914.

Drobisch, Karl Ludwig (Leipzig, 1803-1854, Augsburg). Saxon church-musician, pupil of Dröbs and Weinlig, from 1826 teaching in Munich and from 1837 director at the Annakirche in Augsburg. Wrote the oratorios Bonifacius, 1826, Des Heilands letzte Stunden and Moses auf

Sinai, 18 masses, 3 Requiems, etc. Memoir in Riehl's Charakterköpfe.

Drobisch, Moritz Wilhelm (Leipzig, 1802-1896, do.), brother of the above. Professor of mathematics and philosophy in Leipzig University, writing many essays on musical acoustics (1846-77), especially on the determination and relations of tones in scale-systems.

Droucker, Sandra (Petrograd, 1876). Talented Russian pianist, pupil of A. Rubinstein, from 1894 appearing widely in Europe as concert-soloist, and from 1904 teacher at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, and at Peterson's Academy there. In 1910-18 she was the wife of Gottfried Galston, living near Munich. Author of Erinnerungen an A. Rubinstein, 1904.

Drouet, Louis François Philippe (Amsterdam, 1792-1873, Bern). Distinguished French flutist, trained at the Paris Conservatory, appearing in public when but seven, from 1807 court-musician to Louis Bonaparte, King of Holland, and in 1811-15 to Napoleon and Louis XVIII at Paris, then in England and on extensive tours on the Continent, in 1836-54 court-director at Coburg, in 1854 visited New York and then lived at Frankfurt and Bern. For a short time before 1819 he engaged in flute-making in London. He had much dexterity as a player. Wrote about 150 flute-works, including 10 concertos, 3 trios and other ensemble-pieces, etc. G.

Drozdowski, Jan (Cracow, 1858-1917, do.). Polish pianist, trained at the Vienna Conservatory, from 1889 teaching at the Cracow Conservatory. Author of several pedagogical works on piano-playing (1885-1904), a Musiklehre and a Musikgeschichte, 2d ed. 1913.

Drysdale, Learmont (Edinburgh, 1866-1909, do.). Scottish composer, pupil of the Royal Academy, London. Wrote the overtures Tam O'Shanter, 1891 and Herondale, 1894, the opera The Red Spider, 1898, the cantata The Kelpie, 1894, etc. G.

Düben, Andreas and Gustaf. 17th C.

Dubois, François Clément Théodore (Rosnay, 1837). Distinguished French organist and composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory, where he won prizes in all departments (Prix de Rome, 1861), for a time choir-master at Ste.-Clothilde, from 1871 professor of harmony at the Conservatory, succeeding Elwart, and in 1891 Delibes' successor as professor of composition, besides following Saint-Saëns in 1877 as organist of the Madeleine. In 1896 he took Thomas' place as director of the Conservatory. In 1905 he retired from his various offices. Since 1894 he has been a member of the Académie (succeeding Gounod) and since 1896 Officier in the Légion d'Honneur. Among his very numerous works the following may be named:

Dramatic works—La Guzla de l'Émir, 1873, Le Pain Bis, 1879, Ibn Hamet, 1884, Xavière, 1895, Circé (not given), La Farandole (ballet) 1882. Oratorios—Les Sept Paroles du Christ, 1867, Le Paradis Perdu, 1878 (City of Paris prize). Cantatas—L'Enlèvement de Proserpine, Hylas, Berge-rette, Les Vivants et les Morts, Délivrance. Also

Le Baptême de Clovis (Latin ode by Leo XIII), 1899 (Rheims).

Several masses, motets and other church-music.

Orchestral works—overtures in D, in C and Frithioff; the symphonic poems Notre Dame de la Mer and Adonis; 3 suites; 3 airs de ballet; Marche Héroïque de Jeanne d'Arc; Hymn Nuptiale; Fantaisie Triomphale (with organ); Méditation-Prière for strings, oboe, harp and organ; 2 piano-concertos: violin-concerto: 7 Petites Pièces.

String-trio.

Many pieces for piano, for organ or harmonium. A cappella choruses, songs, etc.

Dubois, Léon (Brussels, 1859). Belgian composer, trained at the Brussels Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1885), from 1890 second conductor at the Monnaie there and at the summer-concerts, and also since 1912 Tinel's successor as director of the Conservatory. Has written the operas Son Excellence ma Femme, 1884, La Revanche de Sganarelle, 1886, Mazeppa and Edénie, 1912, the ballet Smylis, 1891, the mimodrama Le Mort, 1894, the symphonic poem Atala, etc.

Dubourg, Matthew (London, 1703–1767, do.). English violinist, pupil of Geminiani, said to have appeared as a child at one of Britton's concerts, in 1728–65 director of the vice-regal band in Dublin (in 1742 concertmaster under Handel) and from 1752 also in a similar position in London. Geminiani often visited him in Dublin. Wrote a series of Birthday Odes for use at Dublin Castle. His grandson George (1799–1882) wrote a history of the violin and its players (1831, 5th ed. 1878). G.

Ducange. See Cange.

Ducasse. See Roger-Ducasse.

Duchemin, Nicolas. 16th C.

Ducis, Benedictus (?1480–1544). 16th C. G.

Dueto, Antonio. 16th C.

Dufay, Jenny. Alsatian operatic soprano, pupil of Mmes. Gerster and Marchesi, Vidal, Selva and Benvenuti, in 1906–08 at the Weimar Court Opera, then in Italy, Rumania and Greece, in 1910–11 at the Berlin Opera and since 1911 with the Chicago Opera Company. She sang at the première of Massenet's Cendrillon (1911). A.

Dufay, Guillaume (?1400–1474). 15th C. G.

Dufranne, Hector. Belgian operatic baritone, appearing in 1896 at Brussels, in 1897 at London, from 1899 at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, from 1908 at the Manhattan, New York, and in 1910–13 with the Chicago Opera Company. He sang at the premières of Massenet's Griséldis (1901), Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande (1902), Hahn's La Carmélite (1902) and Févriér's Monna Vanna (1909), and has a large répertoire of French operas, with several by Wagner. A.

Dugazon, Louise Rosalie, née Lefèvre (Berlin, 1753–1821, Paris). French stage-singer, brilliantly successful in lighter parts at Paris from 1774, retiring in 1806. She sang at the premières of Deszède's Blaise et Babel (1783), Dalayrac's Nina (1786) and many other works of the day. From the variety of her interpretations 'young' and 'old' rôles have since been popularly known as 'Jeunes Dugazon' or 'Mères Dugazon.' G.

Duggan, Joseph Francis (Dublin, 1817–?). Irish pianist, accompanist or conductor for various opera-troupes in New York about 1840 and in 1841 head of a music-school in Philadelphia, in 1844–45 teacher in Paris and after 1880 at the Guildhall School, London. Wrote 5 operas, including Pierre, 1853, and Léonie, 1854 (both London), 2 symphonies, 6 string-quartets, many piano-pieces and a vocal method, besides translating Albrechtsberger's Anweisung zur Komposition, 1842 (Phila.), and Fétis' Traité du Contrepoint.

Duiffpugger. See Tieffenbrucker.

Dukas, Paul (Paris, 1865). Eminent French composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory (2d Prix de Rome, 1888), for years critic for the Revue Hebdomaire and the Gazette des Beaux-Arts, and since 1909 professor at the Conservatory. Has written the opera Ariane et Barbe-Bleu, 1907, the ballet La Péri, 1910 (also, with Saint-Saëns, completed Guiraud's Frédégonde, 1895), the noted symphonic poem L'Apprenti-Sorcier, 1897, the overtures King Lear, 1883, Götz von Berlichingen, 1884, and Polyeucte, 1891, a symphony (1896), a Villanelle for horn, a piano-sonata, Variations, Interlude and Finale (on theme from Rameau), a Prélude Élégiacque, etc. G. A.

Dulcken, Ferdinand Quentin (London, 1837–1902, New York), son of the following. German-English pianist, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory and of Ferd. Hiller, taught at the Warsaw Conservatory, then at Paris, with wide tours, from 1876 traveled in America with Reményi, Joseffy, Mmes. Essipov and Rôze, etc., and later taught at the National Conservatory, New York. Wrote an opera, a mass, cantatas, piano-pieces and songs. A.

Dulcken, Louise, née David (Hamburg, 1811–1850, London), sister of Ferdinand David, the violinist. Brilliant German pianist, pupil of Schwencke and Grund, appearing first when but eleven and from 1823 at Berlin and Leipzig, often with her brother. After her marriage in 1828 she removed to London, where she was a favorite soloist and teacher (Queen Victoria one of her pupils). G.

Dulichius, Philippus (1562–1631). 16th C. G.

Du Locle, Camille (Orange, 1832–1903, Nice). Author of the libretti for Reyer's Sigurd and Salammbô, Duvernoy's Hallé and La Force du Destin, as well as of the French versions of Verdi's Aida (with Nutter) and Don Carlos. He was secretary of the Opéra and later director of the Opéra-Comique.

Dülön, Friedrich Ludwig (n. Potsdam, 1769–1826, Würzburg). Prussian flutist (blind), pupil of his father and Angerstein, from 1783 known all over Europe, in 1796–1800 court-musician at Petrograd, then at Stendal and Würzburg. Wrote much flute-music, including a concerto, duets for flute and violin, etc., and an autobiography (2 vols. 1807–08).

Dulov, Georg N. (Moscow, 1875). Russian violinist, pupil of his mother and the Moscow Conservatory, from 1897 chamber-musician to the Duke of Mecklenburg and since 1901 professor at the Moscow Conservatory. Has written a violin-method, études, concert-pieces with orchestra, etc.

Dumanoir, Guillaume (1615-?). 17th C.

Dumesnil, Suzanne Zaide (Havre, 1884). French operatic soprano, pupil of Delaquerrière, from 1901 appearing as a song-singer, in 1903-07 engaged at the Opéra-Comique and in 1909-10 at the Manhattan, New York. She has a large répertoire of French operas.

Dumont, Henri (1610-1684). 17th C.

Duncan, William Edmonstoune (Sale, 1866-1920, do.). English critic and composer, trained at the Royal College, London, becoming a frequent writer for many papers in England and America and from 1896 professor at Oldham College. Wrote an opera, a wind-quintet (with piano), a string-trio, a piano-sonata and many pieces, organ-works and songs, besides the choral works Ye Mariners of England and Ode to Music, To a Nightingale for soprano and small orchestra, and a mass. Author of a life of Schubert (1905), Story of English Minstrelsy, 1907, History of Music, 1908, Encyclopedia of Musical Terms, 1913, Ultramodernism in Music, and manuals of composition and piano-playing. G.

Dunham, Henry Morton (Brockton, Mass. 1853). American organist, trained at the New England Conservatory, Boston, and since 1878 professor there, besides serving various churches as organist and also teaching since 1910 at Lasell Seminary in Auburndale. Has written the symphonic poem Aurora (with organ), an organ-concerto, a Phantasy for harp, two violins, organ and orchestra, a Duo Concertante for 'cello and piano, 3 organ-sonatas, fugues, passacaglias, preludes and many arrangements for organ, and choir-music, besides an Organ-School, 4 parts, and technical manuals. A.

Dunhill, Thomas Frederick (London, 1877). English composer, trained at the Royal College, London, and since 1905 professor there, besides teaching at Eton School in 1899-1908 and often touring the British Colonies as examiner. In 1907 he started Concerts of British Chamber-Music, which have been effective in calling attention to manifold works and composers not otherwise properly recognized. Has written an orchestral Rhapsody in A min., a Valse-Fantasia for flute and Capricious Variations for 'cello (both with orchestra), a piano-quintet in C min., quintets in E-flat (piano, violin, 'cello, clarinet and horn) and in F min. (strings and horn), a piano-quartet in B min (Alexander prize), 2 Phantasie piano-trios, a violin-sonata and many pieces, variations for 'cello and piano and for flute and piano, Comrades for baritone and orchestra, the song-cycles The Wind among the Reeds (tenor and orchestra), Songs from Vagabondia and Songs of the River, etc. G, A.

Duni, Egidio Romualdo (n. Otranto, 1709-1775, Paris). Italian composer, trained at two of the Naples Conservatories, noted from 1735 at Rome and Naples, visited Vienna, for a time was maestro at one of the Naples churches, in 1744 visited Paris, London and Holland, in 1746, while teaching at the court of Parma, took up writing French comic operettas with such success that in 1757 he removed to Paris. Wrote in all over a dozen Italian operas, beginning with the famous Nerone, 1735, and about 20 French works (1755-70), the latter influential in determining the style of the rising opéra bouffe. G.

Dunkley, Ferdinand Louis (London, 1869). English organist, pupil of the Royal College, London, in 1885-93 organist in London churches, then in 1893-99 teacher at St. Agnes' School in Albany, N. Y., besides filling organ-positions, from 1899 in Asheville, N. C., from 1901 as organist in New Orleans, from 1909 in Vancouver, from 1912 in Seattle as both organist and conductor, and from 1920 in Birmingham, Ala. Has written the orchestral suite Among Yon Mountain-Fastnesses (prize, 1889), a 'cello-sonata, the choral ballads The Wreck of the Hesperus, 1894, and The Elected Knight (men's voices), services for the synagogue and other church-music, piano-pieces and songs. G, A.

Dunn, James Philip (New York, 1884). American composer, trained at Columbia University, since about 1905 organist in or near New York. Has written a piano-quintet (1910), 2 string-quartets, a piano-trio (1913), a violin-sonata (1912), the ballad Annabel Lee (voice and orchestra), songs, piano- and organ-pieces, etc. A.

Dunn, John (Hull, 1866). English violinist, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory, appearing since 1882 in England and Germany. Has written a violin-concerto, etc.

Dunn, John Petrie (Edinburgh, 1878). Scottish pianist, pupil of Matthay, M. Pauer, Niecks and S. de Lange, from 1904 touring in Germany (with Kubelik) and England, teaching at the Stuttgart Conservatory and in 1909-14 at the Kiel Conservatory. Author of a manual on technique (1914).

Dunstable, John (?1370-1453). 15th C. G.

Duparc [Fouques-D.], Marie Eugène Henri (Paris, 1848). Gifted French composer, pupil of Franck, but laid aside since 1885 and living in Switzerland. Has written the symphonic poem Lenore, 1875, the orchestral nocturne Aux Étoiles, 6 piano-pieces, the vocal duet La Fuite, 1872, and 16 individual and beautiful songs, besides some works that he has destroyed (an orchestral suite, a 'cello-sonata, etc.). (See Séré, Musiciens Français d'Aujourd'hui, 2d ed. 1911. G.

Dupont, Auguste (n. Liège, 1827-1890, Brussels), brother of Joseph below. Fine Belgian pianist, pupil of Jalheau, touring in England and Germany and from 1850 professor at the Brussels Conservatory. Wrote 2 piano-concertos, many graceful piano-pieces, études and an École de Piano (many historical examples in chronological order), besides some songs. G.

[The operas La Légende des Siècles, 1898, Morgane, 1905, and Alcée, 1913, are by a later composer of the same name.]

Dupont, Gabriel (Caen, 1878–1914, Paris). French composer, pupil of Widor at the Paris Conservatory. Wrote the operas La Cabrera, 1904 (Sonzogno prize), La Glu, 1910, La Farce du Cuvier, 1912, and Antar, 1921, besides orchestral pieces and a piano-quintet.

Dupont, Joseph (Liège, 1821–1861, do.). Belgian violinist, pupil of the Liège Conservatory and then professor there. Wrote 2 operas, a string-quintet and quartet, violin-pieces, church-music, etc.

Dupont, Joseph (n. Liège, 1838–1899, Brussels), brother of Auguste above. Belgian conductor, trained at the Liège and Brussels Conservatories (Prix de Rome at the latter), from 1867 at Warsaw, in 1871–72 opera-conductor at Moscow, and from 1872 professor at the Brussels Conservatory, conductor at the Monnaie, for the Society of Musicians and of the Popular Concerts (following Vieuxtemps).

Dupont, Jean Louis (Paris, 1749–1819, do.). Noted French 'cellist, appearing from 1768 and gaining much applause, in 1792–1806 with his brother (see below) at Berlin, from 1806 musician to Charles IV of Spain (at Marseilles), and from 1812 again at Paris, playing in the court-orchestra and professor at the Conservatory (till 1815). Wrote 6 'cello-concertos, sonatas, nocturnes (with harp), etc., besides an Essai sur le Doigté du Violoncelle (new ed. 1902), which laid the foundation for the modern technique of the instrument. His valuable Stradivari was bought by Franchomme. G.

Dupont, Jean Pierre (Paris, 1741–1818, Berlin), brother of the above. French 'cellist, in 1773–1811 in the Berlin court-orchestra and also in 1787–1806 director of the court-concerts. Wrote 6 'cello-sonatas, 3 duos, etc. For him or his brother Beethoven wrote his sonatas, op. 5, which were the first with piano obbligato. G.

Dupoux, Marie Jules (Avignon, 1844). French priest (abbé), at first choirmaster in France, then for many years in the Orient, studying liturgical music among the Greeks, Syrians, Copts and Arabs, and also in America, returning to France to write numerous articles upon Gregorian music and Studi sul Canto Liturgico, 1906, in which he somewhat combats the views of the Solesmes circle.

Duprato, Jules Laurent (Nîmes, 1827–1892, Paris). French composer, pupil of Leborne at the Paris Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1848), from 1866 teacher and from 1871 professor there. Wrote about 15 operettas, 4 cantatas, choruses and songs, besides recitatives for Balfe's Bohemian Girl and Hérold's L'Illusion.

Dupré, Marcel (Rouen, 1886). Extraordinary French organist, pupil of his father (organist at St. Ouen) and Guilmant, becoming organist at St. Vivien (Rouen) when but twelve and appearing as composer of an oratorio at fifteen. In 1905, while studying at the Paris Conservatory, he took the first prize in piano-playing and in 1914 gained the Prix de Rome by the scena Psyché. Since 1916 he has been acting-organist at Notre-Dame in Paris (in place of Vierne). In 1920 he appeared in England and in 1922 in America, everywhere creating astonishment by his phenomenal memory and his improvisations.

Duprez, Gilbert Louis (Paris, 1806–1896, do.). Able French operatic tenor, trained at Choron's Institute and in Italy, making his début in 1825, in 1836–55 engaged at the Opéra, from 1842 professor at the Conservatory and from 1850 head of his own vocal school. Wrote the noted L'Art du Chant, 1845, and La Mélodie, 1846, Souvenirs d'un Chanteur, 1888, and further autobiographical Récollections, 2 vols., besides some operas, masses, an oratorio, etc. He sang at numerous premières, as of Berlioz' Benvenuto Cellini (1838), Donizetti's La Favorite (1840), Halévy's Reine de Chypre (1841), etc. Memoir by Elwart, 1838. G.

Dupuis, Albert (Verviers, 1877). Talented Belgian composer, trained at the Paris Schola Cantorum and the Brussels Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1904), since about 1915 director of the Verviers Conservatory. Has written the operas L'Idylle, 1896, Bilitis, 1899, Jean Michel, 1903, Martylle, 1905, Fidélaine, 1910, Le Chateau de Bretèche, 1913, La Passion, 1916, and La Victoire, the lyric legend Chanson d'Halewyhn 1904 (as opera, 1913), the sacred drama La Captivité de Babylone, and the choral Les Cloches Nuptiales, (Édipe à Colone and Cortège Lyrique).

Dupuis, Jacques (Liège, 1830–1870, do.). Belgian violinist, pupil of Prume and Daussoigne-Méhul, from 1850 teacher in the Liège Conservatory. Wrote good concertos, sonatas, etc.

Dupuis, Sylvain (Liège, 1856). Belgian composer, trained at the Liège Conservatory (Prix de Rome, 1881), at first teaching there and from 1911 director, besides conducting the choral society La Legia and from 1888 the Concerts Symphoniques, in 1900–11 conductor at the Monnaie, Brussels, and of the Concerts Populaires. Member of the Belgian Academy. Has written the operas Cour d'Ognon and Moïna, the cantatas La Cloche de Roland, Camoëns and Chant de la Création, the symphonic poem Macbeth, 2 orchestral suites, a concertino for oboe and orchestra, violin- and 'cello-pieces, choruses and songs.

Dupuis, Thomas Sanders (London, 1730–1796, do.). French-English organist, pupil of John Travers, from 1779 organist at the Chapel Royal, succeeding Boyce. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1799. Wrote organ-pieces, piano-sonatas, church-music (collected by Spencer, 1797) and glees. G.

Dupuy, Jean Baptiste Édouard (n. Neuchâtel, 1770–1822, Stockholm). Swiss violinist and stage-singer, pupil of Chabran and Dussek, from 1787 concertmaster for Prince Heinrich at Rheinsberg, from 1793 on tour as soloist, then in Stockholm (where he first appeared as singer) and Copenhagen, in both places obliged to withdraw because of singing revolutionary songs, from 1809 in Paris and in 1812 reinstated at Stockholm as court-director. Wrote the opera Ungdom og Galskab, 1806, violin-pieces, a flute-concerto, choruses, etc. Memoirs by Palmstedt, 1866, and Buntzen, 1902, and see Norlind's Lexikon.

Duran, Domingo Marcos. 15th C.

Durand et Fils. French music-publishers, successors of the firm established in 1847 by Flaxland, but from 1870 acquired by Marie Auguste Durand (1830–1909) in association with Schoenewerk. They have published a long list of important works by leading French composers. G.

Durante, Francesco (n. Naples, 1684–1755, do.). Distinguished Italian composer and teacher, trained in two of the Naples Conservatories, in 1718–42 director of the Conservatorio S. Onofrio, and from 1742 Porpora's successor as maestro at S. Maria di Loreto. As composer he chose to confine himself to church-music, writing with great skill and solidity, if not with high originality. As teacher he was extraordinarily influential, counting among his pupils nearly all the leading composers of the Neapolitan school during the middle of the 18th century. His works include more than a dozen masses, a Magnificat, a setting of Lamentations, 16 Psalms, 16 motets, antiphons, hymns, litanies, etc., with 12 madrigals, 6 clavier-sonatas, 12 duetti di camera, etc., mostly preserved in the Paris Conservatory library. Memoir in Allgem. Musikal. Zeitung, 1872, and Florimo, Scuola di Napoli, 2d ed. 1880–84.

Durey, Louis Edmond (b. 1888). French impressionistic composer, since 1914 writing an orchestral Pastorale, a string-quartet, a string-trio, a piano-trio, the choral work Eloges, many songs (some with orchestra or ensemble), etc.

Durov, Sachar Sacharovitch (Moscow, ?–1886, Petrograd). Author of Grundriss d. Musikgesch. Russlands, added to a translation of Dommer's Geschichte (1884), and of an unpublished sketch of the history of Russian church-music (prize from the Academy).

Durutte, François Camille Antoine (Ypres, 1803–1881, Paris). Flemish theorist, living mostly at Metz. Author of two works (1855, '76) advocating a new system of harmony, too mathematical to be serviceable.

Dussek, Franz (Chotěboř, 1736–1799, Prague). Able Bohemian pianist, pupil of Wagenseil, from 1763 a leading teacher in Prague. From 1777 he was intimate with Mozart, who finished the score of Don Giovanni at his house in 1787. Wrote a large amount of instrumental music of all kinds. His wife, née Josepha Hambacher (b. 1756), was a well-known singer, for whom Mozart wrote the scena 'Bella mia fiamma' and probably Beethoven his 'Ah, perfido!' (1796). G.

Dussek, Johann Ladislaus (Czaslau, 1761–1812, St.-Germain-en-Laye). Distinguished Bohemian pianist, trained as a choirboy at Iglau, during university study at Prague and in 1783 under K. P. E. Bach at Hamburg. As a youth he was organist at Kuttenberg and later (at the instance of his patron, Count Männer, an Austrian artillery-officer) at Mechlín Cathedral and at Berg-op-Zoom in the Low Countries. From 1782 he began to be known as a phenomenal pianist, living in succession at Amsterdam, The Hague (where he first undertook composition in earnest), Hamburg, Berlin (where he began the remarkable performances on the 'harmonica' of Hessel which continued for several years), probably Petrograd, in Lithuania as attaché of Prince Radziwill, Paris, Milan, Paris again and then (1790–1800) London, where he was introduced by the violinist Salomon (like Haydn just a year later). Here, besides many appearances as virtuoso, he became a fashionable teacher, in 1792 married the singer Sofia Corri, set up a music-store with her father, which proved a failure, and finally fled to escape imprisonment for debt. In 1800–01 he gave concerts in Hamburg, in 1802 visited Prague and his old home at Czaslau, in 1803–06 was intimate with Prince Louis Ferdinand at Magdeburg and Berlin, in 1806–07 was musician to Prince von Isenberg, and then with his last patron, the French statesman Talleyrand, at Paris. Wherever he went he made a powerful impression, not only by his masterly dexterity, but by his remarkable 'singing' tone, which he was one of the first to develop, and by the solidity and sympathy of his interpretation. He ranked among the finest of the large circle of striking artists whom the advance of the piano called into action. As both player and composer he was one of the first Bohemians to become widely known, so that he is even spoken of as a pioneer in the national group. In his works he is prodigal of material, but lacks ability in the sustained and orderly development of it. A summary of them is as follows:

For orchestra—Serenade in E-flat (9 parts); the overtures Feudal Times and Pizarro.

Piano-concertos in E-flat, F, E-flat, F, B-flat, E-flat, C, B-flat (Militaire), G min., F, E-flat, with 4 others unnumbered.

For ensemble without piano—3 string-quartets: 2 trios for harp, violin and 'cello; 3 sonatas for flute (or violin) and 'cello.

For ensemble with piano—1 quintet; 2 quartets; 18 trios; 2 trios with flute and 'cello; Nocturno with violin and horn.

For piano and violin—38 sonatas.

For piano and flute—16 sonatas.

For piano solo—28 sonatas, including The Farewell, op. 44 (dedicated to Clementi), Le Retour a Paris, op. 70, Plus Ultra, op. 71 (a retort to Wölfl's Non Plus Ultra), and L'Invocation, op. 77; Élégie Harmonique, op. 61 (for Prince Louis Ferdinand), La Consolation, op. 62, Fantasia and Fugue (dedicated to J. B. Cramer), Fantaisie, op. 76; many easy sonatas, sonatinas, rondos, variations, waltzes, etc.

For piano, 4 hands—13 sonatas; 3 fugues; 1 overture

For two pianos—1 sonata.

For voices—the ballad-opera The Captive of Spilburg, 1798 (with Michael Kelly); a mass (said to have been written for Prince Esterházy); an Easter cantata; several canons and songs.

A piano-method and some études and exercises.

[Breitkopf & Härtel publish a general edition of the piano-works in 12 vols.]

Memoirs by Unger, 1914 (in Neue Musikal. Zeitung), and Schiffer, 1915. G.

Dustmann, Marie Luise, née Meyer (Aix, 1831–1899, Berlin). Rhenish operatic soprano, making her début in 1849 at Breslau, then at Kassel, Dresden, Prague and in 1857–75 regularly engaged at the Vienna Opera, but also often appearing throughout Germany and in London and Stockholm. For many years she taught at the Vienna Conservatory. From 1858 she was the wife of the book-dealer Dustmann.

Dutertre, Étienne. 16th C.

Dütsch, Georg (Petrograd, 1857–1891, do.), son of the following. Danish-Russian violinist, trained at the Petrograd Conservatory, in 1880–83 concertmaster for the Dramatic Union, in 1889–91 for the Russian Symphony Concerts, besides leading orchestra-classes at the Conservatory. Editor of a collection of folk-songs from northern Russia (1894).

Dütsch, Otto (Copenhagen, ?1825–1863, Frankfurt). Danish bandmaster, pupil of the Leipzig Conservatory, going in 1848 to Russia, where at first he was in the army in the Caucasus, then conductor of theater-orchestras in Petrograd and from 1851 writer of music for plays, from 1852 second director at the Imperial Theatre and chorusmaster at the Italian Opera, besides from 1862 teaching at the Conservatory. Wrote the opera Die Kroatin, 1860, 2 operettas, music for Suchonin's Russian Wedding and Money, as for Kukolkin's Soldier-Comrades. Memoir (of father and son) by Findeisen (in Russ. Musikzeitung), 1896.

Duval, Edmond (Enghien, 1809–?). Flemish 'cellist, pupil for a time at the Paris Conservatory. At Mechlin about 1845 he undertook, by direction of the bishop, the study of Gregorian music and visited Rome for the purpose, in 1848–54 publishing versions of various ritual-books, with sundry essays, but neither method nor execution has won approval.

Duvernoy, Charles (Montbéliard, 1766–1845, Paris). French clarinetist, playing at 1845 in military-bands and from 1790 in theater-orchestras in Paris, besides teaching at the Conservatory from 1795. He retired in 1824. Wrote 2 clarinet-sonatas, variations as duets, etc.

Duvernoy, Frédéric (Montbéliard, 1765–1838, Paris), brother of the above. French hornist, self-taught, from 1788 playing in the orchestra of the Italiens at Paris, later for many years at the Opéra, besides in 1795–1815 teaching at the Conservatory. Wrote horn-concertos, chamber-music with horn, and a method.

Duvernoy, Henri Louis Charles (Paris, 1820–1906, do.), son of Charles above. French singing-master, pupil of the Paris Conservatory, where from 1839 he was professor of solfeggio, publishing several manuals (1848–60) and many small piano-pieces.

Duvernoy, Victor Alphonse (Paris, 1842–1907, do.). French pianist and composer, trained at the Paris Conservatory, from 1869 pianist in a noted ensemble-group (Léonard, Stiehle, Trombetta and Jacquard), becoming also professor at the Conservatory and critic for the République Française. He was member of the Légion d'Honneur and Officier de l'Instruction Publique, besides winning the Prix Chartier. Wrote the operas Sardanapale, 1892, and Hellé, 1896, the lyric scene Cléopâtre, the ballet Bacchus, 1902, the symphonic poem La Tempête, 1880 (City of Paris prize), the overture Hernani, pieces for piano with orchestra or solo, etc. G.

Dvořák, Antonín (Mühlhausen, n. Pisek, 1841–1904, Prague). Distinguished Bohemian composer, of humble origin and meagre opportunity, but so musically gifted that he early learned to play the violin and the organ, as well as to compose. From 1857 he studied at Prague with Pitzsch, barely supporting himself by playing in theater-orchestras and from 1862 at the new National Theatre, profiting meanwhile from contact with Smetana and Bendl, as well as composing ambitiously in large forms. Not till 1873 did his ability secure recognition, but this rapidly extended, resulting in his being nominated by Brahms for an annual stipend from the government at Vienna, beginning in 1875. From the publication of his Slavische Tänze in 1878 his fame rapidly grew and spread, leading to various commissions and opportunities, especially from 1884 in England. In 1892–95 he was director of the National Conservatory in New York. From 1895 he was professor at the Prague Conservatory, in 1901 becoming director. Mus.D. of Cambridge Univ. in 1891, and Ph.D. of Prague Univ., besides being a life-member of the Austrian Herrenhaus.

His sudden advent as a fully developed composer about 1880 was spectacular, especially as he represented a racial stock that had not previously had just notice in the musical world and as his own individuality was singularly impetuous and untrammelled. His gifts for melody, for rhythm, for harmonic combination and for orchestration were extraordinarily great and highly original. His imagination was romantically intense, especially in the direction of the weird, the passionate and the pathetic. But with this went a striking sympathy with sheer animal vigor, with social excitement, with barbaric wildness and hilarity. He was at his best usually in instrumental expression, especially when at liberty to employ his instinct for orchestral effect. He was not always successful in the sustained development of his basal themes, but this was made up by the richness of his addition of fresh or supplemental material. In the treatment of large works he tended to stretch and remodel established forms in various ways, often with important results. Thus he enriched the sonata or symphony type by often introducing the characteristic Czech dumka or elegy and the furiant or wild scherzo. In his great choral works he successfully adopted two or three styles not his own, but with remarkably original handling.

His works with opus-number extend to 113 (but with several numbers not published), together with unnumbered dramatic works and various posthumous issues. A summary is as follows (opus numbers in brackets):

Orchestral Works

Symphonies—1, D [60], 2, D min. [70], 3, F [76, originally 24], 4, G [88], 5, From the New World, E min. [95], besides 2 issued posthumously (E-flat, D min.).
Symphonic Poems—The Water-Sprite [107], The Noon-Witch [108], The Golden Spinning-Wheel [109], Die Wildtaube [110], Heldenlied [111].
Serenades for strings [22] and for wood-wind, 'cello and bass [44]; Notturmo for strings [40]; 3 Slavische Rhapsodien [45]; 2 sets of Slavische Tänze [46], also for piano, 4 hands [72]; Legenden [59], also for piano; Scherzo Capriccioso [66]; Symphonische Variationen [78].
Overtures—Mein Heim [62], Husitska [67], In der Natur [91], Carneval [92], Othello [93] and Tragische [posthumous], 2 overtures to operas published separately [25, 37].
Concertos—for piano [33], for violin [53], for 'cello [104]. Also Romanze [11] and Mazurek [49] for violin, and Rondo [94] for 'cello, all with orchestra.

Chamber-Works

String-sextet in A [48].
String-quintets in G [18], G [77], E-flat [97] and piano-quintet in A [81].
String-quartets in A min. [16], D min. [34], E-flat [51], C [61], E [80], F [96], A-flat [105], G [106], and piano-quartets in D [23], E-flat [87]. 4 Bagatellen for harmonium or piano, violins and 'cello [47].
Piano-trios in B-flat [21], G min. [26], F min. [65]. Trio for 2 violins and viola [74], Dumky for violin, 'cello and piano [90].
For violin and piano—Ballade [15], Sonata in F [57], Romantische Stücke [75], Sonatina in A [100].

Piano-Works

Suite [98]; Impromptu, Intermezzo, Gigue and Scherzo [52]; Variations in A-flat [36]; Rhapsodie in A min.; Silhouetten [8]; 13 Poetische Stimmungsbilder [85]; Humoresken [101]; Berceuse; Capriccio; 2 Furians [42]; Furiant and Dumka [12]; Dumka [35]; Polka, Minuet and Romanza [39]; Waltzes [54]; Mazurkas [56]. (Legenden [59], also for orchestra.)
For 4 hands—Schottische Tänze [41]; Aus dem Böhmer Wald [68]. (Slavische Tänze [46], also for orchestra.)

Vocal Works

Operas—King and Charcoal-Burner, 1874, Wanda, 1876, The Peasant a Rogue, 1878, Dimitrije, 1882, Jacobin, 1889, The Devil and Wild Kate, 1899, The Water-Witch (Russalka), 1901, Armida, 1904.
Oratorios—Stabat Mater [58]; St. Ludmila [71] (1886, Leeds).
Cantatas and choral works—Die Erben des weissen Berges [4] (also as To the English People [30]), The Spectre's Bride [69] (1885, Worcester), America's Flag [102]. Mass in D [86]; Requiem [89]; Te Deum [103]. Various choruses [19, 28, 29, 63, 113].
Songs—Das Waisenkind [5]; Zigeunerlieder [55]; Im Volkston (4) [73]; about 50 others [2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 17, 31, 50, 82, 83, 99].
Duets—Klänge aus Mähren [32]; 8 others [20, 38].
Part-songs [7] [27, 43].

Memoirs by Zubatky, 1886 (in English in Hadow's Studies in Modern Music, 2d series, 1895), and Joss, 1903, with thematic catalogue by Sourek, 1917. G. A.

Dwight, John Sullivan (Boston, 1813–1893, do.). American editor, for a time a Unitarian clergyman at Northampton, Mass., and also a member of the Brook Farm Association at West Roxbury, from 1848 in literary work in Boston, in 1852 founding his Journal of Music (at first weekly, then fortnightly), which he edited till its end in 1881, writing for it many thoughtful, conservative articles. At Brook Farm he also edited the small Harbinger. Memoir by Cooke, 1899 (also letters, 1898). G (Periodicals). A.

Dybeck, Richard (Vestmanland, 1811–1877, Södertelje). Swedish singer and collector of folk-songs, in 1844–62 giving recitals at Upsala. Edited various collections (from 1846) and wrote articles for Runa (1865–76). Sketch by Kerstedt in Idun, 1908.

Dykes, John Bacchus (Hull, 1823–1876, St. Leonard's). English clergyman, from 1862 vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham, having also been from 1849 precentor at the Cathedral there. Mus.D. of Durham Univ. in 1861. Wrote over 250 hymn-tunes for various hymnals, many of them favorites all over the world, several anthems, some services, etc. Memoir by Fowler, 1897. G.

Eames, Emma Hayden (Shanghai, China, 1865). Eminent American operatic soprano, pupil of Miss Munger, Mme. Marchesi and Pluque, appearing in Boston in concert from about 1884 and in opera at Paris in 1889, at the Opéra there till 1891, when she began a series of seasons at both London and New York (somewhat interrupted in 1892-93 by a trip to Madrid and in 1895-96 by ill-health). In 1897 she was one of the artists at the Queen's Jubilee. She sang at the premières of Saint-Saëns Ascanio (1890), De Lara's Light of Asia (1892), L. E. Bach's Lady of Longford (1894), De la Nux's Zaire (1896) and Mancinelli's Ero e Leandro (1898). Her répertoire has included about 30 rôles, including several of Wagner. She retired from the stage in 1909. In 1891-1907 she was the wife of Julian Story, the painter, and in 1911 married the baritone Gogorza, with whom she made a concert-tour in 1911-12. G. A.

Earhart, Will (Franklin, O. 1871). American specialist in school-music, from 1900 supervisor at Richmond, Ind., and since 1912 city-director at Pittsburgh. He has been a pioneer in the development of various sides of music-study as related to the education of children. In 1914 he prepared for the Bureau of Education a bulletin upon Music in the Public Schools, and has edited alone or with others several text-books. Mus.D. of the Univ. of Pittsburgh in 1920. A.

Eastman, George (Waterville, N. Y. 1854). American manufacturer (from about 1880) of photographic supplies at Rochester, N. Y. In 1919 he began to endow upon an unprecedented scale the Eastman School of Music, to be administered by the University of Rochester, which promises to be an institution not only of magnitude, but of several novel features. The school was opened in 1921 under the directorship of Alf Klingenberg.

Ebann, William Benedict (Bremen, 1873). North German (American) 'cellist, trained at Cincinnati, Leipzig and Berlin, appearing from 1896 at both Leipzig and Cincinnati and playing later with many leading American orchestras. Since about 1900 he has taught in New York. Has written 2 'cello-concertos, 2 string-trios and many 'cello-pieces. A.

Ebdon, Thomas (Durham, 1738-1811, do.). English organist, at Durham Cathedral from 1763 for almost a half-century. Wrote much church-music, a few glees and 2 harpsichord-sonatas. G.

Ebel, Arnold (Heide, 1883). North German organist, trained at the Berlin Hochschule, from 1909 organist and director for the Order of St. John and in 1921 Egidi's successor at the Paul Gerhardt-kirche in Schöneberg, besides acting as president (since 1920) of musicians' societies. Has written fine vocal music, including the choral work Die Weihe der Nacht, a Requiem (after Hebbel), many songs, etc.

Ebeling, Christoph Daniel (n. Hildesheim, 1741-1817, Hamburg). From 1784 professor at the Hamburg Gymnasium and librarian of the City Library. Translator of works by Burney and Chastellux and author of many essays (1766-70).

Ebeling, Johann Georg (1637-1676). 17th C. G.

Ebell, Heinrich Karl (Neuruppin, 1775-1824, Oppeln). Prussian lawyer, pupil in music of Türk and Reichardt, in 1801-04 theater-director at Breslau. Wrote 10 stage-works, an oratorio, 6 cantatas, 5 symphonies, 4 string-quartets, songs, etc.

Ebenstein, Viktor (Vienna, 1888). Austrian pianist, pupil of Leschetizky, Franz Schmidt and Adler (Ph.D. of Vienna Univ. in 1912), after 1912 touring as virtuoso and in 1917 settling in Zurich. Has written piano-works and a dissertation on the masses of Philippe de Mons (1912).

Eberhard, Johann August (Halberstadt, 1739-1809, Halle). From 1778 professor of philosophy at Halle University, treating more or less of music in his Theorie d. schönen Künste, 1783, Allgem. Theorie d. Denkens u. Empfindens, 1786, Handbuch d. Aesthetik, 4 vols. 1803-05, and various essays.

Eberhardt, Anton (1857-1922, Frankfort). Composer of the operas Der Helling, 1895, and Das Gelübde, 1905.

Eberl, Anton (Vienna, 1766-1807, do.). Able Austrian pianist, winning notice first by two early operas (1782-83), but soon gaining fame as an expert performer at Vienna. He was a friend of Mozart and after his death made a concert-tour with his widow. In 1796-1800 he was engaged in Petrograd, in 1803 made a Russian tour and in 1806 one in Germany, everywhere honored for his brilliancy and fire. His power as composer was also remarkable. Wrote several symphonies, piano-concertos, much chamber-music, piano-sonatas, variations and pieces, besides 5 operas, a cantata, songs, etc. Several of his piano-works were long current under Mozart's name (notably a sonata in C min.), and at one of the early renderings of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony Eberl's Symphony in E-flat was on the program and was counted the better by a critic in the Allgem. musikal. Zeitung. G.

Eberlin, Daniel (?1630-1691). 17th C.

Eberlin [Eberle], Johann Ernst (Jettenbach, 1702-1762, Salzburg). Swabian organist and composer, from 1725 one of the organists at Salzburg Cathedral and from 1729 organist at both Cathedral and the archbishop's court. He was a prolific church-composer, in a style strong and original enough to hold the attention of both Leopold Mozart and his son. Wrote at least 40 masses, over 40 Psalms, 8 Requiems, 75 offertories, many motets, litanies, hymns, etc.,

besides organ-fugues and toccatas, clavier-sonatas, etc. G.

Ebers, Karl Friedrich (Kassel, 1770–1836, Berlin). Hessian musician of wandering life, writing 4 operas, many facile symphonies, overtures, sonatas, piano-pieces and songs. He and Weber had a tilt in 1816 over a garbled arrangement by him of the latter's quintet. G.

Ebert, Alfred Leopold (n. Werdau, 1878). Saxon historical student, educated at various universities, specializing in music-history under Fleischer and Kroyer (Ph.D. of Bonn Univ. 1905). In 1912–19 he was working in the great Heyer Museum at Cologne. Has written the thesis Attilio Ariosti in Berlin, 1905, many articles in periodicals and in the 8th ed. of Riemann's Musik-Lexikon, 1915.

Ebert, Ludwig (Kladno, 1834–1908, Coblenz). Bohemian 'cellist, trained at the Prague Conservatory, from 1852 in an orchestra at Temesvar, from 1854 court-concertmaster at Oldenburg, in 1888–89 teacher at the Cologne Conservatory and in 1889 (with Heubner) founder of the Coblenz Conservatory. In 1875–78 he played in the Heckmann Quartet. Wrote various 'cello-works.

Eberwein, Karl (Weimar, 1786–1868, do.). Saxon violinist, pupil of Zelter, from 1803 in the Weimar court-orchestra and later its conductor. He was a favorite of Goethe. Wrote 3 operas, incidental music to Holtei's Lenore and Preciosa (1811), an overture for Goethe's Proserpina, a flute-concerto, string-quartets, cantatas, etc.

Eberwein, Traugott Maximilian (Weimar, 1775–1831, Rudolstadt), brother of the above. Saxon violinist, pupil of Kunze and Schick, from 1797 in the court-orchestra at Rudolstadt, becoming in 1817 director. Wrote 11 operas and operettas, including two on texts by Goethe (1815, '18), symphonies, overtures, string-quartets, church-music and songs. G.

Ebner, Wolfgang (?1610–1665). 17th C.

Eccard, Johannes (1553–1611). 16th C. G.

Eccarius-Sieber, Artur (Gotha, 1864–1919, Berlin). Saxon teacher, trained at the Gotha Conservatory, from 1886 at Zug, from 1888 at Zurich, where in 1891 he founded a music-school, and from 1900 at Düsseldorf, teaching and writing for the Berlin Signale. In 1897–1901 he was editor of Kammermusik (published at Heilbronn). Wrote a series of violin and piano text-books (from 1891), including collections of violin-sonatas and études and an edition of Moscheles' études, besides a guide to violin-literature.

Eccles, John (?1668–1735). 17th C. G.

Eck, Franz (Mannheim, *1774–1804, Strasbourg). Badenese violinist, pupil of his brother (see below), entering the Munich court-orchestra while but a youth, in 1802 touring in Germany, in 1802–03 engaged as Spohr's teacher by the Duke of Brunswick, going to Russia with him, and for a time director of the court-concerts at Petrograd. G.

Eck, Johann Friedrich (Mannheim, 1766–1810?, Bamberg), brother of the above. Eminent violinist, pupil of Danner, in 1778–88 member of the Munich court-orchestra, from 1788 concertmaster and later director of the court-opera, and from 1801 living in Paris or Nancy. Wrote 6 violin-concertos and a concertante for two violins. G.

Eckelt, Johann Valentin (n. Erfurt, 1673–1732, Sondershausen). Able Saxon organist, from 1697 at Wernigerode and from 1701 at Sondershausen. Wrote a Passion, cantatas and organ-works, besides text-books in composition. His library went to Gerber, who utilized Eckelt's notes in editing his Lexikon.

Eckert, Karl Anton Florian (Potsdam, 1820–1879, Berlin). Prussian conductor, developed precociously under Rechenberg, Greulich, Bötticher, H. Ries, Rungenhagen and later Mendelssohn, writing an opera at ten and an oratorio at thirteen. His early studies were made as protégé of the poet F. Förster and for years he traveled for study with the aid of various patrons. In 1851 he was accompanist at the Italiens, Paris, where in 1852 he became conductor (also making a trip with Sontag to America), from 1853 was director of the Court Opera in Vienna, in 1860–67 director at Stuttgart (succeeding Kücken), and from 1869 court-director at Berlin. Wrote 4 operas, 2 oratorios, a 'cello-concerto, chamber- and church-music and songs. G.

Eckhold, Hermann Richard (Schandau, 1855). Saxon conductor, trained at the Dresden Conservatory, from 1871 violinist at Mayence and Bayreuth, but from 1894 conductor in England of the Carl Rosa Company, from 1900 of the Savage Company, from 1902 of the Moody-Manners Company and in 1912–14 of the Quinlan Company on a tour round the world.

Écorcheville, Jules (Paris, 1872–1915, in battle). Eminent French musicologist, pupil of Franck, with study at Paris (Litt.D. 1906) and Leipzig Universities. From 1907 he edited the Revue Musicale (organ of the French section of the I. M. G.) and was engaged upon the collation and cataloguing of the musical material in the National Library. In 1912–14 he was president of the Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft, including the Paris Congress in 1914. Author of De Lully à Rameau, 1906, Corneille et la Musique, 1906, Actes d'État Civil des Musiciens Insinués au Chatelet de Paris de 1539 à 1650, 1907, and the monumental Catalogue du Fonds de Musique Ancienne de la Bibliothèque Nationale, 8 vols. to 1914, besides editing Vingt Suites d'Orchestre du XVII<sup>e</sup> Siècle Français, 1906 (his contention that the suites transcribed were French is disputed by Norlind and Riemann in favor of Swedish and German sources respectively). Memoir under the title Le Tombeau de J. Écorcheville, 1916.

Eddy, Hiram Clarence (Greenfield, Mass. 1851). Eminent American organist, pupil of Wilson, Buck, Haupt and Loeschhorn, holding his first post at seventeen, in 1873 touring in Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Holland, from 1874 in leading Chicago churches (1st Presbyterian, 1879-96), with numerous recitals there and elsewhere, including series at most of the large Expositions from 1876. In 1876-85 he was director of the Hershey School of Musical Art, founded by his wife, née Sara Hershey, in 1875. He is a member of the Accademia S. Cecilia in Rome. Editor of many collections of organ-music (from 1882) and a method, and translator of Haupt's text-book in counterpoint (1876). G. A.

Edelmann, Johann Friedrich (Strasbourg, 1749-1794, Paris). Alsatian composer, originally educated as a lawyer, but early diverted to music at Paris. Wrote the opera Ariadne, 1782, violin-concertos and sonatas, piano-works, etc. (some in Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Bayern, xv.). See Vogeley, Gesch. d. Musik im Elsass, 1911.

Edwards, Henry John (Barnstable, 1854). English organist, pupil of his father, Banister, Macfarren, Cooper and W. S. Bennett, since 1886 his father's successor at Barnstable and conductor of the local festivals, since 1896 also of the Exeter Oratorio Society. Mus.D. of Oxford Univ. in 1885. Has written the oratorios The Ascension, 1888, and The Risen Lord, 1906 (both Exeter), the cantata The Epiphany, 1891, much other vocal music, an orchestral march (1883), etc. G.

Edwards, Henry Sutherland (n. London, 1829-1906, do.). English writer, for many years critic for the St. James Gazette and author of The History of the Opera, 2 vols. 1862, lives of Rossini (1869, shortened, 1881) and Sims Reeves, The Lyric Drama, 2 vols. 1881, The Faust Legend, 1886, Famous First Representations, 1886, and The Prima Donna, 2 vols. 1888, besides works in other fields. G.

Edwards, Julian (Manchester, 1855-1910, Yonkers, N. Y.). English conductor and composer, pupil of Oakeley and Macfarren, in 1877-88 conductor of English opera in London and from 1888 in America. Wrote the serious short operas King René's Daughter, 1893, and The Patriot, 1907, many popular comic operas (from 1880), 5 cantatas and the song-collection Sunlight and Shadow. A.

Eeden, Jean Baptiste van den (Ghent, 1842). Belgian composer, trained at the Ghent and Brussels Conservatories, from 1878 director of the Mons Conservatory. Has written the operas Numance, 1897, and Rhena, 1912, the oratorios Jacqueline de Bavière, Jacob van Artevelde, Brutus, Le Jugement Dernier and Judith (trio-scene), the cantatas Het Woud and De Wind, the symphonic poem La Lutte au XV<sup>e</sup> Siècle, orchestral suites, scherzo, Marche des Esclaves, etc., part-songs and songs. G.

Effrem, Muzio (?1555-?). 16th C.

Egenolf, Christian (1502-1555) 16th C.

Egg, Arthur Henry (Montreal, 1891). Canadian organist, pupil of the Royal College, London, since 1913 at the Montreal Cathedral and teacher at McGill University. A.

Eggert, Joachim (Is. of Rügen, 1780-1813, Ostergotland). Pomeranian violinist, pupil of Forkel, from 1804 in the court-orchestra at Stockholm, becoming second conductor. Wrote stage-works, 4 symphonies, 2 sextets, 9 string-quartets, and (with Erik Drake) collected Swedish ballads.

Egidi, Arthur (Berlin, 1859). Prussian organist, trained at the Berlin Hochschule and by Taubert, from 1885 teacher at the Hoch Conservatory, Frankfurt, from 1892 at the Pauluskirche in Berlin and in 1913-21 at the Gerhardkirche (Schöneberg), besides directing an cappella chorus and teaching at the Inst. für Kirchenmusik (royal professor). He is both organ-virtuoso and accomplished pianist in ensemble. Has written the stage-works Ein Sommerabendspiel and Sonnenstrahl und Herzeleid, an overture, the choral Königin Luise, Huldigung der Stände and Psalm 84, and various organ-pieces.

Egli, Johann Heinrich (n. Wetzikon, 1742-1810, Zurich). Swiss song-composer, from 1779 publishing a series of collections, mostly original, and 6 cantatas on Swiss national heroes (1783). Memoir by Stierlin, 1857.

Ehlert, Louis (Königsberg, 1825-1884, Wiesbaden). Prussian critic and composer, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, with further study at Vienna and Berlin, in 1850-63 teaching in Berlin, then in Italy, where he directed the Società Cherubini at Florence, in 1869-71 taught at Tausig's school in Berlin, from 1871 was tutor at the Meiningen court and finally lived at Wiesbaden. Wrote a Frühlingssinfonie, the overtures Hafis and Wintermärchen, a Requiem für ein Kind, piano-sonatas and pieces, and songs. Author of Briefe über Musik, 1859, and Briefe aus der Tonwelt, 1877. G.

Ehrbar, Friedrich (Hildesheim, 1827-1905, n. Gloggnitz). Hanoverian organ-maker, trained at Hildesheim by Friederici, but from 1848 at work at Vienna in Seuffert's piano-factory, setting up his own works in 1857 and gaining high reputation, attested by many prizes at Expositions. The business descended to his son (same name).

Ehrenberg, Carl Emil Theodor (Dresden, 1878). Able Saxon conductor, pupil of his mother, Sophie Hoffman and the Dresden Conservatory, from 1898 opera-conductor at Dortmund, Würzburg, Munich (chorusmaster), Posen, Augsburg and Metz, in 1909-14 Lausanne, from 1915 city-director at Augsburg and since 1918 in charge of symphony-concerts at Homburg, besides various guest-engagements. While at Munich he conducted the Orchesterverein. Has written 2 symphonies, an overture to Maria Stuart, the tone-poem Jugend, 2 orchestral suites, Sinfonische Bagatellen, 2 pieces for small orchestra, Burleske in Walzerform, music for a patriotic pageant (1916), a Nachtlied for violin and orchestra, 3 string-quartets, a piano-trio, a violin-sonata, the choral work Son- nenaufragung, 1901, 2 operas and many songs (some with orchestra).

Ehrenhofer, Walther Edmund (Hohenelbe, 1872). Bohemian organ-expert as well as practising engineer (from 1897 at Rossitz, from 1899 at Gratz and since 1902 at Vienna). At Gratz he was editor of the Zeitschrift für Orgel- u. Harmoniumbau and later author of manuals on organ-making and examination (1904-'09). He is also a composer.

Ehrlich, A. See Albert Payne.

Ehrlich, Alfred Heinrich (Vienna, 1822-1899, Berlin). Eminent Austrian pianist and critic, pupil of Henselt, Bocklet, Thalberg and Sechter, after early work at Bucharest, from about 1850 court-pianist at Hanover, from 1855 in succession at Wiesbaden, London and Frankfurt, in 1864 settling in Berlin, where in 1864-72 and 1886-98 he taught at the Stern Conservatory and was also critic for the Tageblatt, Gegenwart and Musikzeitung. Wrote a 'cello-sonata, and, for piano, a Konzerstück in ungarischer Weise, variations on an original theme (Lebensbilder), transcriptions from Schubert and Wagner for 4 hands or 2 pianos, études and exercises, besides an edition of Tausig's Technische Studien. Author of Schlaglichter u. Schlagschatten aus d. Musikwelt, 1872, Für d. Ring Nibelungen gegen Bayreuth, 1876, Die Musikästhetik in ihrer Entwicklung von Kant bis auf d. Gegenwart, 1881, Lebenskunst u. Kunstleben, 1884, Wagner'sche Kunst u. wahres Christentum, 1888, Aus allen Tonarten, 1888, Dreissig Jahre Künstlerleben, 1893, besides essays on embellishments in Beethoven's and Bach's works (1896) and the pedagogical Wie übt man am Klavier, 1879 (2d ed. 1884), and Musikstudien beim Klavierspiel, 1891, with several musical novels (1858-95). G.

Ehrlich, Friedrich Christian (Magdeburg, 1807-1887, do.). Saxon pianist and choral conductor, pupil of Hummel, long at the head of the Singakademie and the Tonkünstlerverein at Magdeburg. Wrote the operas König Georg, 1861, and Die Rosenmädchen, 1870, organ- and piano-pieces, songs, etc.

Eibenschütz, Albert (Berlin, 1857). Prussian pianist, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory, in 1876-77 teaching in the Charkov Music-School, in 1878-80 at the Leipzig Conservatory, in 1880-93 at the Cologne Conservatory, in 1893-96 conductor of the Liederkranz there, from 1896 at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, then at Wiesbaden and later at Aix-la-Chapelle. Has written a symphony, an operetta (1917), piano-sonatas, pieces and études, and songs.

Eibenschütz, Ilona (Pest, 1873), cousin of the above. Hungarian pianist, pupil of the Vienna Conservatory and of Mme. Schumann, in 1890-1902 noted on the Continent and in England as a gifted and eloquent interpreter, especially of Brahms, who was her intimate friend. In 1902 she married Karl Derenburg and retired into private life. G.

Eichberg, Julius (Düsseldorf, 1824-1893, Boston). Able Rhenish violinist, pupil of Rietz, Eichler, Fröhlich and the Brussels Conservatory, from 1846 professor at the Geneva Conservatory, from 1857 in New York and from 1859 in Boston, where till 1867 he conducted concerts at the Boston Museum, in 1867 founded the very successful Boston Conservatory (which continued some years after his death) and was for a time music-supervisor in the public schools. Wrote the operettas The Doctor of Alcantara, 1862, The Rose of Tyrol, 1865, The Two Cadis, 1870, and A Night in Rome, 1874?, some chamber-music, violin-pieces and studies, choruses and songs. G. A.

Eichberg, Oskar (Berlin, 1845-1898, do.). Prussian critic and singing-teacher, pupil of Kiel and Löschhorn, for a time edited the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, in 1879-89 issued an annual Musikerkalender, wrote for the Börsen-Courier, and for fifteen years conducted a choral society. Wrote essays on Parsifal (1882) and on Wagner's Symphony in C (1887). Memoir by W. Wolf, 1898.

Eichberg, Richard Johannes (Berlin, 1855-1919, do.), brother of the above. Artistic director of the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin and one of the officers of the German Musicians' Union. Wrote songs and pedagogical works on piano-playing.

Eichborn, Hermann Ludwig (Breslau, 1847-1918, n. Bozen). Silesian hornist and critic, pupil of Adolf Scholz and Emil Bohn, besides taking his degree as a lawyer. He became a virtuoso on the waldhorn (in 1882 inventing the oktav-waldhorn), promoted chamber-music with wind-instruments at Gries, wrote articles on instrument-making and critiques, and from 1891 carried on a sanatorium at Gries (issuing a health-periodical, The 20th Century). Author of Die Trompete alter u. neuer Zeit, 1881, Zur Gesch. d. Instrumentalmusik, 1885, Das Oktavierungsprinzip bei Blechinstrumenten, 1889, Das alte Klarinblasen auf Trompeten, 1895, Die Dämpfung beim Horn, 1897, and Militarismus u. Musik, 1909, and also wrote horn-pieces and several singspiele.

Eichner, Ernst (Mannheim, 1740-1777, Potsdam). Able bassoonist and composer, for a time court-musician at Zweibrücken, from 1770 in Paris and London, and from 1773 in the orchestra of Prince Frederick William of Prussia. He was an important representative of the Mannheim circle, writing 31 symphonies, clavier-concertos, quintets, quartets, trios, clavier-sonatas, etc. See Denkmäler d. Tonkunst in Bayern, vii-viii. G.

Eickhoff, Paul (Gütersloh, 1850). Westphalian philologist, writing on various topics in versification and hymnology (from 1895).

Eijken, Heinrich (Elberfeld, 1861-1908, Berlin), son of the following. Dutch-Rhenish theorist, pupil of Papperitz and Herzogenberg, from 1902 teacher at the Berlin Hochschule. Wrote a Psalm, choruses and striking songs (some with orchestra), a manual of harmony (edited by Leichtentritt und Wappenschmidt).

1911) and an extension of Liliencron's Chorordnung, 4 vols.

Eijken, Jan Albert van (Amersfoort, 1822–1868, Elberfeld). Able Dutch organist, trained at the Leipzig Conservatory and by Joh. Schneider, in 1847 giving recitals in Holland, from 1848 organist at leading churches in Amsterdam, besides teaching at the Rotterdam Music-School, and from 1854 organist at the Reformed Church in Elberfeld. Wrote a large number of important organ-works, including 3 sonatas, preludes, toccatas, etc., transcriptions of Bach's clavier-works, a violin-sonata, incidental music for Lucifer, choruses and songs.

Einstein, Alfred (Munich, 1880). Bavarian musicologist, since 1905 publishing various studies in music-history (especially on Steffani), and a Gesch. d. Musik, 1917–18, besides since 1918 editing the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft. In 1919, at Riemann's death, he succeeded to the editorship of the latter's Musik-Lexikon.

Eisfeld, Theodor (Wolfenbüttel, 1816–1882, Wiesbaden). North German conductor, pupil of Karl Müller and Reissiger, with lessons later from Rossini, in 1839–43 conductor of the Concerts Vivienues in Paris, in 1849–64 conductor (sometimes alternating with Bergmann) of the New York Philharmonic Society, as well as from 1850 of the new Harmonic Society (choral) and from 1857 of the new Brooklyn Philharmonic (from 1864 alternating with Theo. Thomas). In Paris and especially in New York he exerted a stimulating and permanent artistic influence. From 1851 he was much engaged in series of chamber-recitals, the precursors of the more important Mason-Thomas soirées. In 1858, in returning from Hamburg, he was one of the few survivors at the burning of the 'Austria' in mid-ocean and never entirely recovered from the effects. In 1866 he retired to Wiesbaden. A.

Eitner, Robert (Breslau, 1832–1905, Templin, n. Berlin). Distinguished Silesian musicologist, pupil of Brosig, from 1853 in Berlin as a teacher and from 1863 head of a piano-school, but from about 1865 conspicuous for historical research and the working out of invaluable biographical and bibliographical records. In 1882 he retired to Templin to complete his monumental Quellenlexikon d. Musiker u. Musikgelehrten, 10 vols. 1900–04. In 1868 he had been the chief founder of the Gesellschaft für Musikforschung and from 1869 had edited its Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte as well as its Publikation älterer Musikwerke, 29 vols. to 1905. Author also of a dictionary of Dutch composers (prize in 1867 from the Amsterdam Maatschappij, but not published), Verzeichnis neuer Ausgaben alter Musikwerke [to 1800], 1871, Bibliographie d. Musiksammlerwerke d. 16. u. 17. Jahrh. (with Haberl, Lagerberg and K. F. Pohl), 1877, Die Oper von ihren ersten Anfänge bis 1750, 3 vols., 1881–85, Bücherverzeichnis d. Musikliteratur i. d. Jahren 1839–46 (supplementing Becker), 1885, Buch- u. Musikalienhändler, Drucker nebst Notenstecher, 1904–06, besides other special contributions to the Monatshefte. He also composed the biblical opera Judith, a cantata for Whitsunday, a Stabat Mater a cappella, an overture to Der Cid, piano-pieces and songs. A quarterly Miscellanea Musicae Bio-Bibliographica for additions and corrections of the Quellenlexikon has been issued since 1912 by Springer, Max Schneider and Wolfheim. G.
